sire to have the freedom of external Communion with others, and the addition of a very few words of Scripture, the one heart and one lip, hath under the notion of preaching, so put him out of all patience, that his Pen never dropt ranker gall since the beginning of his work; and truly we that are wont not to invite, but to dehort railers from our Communion, are not, whilst he is in this mood, very fond of being admitted into his company. Only by the way we shall learn from him (because fits of rage bring forth Mens own thoughts undisguisedly, and so deliver some truth) what is the only impediment of our readmission to his favour and Communion. First, if we will but reacknowledge a certainty, and secondly, the never erring rule of Faith, and thirdly, the voice of the Church, i. e. three sounds to the same sense, then we shall be received with open arms, &c. From whence I conclude, that all our schism consists in not acknowledging the Roman infallibility, and so that we dispute in vain all this while, whilst we speak on any other theme but that.

And truly I that have written a full tract on that, long before, in defence of the Lord of Falkland 9. against the answer and reply of the Romanist, did not think I was again bound to reprint that, and croud it into this period.

SECT. VII.

The Romanists excommunicate. The Liturgie their only grievance. Reformation no Schism. Our excommunicating the Romanists, how grounded.

NOW follows his attempt of answers to my sixth particular, which said that the impediments 1.
which obstruct external communion are only imputable to them. First, because the Pope excommunicated all Catholicks that came to our Assemblies.] And his answer is, was it not well done, think you?] And that is but the acknowledging all I there affirmed: For if they cast us out from all external fraternal Communion, and justifie their having done it, then 'tis not imputable to us, that we separated from them. What motives they had to do this, belongs only to that other dispute, whether or no we were justly excommunicated by them, and that cannot be debated here, without resuming the consideration of the several Acts of our Reformation, which is again to recite the greatest part of this Book; For sure it must not for ever be supposed without proof, as here he doth, that we maintain heretical doctrines; Or if it must, yet secondly, unless some of our heresies be inserted in our Liturgie (which now when he had most provocation to assume, he hath not pretended) 'tis still that Papal Bull that hindred their joyning with us in our Liturgie, and nothing in our Liturgie it self; Thirdly, all that here he pretends for the justice of that Bull, is, that holding us hereticks they could not reasonably let the People go to be taught false doctrine, to hear the Popes supremacy rail'd at as Antichristian, &c.] And that is in effect to excommunicate nothing but our Sermons, for those only have at any time been guilty of what is here objected; and then also I may demand, why the same Bull did not excommunicate Pope Gregories Epistles (or him for his Epistles, as Honorius was after his death condemned for an heretick) which makes it a character of Antichrist for any one to assume to be Universal Bishop? However by this arguing it is supposed, that they might have been permitted to come to our Liturgie when there was no Sermon: And yet we know their practice (and that is our best witness of their opinion of the obligation) is quite contrary. They can read our Books, where all that our Sermons can say, may be said, as largely, and as bitterly, and they can for curiosity be present at our Sermons too; And in brief, 'tis only our Liturgie, with which they cannot have any peace, and yet certainly this hath none of the pretended heresie in it.

2. Next he hath no patience that we should affirm that the Bull in the tenth of Q. Elizabeth was the cause of the separation, when first, saith he, I have laid out knot by knot how the unity of the Church was unloosed in the time of Henry the Eighth, &c. in casting out the Papal authority out of this Island] And therefore he will press this over again, and when he hath done so with all his Rhetorick, I may yet satisfie my self with what hath been already answered, that the Pope had never duly any supreme power over this, nor universal over all Nations, and that renouncing an Usurper, casting off a barely pretended power, is no rejection of an authority, for by that I must suppose a real, and not an assumed power to be signified.

3. The same answer is sufficient to the other part of his charge, concerning our forsaking their doctrines and practices; I doubt not but we receded, and that voluntarily from those, which we with the Romanists had formerly been used to; but reforming an error, will never be a schism, though S. W. be in never so ill humor about it; we may depart from our own ill habits, and yet not depart from our selves, forsake the riots, wherein we had gone on with our intemperate brethren, and still keep external Communion with them, and never need the recalling of our youthful sins to make our company the better. So that still it remains, that if external Communion with any other fellow Christian may be preserved without acknowledging the Popes Supremacy (and to suppose it may not, is to beg the question of the whole Book) and without continuing of erroneous doctrines and practices (and such we are ready to prove those to be which we have left) we never schismatically departed from their external Communion, until we were cast out, nor would ever voluntarily have gone from any thing that was Christian in them (such, I presume, is external Communion of Christians) if we had not been violently removed from it.

4. As for our rejecting Roman Catholicks from our Assemblies, upon their avowed contumacy against the orders of our Church, which he next presseth, that sure is no more, than every National Church is accustomed to do, as long as such discipline is like to prove to edification, else the Censures were useless in the Church. And when he desires to know, why the Church of Rome might not do the like, or why she had not as great authority over those who were once hers, as our Church over those who were never ours?] The answer is obvious, because this Nation of ours neither is, nor ever duly was part of the Bishop of Rome's Territory, nor can be pretended to be so, without manifest violation of the Canons of those Councils which the Pope himself hath sworn to preserve; whereas every native by baptism entred into the Church of England, is duly and by force of all ancient Canons a member of the Church of England, under this or that Bishop or Metropolitan, and so it is not the same punishable crime, to have cast out an undue usurped foreign power, as to persist in contumacy and separation from an undoubted unquestionable just power of our immediate superiors. And so still this shews on which side the schism truly lies chargeable.

SECT. VIII.

The charge of Pride averted. Confession of fallibility. Questioning the Romish infallibility, our Pride. Disbeliefs caused by pretended pride, make not all Communion unlawful, much less excusable error without Pride.

1. TO my second reason, by which I proved the breach to lie on their side, their imposing such conditions on our Communion, that we cannot subscribe without sin against conscience, His answer is, that this is a sinful pride of our understanding, to disbelieve all our Teachers, and yet to acknowledge our selves but fallible in our contrary belief.] By the frame of this objection compared with the Romanists great principle of infallibility, one would think, that if not the main, yet some part of this our sinful pride charged on us, consisted in thinking our selves fallible, or in pretending conscience for the believing of any thing, whilst we acknowledge our selves fallible; If this were it, then the only way to amend this fault or error, were to assume infallibility, for then 'tis certain, that this could be no ingredient in our charge, either for the constituting, or aggravating our crime, that we acknowledge our selves fallible. But what crime soever this will be deemed in us, 'twill not be pride certainly, and it must, if it be any thing, be our sinful humility. But if this be not it (as I cannot indeed suppose, that he that counts infallibility the prerogative, and peculiarity of his own Church, should really think it our fault that we confess our selves fallible) what then is it wherein our sinful pride consists? It must be sure set down in these words, that we disbelieve all our Teachers, and think our selves to understand more of Gods mind than all the world before us.] But then this affirmation wanted some proof, for sure we do not disbelieve all our Teachers. The word of God written and unwritten (such as appears to be so) and deposited by the Apostles in the Church, is certainly our lesson or διδαχὴ, and our teachers, διδάσκαλοι, are living guides, our Bishops, using the assistance of the Priests; and if the later corrupted Church of Rome were our Teacher also (as indeed it assumed that office) before the Reformation, yet sure it was not all our Teachers, or all the world before us; The Primitive purest times, from whence we had confessly our Creeds, and all our necessary doctrine, must not (to gratifie S. W.) be quite turned out of the world. So that again our enormous pride is crumbled away into this one atome of questioning the Romish pretensions of infallibility, of comparing and preferring the ancient humble before the modern assuming Church of Rome, which as S. W. calls pride, so others that are as disinterested as he, call necessary caution and prudence, and making use of the best means that God hath afforded us, of judging truth by, and a necessary care neither to violence our faculties, by forcing them to see, what with the utmost of our intention we cannot discern, nor to charm our consciences, by dissembling and professing the contrary to our present conviction. As for the Church of Rome being our Master and Father and Mother (which is again the postulatum, without which his argument is not able to proceed one step) he knows what is the name of that Elench, it having, next contumely (to which all other must be content to yield the deference) deserved more of him for the filling up his pages, than all his other materials together.

as

2. If it were certainly pride, that produced all our disbeliefs, which brought us under the Roman Censures, I should not doubt to yield to him, that we are to blame our selves, so far as to the occasion of our disunion. But when the matter in hand is but their surmise of our pride, and when the question is of the lawfulness of their retaining with us external Communion fraternal (for that is the only thing that in this latter part of the Treatise I undertook to consider) I see no convincing reason why a Romanist, which may possibly be as proud as I, or however, not free from all other filthiness of the flesh or spirit, and knows more of it by himself than by me, may not lawfully hold external Communion with me, and those others, who may possibly be (though without revelation he cannot be sure they are) guilty of pride? Suppose a Romanist should be drunk, yea and vent some heretical pravity in this distemper, were it unlawful for another Romanist of the same particular Dioceß with him, before, or without his immediate Superiors Excommunicating him, to preserve Christian society, or were it necessary to renounce all external Communion with him? If it shall be said, it were, instead of exacting the reason of the affirmation, I shall again ask, but what if he only surmised the other to be drunk, and the doctrine he vented to be heretical, and this upon no other proof of the truth of his surmise, but only because he expresst himself to think somewhat, which was contrary to the Romanists sense in religion, which of what moment soever it were, it were yet confest, that if he did believe it without any fault of his own (if it were not caused in him by drink or such other distemper) 'twere but a blameless, at least excusable mistake in him; would that Romanist think himself in conscience obliged to break Communion with such a man, only by force of the Popes Bull for excommunicating of hereticks? If he would not, I should be glad to be shew'd the disparity betwixt that last case, and the case set down here by S. W. in these words [If it were pride (that [if] not signifying possibly any more, than that he thinks it was pride in us) which made you think otherwise, then it is not innocency in you, or sufficient excuse for your Non-Communion] In the mean, I suppose it is clear from his very affirmation, that 'tis our antecedent pride that makes us schismaticks, and neither our subsequent doctrine nor practice; for schism being the great unexcusable sin now objected against us, that which makes us unexcusable, must be it that makes us schismaticks. And then I am sure that being a vice of the mind, lies open only to Gods, cannot come under S. W. his cognizance, and that is all that I need reply to that answer.

3. On occasion of my offering to contest our Negatives by grounds that all good Christians ought to be concluded by, he first asks what these grounds are? Whether any infallible authority? But to that we have oft spoken already. Secondly, whether I think our Saviours command to hear the Church, be such a ground? And that question being propounded by the Cath. Gent. is also answered already, Repl. Ch. 9. Sect. 1. and what he hath added to it by way of amplification, hath both in that, and the Reply been distinctly prevented, and so there remains no more of his fourth Sect.

SECT. IX.

Of judging. S. W. his pretended moderation. Our not hearing any other Church. His impossible affirmations of their infallibility. One faith. S. Cyprians temper. Pope Stephanus's temper. Cyprians words to Cornelius. The priviledge of the Roman See in Cyprians time. Cyprians behaviour to it. Firmilian of S. Stephanus. S. W. his sence of Faith without knowledge. Difference betwixt fundamentals and superstructures.

1. HIS fifth Sect. is designed for justification of the Romanists charity in judging and despising us, and first for judging: And he presumes he hath given us testimonies of their great moderation, as well as no uncharitableness, that when we acknowledge no Church to be heard, he makes us only Schismaticks and hereticks, and doth not advance to those harsh terms which our Saviour himself hath laid down, of accounting us Heathens and Publicans] But first I may have leave to demand, how he which thinks those words of Christ to belong to us, as we stand (truly) chargeable of not hearing the Church of Rome, can avoid proceeding to that higher pitch, or harsher terms, of accounting us very heathens and Publicans? Or if those words do not at all belong to us, how then from them he can justifie his milder Censures of judging us schismaticks and hereticks? The Dilemma is obvious, either that Text of Mat. 18. 17. is his direction for his judging of us, or it is not; If it be, how can he escape accounting us Heathens and Publicans? If it be not, how can it justifie his calling us hereticks? or indeed to what purpose was it at all produced in this matter? Secondly, is it indeed true, and doth not S. W. prevaricate when he pretends to thus much moderation, as to bestow on us those milder, and not proceed to the other harsher terms against us? He hath by and by these words. How can we then, seeing evidently they heard not any Church judge otherwise, than that our Saviours words are true, i. e. that they are in a sad condition] and then what that sad condition must signifie, 'tis easie to resolve, from the presumed truth of those words of Christ, thus applied to us. And I am sure we have these words in their Canon Law, Peccatum paganitatis incurrit, quisquis dum Christianum se asserit, Sedi Apostolicæ obedire contemnit; He incurs the crime of heathenism, whosoever affirming himself a Christian, contemns the Apostolick See, citing the words of Samuel, and the application of Pope Gregory the Seventh, that disobedience is the sin of witchcraft, and non-acquiescing as the sin of Idolatry. And it being certain on one side, that we do profess our selves Christians, and yet think not our selves obliged to obey the See of Rome, nor consequently have paid that obedience thereunto, I see not how those principles, which have carried S. W. so far as he professes, should set him down, before they had brought him home to that highest and most immoderate pitch.

2. But then thirdly, whatsoever our lot be, we must still insist, that the Roman Church hath no due claim to our obedience by any right devolved to them from Christ or his Apostles, or the ancient Canons, and so still we are really safe from the penalty of [si Ecclesiam non audiverit] though we have not paid the desired obedience to that See; And till S. W. hath proved the justice of their claim, and of that consequence, that he that hears not their Church, and yet hears his own, doth yet acknowledge no Church to be heard, he will never be able to justifie the charity of their judging us, upon force of that text.

3. And when he farther extends his words, that at our Reformation we joyn'd not our selves with any other Church whom we might be said to hear] the answer is obvious that a national Church, αυτοκέφαλος, independent from any other foreign jurisdiction, needed not to joyn with any other Church, as to hear, i. e. in Christs sence, to obey that; The fraternal Communion is all that is our duty in respect of others, the filial, or that of subordination or subjection was not incumbent on us; And sure S. W. that doth not pretend that the Greek or any other Church, save only the See of Rome hath authority over us, had much forgot himself, when he made this any part of our charge, that we joyn'd not with, so as to hear any other Church.

4. His second ground, on which he justifies their judging to be no uncharitableness, is the infallibility of their Church, which, saith he, their ancestors have believed ever since Christs doctrine dawned to the dark world] which is in effect, that the Church of Rome was infallible before it was, had its inerrability before its being (for without doubt Christs doctrine did thus first dawn to the dark, i. e. the Gentile world, before it illuminated the Roman Climate, many other Churches of the Gentiles having received the faith more early than that of Rome) but also that its infallibility was thus anciently believed; By whom, he tells us not; but hath set it in such large pompous terms, that it is not only not true, but not possible, by any other means, save that of divination; And of this we have not heard that any ancient Augur hath predicted, and now I suppose 'tis too late, so many hundred years after, for S. W. to take that office upon him. In a word, to judge us hereticks, and defend the charity of it, because their Church is infallible; to prove that infallible, because they have believed it so; and for the confirming of that, to vouch no one testimony, and yet to resolve, that so 'twas believed before it was possible either to be, or to be believed; is the pregnant and solid way of probation, by which his charity is defended beyond all possible confute in the second place.

5. His third way of propugning it, is that Text of Scripture, One faith, one hope, one baptism, from whence he resolves that either they or we must erre against faith, under penalty of maintaining a contradiction; and then by Christs words, he that believes not, is condemned already; he that is certain he believes, and hath that one faith, cannot make conscience of judging the other, since the other is condemned already; Nay, saith he, if he judge him not to be judged already, he must judge himself to be a self-judg'd unbeliever] And then, beyond all expectation, here is suddenly a cry raised, of the Doctors blundring, and destroying all reason, and that serves for a new made-dish in the bill of fare, to fill up the one and thirtieth room at his table: To this plea of his the answer were already given, if we had but as little charity, or so much ill language as he, to call him heretick, or any other such ill name, which he can frankly bestow on us, for then the one faith being as strongly, i. e. by our own words, confirm'd to be on our side, as it is now concluded to be on his, by his own presumption; there were no syllable behind to be farther answered. But without making use of such an auxiliary, which I so much dislike in him, I answer secondly,

6. That each of us may very possibly have imbraced that one faith, which the Apostle speaks of, nay 'tis most evident each hath; For what was that one faith, but those articles of belief, which were then deposited in all Churches, and into which all Christians were baptized in that one baptism? And 'tis certain, both they, and we have uniformly received that in the Apostolick Creed, as that from the traditions, which in every Church were to be met with, was explained by the Nicene Fathers, and established by that, and the following Oecumenical Councils to be the one faith of all Christians.

7. Our agreement therefore in all these heads of faith, is no doubt sufficient to give us title joyntly to that one Faith; and for other differences which are reconcileable with the believing of these, be they true or false, they are certainly no part of this faith. If they shall appear to be true, they are like Gold built on the foundation, and so, superstructure, not foundation; if they be false (as we must believe your additions to be, and we that have no additions at all, cannot be accused by you for what we have not) they are then the combustible matter, the hay and stubble, which will take fire, as soon as ever that trial comes. Herein therefore evidently lies the difference betwixt you and us. We conceive you guilty of many foul errors, but yet do not pronounce you unbelievers, because the one faith deposited in the Church, is received, and not rejected by you; but you that have no cause to pretend, that we have superstructed any such positive errors, and yet as little doubt, but we have received the one faith, as that signifies the Apostles depositum, or the Nicene Fathers explication of it, from the tradition of the Church, do yet accuse, and condemn us as unbelievers, because we receive not all other doctrines, that your Church (contrary to the express command of the Ephesine Fathers) hath thought fit to impose on us. And our telling you this, brings upon us a worse censure yet, the charge of destroying our reason, as well as our faith; He that will say what we now say, must it seems, be sent a grasing with Nebuchadnezzar, we were Infidels before, but now we are become irrational; Ere we accused you of uncharitableness, we were but Heathens, but since, we are metamorphosed into brutes. And this is the sum of S. W. his third defence or Apologie for his judging us. I see 'tis our wisest way not to complain, lest some ruder fate still remain for us, as the proof that he is not uncharitable.

yet

His fourth defence is, that their judging may indeed be error, but malice or uncharitableness it cannot] But this having been the Cath. Gent. his allegation, hath received its answer in the Reply, ch. 10. 8.

What he answers to the words of S. Cyprian, neminem damnantes, neminem à communione nostrâ arcentes, that he speaks of his own temper towards the rest of God's Church (and that about a private opinion only) but neither he, nor any other Father admitted to their communion, those who had been condemned by all the Churches in communion with the See of Rome] comes now next to be considered, and to it I shall answer these few things. First, that my words having on purpose designed to shew the likeness of our, and the unlikeness of the Romanists temper, to that of Cyprian, and consequently, the danger of schism to them from judging of us, if this be granted, as necessarily it must, that this was Cyprians temper, and that this ought to be other mens temper also on the like occasions, this is all that I need ask in this matter. For that this rule should be no farther applicable than to the matter of the present difference betwixt S. Cyprian and others, concerning the baptism of hereticks, or that it is not equally (by parity of reason) to be extended to all other differences which touch not the foundation, there is no other reason here tendred, but that this of rebaptization was not, but these other matters of difference between the Romanists and us, are defined by the Church: To this then I answer, first, that the contrary to S. Cyprians opinion was at that time defined by the then Bishop of Rome, and earnestly maintained by him, and some others with him, as shall by and by appear. Secondly, that betwixt the Romanist and us, the question being principally this, whether the Roman Church have done well to enter so many new articles into their belief, and to exact the profession of them from all that are admitted to their Communion, quite contrary to the express interdict of the Ephesine Canon so often mentioned, and withall the matter of those articles being so far from infallible or certain truth, that we doubt not to evidence of some of them, that they imply a contradiction, and so an impossibility to be true, and the ground on which all are founded at once, the Roman infallibility, being it self far from being induced by any infallible medium; These things I say, being considered, I desire that Cyprians temper, may be compared with the temper of those that thus defined these articles de fide; and in what degree soever it shall appear, that the making those definitions de fide, and condemning and excluding all that cannot uprightly and cordially imbrace them, hath been contrary to S. Cyprians temper and rule for the preserving the unity of the Church, so far those decrees may be rescinded, and cassate; or if not, still I suppose it clear, that this is quite contrary to S. Cyprians rule, and that all the judging and excommunicating of others, that is consequent to this, is as the principle it self, to which it is consequent, i. e. destructive to the peace of the Church, and that is schismatical. Thus I am sure * Firmilianus, and the Eastern Bishops with him, pronounce of Stephanus Bishop of Rome, lites & dissentiones, &c. What contentions and divisions have you caused (saith he) through the Churches of the whole World? What a great sin have you heaped on your self, whilst you have cut off your self from so many flocks or Churches, for you have cut off your self. Do not deceive your self, for sure he is truly a schismatick, who hath made himself an Apostate from the Communion of Eccleiastick union, for whilst you think you may excommunicate all from you, solum te ab omnibus abstinuisti, you have excommunicated your self alone from all others. And so on, much more to the same purpose. 9.

* Inter Cypr. Epist. 75. Pam. Ed. p. 117.

Thirdly, Because it is here by S. W. suggested, that as Cyprian knew very well what belonged to Church-order and discipline, so neither he nor any other Father admitted to Communion those who had been condemned by the Roman See, and the Churches in Communion with that] I desire it may be remembred, first, what difference there was betwixt the condition of the Roman See in Cyprians, and in these days; no one of those doctrines were then defined, which now are by them defined, and imposed on all communicants; no infallibility of that Church assumed or pretended, no monarchick authority over all other Churches and Bishops, as appears most evidently by those very words of Cyprian, Ep. 55. to Cornelius, which Baronius and Bellarmine make such use of to the contrary, when on occasion of Cornelius's receiving some to his Communion, which Cyprian had censured, * he tells him that this is the great cause of Schisms and Heresies in the Church, quod sacerdoti Dei non obtemperatur, nec unus in Ecclesia ad tempus Sacerdos & ad tempus judex vice Christi cogitatur, that the Bishop is not obey'd, that he which is alone the Bishop and judge in Christ's stead, is not considered as such, i. e. that when Cyprian, and such as he, had excommunicated offenders, the Bishop of Rome received them to his Communion, as the * rest of the Epistle makes it evident; His words also of Pope Stephen in the beginning of Ep. 74. ad Pompeium, abundantly evidence the same, being written with that sharpness, that was 10.

* Pamel. Ed. p. 68.

* Pax vera falsæ pacis mendacio tollitur, salutaris sinus matris noverca intercedente præcluditur, &c. p. 69. Honor ergo datur Deo, cum sublatâ pœnitentiâ nec ullâ exomologesi factâ, despectis Episcopis atque calcatis------ communicatio non communicantibus offeratur? Ibid. Cum statutum sit omnibus nobis------ ut uniuscujusque causa illic audiatur ubi est crimen admissum, & singulis pastoribus portio gregis sit ascripta, quam regat unusquisque & gubernet, rationem sui actus domino redditurus, oporet utique eos quibus præsumus non circumcursare, nec Episcoporum concordiam cohærentem sua subdolâ & fallaci temeritate collidere------ Ib. p. 70. Nec utilis aut consultus est pastor, qui ita morbidas oves gregi admiscet------ Ib. Nulla cum talibus commercia copulentur------ simus ab eis tam separati quam sunt illi de ecclesia profugi--- p. 71.

not agreeable from an inferior to his superior pastor. All that then belong'd to the See of Rome * Cent. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 1. S. Augustine sets down, by * preeminence in celsiori fastigio specula pastoralis, in the higher roof of the Pastoral watch-tower, which he there makes reconcileable with the communis cura omnibus nobis qui fungimur Episcopatus officio, the common care and solicitude of all Bishops, including evidently the Bishop of Rome in that number. And as long as this equality of power (allowing the Bishop of Rome the dignity of place) was thus preserved, it could be no prejudice to any other, that none that was denied Communion by the Bishop, should be allowed it by other Bishops, the same Canonical reason obliging him, that he should not receive any, that were excommunicated by any other Bishop. But then secondly, when the Bishop of Rome did not thus discharge his duty to other Bishops and Churches, the dignity of the Roman See it self did not free him from the note of schism and heresie, as is also most evident in the passages betwixt S. Cyprian and Pope Stephanus, when Stephanus had failed in his part, nostrum est, saith he, Ep. 67. consulere & subvenire, qui gubernandæ Ecclesiæ libram tenentes----- It is my part to consult and aid, who hold the balance of the Church---- then admonishes him of his duty, Quapropter facere te oportet----- and, Dirigantur in Provinciam à te literæ; And Ep. 74. he tells Pompeius of Stephanus, hæreticorum causam contra Christianos & contra Ecclesiam Dei asserere conatur, he endeavours to assert the cause of hereticks against Christians and against the Church of God, and, magis ac magis errorem ejus denotabis, thou shalt more and more observe his error, accusing him of impertinence and contrariety to himself, unskilful and improvident passages in his decree, which may serve for a competent intimation, what respect S. Cyprian bare to that See of Rome when the Bishop thereof misbehaved himself.

11. 'Twill not be amiss here to recite what S. Augustine resolved in this matter. In his Book de Unic. Bapt. contra Pelag. c. 14. he makes this comparison betwixt these two Bishops of Carthage and Rome, Cyprian and Steven, Duo erant eminentissimarum Ecclesiarum Episcopi, ambo in unitate Catholicâ constituti. Quorum Stephanus baptismum Christi in nullo iterandum censebat, & hoc facientibus graviter succensebat; Cyprianus autem in hæresi vel schismate baptizatos, tanquam non habentes baptismum Christi, baptizandos in Ecclesia Catholica existimabat; multi cum illo, quidam etiam cum isto sentiebant, utrique cum eis in unitate consistentes. There were two Bishops of most eminent Churches, both in Catholick unity, Steven resolved that the baptism of Christ was not to be iterated in any, and was very angry with them that did it; Cyprian thought that those that had been baptized in schism or heresie, as not having the baptism of Christ (some of those hereticks denying the Holy Ghost, as he elsewhere presseth) should be baptized in the Catholick Church; many were of his mind, and some of Stephens, &c. Here now is the full meaning of the words, which I briefly cited out of Cyprian, when Cyprian was on one side, and the Pope on another, in a contest, that divided the Christian world into different opinions, the Pope pretending Apostolical tradition for his side, and vehemently insisting on it, S. Cyprian adhered to his opinion, opposed and refuted the Pope's position and his pretension to tradition (as appears by * Firmilianus in his confutation of Stephens Epistle) and never yielded to him in it, and yet would not condemn and break Communion either with him, or with those that joyn'd with him. Add unto this what ‖ Firmilianus farther affirms, Eos qui Romæ sunt, non ea in omnibus observare quæ sunt ab origine tradita, & frustra Apostolorum authoritatem prætendere -----that they at Rome do not observe all those things that were from the beginning, and that they do in vain pretend the Apostles authority; that customs Apostolical are varied by diversity of times and places, nec tamen propter hoc ab Ecclesiæ Catholicæ pace atque unitate discessum est, and yet men never brake the peace and unity of the Catholick Church for this; and that when they seem to oppose custom to truth, no man can be so vain, as to think that a good plea, or any better than the Jews would be for the rejecting Christianity, or upon that account to refuse to leave darkness when he sees the light, telling Cyprian that this was the Africans case against Stephen, and that they to the custom of the Romans opposed a custom also but that of truth, ab initio hoc tenentes quod à Christo & ab Apostolo traditum est, holding from the beginning what was delivered by Christ and the Apostle.

* Cypr. Ep. 75. Quantum ad id pertineat quod Stephanus dixit quasi Apostoli probibuerint, & hoc custodiendum Apostolis tradiderint, plenissime vos respondistis, neminem tam stultum esse qui hoc credat Apostolos tradidisse------ Stephanus infamans Petrum & Paulum quasi hoc ipsi tradiderint.
‖ Cypr. Ed. Pamel. p. 115.

p. 117.

12. This then was another part of S. Cyprians temper, to prefer that which he resolved to be true Apostolical tradition, before that which the Romans pretended to be such, and yet not to break Communion with them; whereas Stephanus (saith Firmilianus) at that time dissenting from so many Bishops over the world, brake the peace with all of them, sometimes with the Eastern, sometimes with the Southern or Africans, would not admit their Legates to any speech with him, forbad receiving them into their houses, denied them not only peace and communion, but house and entertainment. Whereupon Firmilian asked this question, Is this the keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace? to cut himself off from the unity of charity in all things, to estrange himself from his brethren, and contra sacramentum & fidem contumacis furore discordiæ rebellare, to rebel against sacrament and faith by the fury of obstinate dissention? and then concludes, & tamen non pudet Stephanum, and yet Stephen is not ashamed to patronize and defend hereticks against the Church, and for the vindicating of them to divide the Church, and call Cyprian a false Christ, false Apostle, deceitful work-man. Whatsoever S. Cyprians temper and practice was, it seems Pope Stephen's was not so meek. Here is breach of Communion on his part, and yet the far greatest part of the world held communion with Cyprian, when the Roman See, and those that were in communion with that, had thus divided themselves from him.

Cypr. Ed. Pam. p. 117.

p. 118.

13. All this I hope may suffice to vindicate my vouching of Cyprians temper and rule of peaceableness, against the contrary practice and humor of the Romanist; I shall be glad now to hear, whether S. W. take any joy in the commendation that he bestowed on that Father, that he knew what belonged to Church-order and discipline. For if he did, I hope we that have so exactly transcribed his copy, in this particular, have not offended against either. *

* [something here added, but lost.]

What

What he here adds of my admitting all to our Church that call themselves Christians] was formerly shew'd to be a calumny. And for the short but keen touch of an opinionative faith, which he mentions on occasion of my supposing that the differences between him and us, are but differences in opinion, saying, that he sees no reason we should trouble our selves to write Books in defence of an opinionative faith, and adding, It were better in that case to eat and drink, shake hands and be merry, nor trouble our selves with thinking whether there be a Heaven or no, which we can never come (the ground of faith being but an opinion) to any certain knowledge of.] I should hope this signifies that S. W. is advanced very near to an end of his prizes, for sure he will never be able much to transcend this pitch, which he hath here arrived to. 14.

To it I answer, first, that I had thought that faith is by all men distinguisht from knowledge, and that how certain, and undoubted soever the grounds of it are, yet being of things not seen, or inevident, knowledge in strict sence it cannot be; And I had thought that this was it, that made Faith and the works of faith so highly rewardable, that it is of things not seen or inevident, nay much above the light of natural reason, or experience of flesh and blood, &c. whereas the consenting to a demonstration, which alone is science or knowledge, hath not been thought so magnanimous and heroical, and consequently rewardable an act, nor (by the same reason) the state of vision and comprehension, which is our reward rather. And therefore it cannot but be very strange to my ears, to hear such conclusions as these, so bluntly, and without all provocation calmly delivered, that it were better to eat --- i. e. turn Atheists, than only to entertain our selves with a belief of heaven, without any certain knowledge of it. 15.

But passing this by, methinks it should be possible enough, that there might be some difference betwixt the clear doctrines of Scripture (that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, and the like, the several articles of the Apostles Creed) on one side, and all the additions and superstructions of the Romanists on the other; There are I presume, but two ways imaginable to make them of equal certainty, either their being all equally delivered by the same authority of Apostolick tradition, or by the same Infallible testifier, the Church of Rome. And as there is very little proof for the former of these, the Apostolick tradition being no way evidenced for the particulars in debate; so for the later, (beside many other) methinks the example even now brought of Pope Steven, should ad hominem at least, to S. W. be a competent prejudice against it. 16.

The doctrine which he taught against S. Cyprian, the Roman See then taught as eagerly as could be, affirmed and testified it to be Apostolical tradition, and custom of the Church, and as many as in this adhered to him, must be supposed to have done the like, (and S. Austin himself in many whole Books together confesseth, that the truth was on Stevens side, though the charity and humility on S. Cyprians) and so if the Roman See be infallible either in affirming or defining, or in testifying of Apostolical tradition, this doctrine of Stevens must be as certain and indubitable, as any article of the Creed. And yet S. W. himself hath even now confest, that this was but matter of Opinion, or about a private opinion only, and then I hope by parity of reason, I may be allowed to have learnt from him the same language, and to assume, that the doctrine of Transubstantiation, nay of the infallibility of the Church of Rome, is no article of the Apostles Creed in our account, ought not to be so in the Romanists, and therefore in any reason they ought not to damn us, to drive us from their Communion, for not assenting to these opinionative articles, or if they do, that this is an ill κρίσις, or indication, that the Schism is on their side, (whersoever the truth should be found to be) if we may judge by S. Cyprians rule, or by S. Augustines answer to the Donatists, often objecting Cyprian in defence of their own rebaptization, viz. that Cyprian erring in that point, with so much, and so constant charity and humility, was to be preferr'd before Steven maintaining the truth with so much pride, and uncharitableness; And thus we also know in the quartodeciman Controversie, though the truth was on Victors side, (as I have no obligation now to yield it on the Romanists) yet was he justly reprehended by Irenæus for his pride in cutting off from Communion the Asian Bishops for the contrary error. 17.

What he adds in the last place, about begging the question, is soon answered, that I count it not a begging of the question in the Romanist to call us Schismaticks when we deny and offer to prove the contrary, but their bare calling us so, without any offer of proof for it, or the supposing it sufficiently proved, and taking it for granted, and from thence building conclusions upon it, as on a principle, when it is not proved with any Solidity, and when at that very time, when 'tis taken for granted, it is known to be the principal, if not only question, as in this present controversie, whether we are Schismaticks or no, it is most manifest. 18.

As for his good words which, before he leaves this first part of judging others, he must needs bestow upon my arguing, that it equally favours the perfectest Schismaticks that can be imagined] it appears before this, what truth there is in them; If S. Cyprian and such as he be the perfectest Schismaticks imaginable, then he hath aimed something right, but otherwise he hath not, for he hath been the measure, by which alone I have directed my arguing in this matter. 19.

SECT.

SECT. X.

Of Despising. Breach of equal Communion, when just, when Schismatical. S. W. his notion of Tradition, useless to him. Tradition hard to be known, falsely pretended, sometimes concealed. Prosperity of the Roman Church. Our not casting out the Romanists. Our neither judging nor despising them. Schism against the Universal Church or Councils.

1. THE answer to the second branch, that of despising their brethren, now follows, and his advantages against my arguing seem to be great, and in effect these, that no Church must excommunicate any, lest they be guilty of despising them.] But I answer, that this is a clear misrepresentation of my process or arguing. For first, it is evident, that in that place I spake only of fraternal or equal Communion, not of the Governours inflicting censures on any of the members of any Church, but of the Governours and members of one Church cutting off from their Communion the Governours and members of another Church; as when Pope Steven and those with him, brake Communion with Cyprian, and the rest of the East and South with him, or as the Jewish and Gentile Christians, neither of them subject to the other, but remaining in their several cœtus, separated the one from the other, Rom. 14. This therefore shews the mistake or perversion of my words.

2. Secondly, speaking of the differences betwixt the Romanists and us, which I must have leave to think are but of that nature, that they ought not to break Communion or Charity among Christians, what I thus affirm of such differences, must not, cannot with any justice be applied to those greater differences betwixt those that believe the Apostles depositum intirely, and those that reject any part of it; Those that do thus divide themselves from the unity of that Faith, which was by the Apostles delivered to all their Plantations to be believed, that deny any article of it, may without any guilt of despising, or breach of Christian charity, nay upon designs which are perfectly charitative, be rejected from our fraternal Communion, as in the Apostles times, when it was uncharitable walking, and such as ended in the Schism, for the Gentiles to despise the Jews weak consciences, who thought it unlawful for them to have those liberties which were really allow'd them by Christ; yet I doubt not but it was perfectly lawful, and charitable, and even Christian duty, for the Orthodox Christians to renounce Communion with the Gnostick hereticks and Schismaticks. And so there now appears more reason in my arguing, than S. W. was willing there should, without any appearance of reason to the contrary; The plain issue of it being no more than this, that they which judge on one side, and they which on the other side despise their fellow Christians, agreeing with them in all those articles of the Christian profession, which the Apostles deposited in every Church, as the only necessaries of belief, and the Symbolum or Tessera of Christian Communion, and which upon either of these accounts (mentioned to my hand by the Apostle Rom. 14.) either of judging or despising, i. e. either of thinking that those whom they judge, do that which is not lawful for them to do, or that those whom they despise, make not use of that liberty that Christ hath purchased for them, shall break society with those other, refuse fraternal Communion with them, i. e. will not live with them as with fellow Christians, only upon such an account as this, that they cannot think all those things lawful or necessary, which they think lawful or necessary, these are directly the Schismaticks which the Apostle looks on as such; and beside these, there is not any species that I can discern of this third sort of the second branch of Schism, that which is an offence against that charity which is due from every Christian to every Christian; and we being not guilty of either of these, and the Romanist being visibly guilty, it remains evident enough, on which side this last sort of Schism lies, and to whom it is regularly to be imputed.

3. On this head of despising our brethren, whom we conceive to be in error, I had mentiond some grounds, on which it was rational for us, who believe the Romanists erroneous, yet not to despise them; And as if I offended in this, i. e. either in not despising them, or in thinking I had reason not to despise them, I must be confuted in this also; So prompt is S. W. and so equally qualified to contradict every thing that can be said by me, be it never so much for, or so little against his interests. But the best is, here is little said, (beside expressing the magnanimous humour of chastising every one for an enemy, that appears before this Disarmer) to require any return from us; only I am there taught my utter ignorance what tradition is, which indeed I had taken (and sometimes he hath in his tract, given me hopes it was no mistake) for that which pretended at least to be Apostolical tradition, but I am now told, that (in respect of us that now are) it signifies no more, than what doctrine was held by Christians ten years ago, and in respect of them that lived ten years ago, what was held ten years before that, and so forth.] This rarity I shall not now busie my self particularly to examine, it being indeed the resolving all into the present affirmation of the Roman Church of these last ten years, and really making tradition no proof of the truth of their doctrine, and yet putting on the specious name of tradition to disguise that in, or adorn it with; All that is pertinent to my present purpose, is equally granted me by thus setting it, for it is still hard for the multitude to discern by their own ears, what was held all the Church over (and not only within the pale of the Roman Communion) ten years ago, or indeed to judge, whether what within these last nine years hath been defined in the very Roman Church, were eleven years ago held by the Church or no, and consequently whether that which is now held, be tradition.

4. For certainly some difference there must be, betwixt holding and receiving, betwixt affirming as true, and affirming as tradition. He that knows that three years ago the Pope and his Conclave made a decree to confirm some doctrines maintain'd by the Molinists against others, may be yet to seek, whether before that Bull came out, ten or twenty years ago, that Church held those doctrines; and without knowing of that, he cannot be said to know what is tradition, even in the Roman Church of this

this last age, in that particular. And so still by S. W. his good leave, I shall be so far moved by the consideration of the difficulty for the multitude in the Roman Church to understand tradition, as to resolve, though I deem them erroneous, yet not to despise them.

Only let me assure him, I did not think that the Romanists themselves did thus industriously or affectedly keep traditions reserved from the sight of the people, like the Ark of the Testament and Moses's tables, as he expresses it; I did rather believe that they were too prodigal of that treasure, that they communicated to them many more traditions, than ever were by their ancestors really received, imposed on them many things for traditions, which were the erroneous doctrines of men. And the only things which I seriously spake of, being Apostolical traditions, the distance of the object, and the want of light was that, which in my conceit, rendred this search difficult to the multitude, and not only the reservedness of the Romanist, who yet I must fear hath fail'd also in this kind, keeping close some parts of Apostolical tradition, else the power of Bishops and Primates in each nation would appear to be greater, and the Authority of the one Bishop of Rome much less than now adays is pretended. 5.

What he adds sixthly for the comparing the Romanists and our persecutions, is founded in a willing mistake. The prosperity of the Roman Church I spake of, being not that of the English Romanists here at home, but of those every where of their Communion, which sure hath long been such, as to give them occasion, to describe it by the City set on an hill, and among the notes of the Church, to set down Prosperity for one; And that being all that was pretended or thought of by me, I deserved not his so serious rebuke for that, 6.

Any more than lastly, for saying they had the literal sound of Hoc est corpus meum for their doctrine of Transubstantiation, which sure if they have not, they have nothing imaginable to pretend for it; for as for the Fathers and Councils, and perpetual doctrine and practice of Gods Church, which he is pleased to vouch for recommending that sence of Christs words to him, it will want much better proofs, than that of his affirming it. 7.

After his lastly, he hath one peal against the Doctors non-sence, in saying we are far from casting them out of the Church. To which end he asks, Whither we would have cast them? and how we can cast them out of a thing that never was?] To which I answer, first, that casting out of the Church, signifies, I suppose, all kinds of excommunicating, or renouncing communion with any; And that I did no otherwise mention this, than that they by having first cast us out, made it impossible for us to be guilty of it; And I should be glad to be shew'd where the nonsence of that speech consists, or with what shew of sence he could mention my speaking of casting them out, when I distinctly said it was an impossible thing, and only rendred those so many reasons for our not despising them, and not for our not casting them out? 8.

Secondly, supposing this Church of England to be a particular Church (as I may have leave to suppose it) and that S. W. was baptized a member of this particular Church (as I believe also he was) what difficulty can there be in conceiving the manner, how our Church might cast out S. W.? 9.

Nay thirdly, it being manifest, that there is a rejecting from Communion, which the members of one Church may be guilty of toward the members of another, viz. the disacknowledging that other to be a member of the Catholick Church, and so, as much as in them lies, giving judgment to the casting her out of all the society of Christians, and it being as evident, that that was the thing, which this latter part of the discourse of Schism treated of, contrary to union fraternal, 'twere, I say, no otherwise impossible, but from their having done it first, for us thus to cast out the whole Church of Rome, it being no miracle for one particular Church thus to break and refuse Communion with another. 10.

He will have one word more ere yet he will leave this point; And there are four syllables of some length in that one word; The breviate of the first of them is, that in the Reformation we judg'd and despised our Governours; of the second, that many of our brethren since, have writ books to shew that Governour is Antichrist; of the third, that the whole world before by their contrary belief condemn our new reformed doctrine; of the fourth, that they despise not our persons, but only our reasons, as being on fallible grounds ---] fit to be railed at, to the end of the paragraph. 11.

To these I answer briefly, To the first, That the Pope, whose power only we cast out, and judged it an usurpation over us, might most justly be discharged from that his usurped power, without the guilt of judging or despising any of our true and legal Governours. 12.

To the second, that as I am none of those who have written any Book or line to shew that the Pope is Antichrist, so I presume they among us, that have at any time done it, have neither judg'd our Governour, the Bishop of Rome being not such, nor yet the Church of Rome it self, which he hath hitherto told me, that we acknowledge to be a true Church, which we could not do if we judg'd it to be Antichristian, but only the Court of Rome, in respect of some enormous practices, chargeable particularly on that, and not common to all those that preserve Communion with them. 13.

To the third, that the Church Universal of the first and purest times, which yet is a considerable part of that all, is not, cannot be pretended to have believed contrary to our reformed doctrine, and so we were far from judging or despising that vast authority, when we only desired to reform the errors that had crept into these latter and corrupter ages, acknowledging still the foundation to have remained intire among those, whom we thus desired to reform. 14.

To the fourth, that I no otherwise charged on them the despising of us, than as they rejected us from their Communion (which in the Apostles time was the noxious effect of despising) and that sure belongs to our persons and not to our reasons, unless it be, that without any respect to them, they still continue their uncharitableness, and indeed find our reasons such, that despising or seeming to do so, is one of their skilfullest arts of (diverting rather than) replying to them. 15.

After his thus large survey of this second sort of Schism against mutual unity and charity in the ninth and tenth Chap. of the Tract of Schism, It is strange he should think fit to close his answer to them with this observation, that I have omitted the two chief branches of Schism, first, from the body of the Church, and secondly, from General Councils] whereas the Schism against mutual or fraternal communion belonged expressly to the former of these, and the General Council being a representative of the 16.

whole

whole Church, any Schism from Councils truly General, is by me most willingly acknowledged to be Schism from the whole Church. But of this I have spoken at large in the Reply Chap. 3. Sect. 1. and so am no farther importuned by any difficulty in his fifth Section.

SECT. XI.

Strictures on his last Section. The stile of the late Church of England examin'd. Christianity where no well ordered Church. Faith inferior to vision.

1. HIS last Section now remains to be spoken to, to which upon several accounts it is needless for me to make any large Reply, particularly because his being herein but the ζωγράφησις to the Catholick Gentleman's Monogramme, an addition of colours from his Rhetorick, but not of any real answers, I have in the Reply, chap. 11. prevented all but the scorn and ill language, against which there is no Antidote.

2. Yet if there be any incidental glance, which may seem to have any the least difficulty in it, I shall briefly take notice of it, and remove it and so conclude.

3. And first, the objection which I proposed from the express words of one of their late Proselytes, who frequently stiles ours the late Church of England, he is pleased to wave, and change it quite into another form, and then to cry out, that I am quite out of the way.] But sure I am not out of the way that was proposed to me to walk in, for if it were lately the Church of England, then twenty years ago I (and perhaps that piece of S. W. that wrote this last part of Schism disarm'd) was a member of this Church, and not only of this shadow or Ghost of it; To him therefore that acknowledged it the late Church, I address that last Chapter peculiarly; as to this present S. W. who thinks we were never a Church at all, I had offered the whole foregoing Treatise of Schism, to prove we were not so much as guilty of any sort of Schism. And then with what colour of truth can he charge on me the mistaking of their objection, when both this was before my eyes the very words of the objection, and that to my knowledge vulgarly prest by several of their party, and indeed the principal parts of that Chapter formerly written for the private satisfaction of some, which were solicited and prest with this very objection, and when the objection as he sets it anew, was the question of the whole Tract of Schism, and was not now to be proposed in the last Chapter, when it had been answered in all the former.

4. Secondly, I must it seems be set to teach S. W. his eyes to discern what is before them, he saith I was so eagerly zealous --- that I put first and thirdly, but quite forgot secondly] A heavy crime indeed, if it had been true, and not to be past without his discipline, if the Printer had chanced to put thirdly for secondly. But let the 177. page be reviewed, and 'twill justifie all, but my rebuker; For having undertaken to answer that objection by degrees, and having set down the first, page 175, &c. In the midst of p. 177. I mention a conclusion irrefragably following from thence, which I say is the second proposition, and then regularly proceed to the issue with a [thirdly] in the bottom of that page. What an habit hath S. W. arrived to, from which such acts as these can follow thus glibly and gainlesly.

5. Thirdly, this judgment of the irrationalness of our sufferings, for the maintaining of an uncertain opinion, being founded in our doctrine that Councils may erre, from whence he concludes that the meeting where our Articles were made, may erre also] hath oft been prevented by the account that I have given of belief; In a word, that which we have believed and practised, and thereby brought sufferings upon us, we are verily perswaded in our Conscience before God, and have from Apostolical practice, and tradition been by our Church taught, to be the truth of God; And if this be not enough rationally to infer an obligation and ingagement on us to adhere to this, though it cost us some indurance, or if to S. W. his discourse this appear irrational, I shall much suspect that he will never think himself obliged to suffer for the defence of the Romish infallibility, having no possible medium, besides his own fancy, which he can so much as pretend, to give him any stronger belief of that.

6. Fourthly, for the number of those that have fallen off from our persecuted Church, I am not obliged to give any other account, than that herein we are but parallel to the purest ages and Churches, when the Gnosticks heresie, of which, compliance with the persecutors was one known part, carried away so great and considerable a number from the Orthodox assemblies, and profession; and are sure yet far more prosperous, than the Catholick Church in Athanasius's time, when Arrianism had over-spread the whole world.

7. Fifthly, when by that series of faith coming by hearing, that from preaching, that from mission, and supposing that mission is an act of jurisdiction, he will first infer that our Bishops and Presbyters have no jurisdiction, and then that we have neither mission, preaching, hearing, nor consequently Church] I shall make no stay to admire his logick, or extraordinary concluding faculty, but ask him in plain terms, whether a Presbyter ordained by an English Bishop, or a child yesterday baptized by an English Presbyter, be not as truly a Presbyter, or a Christian, as any other which was ordained or baptized by the same or any other Bishop or Presbyter of this Church twenty years ago? If he be not, from whence the invalidity or nullity of these latter acts proceed? If he be, what concludency then can be imagined in S. W. his argument? As for our resort to the secular power, how little that is to this matter, is shewed in the Reply p. 157. and hath formerly been cleared in these papers.

8. Sixthly, 'tis a little strange, that when I say of our present persecution, that the same tempest hath with us thrown out all order and form, Bishops and Liturgie together, which visibly belongs to their retaining none of these, who have cast us out of our Churches, not to our retaining none of them, who if we would have forsaken them, had not been cast out, he can make use of this, as my own confession, that that now all order, &c. is cast out, and therein, and not in our serving God in private families, to found his proof of the invisibleness of our Church. These are rare slights indeed, to make my accusing a fault in others, to be indeed the confession of it in my self.

Seventhly, when upon proposing to consideration for the future, whether in case Bishops stand, or it be not our faults that they do not stand, this objection can ever be improveable into a charge against us or our posterity, he reprehends my logick severely, and makes it all one, as if my body being cut into Atomes, I should yet conclude, that if this were not my fault, it were still a well ordered body] I answer, first, that my question in this case was not whether this would be then, when order were destroyed, a well ordered Church, but whether it would be chargeable on us, or our posterity, that it were so disordered? Secondly, that in his very instance, in that case of the mincing my body, first, my soul might yet continue unmangled, and intire. Secondly, that if that misfortune of my body were befallen it, without any default of mine, God would never charge it on me, how loudly soever such a charity, as hath S. W. might revile or triumph over me; Proportionably, that the soul of Christianity remaining to those, who shall out-live those hands who baptized and admitted them into the Church (as he that ever was such, may sure continue a Christian, when those that brought him into the Church, are either gone or cast out of it) and what hath perisht of the outward form or body of Government, being lost without any fault or guilt of theirs (their infelicity, which they could not prevent, and not their crime voluntarily brought upon themselves) this sure will never be lookt on by God, as any dangerous want of order, or as that which shall be any way chargeable upon them. Order is required to the well being, but not necessary absolutely to the being of a Church; an orderless, or a secret society of brethren may be a Church still, as any number of converts in a City, before the Apostle, which was gone to some other City, had yet placed any Governour over them. 'Tis certain a baptized person is, and continues a Christian, if he have not by some fault of his own, fallen from that priviledge (here I speak not of those who are not baptized, and yet if they were qualified for it, and wanted it by no fault of theirs, it will not be chargeable on them neither) and a number of such baptized persons, wheresoever cast by what tempest soever, will never be condemned by God for not having a Bishop or Presbyter in their company, when they earnestly desire, but cannot have him. And this was the plain sence that S. W. had disguised into such an illogical conclusion; the Reader now discerns, what logick it was that assisted him to do it. 9.

Eighthly, when he saith I have spent this whole Chapter, except the first paragraph, to prove, 'tis not our choice or fault that we are persecuted] I answer, that when the whole objection of this Chapter is that which is taken from our being persecuted, there was nothing pertinent to answer, but that 'twas not our fault, nor consequently any matter of charge, or objection against us. 10.

Ninthly, what the Catholick Gentleman simply cited from Mr. Hooker, S. W. hath somewhat improved, fansying that Mr. Hooker did ground his speech in the uncertainty and sandiness of our foundation. Than which nothing could be farther removed from all appearance of truth, as appears by the true occasion, and importance of his words, set down in the Reply p. 154, &c. 11.

Tenthly, when speaking of their assurance of their Churches not failing, he calls it a seeing with evidence, perhaps more than scientifical] I shall not now dispute the grounds of his assurance, that the promises made to the Church in general, shall certainly be performed to the Papacy, howsoever they behave themselves, (to that I have spoken in the Reply p. 153.) but only ask what possible sight or evidence he is capable of, in this world, which is more than scientifical, whether indeed faith is, or may perhaps be more than science, or vision, which is one branch of science, i. e. in effect whether the state of the viatores here be, at least in this respect of evidence, more perfect, than that of the Comprehensores hereafter? Or if it be, why p. 303. when he comes to magnifie Rushworths Dialogues and Mr. Whites Apologie, as the means of clearing to men this point of Infallibility, he is yet so meek in his expressions, as but to say we may see it as visibly as it is possible any thing can be made to the eye of reason] whereas the eye of reason, being but an humane eye, and the evidence that is capable of, being sure no more than scientifical, we had our expectations raised to an higher pitch than that, and so are already defeated in our hopes, and competently discouraged ere we come to take a closer view of them. 12.

As it is, I am now once by Gods blessing gotten to an end of one long journey, and shall breath a while, before I obey S. W. his summons to set out a-fresh upon such another. 13.

The powerful Prince of peace restore that blessing of peace to his divided Church.

THE Diſpatcher Diſpatcht:

OR,

An EXAMINATION of the ROMANISTS REJOINDER to the REPLIES of D. H.

Being a Third Defence of the Treatiſe of SCHISM.

Wherein is inſerted a VIEW of their Poſſeſſion and Orall Tradition in the way of M. White

By H. HAMMOND D. D.

THE PREFACE:

With ſome few Reflexions on D. Holden's Strictures on the TRACT of SCHISM.

1. THE enſuing Defence being grown to an unexpected, and ſomewhat enormous Bulk (by a willingneſs firſt to baniſh unchriſtian Contumelies out of a Theological Diſpute, then to enter the receſſes of thoſe Grounds, on which the Names of Ruſhworth's Dialogues, and M. White's Apology for Tradition being inſcribed, were meant to proclaim them irrefragable, next by a neceſſity of dreſſing the multiplied wounds of a keen Pen; and laſtly by an attendance on the various Arts and Mines, and Ambuſhes of a wily Adverſary:) I muſt not now increaſe this length by excuſing it, or incur the reality of a guilt, by averting or accounting for the appearance.

2. His Preface offers me no temptation to this, being a Panegyrick of (and that is far above the meanneſs of an Apology for) his own performances, and a tender of no leſs than demonſtration and neceſſity, that in ſuch an oppoſition as this betwixt him and me, there muſt be on the one ſide or the other, a monſtrous compoſition, a viciſſitude of nonſenſe, impertinence, extremity of weakneſs and inſincerity. If all theſe be thus ſtudiouſly affixed on me, as by the Analogy required betwixt his Portal and his Poſtern Gate, his Preface and his Index, muſt be concluded: My Anſwer is obvious, that conſciouſneſs is the Parent of ſuch ſolicitude, and that one of theſe Gifts in him, may abundantly qualifie him to charge them all on me; but having made them alſo a part of my deſtiny, and ſuch as I cannot poſſibly avoid, till my Adverſary become ſo humble and ſincere, as to ſee and accuſe them in himſelf, he hath ſuperſeded my cares, and adviſed me not to combat (here unſeaſonably) ſuch obſtinate prejudices, but to leave the Reader to the enſuing Sheets, and my Adverſary to the cool of the day, the good Seaſons of Gods bleſſed Spirit, for their Convictions.

3. In this armature of ſo rational, as well as Chriſtian a patience, I may not find difficulty to poſſeſs my ſoul, having hereby a thouſand times greater advantages in my proſpect, than all the loudeſt laughters and profuſeſt triumphs (the noiſe of the Hammers, and the melody of the Inſtruments, artificious inventions and divertiſements, ordinarily conſequent to the going out from the preſence of the Lord) can pretend to yield any man. Were there no other infallible κριτήριον to demonſtrate our perſecuted Mother of England, a true and vital Member of the Holy Catholick Church, I ſhould not doubt to recommend that * ἐγκόμβωμα ταπεινοφροσύνης, 1 Pet. 5. 5. καὶ ἀγάπης, that white Belt and Badge of Humility and Charity that it binds on all her her Sons and Servants, and exemplifies toward the moſt faſtidious and moſt implacable oppugners of her Faith and Peace.

* Τῇ ἀλλ. δόλου ἐξωμίδι ἱματισθὲν τὸ σχῆμα ἀδικεῖ, ὁ ἐγκόμβωμα λέγω. Jul. Pol. lib. 4. Onomaſt. c. 18.

4. If it were an irrefragable evidence (written with a Sun-beam, proclaimed as with an Angels Trump, and) yielded by all to the Purity and Divinity of the firſt Martyrs, that they died embracing one another, if the [Ecce ut ſe invicem diligunt] the warmth of their love to all of their own profeſſion were the ſpirit that impregnated their Bloud, and made it ſo prolifical: We ſhall not yet deſpair of ſome Teſtimony to the Truth and Image of Chriſt among us, that the ſame bleſſed Fountain of Grace hath not left us deſtitute of this one gift, of bleſſing and praying for our moſt contumelious Adverſaries, of ſeeking and ſoliciting their double Peace, with God, and towards their Brethren; and when we are allowed no audience from earthly Brethren, ſtill ſounding the louder in the ears of our heavenly Father; the more deſperate the Breach, incurable the Wounds and Ruptures are, in divided, bleeding, if not expiring Chriſtendom; the more frequent the Checks we have received even from Heaven, (in the Prophet Jeremie's ſtile, Thy bruiſe is incurable, and thy wound grievous; There is none to plead thy cauſe, that thou maiſt be bound up, thou haſt no healing medicines; All thy Lovers have forgotten thee, they ſeek thee not, for I have wounded thee with the wound of an Enemy, with the chaſtiſements of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity, becauſe thy ſins (O Chriſtendom) are increaſed; Why crieſt thou for thine affliction? Thy ſorrow is incurable, for the multitude of thine iniquity I have done theſe things unto thee,) by ſo much the more conſtantly and obſtinately inſiſting in our Siege of Importunity, and never ceaſing to purſue our provoked, but moſt juſt Judge, even δυσωπουῦλες Θεὸν, as the Fathers Rhetorick, learnt from Chriſt, teaches us, preſſing on God's baſhfulneſs, and not fainting, till that Prophets return brought from the Oracle, become ours, [I will reſtore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, ſaith the Lord.]

Jer. 30. 12, 13, 14, 15.

V. 17.

5. And ſhould it be the portion of this Mother of ours encircled and crown'd (like that other in the Maccabees) with all her Children to fall a Prey or a Joy to the cruelleſt Enemy, ſhould we, as Doctor Holden is willing to propheſie, prove now that Res unius ætatis, in the ſenſe in which 'twas once ſaid of the Populus virorum (which the God whom we ſerve may yet, in deſpight of others Auguries, and our own Provocations, timely avert from us) yet our comfort and joy will infinitely ſurpaſs and reward, and ſwallow up the utmoſt pangs of our ἄθλησις and τελείωσις, if we may be thus vouchſafed and honoured by our βεβαίωσις, to breath our laſt in this poſture; to die the death of thoſe righteous, who, when the violence of Zeal, ſtopping their ears, and opening their mouths, whoſe breaſts it fills, hath caſt them out of the City, and ſtoned them, have made no unkinder Returns than of their Prayers, that God would not charge their ſins on them.

The preſent ſtate of the Proteſtant Church, conſiſting of Proteſtant Biſhops and their Proteſtant Flock not being likely to conninue long. Annal. of Faith, p. 470.

6. That I have had by S. W's favour, no ſmall harveſt of opportunities of exerciſing ſome lower part of this Duty, is far from being matter of mutiny or complaint to me: If Altars be to be built, and Oblations preſented to Benefactors, it were the ſame culpable omiſſion that S. Auguſtine noteth in the Heathens, for not erecting one Shrine to their Enemies, in acknowlelgment of that prime ſort of obligingneſs, either to repine, or not to prepare my Preſent for him, who hath thus manifoldly engaged me. But of this I need not be ſolicitous, having ſent my Flocks and Herds before me, to ſeek the face of my rough Brother.

7. 'Tis my deſire that many others may with me receive benefit from him, and by beholding and admiring in this draught of his, the extraordinary dimenſions of that Portraicture which he hath there drawn at length, and demurely entituled, Zeal for Souls, and on effluxion of the Certainty of his Faith, ſit down and reflect ſadly, and begin in earneſt to believe Chriſt, that he came not to deſtroy the Law, whether of Moſes, or but of ingenuous Nature and common Humanity, but πληρῶσαι to perfect and fill it up, and give it the utmoſt completion, not to debauch but cultivate either the Jewiſh or Heathen World, to infuſe a ſpirit of Evangelical love, that ſhall exorcize and caſt out the Boanerges-ſpirit of Zeal, and (did not we ſtrangely reſiſt his workings) to plant an entire Unity of affections in thoſe that ſtand in matters of opinion divided.

8. Might but his Injunctions be obeyed, his recommendations conſidered, or his richeſt Legacies accepted by us, all which concentre in this one point of undivided peace and love among all Chriſtians; We might calmly ſeek Truth (and hope to find as much of it as is proper to our Neceſſities) not driving it from us by our importune noiſes; and one part of the Apoſtles depoſitum being kept entire in our Creeds, all which (in every Article) S. W. and I can pronounce together, and interpret, I ſuppoſe to the ſame ſenſe, and the other uniformly received from the Decalogue, and Sermon in the Mount, and the unqueſtioned Neceſſity of Conſtant Evangelical Obedience, (wherein I hope, when paſſion is over, and the Doctrine of Attrition, and ſome ſuch like reviewed, we accord alſo) We might combine our ſincere and moſt paſſionate endeavours to add unto Faith Vertue, and maintain our differences in other things, as the Angels that are aſſigned the care of ſeveral Men or Provinces, may be ſuppoſed to preſerve their diſtant inclinations and judgments toward their cuſtoditi, and yet never defile themſelves, or ingage in any part of that filthineſs of the ſpirit (ſuch is Animoſity, Faction, πικρὸς ζῆλος) ζηλῶ.) in the purſuit of ſuch Intereſts, but continue Angels ſtill, in the full height of Love and Holineſs.

9. That our ſmart may become our Diſcipline, and Satiety at length teach men this wiſdom, ſince Chriſtianity cannot inſpire it, methinks we might have leave to hope from the uneaſineſs of rage, and being always in the fire of Contention, and the Joyfulneſs as well as Goodneſs, of Peace and Charity: And then the diſcovery of my thoughts that S. Peter had the Primacy among the Apoſtles, without the Supremacy over them, which hath brought ſo much of S. W's Rheum into my Face, and coſt me ſome attendance to wipe it off, will be none of the Chriſtian abominations; That, and many other no deeper Problems, will be allowed to be calmly and amicably treated among Scholars; and Truth to carry it againſt Clamours, and thoſe will be eſteemed to have moſt of the power of Religion in them, which have the feweſt and meekeſt, not the moſt numerous and immortal quarrels, who by ſeparating from none but obſtinate Shiſmaticks, Hereticks in the ancient Churches ſtile, and vicious Livers, have as no Friends on Earth but the truly Pious and Peaceable, ſo no Enemies but the Profane and Unreconcileable.

10. Whilſt I am on this (I hope no exaſperating) Theme, and before I conclude this Preface, it may not be amiſs to allow ſome brief Reflexions on Dr. Holden's Strictures lately publiſhed, as an account of his Opinion of my Treatiſe of Schiſm, if it be but to aſſure him that I am more juſt in my Returns to his Civility (a thing my Friend S. W. hath not cloy'd me with) than to give him any cauſe to apprehend (what he mentions, pag. 421.) that I am any way offended with the ſight of that which he wrote to his Friend in Freedom.

11. Some things he is pleaſed to think I would not have written, if I had firſt ſeen his Analyſis and Appendix: And I take the boldneſs to Reply, that I perceive the chief things to which he excepts in my Book, are ſo fully cleared in other Treatiſes which I have written, eſpecially that of Fundamentals, and of Hereſie, the Anſwer to Schiſm Diſarmed, and now to the Diſpatcher, that I cannot but entertain ſome hopes, that if he had ſeen, and ſurveyed thoſe, all which (but this Diſpatch) were publick before this Tranſlation of his Analyſis, &c. he would not have made thoſe exceptions: What theſe are, I ſhall not trouble him to enumerate, becauſe I had rather prepare for an accord and agreement, refreſhing my ſelf a while after the Travail of this Volume, than ſeem to delight in the ſucceſſion of Combatants, by managing or deſigning any contention with him.

12. In order to this Repoſe, I have many paſſages chearfully to tranſcribe from him, by the Umpirage of which, a great part of the Controverſie betwixt S. W. and me, which hath thus long exerciſed the Reader, might have been very amicably compoſed.

As Firſt, When I give, (as he acknowledges) a firſtneſs of Precedency and Preſidency to the Pope, he *tells me, he is confident I know not how much more is allowed him by the Univerſal conſent of all Catholicks, as of Divine Inſtitution, whatever I may have read in particular Authors (I ſuppoſe S. W. &c.) whereby I am enabled to interpret a Parentheſis of his *foregoing, That in allowing the Pope to be the firſt Biſhop and Patriarch in Order or Priority of Place; I come nearer to the eſſential part of the Pope's Primacy than I thought or am aware of. *P. 430. *P. 427. P. 431.

Secondly, When he acknowledges that nothing but Univerſal Tradition (which is as diſtant from the preſent Oral of the Romiſh Mothers, which M. White's and S. W's Models are built on; as an Univerſal is from ſome Particulars) is the infallible Interpreter of Scriptures (how it is the onely Interpreter of Councils and Fathers, when preſently he adds, That General Councils are witneſſes of what we believe, i.e. of Tradition, I ſhall not too nicely examine.)

Thirdly, That he ſaith, I ſeem to favour a late Opinion of ſome Learned Catholicks, who ſay, Saint Peter and Saint Paul made up but one Head of the Church, and this by conjecturing that they founded two Churches both at Antioch and Rome, the one of the Jews, the other of the Gentiles, and conſequently were both Biſhops at the ſame time of the ſame City (and then I wonder other Catholicks ſhould ſo faſtidiouſly oppoſe this.) P. 432.

Fourthly, That there was no need in the Apoſtles times to have recourſe to S. Peter, nor opportunity (ordinarily ſpeaking) or conveniency for it. P. 433.

Fifthly, That the Pope's Authority is not ſo ample as S. Peter's was. P. 434.

Sixthly, That the Pope doth exerciſe no Power nor Juriſdiction in the Territories of any Sovereign without the Sovereign's leave. Ibid.

Seventhly, That they do not believe it as an Article of our Chriſtian Faith, that there is Ibid.
'any particular act of Juriſdiction ſo eſſentially annexed to the Pope, and ſpecified by Divine
'Inſtitution over all Nations, as that it may not be in ſome caſes, either performed by others,
'ſupplied ſome other ways, or quite omitted; Adding, that he will not determine wherein
'his headſhip conſiſts in relation to our purpoſe; And †elſewhere confeſſing, That it is not † Annal. p. 227.
'eaſie to determine which be the ſpecial and particular acts of his Superiority ſetled on him by 'divine Inſtitution (and accordingly abſtaining, on neceſſity as well as choice, from thus determining.

Eighthly, That all Cauſes and Caſes ought to be judged within the Dominions of each Sovereign; That they in France do, and have ever obſerved this, requiring in all occurrences that the P. 435.

Bishops of their Nation may be appointed Judges of whatsoever may be questioned in Rome concerning any of his Majestie's Subjects. Lastly, That some Catholicks have been and are too forward in judging of Protestants.

P. 447.

13. I which have served an Austere Master, and in so long and wearisom an attendance have been vouchsafed no such Donative, or indulgence from S.W. cannot without some acknowledgment receive these so many from another as Reverend and Catholick an Author, as himself. Of which therefore I desire to make my thankfulness thus publick, that others may hear, and bear them in mind, thorough all the ensuing debates with S.W. of Tradition, of the Gentile and Jewish Cœtus at Antioch and Rome, but especially of the Pope's Universal Pastorship, not Patriarchate onely, but Headship of the Universal Church, asserted by him, as held by Divine Institution, and derived to the Pope as he was successour to S. Peter, of (the foundation of that) S. Peter's Power and Supreme Authority over all the Apostles, S. Paul particularly, of the rights of Sovereign Powers and Primates in their Territories, &c. Nothing doubting, but the concessions of this Learned Doctor, will be found more favourable to the Defendant than the Plaintiff; to the unworthy Advocate of the Church of England, than the Triumphant Deserter and Opposer of it.

* Append. of Sch. p. 389. and p. 445.

14. As for his other way of charging the Schism on us, from a supposed * Separation betwixt us in necessary points of Divine Worship, namely in Sacrifice and Sacraments, if He and I, being both English men, speak the same Language, and there lie not some undiscovered ambiguity in the words Sacrifice and Sacraments, I should hope, when the Universal Pastorship by Divine Right were discarded, and onely the Primacy of Order taken in its stead, the issue would be brief, seeing it is already known to all men, that till about the tenth year of Queen Elizabeth, the Romanists of this Nation Universally communicated with us in these acts, and that whole Divine Worship prescribed by our Liturgy, (which we still retain without any the least change) and might no doubt have done so still, if the Pope, for Reasons of his Ecclesiastical State, had not by Bull interdicted them, to which Interdict the Separation being wholly due, and They, not We, the Separators, how it should now be chargeable upon us, I can neither seek, nor want any other Umpire but himself, to judge betwixt us.

15. What Controversies are now risen and waged among us on these Heads, he hath in part truly enumerated; though as he omits the two principal, concerning their private Masses, and denying the Cup, their No-communion, and their Half-communion, the contrary to which maintained by us, it were a little hard, if it should render us Schismaticks, when the [Take, Eat,] and [Drink ye all] are so pregnantly favourable to us; so I must confess I should not have begun the List as he doth, that [all Roman Catholicks believe and reverence the Sacrifice of the Mass, as the most Substantial and Essential act of their Religion, all Protestants condemn and abhor it.] When 'tis visible that the Protestants of the Church of England believe and reverence, as much as any, the Sacrifice of the Eucharist, as the most Substantial and Essential act of our Religion, and doubt not, but the Word Missa, Mass, hath fitly been used by the Western Church to signifie it, and herein abhor or condemn nothing, but the Corruptions and Mutilations, which the Church of Rome, without care of Conforming themselves to the Universal, have admitted in the Celebration. And for our judgment of these, and of what he next names, the conversion of the substance of the Elements into the very substance of the Body and Bloud of Christ, &c. as we cannot imagine, how being bare doctrinal Debates, they can denominate us Schismaticks, (at least, any more than them, without begging the Question;) So for the resolution of them, we tender that Plea, that no peaceable Christians would doubt to accept of, by making our Appeal to the Universal Tradition of the whole Church, including the Fountain as well as the Streams, which how much it is preferrable to the present Oral Teachings of the Romish Mothers, (the sweet connatural way that God is thought and affirmed by Mr. White, to be obliged to have established in the World, as the ultimate resolution of all Controversies,) which are on a double account, both of time and place, very particular, one would think should be easie to determine, (to which end I have purposely afforded it a distinct consideration in the third Chapter of this Dispatch.) And yet I know not any other Controversie betwixt the Romanist and us, which is not involved in the Fate of this, and stands unquestionably determined by this Resolution.

16. With what truth we can be said to deny any Sacrament which Christ instituted, and thereby contract the guilt of Schism, I would hope should undergo no debate betwixt sober men, that will not contend for words. For 1. The Canon of Trent, Sess. vii. Can. 3. pronouncing Anathema against those who affirm the Seven Sacraments to be so equal, Ut nullâ ratione aliud sit alio dignius, that in no respect one is more worthy than another; what cause can there be for their displeasure, that we have desired to express our sense of this imparity, and the grounds of it? 2. The doctrine of our Church concerning the number of the Sacraments, being in our Catechism thus delivered, That Christ hath ordained two onely as generally necessary to salvation, she hath competently expounded, and vindicated her self from all exceptions, by confining her Speech, 1. To those that have been allowed the stile of Sacraments. 2. That were ordained by Christ, And 3. Ordained as generally necessary to salvation. For the first, It is visible that S. Ambrose writing De Sacramentis, mentions in that whole Tract (and in a former, De iis qui mysteriis initiantur) no more but these two. So S. Augustine * Ep. CXVIII. ad Januar. resolves the Sacraments to be Numero pauciſſima, and mentions none but these two; and * De Doctrinâ, Chr. l. 3 c. 9. Quædam pauca Dominus & Apostolica tradidit Disciplina; Sicuti est Baptismi Sacramentum & celebratio corporis & sanguinis Domini; a few things, instancing in these two Sacraments. And then why might not these Authorities, with * Paschasius long after them, &c. be of more force to restrain than Peter Lombard's Enumeration of Seven, so very lately, to ampliate the number? For the second, it is visible, that all the rest were not ordained by Christ, not Marriage, which was before Christ's time, not Confirmation, nor Extreme Unction, nor Orders, which (to say no more in this place) are not so much as mentioned in the Gospels or Story of Christ, but in the Acts and Epistles of the Apostles, nor Penance, any farther than it is comprehended under the Power of the Keys, or Binding and Loosing; and so far it is unquestionably retained by us, though not under the Title of a Sacrament (because, among other things, there is no constant visible sign in the celebrating it, which the Romanists themselves make necessary to a Sacrament) but of the Censures and Discipline of the Church. Lastly, That they are not all generally necessary to salvation, i.e. to the salvation of all men that are capable of them, I shall suppose an Opinion common to us with Romanists. Of Mariage and Orders there is no question, they as well as we allowing salvation to Virgins and Laymen. Of Extreme Unction there can be as little, among them that profess not to use it to those that are put to death by Justice; for which Bellarmine's Catechism gives a Reason, which more than intimates the one true end of it, for cure of Diseases, but infallibly concludes the no general necessity of it to salvation, because, saith he, such are neither sick nor have hope of life; which confines it to them that are in those two capacities, neither of which have any affinity with General. For Confirmation, the Jesuites in England are known to have lately maintained against the Seculars, the no necessity of it. And if they account of Penance as necessary, yet I hope they do not so affix the remission and salvation to the external, as to deny it to the internal act of it, sincerely performed, though without the other. If they do, our receding from them in this, will the more nearly unite us to the Apostolical and ancient Church, (which so learned a man cannot but know,) makes no scruple to admit this.

were

* To. 2. p. 556. B

* To. 3. p. 50.

* De Euchar. c. 3.

P. 301. *

17. But I shall not allow my self to engage farther in this, or any other Polemick Subject, which his Discourse hath offered to me, being resolved that this προπύλαιον shall be wholly dedicated and inscribed to Peace, and be so far like the Temple of Solomon, that no noise of Hammer shall be heard in it, the rather because the whole ensuing Fabrick hath, on S. W's Summons, been prepared for War, surveyed, and modelled, begun and finished in that other manner; wherewith, because it is more than possible the Reader will be cloy'd, it was not amiss to give him this variety by way of Antepast and Paraſceve, which he will like never the worse for not being wholly Paschal, the Lamb, and Unleavened Wafer, without the Bitter Herbs.

THE

THE Diſpatcher Diſpatcht.

CHAP. I.

Of Contumelies; in Reply to S. W*'s four firſt Sections of his Firſt Part.*

SECT. I.

The manner of his writing. The advantages and diſadvantages of it. Launoy*'s judgment of this Method; the like of* Plutarch, and Chryſoſtom, and Phavorinus. S.W*'s Defences examined. His notion of Preaching, and Saint. The Bill of Fare. His Confeſſion of Rude Blows: the Injuſtice equal to the Rudeneſs. An Eſſay of* S.W*'s Logick. Twitchings by the Beard, defended, with what truth. Of Scripture Teſtimonies againſt Contumelies, and the appliableneſs of them. His paſſages from* Tertullian and Auguſtine repaid him. Six Pleas for Contumelies evacuated. His admirable Inferences. His diſclaiming all Contumelies. His definition of ſuch. Perſonal and Moral Faults. His Artifice in pretending my Confeſſion, and in concluding me a Railer.

1. THe firſt attempt of our Diſpatcher, is to give an account of his writing at all; and his ſecond, to defend his manner of Treaty from the Charge or Blame of Contumelioufneſs. Theſe two were to march together in the Front and Syllabus of his firſt Section, being ſo engaged, and intricated the one in the other, that if he may not have liberty to write in that ſtile of Scoff and Declamation, he muſt not write at all, his ovation being the prime of his ſtrength, his noiſe and report of his Victories, the onely means to perſuade the Reader that he hath obtained them.

2. This Stratagem promiſes it ſelf many advantages; For, 1. It hath the Reputation of having gotten ſome Conqueſts, routed the unexpert adverſaries, by crying They Flie; (a ſtrange privilege of confident Fiction, by majoration to loſe its nature and become Truth.) And being thus incouraged, it (2.) likes the augury, and hopes ſtill to be in like manner ſucceſsful; the ſlow Ravener, whoſe ſpeed ſerves him not to overtake and ſeize his prey, on deſign to charm, doth roar after it: and if it thrives not, yet (3.) 'tis the putting a good countenance upon an ill matter, and that is the onely Relief in an irremediable miſadventure. Mean-while the admiſſion of this among other of Polyænus's Stratagems, is ſo far from being any Ingredient in the Chriſtian Warfare, that it is an unqueſtionable indication of the want of thoſe Weapons, with which that arrays its Champions; and the Artifice is ſtill ſo mean, that they muſt be very importunate Intereſts, that ſhall be able to recommend it to any Trafficker, but ordinarily ingenious, and that can but live without it: There is none but the profeſs'd Quack or Mountebank, that avowedly brings the Zany upon the Stage with him; ſuch undoubtedly is this Scoptical Humour, when 'tis allowed to bear any conſiderable part in the Chriſtian Palæſtra, let it call it ſelf what it pleaſe, Zeal or Drollery, 'tis at beſt the Buffon, deſigned to aſſiſt and combine with Sophiſtry, (as the Ballad-ſinger with the Cut-Purſe) to enſnare and lurch the Simple. So one of your Sorbon Doctors lately advertiſeth the Benedictine Monk‖, Convitia apud imperitos & ſtolidè credulos rationum inſtar haberi ſolent, this kind of Treaty uſes the Reader as ill as the Adverſary, calls them Fools that are moved by it. The managing a Controverſie, ſaith he, with oſtentation of words, ſecularis potius quam Monaſticæ militiæ profeſſorem decet, becomes a Fencer better than a Monk; but for rudeneſs or incivility to him that had given him never an ill word, he muſt more ſeriouſly inſtruct the Brother what Character belongs to it. Modeſtia virtus eſt tum omnium, tum maximè Chriſtianorum, & inter Chriſtianos vel maximè Clericorum, & Monachorum, qui cæteris virtutum omnium exemplo prælucere debent: veritas quoque non indiget patrocinio convitiorum, ipſa ſibi ſufficit, & quo nudior eſt, ac ſimplicior, eò comptior, eò amabilior, eò fortior & ad vincendum mendacium aptior. Modeſty is the duty of all Chriſtians, eſpecially of Eccleſiaſtical perſons, and Truth needs not Contumely for its Advocate, is much more lovely, and apt to convince without this Auxiliary.* This I chuſe to ſay in his, rather than in my own words, that it may not come to him under the prejudice of Preaching, or Saint-like; and if Greek, though Heathen, may not be as nauſeous as either of thoſe, I ſhall give it a perfect parallel out of ‖ Plutarch, Ἀνδρεία χαλῶς ἂν δεῖσθαι δόξειεν ὑπὸ τοῦ λόγου, Valour needs not Anger, having imbibed Reaſon. Which made * S. Chryſoſtom conclude, μάλιστα τῶν μαχομένων θυμοῦσθαι οὐ χρή. Of all men living they that ſtrive, (Controvertiſts) are obliged not to be angry. And if S.W. will turn to a ſaying of Phavorinus in ‖ A. Gellius (which aſſures me the degree of Praiſe which he hath afforded me, p. 18, 19. was more skilfully deſigned to my * diſadvantage, than all his Index of Contumelies: giving this reaſon for the Aphoriſm, Quoniam qui maledicit & vituperat, quantò id acerbiùs facit, tam maximè illi pro iniquo & inimico ducitur, & plerumque propterea fidem non capit. The bitterer his reproaches are, the leſs they are credited,) he will have reaſon to think that what I have hitherto ſaid in theſe wordiſh teſtimonies (as he will call them) is more for his than mine own advantage, if his Cauſe will but allow him to make uſe of it.

‖ Launoy de Prim. Cenomani Præſ. Epoc. p. 167.

* Ibid. p. 180.

‖ Περὶ Ἀοργησίας.

* Tom. IV. p. 709. l. 33.

‖ l. 19. c. 111.

* Turpius eſt exigue & frigidè laudari, quam inſectanter & graviter vituperari. Qui infœcundè & jejunè laudat, deſtituì à cauſa videtur.

3. For my ſelf, as I muſt profeſs to believe that there is no one ſimple Errour in Popery more pernicious, nor conſequently more fit to be reſiſted and conteſted with, than are the contrarieties to Charity, the fermentations and paroxyſms of Bitter Zeal, which are here avowed and juſtified by S.W. ſo I have not

not a greater obligation to any part of this Reply, than to proceed yet farther on this Proemial Theme, how extrinsecal soever it may seem to the main Controversie; and examine (with what brevity I may, being herein tied to anothers motions) all that he hath here said in defence of it, separating as well as I can, his Pleas from his Scoffs, his Logick from his Rhetorick, and making my rejoinder onely to the united force of the former, not to the diffused of the latter.

4. And first to the plain Texts of Scripture, which I produced against Railers, Revilers, Contumelious Persons, he replies, A sad case, that no punishment less than Hell must be poor S.W*'s doom, because he laid open the weakness of Dr.* H's defence of a pernicious Cause, after the manner that such a Defence deserved; and he wonders I had no more charity than not to be afraid, lest I should drive S.W. into despair of his salvation, by denouncing and preaching to him such horrid judgments, for writing against the Saints.] To this I reply. 1. That it is indeed a sad case, that God's denunciations against a sin, so charitably, and affectionately mentioned by an Apostle, as a special part of his Apostolical Office, to call all to self-examination, but the Guilty to repentance, should be entertain'd with so little of earnest, or of that temper of mind, which is due to any Apostolical denunciation. 2. I demand as sadly, whether if S.W. did but suspect that any Christian (though most unknown to him) which he had to deal with, were guilty of Drunkenness or Adultery, and should thereupon mind him of the Apostles denunciations against such, that neither the Drunkard nor Adulterer should enter the Kingdom of God, and the other should return, whether seriously or but scoptacally, that he wondered S.W. had no more charity than not to be afraid of driving him into despair of his salvation, he would think it a Christian Reply, and either an Argument of his Innocency, or a symptom of his Relenting? 3. I hence learn somewhat of his Dialect; 1. His notion of Preaching, which he so oft useth as a stile of Scorn. 2. That other of Saints, which with him is wont to sound the same way. Preaching is here joined with denouncing such horrid judgments, as were cited out of S. Paul, and can signifie no other than what S. Paul was guilty of, and I no otherwise, than as I transcribed S. Paul's words. And let him then judge, if 'twere truly his Art, as elsewhere he pretends, which suggested this Ironie, this part of his Dialect to him. Next [the Saints] can signifie no more or other than Dr. H. for against him onely it was that S.W. was charged to have written that, which he here affirms written against the Saints: and then he that most seriously thinks himself ten thousand times less than the least of all Saints (and never assumed more, if so much as this) that knows it hath been the general practice of Hereticks and Schismaticks, to call themselves by titles of this kind, the Pure, the Perfect, the Spiritual, the Holy, the Saints, the Godly, and the very worst of men, the Gnosticks, meant the same, when they assumed that Title) must yet be as solemnly scoff'd at under that stile, as if he had indeed assumed it. 'Tis true I had mentioned Saints in that Paragraph, to which he thus replies, and so also the true Prophets of God, but the former in the express Scripture notion, for those that reign in Heaven, and shall judge the world; and the second for those very Prophets whom the Jews defamed and persecuted; far from imagining, and as far from appearing, to include my self in either number; and if he meant to persuade any incautious Reader, that I did, then this was very injurious to us both, and an early instance of the undue and undeserved manner of his Replies to my Defence, which yet he averts in this period, and pretends no farther to vindicate his practices from the Apostles sentence, than he can justly avert it. I demand therefore, did I in the Paragraph he now Replies to, (or any where else) assume to my self or Party, the title of Saints? If he saith I did, I leave him to his own eyes and conscience to refute him; If I did not, then this part of my Defence deserved not this manner of Reply which he hath given it; and having nothing to pretend for it but my desert, he hath already lost his onely Plea, as soon as he hath produced it.

5. Secondly, He proceeds to view the charge of Contumely, how he may appear to be concerned in it, and begins with my acknowledgment (as if that would yield him some advantage) that it was not he which wrote the Bill of Fare, to which he saith he may with truth add, that he did not so much as know of it.] I Reply, 1. That my Confession of the Romish Factor, concerned onely the Stile of Drollery and Picquant Sauce, by him made use of, and is no farther to be extended than that the Publisher gave a civiller Title to his Contumelies than the Author himself. 2. That the List which the Publisher set in the Front of the Book, was exactly conformable to what the Author had dispersed in the Body of it, and can no more lessen by dividing and taking part of his blame, than the divulger or proclaimer of a Libel extenuates the Crime of him that Pen'd it and delivered it to be publish'd. Nay, 3. The Bill of Fare is so imperfect an Index of the Contumelies of the Book, that I have reason to think it set as a Blind rather, to conceal the greater variety of them, which was sure to be found in the Book, than a Map onely to point at them. 4. That as I, whose onely business it was to consider the Contumelies, can be no more presumed to know, or consequently to reflect on the person of S. W. than of the Romish Factor, the Master of the Feast than the Collector of the Bill of Fare: so nothing that I have said in this matter, is concerned in that Enquiry. I have indeed oft heard the Names by which both of them are known, but as I am no whit satisfied for the Injustice of their Contumelies, by my having those imperfect Images of them, or by their having shared it betwixt them, (the Heap or Load of Soil, smells never the more temperately, that there were more hands joined to the collecting of it) so the Apostles sentences against that Sin, were produced by me for the use of all that had any part of that Guilt on them, and meant not to raise a suspicion of guilt on any, that had it not. And yet 5. if S and W be characters that any one person means, or is willing to be known by, whoever it is that hath the comfort of being, or vanity of assuming to be the Author of these Answers, he is certainly responsible for all that appears from the Press under his Signatures, as a Merchant is for the Transactions of his Factor. Lastly, I have now no motive to incline me to affix the Collecting of the Index of Schism dispatcht to any other hand, than what compiled the Book, and that is much more contumelious and injurious than the former Bill of Fare; and so here be grounds enough to supersede and deprive him of all benefit of that Confession of mine, with which he begins his Defence.

6. But, saith he, Dr. H. thinks he hath got a notable advantage against me from my own Confession, that my Blows were rude, and my Adversary civil, whereas I used both those Phrases as an objection of the Readers, as is most palpable.] I Reply, 1. How he used them, must be judged by his own words, to which I referred in the Epistle to the Reader. Before, saith he, you can have past three Chapters, I know you will be objecting, that the Blows I give are too rude for so civil an adversary.] From hence all that I assumed was, that the Author who was fittest to name his own Births, hath allowed them the plainer Title of rude Blows. And what can be more palpable, than that he hath done so? 2. 'Tis as palpable that when this was written to the Reader, to meet him, as he saith, in the very entry, the Reader, of whom he speaks, could not as yet have made this objection, or be with truth by him pretended to make it, any otherwise than as S.W's Conscience assured him, there was place for this objection; These words [I know you will be objecting] being spoken by the Disarmer, can import no less to my understanding, than that this was a reflex'd act of his own Conscience, that there were in the 3 first Chapters competent motives to suggest to the Reader this objection, and I am not subtile enough to distinguish betwixt this signification of this reflex'd act of Conscience and his own Confession, which yet he here vehemently averts, with what palpableness or evidence of truth, let him now judge. 3. If the Reader indefinitely taken, i.e. (in materia necessariâ, which alone is the matter of knowledge, here mentioned) every Reader be by S.W. yielded to object this, then is this as fair and large a testimony as may be, of the truth of the thing questioned, viz. That S.W's Blows were not onely rude, but too rude, which was all that I designed to conclude from this medium. Other collections I might have made from his mentioning the 3 first chapters, and no more, and his mentioning them in an undue stile, when that Book of his is not divided into Chapters, but into 3 Parts, & 13 Sect. in the first Part: but I desired not then, nor am yet fond of making impertinent Discoveries.

can

7. But he hath more to say to this Head. Had I, saith he, used them, the rudeness of Blows argues not that they were not just, since none doubts but Malefactors are very rudely, yet most justly whipt, and the courteous Epithet of Civil denied not, but the oil in his tongue was accompanied with venom in his heart, and so made it more necessary to discover that, whose onely advantage it was to lurk undiscoverable. I Reply, 1. That I assumed no more from his Confession, than that the Blows were rude, and the Adversary civil, and if that be granted, I have no more to demand, nor he to quarrel in this matter. For 2. if rudeness should not conclude injustice, much less will it conclude the contrary; there will need other mediums to prove the Blows just, than [that they are rude, or that Malefactors are punished justly.] And till those mediums are produced, and proved effectual to the end, the affirming them just, is the begging the question, and so of no force to his present Defence, and will be proved but a new Contumely, as oft as I shall in the process of this answer shew, that there is as much injustice as rudeness in his Blows. 3. I shall appeal to custom of Speech, the best Dictionary, whether when a Malefactor is whipt by the Lictor, or beheaded by the Executioner, without any addition of his own spleen to the Judges sentence, he shall be said to have dealt rudely or contumeliously with the Malefactor? or whether strength of Argument in a Disputant, would by the Reader indefinitely be certain (and so, as to be the object of S.W's knowledge) to be stiled rudeness? If so, he hath not lost by this instance, though withall he hath not gained by it; but if not, let him then judge what Cause it is, that is capable of no better Defences. But then 4. I must set a remark on that piece of Logick that follows, [The courteous Epithet of Civil denied not, but the oil in the tongue was accompanied with venom in his heart, and so made it more necessary to discover that ——] The force of this consequence and propriety to its being a part of S.W's Defence, depends on these two things; 1. That under the outside of Civility, poison was discovered to lurk. 2. That the rude Blows were some way necessary to the making this discovery; now 1. I demand, Is that presently eo ipso inferred and proved, that every thing else doth not deny: The word [Civil] is not pretended by me to have any force of probation, either as to the truth or the wholsomness of what is propounded, but neither is it any symptom of falshood or poison, any more than the contrary rudeness is of the contrary. By what means then is the discovery made, which is here supposed? The onely medium here mentioned, is, That [The courteous Epithet of Civil denied it not.] But 1. It doth as much deny it, as words signifie things, or lips are interpreters of the heart, (for he that treats a man civilly, doth at least tell him, that he means him no hurt) and all humane affirmations and negations are thus transacted; though it is true, there is frequently deceit in them, when false hearts have the managing of them. 2. Therefore, if it doth not deny it, what is gained toward the discovery? There be ten thousand propositions (which are more than single words) in the Bible, none of which deny Lucifer to be the Messias; will this yield him any assistance toward the acquiring of that dignity? To suppose then this lurking poison without any other ground of inferring it, than that the Epithet of Civil denied it not, is one essay of his discursive faculty that I was here to consider. And another is, the influence that this hath on the rude Blows, or propriety to be an ingredient in the Plea for them. For I must again demand, In case there were any latent poison in the civil Tract of Schism, was not civil reason able to search and discover it? Do Physitians use to inveigh or scoff at poisons? tell them they are absurd and ridiculous, and Saint-like; or do they not think it sufficient to furnish their Patients with Antidotes against them? If there were never a Smith in Israel, could not the true Religion be preserved, without going down to the Philistins Grindstones to whet their Piety, as well as their Shares? If all the Romanists were throughout good Christians, and so really the meekest men upon the earth, and such as would not rail any more than lie for God, were the Infallibility and visibility of their Church ascertained (or but more likely) to be lost by this means? If so, then S.W. need no more be rude, Dr. H's civility hath ensured and prepared his own ruine, and then still, be the supposition of the poison never so certain, and the discovery never so necessary, yet ad quid perditio hæc? why were these loads of Contumelies brought in, which might have been sold to the Jews for some price (it matters not how great) or laid out in charity on some strong-hearted Heretick, which were like to die a lingring death, without them? If a wordish testimony or two may here have place against such rigorous evidences as these, I shall propose to him the words of Cicero and Seneca, which may deserve to be believed in their own faculties *. Non desiderat fortitudo advocatam iracundiam; satis est instructa, armata, parata per se; Annon vir fortis nisi stomachari cœperit, non potest esse fortis? Gladiatorum id quidem est. And ‖ Nil aliis instrumentis opus est, satis nos instruxit ratione natura: Hæc dedit telum firmum, perpetuum, obsequens, nec anceps, nec quod in dominum remitti possit: The common notions that prevailed uniformly with these, might, if consulted, have assured S.W. that Reason without the Rude Blows, was his best armature, such as would not fail to doe what he would have it, could not be taken out of his hands, and used against him, as all other weapons may, but especially that of Contumely, if the Adversary be no better Man than S.W. is a Disputant.

* Cic. Tusc. Qu. l. IV.

‖ Senec. de Ira l. I. c. XVI.

8. I shall not now further disquiet him, by examining how he could, as he saith, discover that venom, whose advantage, he also saith it was, to lurk undiscoverable, because I doubt not, but this new tube hath the faculty of discovering things which are otherwise undiscoverable, this magnifying glass hath always been able not onely to enlarge, but create, first to improve Mites into Swine, and then each single mere no- thing into the largeſt Coloſſus, and all this by the rules of ſevere Reaſon, and rigorous Demonſtration.

9. 'Tis time we now advance from the rude Blows, (for which I am to account not with S.W. it ſeems, but with the Reader onely, it being ſo palpable, that the Reader was the man, that put thoſe words into S.W's mouth, without any the leaſt conſent of his) to the twitchings by the beard] which he cannot, doth not deny to have been his own ſtile; Nay (that I may not conclude as he doth, from not denying) he expreſly confeſſes, he ſpoke it. But to this he hath ſome few things to ſay alſo. 1. That I reiterate it to make my Reader ſmile. 2. That the twitching by the Beard is indeed ſomewhat too rude a carriage, if underſtood in the down right ſenſe, as, ſaith he, I ſeem to take it, but he ſpake it onely in an allegory, and in order to my wearing a Vizard, which he pluckt off. 3. That ſince he did onely ſo, let me but acknowledge that he found me attired in ſuch a Mask, and he is contented to be thought ſo unreaſonably uncivil, as to pluck it off ſo rudely.]

10. This, it ſeems, is all the ſatisfaction that may be expected to attend on S.W's Confeſſion, when himſelf is both the Penitent and the Confeſſor. But to theſe I reply, to the firſt, 1. That it were not unreaſonable in him to allow me the comfort once to ſolicit the Readers ſmile, when he hath the profuſer joys of entertaining him with a loud laughter, whole days together. Hath he the Leviathan's privilege of ſporting alone in the Waters, the incloſure of Game, the Patent of having all Mirth wrapt up in his Papers? Was it an undecency in me thus to refreſh the Reader, once in a long weariſom journey, or was it not? If not, why is it mentioned by him, whoſe every word is preſumed to be immediate, and ſo to have demonſtrative force in it? If it was, why doth S.W. ſo over-imitate what he thus condemns? But 2. for the truth of what he charges on me, either that I reiterate it at all, or to that end of making the Reader ſmile, I have been at ſo much leiſure, as to reade over all I have ſaid in that matter, and find his Suggeſtion very diſtant from all appearance of truth, in both particulars. I name the phraſe but twice, and that at no leſs diſtance than is between the firſt part of the ſecond, and the laſt of the ſixth page, once in reciting his words, the other time in refuting them, and if this had been called iterating, I had not reſiſted, but I am ſure it is not reiterating. And when the Reader turns to the places, he will find, that as the iteration had no propriety to make any man ſmile, ſo each paſſage was delivered with as much of earneſt, and as little of Irony, as any other line of the Book; and then again he will judge, what credit is to be given to S.W's relations.

11. To the ſecond, 1. What appearance or ſemblance is there, that I took the phraſe in the down-right ſenſe? or how was it poſſible I ſhould ſo take it? Could I think his printed ſheets had Fingers or Pincers, or other Inſtruments of violence or rudeneſs, properly ſo called? or did I expreſs an attempt to fanſie what was thus impoſſible? Nay, are not theſe my words? Rude Blows and twitchings by the Beard, Declamation and Satyr, are none of theſe juſtifiable and lawfull means? What could more witneſs my underſtanding his allegory, than my interpreting it? 2. If in the down-right ſenſe his twitching be acknowledged ſomewhat too rude, can it avoid being ſo in the allegory? Are his tropes ſo inartificial, his expreſſions ſo feeble and imperfect, as to ſignifie leſs than they ſound? Is not that which was allegorically meant by that ſtile, as really rude in another kind, as the down-right twitching would be? If it be, then what a Defence is this? [if underſtood in the down-right ſenſe, it was ſomewhat too rude; but being ſpoken in a ſenſe that ſignified as much as the down-right, it did not yet ſignifie ſo much rudeneſs.] If it be not, we have then loſt our Rhetorick too, as well as our Logick formerly. 3. Then, hath he mended the matter by adding, he ſpake it in order to my wearing a Vizard? Is a Contumely allayed by being doubled, ſhall Falſities imitate Negations, and two Paſquils become a Panegyrick? I muſt not blame S.W. but his Art, for this alſo.

12. Yet all theſe are but Preparatives to his third and laſt medicament, wherewith he hath throughly purged himſelf. Let me confeſs that he found me in a Vizard, and he is content to be thought ſo uncivil—. It ſeems, I muſt juſtifie his calumnies, and then he will bear the blame of them. My avowed guilts muſt evince me injured, and the truth of his accuſations demonſtrate them unreaſonable: Mean while, till I deſerve rudeneſs, he that heaps it on me, is innocent. Thus dear muſt a man pay for S.W's repentance, for which yet there is no place, till it be confeſſed that he hath not offended. I may court the Readers compaſſion, though not his ſmile, when a hundred ſuch Monſters of diſcourſe as this, are all commenced branches of rigorous evidence.

13. His next Paragraph P. 4. and 5. is ſpent in inquiring with what Logick I huddle together thoſe teſtimonies out of Scripture for S. W*'s paſſport to Hell, unleſs I could evidence that they were particularly appliable to him*.] I reply, 1. That I ſhould think it ſtrange Logick indeed, to infer from my producing the Sentences of Scripture againſt railing, that I gave any man that is moſt guilty of it, a paſſport to Hell. I had thought denunciations of Scripture had been deſigned to bring ſinners to repentance, to reſcue from Hell, not to convey any man thither. I had thought that this was one of our Saviour's means to demonſtrate himſelf a Saviour, by warning of the danger of ſin, to redeem men from it, and ſo to bleſs by turning; and by terrors the means of turning. And I am ſure no man can evacuate this Logick, but he that reſolves he will not amend what is under thoſe denunciations, and till S. W. profeſs finally to be of that number, he will make good my Charity as well as my Logick, and when I know he is of that number, I will no more importune him with that kind of exerciſe of either. But then 2. What defect could there be in my evidence, that thoſe teſtimonies were particularly appliable to him? When the crime to which thoſe teſtimonies belonged, was ſo viſible almoſt in every page (of the firſt part eſpecially) of his Book, that himſelf profeſſed to know that the Reader would think him guilty of it, and as plainly acknowledges it, as twitchings by the Beard ſhall allegorically be able to ſignifie Contumelies, and when I had firſt laid that for the ground of my procedure, before I advanced to produce thoſe teſtimonies.

14. But it ſeems another kind of particular application he requires of me, that of ſhewing that contumelious words are ſo perfectly damnable, that no circumſtance can render them inculpable, or at leaſt venial, if not neceſſary or convenient.] But I reply, that if this ſtrict manner of application be with any reaſon required of me, to be ſuper-added to the producing of ſo plain, and general, comprehenſive teſtimonies, that very reaſon is alone ſufficient to evacuate the main of his Apology, that either in his Epiſtle to the indifferent Reader, or in this place, he hath offered for himſelf. For it falls out this one time, that he that is ſo profeſs'd an enemy to Teſtimonies, hath yet in this matter ſpecially applied himſelf to this Advocate; 1. In his Epiſtle to the Reader, in defence of his ſmiling, he ſends them that are wedded to a ſeverer humour, to Tertullian, concerning ſome paſſages of his Book that move to laughter, and St. Auguſtine of the unreaſonableneſs ſonableneſs that Catholicks ſhould be bound to write in a dull and drouſie ſtile, reciting words from each of them, (the very ſame which the late Author of Les Provinciales in his eleventh Letter had done againſt the Jeſuits) but utterly failing of what he here exacts of me, i. e. neither comparing, nor conſidering the appliableneſs of circumſtances, nor ſo much as quoting the places in either of the Fathers, (that Author having in like manner failed herein) by help whereof his Reader might have conſidered them, much leſs deducing the parallel either betwixt me and thoſe againſt whom thoſe Fathers wrote, or betwixt me and the Jeſuits, againſt whom onely this Author of Les Provinciales produced them; from whom as I differ in nothing more, than in their moral Divinity, (which Montalt there principally paradigmatizes) ſo I need give no other inſtance of my differing, than that they * profeſs it lawfull for the preſerving a man's own honour, to calumniate where there is no crime, but I think it unlawfull to reproach where there is. Who now it is which is moſt guilty of the crime which he † here objects, of laying about blindly againſt Friends and Foes, the Reader will beſt judge, when what is produced (I muſt ſuppoſe pertinently) by his own Friends againſt others of his own Friends, he cites againſt me, whom he owns for his Adverſary, and that (I ſay not blindly, but upon truſt, without examining, or leaving any poſſibility to others to examine his teſtimonies, or ſo much as directing to the Coaſt where they are to be found. This being ſaid in general to his two pretended teſtimonies, I ſhall not add any thing more particular (though by what is recited of them, 'tis manifeſt, they come not home to Contumelies) till I am certainly informed by him, that they are to be found in thoſe Fathers, and then ſhall not doubt to ſhew him, that they belong not to his circumſtances. Meanwhile I ſhall pay him in part with two viſible paſſages of the ſame Fathers; of * Tertullian, De Patient. c.xv. Satis idoneus patientiæ ſequeſter Deus; ſi injuriam depoſueris penes eum, ultor eſt, ſi damnum, reſtitutor eſt. Quantum patientiæ licet, ut Deum habeat debitorem? fidem munit, pacem gubernat, dilectionem adjuvat, carnem regit, Spiritum ſervat, linguam frœnat, manum continet, tentationes inculcat, nec inflatur, nec inquietatur, ſedet in throno Spiritus mitiſſimi & manſuetiſſimi, qui non turbine glomeratur, non nubilo livet--- Ubi Deus, ibidem & alumna ejus patientia ſcilicet. God is the proxy and advocate of patience; lay up your injury with him and he is the avenger, your loſs, and he is the reſtorer. What an advantage hath Patience, which hath God for its Debtor? It defends the Faith, governs Peace, helps Love, rules the Fleſh, keeps the Spirit, bridles the Tongue, reſtrains the Hand, repels Temptations, is not puffed up, is not diſquieted, ſits in the throne of the moſt mild and calm Spirit, which is not carried about in the Whirl-wind, nor diſcoloured with the Cloud--- Where God is, there alſo is this his Client, Patience. And of St. Auguſtine in his † Anſwers to the Letters of Petilian the Donatiſt (I ſuppoſe as profeſſed a defender of acknowledged Schiſmaticks as I am pretended to be,) Si & ego tibi vellem pro maledictis maledicta rependere, quid aliud quam duo maledici eſſemus, ut ii qui nos legerent, alii deteſtatos abjicerent, ſana gravitate, alii ſuaviter haurirent, malevola voluntate? Ego quando cuiquam vel dicendo vel ſcribendo reſpondeo, etiam contumelioſis criminationibus laceſſitus, quantum mihi dominus donat, frœnatis atque coercitis vanæ indignationis aculeis, auditori lectorive conſulens, non ago ut efficiar homine convitiando ſuperior, ſed errorem convincendo ſalubrior. If I would repay you Contumelies with Contumelies, what would the reſult be, but that we ſhould be two contumelious men, that of them that read us, ſome would deteſt and reject us with a ſober gravity, others would take down our Writings with pleaſure but maliciouſly? When I make anſwer to any by word or writing, though I am provoked by contumelious charges, yet as far as God gives me ſtrength, I bridle and reſtrain the ſtings of vain indignation, thereby taking care of the Auditor or Reader, and endeavour not to overcome the Adverſary in Contumelies, but to cure him by convincing his Errour. And much to the ſame Theme to the end of the Chapter, which if it be not exactly applicable to our preſent circumſtances, it is becauſe S.W.'s Adverſary hath offered him no exerciſe of his patience, neither began to him, nor attended him in reproachfull language; I hope he will forgive me that injury, and wink at that unevenneſs in the parallel. And let this ſerve for his two teſtimonies in his Epiſtle.

* Let. XV.

† P. 5. l. 5.

* Edit. Pamel. p. 145. C. D. E.

† L. III. c. 1. Op. Aug. Tom. VII. Ed. Baſil. p. 163. D. 164. A.

14. In this place alſo p. 4. he appeals to teſtimonies (ſuch as when I produced, brought the irony of Preaching on me) 1. Of good John Baptiſt, who called the Jews a generation of Vipers. 2. Of St. Paul, that called Elymas ſon of the Devil &c. 3. Of our Saviour, who called Herod Fox, the prophaners of the Temple Thieves, the Scribes and Phariſees Hypocrites. 4. And to come nearer the preſent circumſtances, of St. Polycarp, who meeting an Heretick, who began complementally to inſinuate himſelf into his acquaintance, rejected his curteſie with this rude language, I know thee to be the Firſt-born of the Devil. 5. Of St. Jude, who calls Hereticks Clouds without water, Autumnal Trees,--- And 6. to come yet nearer home, of God's Church, whoſe cuſtom it is to anathematize and curſe Hereticks, and of S. Paul, who bids anathema even to an Angel from Heaven, if he ſhould preach falſe doctrine.] But in all theſe ſix, there is no evidence tendered of the particular appliableneſs of them to the caſe in hand; for that muſt conſiſt of two branches. 1. A parallel betwixt me and thoſe Jews, that Elymas, that Herod, thoſe Prophaners, thoſe Scribes and Phariſees, that Heretick, and others of the ſame denomination; and 2. a Parallel betwixt S.W. and the Baptiſt, S. Paul, our Saviour, St. Polycarp, St. Jude, God's Church, and St. Paul again. Either of theſe was 1 as neceſſarily his task, as it can have been mine, to evidence the words of St. Paul particularly appliable to him; and 2. ſo much more his, as he that cenſures a defect in another, is obliged to repair it in himſelf; yea and 3. much more difficult and impoſſible for him to repair, than mine is.

15. To ſhew him this, and at once to give him an example of perfecting incomplete diſcourſes (which I acknowledge need not be ſo perfect at firſt, that nothing can be added to them; if they muſt, the Diſpatchers pains were very unſeaſonable.) I ſhall now for diſtinctneſs ſake add, that St. Paul's denunciations againſt λοιδοροι, are (at leaſt) in force, 1. againſt all thoſe that are confeſſed to have uſed contumelious ſpeeches to them who have not at all offended; 2. againſt all that have laid them out above proportion of the offence; 3. againſt all that laviſh them out indifferently upon their equals; who are in no wiſe ſubject to any authority of theirs. The two former are immediately deduced from the foundation of St. Paul's doctrine, the expreſs words of Chriſt, Mat. v. 22. where the old Commandment, Thou ſhalt not kill, v. 21. is by him extended to the interdict of being angry with the brother, and calling him Racha, and thou Fool, εικη, either without any cauſe, or above the proportion of it; and the third alſo from the analogy which is there obſerved betwixt killing (the original precept there) and ſuch expreſſions of anger or contempt; for as in the one the juſtice of the Cauſe, the reality (much leſs, pretence) of a crime, is not ſufficient to juſtifie him, who hath not a competent authority for it, ſo neither is it in the other.

16. I ſhall purpoſely omit to reflect any farther on the two former, 1. Becauſe although S.W.'s inſinuations, that all his diſpleaſures are juſt, and proportionable, are not ſufficient to prove any one to be ſuch, yet my denying it, muſt be as weak, or elſe be founded in ſome better evidence, and there is no giving that, but by the view of each paſſage, and that is too long for this preliminary, and muſt wait the leiſure of the ſubſequent Diſcourſe; and 2. becauſe ſtill there will remain place for paſſion and prejudice in this matter, and he that is already known to call one Heretick, whatſoever the matter of the pretended hereſie be, will think he hath this cauſe of juſt and ordinate anger on his ſide. I ſhall rather chuſe to pitch on the third, wherein the application will be moſt viſible and particular, and all his inſtances as yet propoſed, expreſly excluded from being argumentative for him, or againſt me. I ſhall demand then, In caſe a private man, without any ſignature of Authority upon him, ſhall take upon him to kill another, will it in the leaſt avail to his defence or excuſe, to pretend the examples of Kings and Magiſtrates, nay of Prophets and Apoſtles, and of God himſelf, that have done ſo before him? If it will not, then what can be ſaid for an uncommiſſionated S.W. who certainly is inveſted with no ſort of Authority over D. H. if he ſhall call him Racha and the like, upon no other pretence of claim to ſuch liberty, but what is deduced from this Argument, Becauſe Chriſt, Prophets, Biſhops and Governors of the Church have all uſed it toward their Inferiors? A Biſhop, 'tis certain, may excommunicate an Heretick of his Dioceſe; but may a Presbyter by that Argument doe the ſame to another Presbyter, or but to a Lay-man? A Biſhop, though he muſt not be πλικτὴν a ſtriker, 1 Tim. 3. (which the Fathers interpret of the allegorical ſtrokes, μὲ ἀκαίρως πλήττων τὴν ἀδελφῶν τῶν συνειδήσιν, ſaith Theophylact, not ſtriking unſeaſonably the brethrens conſcience) yet he is required ἐλέγχειν ἀποτόμως, to rebuke ſharply, or by way of exciſion; But doth this office lie in common to all men, or to any others that are not ſo called? or can it by the Judaical pretended right of zealots, belong to any private man, that can but pretend a zeal for it, which is all that S.W. doth at this time? If not, as certainly it doth not, then is the application of general denunciations, as particular as can be, and S.W's cloud of witneſſes to the contrary, perfectly ineffectual.

17. If this were not in both parts ſufficiently cleared, and thereby the whole debate concluded, I would mind him further, not of the ſize, and notoriety of every of thoſe guilts, by him ſpecified to have been rebuked by Chriſt, the Baptiſt, the Apoſtles, &c. (though I hope I am not arrived to thoſe heights, am no profeſs'd oppoſer of Chriſtianity, no Sorcerer, no Gnoſtick, or Cerinthian, or Marcionite, whatever more minute name of Hereſie he is pleaſed to think due, and ſo to beſtow upon me) but of the ſpirit of diſcerning, which moſt of theſe confeſſedly had, by which they infallibly pronounced, not onely that the crimes were crimes, and that of a firſt magnitude, but alſo that thoſe, whom they rebuked, were eminently guilty of them; ſuch conſtantly is the Word of God, the rebukes of Scripture, κριτικὴ ἐνθυμήσεων, diſcerners of thoughts, and could not miſs in the propriety of the applications to the guilts and perſons, a privilege to which I hope S.W. doth not pretend, how infallible ſoever he ſuppoſes the doctrine, which he aſſerts; which alſo being onely ſuppoſed, not infallibly proved by him, can bear no kind of proportion with the diſcerning of thoughts, that was in Chriſt and the Apoſtles. And this is all I ſhall reply to his ſecond offer of Teſtimonies, by which he will now further diſcern his main concluſion ſuperſeded, and ſee that there was no ſuch neceſſity *, as he pretends, of fetching the reaſon of difference betwixt theſe cenſures of Chriſt and Apoſtles, &c. and S.W's Contumelies, from the quality of the perſons, againſt whom they were delivered; the difference of the perſons that did deliver them, would be ſufficient, if there were no other.

* The Texts alledged by Mr. H. are very general, and he allows them here no exception at all, or if he does, the reaſon muſt be, becauſe the words ſpoken to ſuch perſons as Hereticks, the common good concern'd, made the private perſons repute not conſiderable, p. 5. l. 4. &c.

18. I demand then, Was his † [muſt be] a ſign of a rigorous evidence and demonſtration, or was it not? If it was, then I learn hence the interpretation of that ſtile, rigorous demonſtration, that it is competible to thoſe things which are not onely not demonſtrably, or but probably true, but even evidently and demonſtrably falſe, (and then next to S.W's Contumelies, I muſt except againſt his Demonſtrations, which till they are mended, will ſpoil him for a Controvertiſt, as he is willing to ſtile himſelf) for 'tis manifeſt I have aſſigned another reaſon of difference, beſide that which he confidently affirms muſt be the reaſon. But if that be not the interpretation of [muſt be] our language is not yet underſtood, and ſo one way or other we have our choice, to get us new Logicks, or new Dictionaries, new meaſures of Diſcourſe, or elſe new means of expreſſing our notions.

† The Reaſon muſt be, &c. ib.

19. The ſame ſtrain further ſhews it ſelf in the next Paragraph: [Whence (ſaith he) follows firſt, that I am not excommunicate, or in the ſtate of damnation, for having uſed contumelious words, ſince the uſe of them, if taken ſimply in it ſelf, is not impious, but for having uſed them againſt D. H. Unhappy I, who was not aware how ſacred a perſon my Adverſary was!] I deſire to be ſhewed the ground or bottom of this conſequence; I ſuppoſe it is this, that ſeeing contumelious words uſed by Chriſt, &c. againſt Herod, &c. are not impious, there can no other reaſon be pretended, why S.W's Contumelies ſhould be thought impious or dangerous, ſave onely this, becauſe they are againſt D. H. But I have already ſhewed him another double reaſon, viz. that there is not a greater difference betwixt Herod and D. H. than there is betwixt Chriſt and S.W. both in reſpect of the Authority of the one, and none of the other, and the diſcerning of thoughts, in the one, which is not, I hope, pretended to in the other; On both which accounts, I acknowledge my ſelf enforced to yield, that if S.W. after he hath done with me, ſhould be divided into two Catholicks, and thoſe fall out among themſelves, one departing into the Jeſuits quarters, and t'other remaining among the Janſeniſts, and as in Epiphanius, the great Snake in the Bladder after it had devoured all the leſſer Snakes, one end of it ſeized and preyed on the other, ſo S. ſhould heap loads of Contumelies on W. or W. on S. the Texts in St. Paul would be then as fitly appliable to either of them, as now they are to both of them together, when D. H. is concerned in it. It is then the ſhortneſs of S.W's diſcourſe, that he could diſcern nothing beſide his Adverſaries being a ſacred perſon, (as he will ſpeak) which brought the unhappineſs upon him. The incompetentneſs of his own perſon was ſufficient without any other.

20. As little doth it follow, which he next ſuperſtructs, [Next it follows, that if D. H. evidence not his Cauſe to be no Hereſie, and himſelf no maintainer of it, all thoſe former harſh expreſſions againſt Hereticks are his due, and without ſcruple of Sin might be given him by S.W.---] For 1. D. H's Cauſe may be no Hereſie, though he ſhould die before he wrote one word more to evidence it to be none. 2. He cannot be bound both to evidence his Cauſe to be no Hereſie, and himſelf no maintainer of it, which are two diſtinct things: of which certainly one were abundantly ſufficient; for if he be no maintainer of it, how is he concerned, though it were evidenced to be Hereſie? (which yet is much more than being not evidenced not to be) or if it be evidenced by him not to be Hereſie (which again is much more than not to be, becauſe all things that are, are not by him evidenced) why may not he blameleſly be the maintainer of it? 3. Every ſuppoſed Hereſie is not ſo criminous, as that abomination of the Gnoſticks and Cerinthus; nor conſequently will it follow, that all that was certainly due to that, ſhall without ſcruple of ſin be heaped on this, though it were not really free from all Hereſie. But then 4. the incompetency of S.W's perſon, in the two reſpects forementioned, is a further addition of a double bar againſt the demonſtrativeneſs of his deduction. And theſe are infirmities enough in one inference.

it

21. And yet on the back of that, he hath made haſte to faſten another, [*Wherefore unleſs D.*H. makes his evidence good, S.W. may alſo juſtly retort on him the charge of Contumelioufneſs,—] But 1. this wherefore hath no more poſſible force in it, than the ground on which it was built gave it, and that having no leſs than four failures in it, cannot communicate that ſtrength which it hath not. 2. In caſe I ſhould never make my evidence good, yet ſo long as that were imputable to any thing elſe, ſave to the weakneſs of my Cauſe, yet ſtill I were freed from this charge, though all elſe were granted, which he ſuppoſes. 3. If as I did not make my evidence good, ſo he did not evince it bad, (which yet certainly he hath not) there could yet be no place for his Contumelies, according to his own grounds of the dueneſs of them, nor conſequently for retortion of the charge of Contumelioufneſs on me, who may lawfully warn him of the danger, that but ſeems to incur the guilt, much more him that hath really incurr'd it, and cannot on his own (and thoſe inſufficient) grounds excuſe, or free himſelf from it. But then 4. I am now actually entered upon the task of making my evidence good againſt all he hath ſuggeſted to the prejudice thereof, and if herein I do not finally fail, I ſhall then have abundantly diſproved this inference alſo, though as yet I had not replied a word to it.

22. He hath yet a third Inference behind, that [It were eaſie, and he ſaith as eaſie for S. W. uſing the Doctor's method, to gather out of Scripture all the vigorous words and ſevere execrations againſt the wicked, and then by his own voluntary explication and application, clap them all upon the Doctor; as for example, that of Curſe ye Meroz, &c. and then ſay, that by Meroz *is meant ſuch as Ma.*H. who writes againſt God's Church.] This Conſequence depends upon a ſuppoſed exactneſs of proportion betwixt theſe two things; on one ſide the expreſs denunciation of St. Paul againſt the Contumelious, applied to a Writer of Controverſies, ſo far proved to be contumelious, as his own confeſſion of twitching by the Beard, allegorically underſtood, amounts to; and on the other ſide, all the Curſes of Scripture, not onely againſt Meroz, but againſt the Wicked indefinitely, i.e. all the wicked that are execrated in Scripture, clapt on the back of one that S.W. hath nothing to object to, but that he is pleaſed to affirm he writes againſt God's Church. To make good which Propoſition, 'tis neceſſary that whoſoever is by S.W. affirmed to write againſt God's Church, be, eo ipſo, proved to be as guilty of all the wickedneſſes execrated in Scripture, be they never ſo incompetible one with the other (i.e. to be an Atheiſt, a Polytheiſt, an Idolater, a Church-Robber, a Necromancer, and ſo on, to the end of the beadrol of the blackeſt, and withall moſt contrary ſins) as Contumelies caſt by S.W. upon D. H. are proved to be Contumelies. The proportionableneſs of which two Schemes, I muſt leave to thoſe brains of the now grown wiſer World (as he phraſes it) that are moſt ſublimed with the Mathematicks, to endeavour to demonſtrate, and till that be done, behold with ſome kind of aſtoniſhment, the admirable diſcurſive, and illative faculties of my unparallel'd Adverſary.

23. This is the ſum of S.W's firſt Plea for Contumelies, which was therefore neceſſary to be attended and back'd with a ſecond, and that I acknowledge prudently choſen [his diſclaiming in behalf of his Book, any ſuch language toward D. H.] Pag. 6.

This indeed made good, will ſoon end theſe debates; onely it will declare the Authors great leiſure, and accuſe the foregoing Pages of great impertinency and improvidence, that they had not foreſeen this guard, but preferred the ſenſuality of an harangue, before the more ſolid comforts of innocence. As it is, let us now ſee, upon what grounds his temerarious confeſſion of twitching by the Beard, and the Readers falſly foreſeen charge of the rude Blows, are retracted, and called in, and ſo his repentance, ſuch as it was, ſoon repented of. Why, onely upon a more adviſed deſcription of a Contumely, which, ſaith S.W. [notes ſome perſonal and moral fault in another] and then he asks [Did I note any in him?]

24. Let us ſtay here a while, 1. A Contumely is defined or deſcribed by noting ſome perſonal and moral fault in another: To this I reply, That either this is a ſufficient deſcription of Contumely, or it is not: If it be not, then how can it be of uſe to prove that S.W. is not guilty of Contumely, by not falling under the parts, (one or both) of this deſcription, as long as there be others, omitted in this unſufficient enumeration, under ſome, or any of which, he may ſtill be chargeable to have fallen? But if it be avow'd to be a perfect and ſufficient deſcription, then I appeal to him or his Reader, in either part of it, 1. Whether all Contumelies note ſome perſonal fault? whether the calling one Baſtard be not contumelious? and whether that be a perſonal fault in him, that is, or is thought chargeable of it? So in like manner for the reproaching a Chriſtian, of any denomination, be it a Jeſuit or Janſeniſt, with the Crimes of any of his Party, whereof he is no otherwiſe guilty, than that he herds with many, that are guilty of it, whether this be the noting of ſomewhat perſonal in him, in whom it is not, and whether it be not Contumely? That this is my caſe with S.W. I am not bound to ſhew, whilſt my preſent buſineſs is onely to conſider the inſufficiency of his deſcription of Contumely. So again, 2. Whether the faults being perſonal, be obliged to be moral alſo? or elſe the noting of them be no Contumely? May not intellectual faults be the matter of Contumely? and ſure thoſe are not moral. Doth not Chriſt deſcribe Contumely, Mat. v. by ſaying to thy brother, Racha, and thou Fool? And is not emptineſs and folly an intellectual, no (neceſſarily) moral fault? Thus infallibly convincing is each of the two words of S. W's deſcription of Contumely.

25. But then 2. When he asks, Did I note any (either perſonal or moral fault) in him? I take my turn alſo of asking, whether being inſincere, blaſphemous, weak, ridiculous (all which S.W. avows in the enſuing words, and ſaith, It were madneſs to expect that he ſhould not ſhew them, where his Adverſary writ inſincerely, &c. i. e. writ what he will thus accuſe of theſe Crimes) be neither perſonal nor moral faults? Is not Weakneſs perſonal, and Blaſphemy moral in the higheſt degree? But I ſhall not exagitate this any further, in relation to my own concernments, but from his [did I note any in him?] conclude (by the help of that Art, which hath as well taught me, that an affirmative Queſtion doth ſtrongly deny, as him, that ridiculous things ought to be expreſt ironically) that he utterly diſclaims having noted any ſuch: And if indeed he P. 9. l. 9.

hath

hath not noted any perſonal or moral fault in me, the Conſequence is natural, that either all his Charges affixt on me, that have formerly made up the Bill of Fare, and now filled the Index of Schiſm diſpatcht (to the number of 356. beſide many more ſans nombre, and among them blaſphemies and calumnies, and falſe dealings; and omiſſions of neceſſary duty) are neither perſonal nor moral, or at leaſt that thoſe that are moral, are not perſonally mine, or thoſe that are perſonally mine, are not moral; which when the Reader hath laid up in his memory, I hope S. W's Index would not much inflame him, though I ſhould add never another word to demonſtrate, that there is not the leaſt appearance of truth in any one of thoſe numberleſs Charges, or other imaginable deſign of framing them, than that of the perſecuting heathen Emperour Galerius, who made a Law that Chriſtians ſhould be infamous, and then by another Law, any man might deſpoil them that would, there being no other real Crime in his Adverſary to deſerve the rudeneſs of his Blows, ſave onely that through that rudeneſs his Adverſary hath been defamed by him.

26. But 'tis poſſible he may mean ſomewhat elſe by fault perſonal and moral, than vulgar language (my onely Inſtructer) underſtands by them, for as clear as he is from noting either of theſe in me, he confeſſeth, that as a Writer, I was his and the Churches Adverſary, and as ſuch it was irrational he ſhould ſpare me.] But I demand, are not faults objected to a Writer, as a Writer, ſuppoſed to be perſonal, and may they not alſo be moral faults? if they be blaſphemies, inſincerities, and the like: If not (as his diſtinction implies) then I begin to diſcern the one way in the World to free S. W. from the guilt of Contumelies; His being a Writer may ſalve them from being perſonal or moral in him, as well as the imputing blaſphemy to me may, by my being conſidered as a Writer, be freed from noting in me any perſonal and moral fault. This is ſtill more of the refin'd faculty, of diſtinguiſhing betwixt the Writer and himſelf, not ſparing the one, and yet uſing no ſeverity to the other, telling the Writer of his falſifications and blaſphemies, without noting any thing perſonal or moral in him.

27. There is more added on this ſubtile Theme, to all which, I make no other return but this, that if S. W. could really have ſhewed one blaſphemy or falſification in all the Tract of Schiſm, he needed not ſo induſtriouſly have defamed it; His Logick would have ſerved his turn, without that which he calleth his Rhetorick; one ſolid proof of ſuch a Charge having much more force in it, than all his oſtentation of words hath. As for the proportionableneſs of my deſerts to the exceſs of his expreſſions, the trial muſt be in the due place, where particulars come to be examined; mean while, he muſt not beg the principle, and have the privileges of my Judge, while he is but my Adverſary.

Pag. 7. 28. But beyond expectation, I am in the next Paragraph appealed to, and S. W. undertakes the Doctor ſhall inform the Reader, that all his pretended revilings are no other than the proper treaty, which Reaſon grants, Religion avoucheth, and the circumſtances make neceſſary.] This is another Magiſtery; let's ſee what will be made of it. The words of mine, from whence this unexpected concluſion is drawn, are affirmed to be theſe: The Doctor complains, pag. 2. That the publiſher of the Book hath ſolemnly annex'd a Liſt of the Contumelies, three and thirty pickt out by ſpecialty, &c.] Upon which he ſtraight-way infers, Since then theſe, as he ſays, are the ſpecial or chief Contumelies, not to trouble the Reader with the whole Roll, we will onely take notice of the firſt of them, which is this; How the Doctor of Divinity hath forgotten his Accidence.] Thus far S. W. at his Limbeck, to draw Water out of a Flint, and to yield the Reader a large Confeſſion of mine, overthrowing all my Defences paſt and future at one daſh, out of plain words that ſignifie not a ſyllable toward it.

29. This could not be attempted without a conſpiration of many Artifices; let us view them orderly: 1. My words are mutilated, with an &c. which was probably meant to doe ſome ſmall ſervice, for if he had read out, my period had thus evidenced its own ſenſe, He hath ſolemnly annext a Liſt of the Contumelies, 33 pickt out by ſpecialty out of the far greater number. Here then I ſuppoſed and affirmed, that there were a far greater number than 33. and nothing hinders, but ſeveral of thoſe omitted, might be far greater than any that were ſet down in the Publiſher's Liſt, and I never informed him or the Reader, that there were not. For 2. that I ſay theſe were the ſpecial or chief, is abſolutely impoſed upon the Reader, who at the firſt caſt of his eye on my words, will diſcern 'tis S. W. not I, that ſays it. 3. That by picking out theſe by ſpecialty, I ſhould mean, though not ſay, that theſe were the ſpecial, as that word ſignifies the chief of them, is a great violence to the words, and as great to my ſenſe, of which thoſe were the Interpreters. To pick out by ſpecialty, I conceived to ſignifie, chooſing out ſo many particulars, and ſetting them down diſtinctly and ſeverally, as in common ſpeech it hath been familiar to my ears; And what if ſpecial oft ſignifies chief, that uſe of the adjective hath no influence on the (as common) uſe of ſpecialty. Had I meant as he would have me, I had certainly ſaid, pickt out as the prime or ſpecial or principal, but becauſe I meant not ſo, theſe were not my words, but others which to any that underſtands plain Engliſh, ſufficiently expreſt this my other meaning. 4. Of theſe 33. he will inſtance onely in one, and his onely pretended reaſon of doing ſo is, that he may not trouble the Reader. But he hath not been ſo tender of the Readers trouble, when he hoped for advantage thereby, and I can tell him another more uſeful, and ſo not improbable reaſon of his reſervedneſs; When that one is produced, he knows it is but one, and that there be 32. behind in that liſt, and many more not entered into that Catalogue, every of which is as contumelious as this one, and all together, by accumulation, much above 32 times as great, as this one by it ſelf is: And yet this one muſt be the onely meaſure, by which the whole matter muſt be judged, as if he that had ſtolen many more than 33. prizes, or committed as many acts of drunkenneſs or fornication, ſhould make a ſlight confeſſion of one of them, and then were preſently free from the guilt of that, and of all the reſt alſo. 5. This one, that is named, hath not a word ſaid in defence, or extenuation, or excuſe of it, either to ſhew that it is no contumely, or that there was the leaſt pretence of Juſtice in it (as in my Anſwer to the Diſarmer, I had ſhewed there was not, Chap. 3. Sect. 2.) which alone could have had any ſemblance of force to ſupport his pretended concluſion, that this was no other than the proper Treaty that Reaſon grants, Religion avoucheth, and the Circumſtances make neceſſary. Hence again we ſee what kind of inferences muſt be expected of theſe Demonſtrators, even no other, nor more immediate, than this, when examined and driven to the iſſue, [The Doctor, ſaith the Publiſher, hath ſet down 33 ſeveral Contumelies of a far greater number, one of which S. W. be it never ſo unjuſt, hath had the confidence again to name, though not to ſay any thing in defence of it, ergo, the Doctor hath informed the Reader that S. W. hath uſed no other contumelioufneſs, but what Reaſon grants, Religion avoucheth, and the Circumſtances of the matter do more than justifie, even make necessary in him.] If this be not an essay of high Chymistry, I know not where to direct any young Student to seek for it.

juſtifie

30. And in the strength of this, he goes on in full triumph to the end of the Section, 1. Saying what he had said, over again, to the Wits of the University, then 2. framing a dilemma to demonstrate it charity in him to shew me my greatest faults. And 3. by long beating about the bush, discovering at last, that my producing St. Paul's words against him, concludes me the greater Railer of the two, and to this the Puritanical Dame cudgelling her Maid in Scripture Phrase,] is resolved to be appliable. Lastly, objecting to me, that I flatly accuse him of falsifications, calumnies certainly, if not avouched. To all, and first to the first of these, I reply, that I have replied already, when the same thing was said, though not addressed to the Wits, and though he seek advantage by repeating in another mode, I need it not, and therefore do not seek it. To the second, That his Dilemma takes for granted my Pernicious Errours, and confounds Discovering of Errours with Contumelies; whereas 1. I have already shewed him, that Contumelies are not the proper Glasses to discover Errours, be they never so Pernicious; nor ordinarily made use of by such Artists as S.W. but when the Errours are so far removed from vulgur sight, that they may well pass for invisible. 2. That he is not a competent Judge in this matter; Let his Reader by the direction and conviction of his Logick discern the Errour and not be born down with his noises. And 3. That whether there be any one such Errour duly noted by him, is the main question still, as confidently denied by me, as pretended by him; and as it must not be granted him for supposing it, so much less by it can any thing else be justified, that he shall unduly build upon it. To the third, 1. That producing St. Paul's plain words against a sin, is far from railing at all, farther yet, from exceeding him in that language. 2. That for the parallel of his Dame, which is his (onely rhetorical) argument to prove it, it is of no force, because though I should allow the parallel to hold in one part, between St. Paul's words produced on one side, and Scripture phrase on the other (which yet till I know what that phrase was which the Dame used, but S.W. hath not recited from her Lecture, I am not obliged to do) yet still the question remains, what parallel will be found for the Cudgel, wherein surely all the weight of the simile and the Dames severity consisted, and not in the Scripture phrase: To the last, That when it appears that I have accused him of falsifying, if I do not render a reasonable account of it, I will, as he requires, confess, and make satisfaction for the Calumny; but as yet he hath not directed me to the place, and my memory suggests it not; and therefore I discern not my self to be under any further present obligation. Onely I shall demand, who it is, whom he can think it possible I should have accused of falsifying? Is S.W. the name of any man, or be there any Laws of Brachigraphie, by which those Letters are authorized to signifie any more than N.N. are wont to doe? Is any person living vulgarly known, or called by that name? If not, 'tis not onely not true, but not possible, that in answering N. N. or S.W. I have calumniated any man.

31. And thus at length we are at an end of the first Section, which coming to recapitulate in the beginning of the second, he avoucheth to have contained ordinary considerations, and obvious to common sense (with what truth, hath now been examined) letting the Reader see, that this manner of writing is very rational, but that not absolutely, but on a double condition, if the Cause deserve any zeal, and the truth of the thing makes good what is said. But we have seen the bottom of these two conditions, and found 1. That though the Cause were granted to deserve zeal, it must yet disclaim Contumely, for so every true Christian Cause doth. 2. That the truth between Disputants is to be contested, not supposed. 3. That the truth of a Proposition is no competent commission, or authority for (and so cannot make good) a Contumely.

SECT. II.

The pretended necessity of this course, in writing Controversies, founded on the certainty of his Faith. Begging the Question. Examples of Jude, the Fathers, Elias, answered. Pretence of Charity. Meekness accused of Inconfidence. The uncertainty of Protestants Faith said to be confessed. Their Vertues, their special Charge. His Praises and Rebukes, using of Greek and Testimonies.

1. HIs second Section is yet of severer concernment, recommended to the attentive consideration of the Reader, and undertakes to prove upon a fundamental ground (as if every ground were not fundamental) that this kind of writing, which I have hitherto accused in him, and he laboured to vindicate, is (not blameless, but) necessary in controversies about Faith, against the deemed adversaries thereof, and this ground of that necessity no other than the certainty of Faith it self, which certainly is founded in his way of universal Tradition.] And then ere we proceed any further, what will become of all Catholick Writers, dead and living, which having not S.W.'s faculties, or temper, or being not aware of this necessity, have not so much as endeavoured to attain to this height of bitter zeal, which now appears to have been their duty? In this matter I must not admonish him of the other as severe denunciations of Scripture, against those, who add to the Word of God, or teach for doctrines the commandments of men (which certainly he will be guilty of, who teaches and undertakes to demonstrate that to be necessary which God hath never made so, especially if it be that which God hath forbidden, as he hath all bitterness and evil-speaking Eph. iv. 31. commanding kindness, tender-heartedness, &c. v. 32.) for I see he is fortified against such impressions, and the improsperous attempt will but exasperate, and conclude me again the greatest Railer. Wherefore I shall onely demand, whether since all Christian duties, Righteousness and Temperance, &c. are eminent branches of the Christian Faith, as well as believing the Judgment to come, &c. the acknowledging this his method to be necessary, and so Duty, be any part of that certain Faith that hath this universal testification; whether all the Catholick World, if but for these last ten years, have said, they received from their forefathers as received from theirs, that Contumelies are necessary to a Catholick Writer of Controversies; for otherwise I hope, be the Faith never so certain, the means to propagate or propugn it, may be those prescribed by St. Paul to Bishop Timothy, gentleness, readiness to teach, patience, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, and so not contumely, which is contrary to these. And let him not in his Answer 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25.

deal

deal with me, as Mr. White doth with Monſieur Dallee, p. 221. rebuking him for asking from St. Jerom, Whether it be a part of Faith to viſit the Holy Land, as if (ſaith he) & adoraſſe ubi ſteterunt pedes Domini pars fidei eſt,] ſignified truly that to exerciſe Adoration were an Article of Faith, than which what can be ſpoken more ſenſleſly, whereas, ſaith he, the true meaning is, that 'tis a duty of Faith.] Where truly, I ſhould have conceived, that a duty of Faith was a part of Faith, though not ſuch as we vulgarly call Articles, and ſo I ſuppoſe now, and ask of a Duty, not an Article, whether it have this univerſal teſtification, which all are ſuppoſed to have, which are truly Duties, as well as thoſe which are Articles of Faith. This therefore I may be allowed to have ask'd in paſſing, becauſe this Section is ſuch, as will not afford any ſtore of matter for debate, how demurely ſoever he hath offered and recommended it to our attentive conſiderations.

2. I ſhall ſhortly reduce it to theſe Heads, concerning 1. The deemed or believed certainty of S. W's Faith. 2. The one ground of that, Univerſal Tradition, together with the notion in which he underſtands that phraſe. 3. The duty conſequent to this, of uſing the means and ways, which Wit and Art can invent to confute, and diſcredit his adverſaries harmful Sophiſtry, and diſparage his authority, as far as truth can juſtifie his words. 4. The deemed uncertainty of their Faith, who rely on any other but this one deemed certain Rule, together with the obligation incumbent on them, and ariſing from the deemed uncertainty of their Faith, to write without any great zeal, heat, or earneſtneſs, which in them, ſaith he, can ariſe from nothing but Paſſion and Intereſt. 5. What he hath thought fit to add concerning my perſon, abſtracted from the Cauſe.

3. For the firſt of theſe, he is careful himſelf to propoſe it under that cautious ſtile of deemed certainty, foreſeeing, as he ſaith, that elſe the Doctor would miſtake him (as his cuſtom is) to beg the queſtion, by ſuppoſing their Faith certain.] But to this I make my demands, 1. Whether it be indeed, or poſſibly could be a miſtake in the Doctor, contending with S. W. concerning the truth of his Faith, to affirm that his ſuppoſing his Faith certain, is the begging of the queſtion? Might he not as well have ſaid that the Doctor was apt (as his cuſtom is) to miſtake in affirming twice two to be four? For is not the ſuppoſing that certain, of which the queſtion is, whether it be true, as evidently the begging the queſtion, as it is evident, that what is certain, is true, and more than true, true with the advantage of certainty? And is any common notion, or any axiom, or concluſion in the Mathematicks more evident than that? What ſemblance of truth then is there in ſuggeſting, or intimating this to be a miſtake in the Doctor? or how can his Art, as he ſaith, bear him out in thus ſuggeſting. 2. Doth S. W. mean to keep himſelf preciſely from the guilt of this fallacy for the future? Is he ſo ſenſible of the unskilfulneſs of it, as ſeriouſly to diſclaim having any more to doe with it? Nay, hath he indeed by this early caution ſhut it out of this Section? or is it ſufficient to foreſee crimes, and then preſently to ruſh into them? 'Tis the begging of the queſtion for him to ſuppoſe his Faith certain; and is it not ſo alſo, to ſuppoſe Contumelies a lawful means to defend a deemed truth, at the very time when we are in the debate, whether ſuch means are not utterly unlawfull? This certainly he ſuppoſes at this time, for elſe it is not imaginable how the deemed certainty of his Faith ſhould found a neceſſity of his Contumelies. That which is in it ſelf lawfull, may by circumſtances become neceſſary to ſome man, and ſo to S. W. but if it be in it ſelf unlawfull, neither the deemed nor real certainty of their Faith can make it lawfull, much leſs neceſſary. This then of its lawfulneſs, which cannot be founded in his deemed certainty, nor is endeavoured here to be inferred either by that, or by any other medium, and yet is neceſſary to be ſuppoſed in that diſcourſe, where the neceſſity is inferred from ſome circumſtances, is no other than the begging of the queſtion; for no doubt that is ſaid to be begg'd, which is ſuppoſed, without all attempt of proof. And ſo viſibly here is the lawfulneſs, though not the neceſſity, which yet alſo is uncapable of any ſolid proof, till the lawfulneſs be firſt proved. This is therefore that which I now charge as guilty of this fallacy (and not the deeming his Faith certain) at the time when he ſo ſolicitouſly averts it. And this is all I need ſay to the firſt point, his deemed certainty, being in charity as well as civility ready to allow him to deem or believe (whatſoever his grounds are) whatſoever he affirms himſelf to deem or believe. And I hope he will anon do as much for me, who believe my Faith as certain, as he can his, and have one ground more to believe it, (as anon will appear) than I ſee he means to have.

3. To the ſecond Head alſo, the one ground, on which he is pleaſed to build his deemed certainty, that of Univerſal Tradition, together with the notion in which he underſtands that phraſe, the ſame which the Author of, and Apologiſt for Ruſhworth's Dialogues hath of it, I have nothing to object in this place, knowing de facto that this is his ground, and allowing it as fit to ſupport his deemed certainty, whilſt 'tis no more than deemed, as any other medium could be; for as long as he is granted to deem it, it matters not to our preſent debate, on what grounds he deems it. And indeed, having firſt profeſs'd that he ſpeaks now onely of a deemed certainty, 'twas not needfull to add at the ſame time upon what grounds he built it, the deeming being the onely thing, on which the reaſon (inſiſted on in this Section) was founded, and not the real, or grounded certainty. What therefore he hath for ſeveral Pages enlarged on this Theme of the grounds of his deemed certainty, I ſhould think inſerted by another hand, and not by him that was ſo carefull to profeſs that he ſpake onely of a deemed certainty, but that it is poſſible it might have another deſign, the amuſing of the Reader, and the ſupplying ſome other vacuity in this reaſoning, or the drawing of his Adverſary from the point in hand, to this other, wherein S. W. deemed himſelf more converſant; which motives have not prevailed on me ſo far to gratifie him in this place, (having allow'd another fitter ſeaſon for it, in my next Chapter) as to forget my preſent Theme, and follow him through his whole Field of Tradition, ſo wide and diſtant from it, and wherein ſo few others beſide himſelf will be concerned, himſelf having here told me, that few there are who have refined their underſtanding to this degree of diſcerningneſs, and that onely the beſt (which in his opinion are not the greateſt) ſort of Wits do as yet begin to own their reaſon ſo far.

4. For the third then (which alone is pertinent to the Argument in hand) the neceſſity, and ſo duty conſequent to this deemed certainty, of uſing the means and ways which Wit and Art can invent to confute and diſcredit his Adverſary's harmfull Sophiſtry, and diſparage his authority, as far as truth can juſtifie his words.] I ſhall bring it to a ſpeedy iſſue by asking, Of what latitude is that phraſe [the means and ways that Wit or Art can invent?] Is it deſigned to take in, or not exclude all manner of means and ways, that the moſt riotous Wit, or forbidden Arts can invent, or that the tropes of Rhetorick, or good managery of words (be they never so contumelious) can yield toward the mentioned end, that of discrediting the adversary, &c. onely with that one restraint as far as truth can justifie his words? or is it no further to be enlarged, than all other Christian rules, as well as that one of truth, permit one private man to treat another? If he take it in the second sense, I grant it, and he hath gained nothing by it, for I willingly yield him the freest exercise of the nimblest wit, and all lawfull arts, to discover, and so discredit any weakness in my defences, but think not a multitude of contumelies to be any of those lawfull, no nor so much as proper means toward that end, being onely a cloud cast before the eyes of the Reader, to hinder his discerning any difference betwixt true, and pretended discoveries, betwixt boasts and victories. But if his indefinite words [the means and ways] must be more largely extended in the first sense, I then deny that the greatest justice of a cause, be it a deemed, or a real certainty, can convert any the least or greatest sin into duty, christianize or consecrate Contumely, though it should not have Calumny joined with it: and I hope I shall have no need of proving what is thus obvious, when the more excellent the cause is, the more it abhors and deems it self defamed and polluted by whatever unlawfull arts, and can no more justifie any one of them, than either want, or be gratified with them; Si malo religionem defendere velis, jam non defendetur illo, sed polluetur, atque violabitur, saith Lactantius. If you will defend Religion by any thing that is evil, you shall not defend, but pollute and violate it. Should I endeavour to assist this evident truth, it would by others, as well as S. W. be called preaching.

riotous

5. This ambiguity then of his words being removed, there remains no kind of difficulty in the whole Section, as far as concerns the argumentative part, the conclusion which the deemed certainty of his Faith was obliged and undertook to infer; the whole question being, not whether any, or all lawfull arts are to be used, but whether the cause, whatsoever, or how certain soever it be deemed to be, can render any one unlawfull means, by name Contumely, lawfull; which unless it can, 'tis certain it cannot on this account become necessary. Here then the one condition of restraint which he takes care to add [as far as truth can justifie his words, and If his adversary be found to deserve it, and the like] will avail him nothing. 1. Because he is not the judge of the truth of that which he endeavours to disprove, nor of the deserts of him whom he thinks himself obliged to disparage. The Disputant must prove, and the Repliant defend, but neither assume the office of judging, but leave that to the Reader onely, and till that judgment be past, 'tis not yet his time to deal with his Adversary as his captive, to lead him in triumph, to represent him as he saith, ridiculous, nonsensical, weak, blasphemous, &c. every of which, as far as they want in truth, abound in calumny, and must not be supposed to have truth, whilst they are contested to have none, and no judgment is yet pass'd between the litigants, but what one of them, who must be supposed partial, gives in his own favour. Nor will the deemed certainty of his own Faith (the one medium of this Section) herein assist him, 1. Because a deemed certainty infers not a real truth, and to suppose that without proof in time of arguing, is the begging of the question. 2. Because the, whether deemed, or real, certainty of his Faith, concludes not the truth of every discourse which he can make use of, to demonstrate that certainty; Truth hath oft-times been ill defended, and so still, notwithstanding the certainty in the main, the weakness in the retail may be as probably on his side, who chargeth his adversary of weakness, and in some respects more probably, on this prejudice, that he already appears so weak, as to mistake his business, to flie to indirect means, to endeavour to forestall the Readers judgment, to vaunt of his feats, all which are the effects and known symptoms of weakness.

5. Secondly, as I said, this restraint pretends onely to guard him from calumny, and there be other sins of the tongue and pen beside that. He knows, I must instance in Contumely, for though every Calumny be a Contumely also, and most Contumelies have somewhat of falsity, and so calumny in them, and I doubt not to prove, that every one which I have received from S.W. is of this sort, yet I have that respect to ordinary stile, and that reverence to our Saviour, Mat. 5. 21, 22. who refers Contumelies [Racha, and thou Fool] to the sixth Commandment of the Decalogue, as to discriminate them from calumnies, which undoubtedly are forbidden in the ninth. And indeed he that shall bestow either of those titles on his fellow-Christian, and then add, that he hath said no more than is truth, or than he deserves, is so far from lessening, that he cannot use any surer means to inhance and multiply the Contumely. Thus far is S.W's one restraint from justifying the practices, which his wit or art have suggested to him.

6. As for his examples of Jude to the Gnosticks, of the Fathers to Porphyrie the enemy and derider of Christianity, and Elias's scoffing the Priests of Baal] 1. The deemed certainty of his Faith, the one medium in his present argument, is not sufficient to complete the parallel between them and me; the utmost that principle can assist or authorize him to deem of me, is, that I deny some few things to be true, which he deems certain, but neither that I deifie Simon Magus, nor deny Christ to have come in the flesh, nor offer sacrifice to Idols, nor join with the Jews to persecute the Christians, nor forbid marriage, and set up unnatural Lust instead of it, nor professedly maintain Heathenism, nor the worship of Baalim or dead Heroes, nor any thing which he can deem equivalent to all or any of these, which consequently are necessary to make good his parallels. Neither 2. will that or any other imaginable medium make that lawful to him, which was lawful to Jude, or the Fathers, or Elias, the first being an Apostle, the third a Prophet, and such as whose Spirit was interdicted the Disciples of Christ, the second Governours of the Church, in none of which capacities I discern S.W. to be placed over me, nor consequently to be commissionated or privileged to doe whatsoever they did; if he were, the fire from heaven, and the fate of the Priests of Baal, might soon become mine, and be by the same art of concluding ab exemplo, justified also.

7. On this Head comes in one auxiliary more, the pretence of charity to undeceive my adherents, and preserve others from a certain believed danger, and that the greatest of dangers, eternal damnation.] Thus hath Gregory Nazianzen long since told us, that Christian Religion was the μῆλον ἔριδος, apple of contention, and the pretence to enhanse it, ὅτι οἱ λίαν φιλόθεοι καὶ φιλόχριστοι, that some men were vehement lovers of Christ, of God. But neither will charity justifie the doing of any ill, on the most charitative intuitions, or make that necessary which is not lawfull; On the other side, what shall otherwise be approved to be lawfull, is already freely allowed him to exercise his gifts in, upon the bare pretence of his deemed certainty; and so sure the consideration of charity might here have been spared, and being used, doth gain him nothing. Especially when 'tis considered that my adherents (as he will call them, to whom he aims the first fruits of his charity) profeſs to have never the worſe opinion of a cauſe, that 'tis perſecuted with the Sword, and therefore are not in much danger to be diſheartened with the meeker dangers of the tongue or pen, by ſeeing ſome ſcoffs and contumelies fall upon it; having learnt from our Saviour, Mat. 5. 11. whilſt he was in preaching (but I hope not to be ſcofft at for it) that they are happy which are reviled, as well as perſecuted falſly for his ſake. We ſee then what this grand argument pompouſly introduced, by being recommended to the attentive conſideration of the Reader, and fetcht from the deemed certainty of his Faith, amounts to, even the gaining him that which was willingly yielded him before, the uſe of all lawfull means to ſupport that deemed certainty, but not the authorizing unlawfull, or making that neceſſary, which was, ſub lite, depending, whether it were lawfull or no, and could not be proved to be ſo by that argument, whoſe whole force was founded in ſuppoſing it.

* Pag. 12. 8. And then what heed is due to his concluſion from hence, that though* S.W. may perhaps be blamed for holding his Faith certain, yet he is inculpable for proceeding conſequently to the former tenet.] and again, He who holds ill principles, is blamable indeed in that regard, but yet he is worthy of praiſe for proceeding conſequently upon them, ſince to deduce conſequences aright is very laudable.] As if he had ſaid, He that is fallen into one abſurdity, is not onely to be excuſed, but commended for heaping the thouſand more upon the back of it, he that is once out of the way, doth very well to go on in the Road before him, though it lead him into hell; he that is once drunk, is to be reproved for that, but that Lecture being over, he is to be praiſed and ſo rewarded for all the Oaths, or Rage, or Murther, or Incontinence, which that, by a chain of conſequences, one after another, very regularly leads him to. I had thought that the one thing, which ſuch a man could doe laudably, was to unlearn his ill principle, to get to be rightly informed, and the next to that, or the moſt tolerably ill, to ſit ſtill, and act nothing upon it: Nor indeed did I ever learn, that deducing of conſequences, though it were not of one vice or errour from another, would preſently be of the number of things very laudable, for ſuch is nothing but what is morally good, and very good. And no doubt ſuch the nature of the conſequential diſcourſe may be, as the picking of thrums ends, (to which he compares the producing of teſtimonies) may be an employment as highly dignified; and praiſe-worthy as that, and yet the deducing of a conſequential ill practice from an ill principle, be ſtill leſs laudable, becauſe more blameworthy than that.

Pag. 15. 9. One thing more he after reverts to caſt in on this Head, that it belongs to the Catholick who holds his Faith certain, to manifeſt the contrary to be perfectly abſurd, and non-ſenſe, and ſince the knowledge of this muſt in his grounds be held ſo neceſſary for the ſalvation of man-kind, he ought in plain terms let men know it is ſuch, otherwiſe he breeds a juſt apprehenſion in his Readers, that the contrary (elſe why ſhould he proceed ſo reſervedly) may have ſome degree of probability —] In this place I might ask, whether the Archangel wanted confidence in the infallible certainty of his cauſe, when he refuſed to bring any railing accuſation againſt the Devil, as S. Jude aſſures us he did. But my reply to this his reaſoning will be ſufficient, if inſtead of asking more, I onely anſwer his one queſtion in the parentheſis [elſe why ſhould he proceed ſo reſervedly?] by telling him that there are other very pregnant reaſons of that kind of reſervedneſs we now ſpeak of (which conſiſts, as the Archangels did, onely in abſtaining from all contumely as well as calumny) beſide the want of certainty in his Faith, or the apprehenſion that the contrary is in any degree probable. As 1. a conſcientious regard to the precepts of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, which expreſly forbid contumely, and of which we have oft minded him. 2. A well-grounded opinion, that truth is able to propugn and evidence it ſelf by its own light, and wants not (as he imagines) plain terms, as thoſe ſignifie revilings of his adverſary, to let men know it is ſuch. 3. The daily experience, that reaſon is moſt expedite in its motion to any ſober diſpaſſionate mind, when it comes like David with the Staff in the hand, and the five ſmooth ſtones, and is not incumbred with Saul's Armour: And 4. an apprehenſion of that which is moſt obvious, that ruffling will not be interpreted ſolid confidence, but rather conſciouſneſs of weakneſs, as we know, he that dares fight, will ſeldom give any ill words, the tongue being not oft called in to the aſſiſtance, but to divert, and ſupply the place of the hands; and laſtly, a dependance on God in his own way, that the means which he hath directed us to, will in fine be moſt ſucceſsful; which till S.W. hath choſen to make uſe of, he can have no experience of the force of them, and conſequently muſt judge as Worldlings do, that charity and liberality, added to obſervation of ſtricteſt rules of juſtice, will never tend to the enriching, but impoveriſhing, and upon that account continue to apply himſelf to thoſe onely means, to ſupport his Faith, which are moſt proper to betray it. And this is all the advantage I mean to take (and not that other which he was willing to foreſee) in that Paragraph. And thus we have the upſhot of what he hath caſt in on the third Head for the aſſiſting his grand argument.

Pag. 14. 10. Fourthly, for the deemed uncertainty of our Faith, and the obligation to write without any great zeal, heat or earneſtneſs, —] which he here inſiſts on, I reply, 1. That his words of Proteſtants [that they confeſs their Faith fallible, i.e. ſuch as may poſſibly be otherwiſe for any thing they know] are either very equivocal in the phraſe [for any thing they know] or in the word Proteſtants, and ſo belong to other men, whoſe words I aſſume not to defend, or being ſingly underſtood of me, and thoſe whom I undertake to vindicate, and of a confeſſed uncertainty, and fallibility of our faith, are far removed from all degree, or appearance of truth. For this I appeal to expreſs words in my Anſwer to Schiſm Diſarm'd, p. 36. l. 2. He that is in many things fallible — may yet infallibly know or believe ſome one or more other things, (In this number I profeſs to contain all matters of our Chriſtian Faith) either by his own ſenſes, or by the teſtimony of others, founded in their ſeveral ſenſations, which being faithfully conveighed to us by undeniable Tradition, ſupply the place of an ἐνάργεια, are as unqueſtionably certain, as what we have ſeen our ſelves. And again lin. 8. I know infallibly that I now write, --and the ſame I affirm of all other matters of Fact, teſtified by my own ſenſes, or by univerſal unqueſtionable Tradition, for that is founded in the repeated ſenſations of ſo many other men, which being communicated and ſufficiently teſtified to me, I have no more reaſon to doubt of, than of my own ſenſations. And of this ſort is the Tradition of the Univerſal Primitive Church, concerning the Apoſtles delivering ſome Doctrines (here again I profeſs to mean our whole Chriſtian Faith) and ſome Books (viz. all the Canonical Books of the New Teſtament) &c. With what ſemblance of truth then can I be told, in a Reply to this very Book, where I have thus profeſt the infallible certainty of our Faith, that Proteſtants confeſs their faith fallible, i.e. ſuch as may poſſibly be otherwiſe for any thing they know.] Can this be ſuggeſted of thoſe things, which I ſay are as unqueſtionable as what I have ſeen my ſelf, and that I know them infallibly? Is this dealing tolerable in a plain matter of fact (for ſo it is, that we, of whom I am one, and that Book, acknowledged to be mine, confeſs our Faith fallible) and can the deemed certainty of his Faith ſupport this part of his earneſtneſs of affirming what is quite contrary to his own eyes as well as mine? If ſo, then I profeſs to allow him the incloſure of ſuch kind of zeal as this, for I hope I ſhall never, whilſt I am in my right wits, make uſe of it: If I would, I ſhould have cut this whole Section of his ſhort, by denying the ground of it, not onely the certainty of his Faith but even his deeming it certain, for this is his dealing with me, contrary to what was viſible to him.

it

11. I cannot pertinently inſiſt longer on this Theme of the certainty of our Faith in this place, to which it is ſo unſuitable, and then there is is no more needfull to be added on this fourth Head, but that if deemed certainty of our Faith would ſupport, or authorize Contumely, I were alſo commiſſionated to make uſe of ſuch gifts, and might be as bitter as he; but 1. I am as confident it cannot, as Scripture (which is the ground of my Faith, as well as Tradition, and I hope written and unwritten Tradition both, will amount to as much as one of them, without the other) or any other ground of credibility which the matter is capable of, can afford me. And 2. (beſides many other motives) I profeſs to think I have no need of ſuch auxiliaries, and that is with me as prevailing an argument againſt, as his pretended neceſſity is to him for the uſe of them.

12. One thing onely I ſhall further note on this Head of diſcourſe; Otherwhiles as the Romaniſt can project advantages to his Cauſe from the Proteſtants charitable perſuaſion of them, whilſt they cannot afford any like return to us, and by this their Proſelytes are obliged to be averted from us, as from thoſe who can yield them no degree of ſafety, and to adhere confidently to them, who are not by Proteſtants denied it; On another occaſion the Roman is preſumed to be the Onely infallible Church, becauſe no other doth (i. e. is ſo aſſuming, or ſelf-opinionate, as to) pretend to that vaſt title. And now it ſeems Proteſtants are obliged to be meek, and the Romaniſts as much obliged to be zealous and earneſt, which are S.W.'s ſtile for the rude Blows, and ſo ſignifie Contumely. From theſe three all the concluſion I can make, is this, that we Proteſtants are willingly allowed the exerciſe of the greateſt Moral and Chriſtian Vertues, ſuch are ingenuity, and meekneſs, and charity, and the Romaniſt muſt have the incloſure of the contrary, and pretend neceſſity and obligation of zeal for all three, and if this be it, 'tis not hard to foreſee who will be the greateſt loſer by ſuch advantages.

13. Laſtly, for his page and half of my praiſes, he will allow me the modeſty not to make any more particular recitations of, or reply to them than this, that Tertullian hath long ſince told me of the Votaries of Saturn, who though in their zeal (and that alſo founded in the deemed certainty of their Faith) they were ſo cruel, as to expoſe and ſlaughter their moſt blameleſs Infants, yet at the ſame time they * ſtroked and flattered them, that they might not be ſacrificed weeping; and the like muſt I look on in S. W. not as an effect of his tenderneſs (which he thinks himſelf obliged to diſclaim) but of his care of averting ill omens, or ſome other ſuch like conſideration, on account of which, and in compliance with his deſign, I am chearfully to ſupport, and take in good part whatſoever afterward falls upon me, from the neceſſity of his zeal and devotion, as that is but conſequent to the deemed certainty of his Faith. And I am reſolved to doe it, having one motive more to it, beſide his commendations, viz. this very advertiſement of his, that 'tis the deemed certainty of his Cauſe a thing which I can no way help or be anſwerable for, either in it ſelf, or its conſequences) which, as he * ſaith, concludes me certainly pernicious, and upon † which he doubts not to affirm that it is moſt perfect non-ſenſe, to think all the teſtimonies in my Book can bear ſo much as a ſhew of probability, if compared with that clear evidence he deems to ſhine in the other. For by this I am aſſured that all the reproaches that fall upon me, are deſerved (and ſo ought not to be complained of) yet not by me perſonally, or by any avoidable miſadventure of mine, in the retail, but onely in the general, and the groſs, becauſe I am not of S.W.'s Faith in all things, from which grand comprehenſive original guilt, as from my deſtiny, and not from mine own ſuperadded miſcarriages, I am to derive all my calamities, the ſharpeſt effects of his diſpleaſure. And with this comfort his ſecond Section, and the purſuit of the grand argument of it, hath furniſhed me, and ſo reſolving to continue my good humour, in deſpight of his other diſcouragements, I ſhall haſten to take my leave of it.

* Infantibus blandiebantur, ne immolarentur lachrymantes. Apol. c. 9.

* Pag. 20.
† Pag. 17.

13. Yet before I do ſo, I am a little concerned to take notice of his more than oblique intimation (leſt I ſhould be too inſolent on his praiſes) 1. Of my too much vanity in uſing of Greek on all, or rather no occaſion. And 2. my chief and almoſt onely talent lying in the way of teſtimonies. Of both theſe I ſhall give the Reader and him this ſhort account. 1. That of citing Greek Authors in the language wherein they wrote, or uſing a Greek word or phraſe, which appeared moſt expreſſive, I never heard any man till now, admoniſhed, as of a fault, but by thoſe Readers which profeſſed their want of skill in that Language; and for the ſake of ſuch, I have been carefull ſo far to tranſlate, or otherwiſe to ſupply that want, as to leave them no juſt occaſion of complaint, or cauſe of interruption. And then for the vanity, poſſibly adherent to this, as to other lawfull and prudentially choſen actions, if I ever were guilty of any degree of it, I ſhall now ſure be effectually cured by S. W. who aſſures me, how far I ſhould be miſtaken, if I projected any mans praiſes by this means; and that on the contrary, I hereby give my Readers a fair title to ſuſpect me either of too much vanity in that, or emptineſs in other knowledges. And truly I ſhall not ſo far heed, as ſtudiouſly to avert the Readers ſuſpicion of either of theſe (though if S.W.'s authority were of force, I might have thus much to plead, that 'tis no more liable to the ſuſpicion of vanity in me to uſe Greek, than in him to ſay he much loves it, and thinks it a great ornament to a Scholar, for he that were jealouſly diſpoſed, would have temptation to ſuſpect, that he that thus ſaid, either had or deſired to ſeem to have a liberal portion of it; and I hope S.W. will thank me, that I make not this concluſion) but expect from him that juſtice for the future, that when I do uſe Greek, it ſhall be thought I am not a Platonick Lover of being eſteemed vain and empty, and therefore that I have ſome (with me prevailing) reaſon, that moves me thus far to deny my ſelf, and contemn my reputation, rather than omit to doe that which is moſt for the Readers profit, in my opinion. I know no poſſible way of ſuperſeding this concluſion, but by ſurmiſing that S.W. was not the reporter of any other mens ſenſe, but his own, and that his judgment bears not much weight with any. But I ſuppoſe he hath a better opinion of himſelf, than to ſuſpect himſelf liable to ſuch ſurmiſes.

14. Secondly, Then for the way of Teſtimonies, I muſt not avert or diſclaim it, or be troubled that my adverſary acknowledges my chief talent to lie that way. For as long as matter of Faith is founded not in natural reason, but divine Revelation, and consequently is not determinable from common notions, like Problems in the Mathematicks, (neither hath any such close connexion with them, as that it can duly be

* Apol. for Trad. p. 11. said, what yet * Mr. White hath adventured to say, that God must of necessity pitch upon this or this way, resolving that if God hath not already taken this course, certainly he should have done it) but depends wholly on the evidence of its delivery from Christ, and his Apostles, and so is establish'd either by Scripture, or by Oral Tradition of the Apostles, or by both (and the latter of these is most surely conveyed to us at this distance, by the writings of those which dwelt neerest to them) so long, I say, I must think it reasonable to make my appeals to testimonies both of Scripture and ancient witnesses of Tradition, and if there be possibility of misinterpreting either or both of these, yet however to use them diligently, and use the best means I can, to conduct my self and others to the right understanding of them, hoping confidently that St. Chrysostom said true, τὰ ἀναγκαῖα σαφῆ, and that I understand his meaning, that as what is necessary is plain, so what is unintelligible is not necessary. And there being two obvious means to this end, of attaining the sure meaning of a period, by searching the notion of the original words and phrases; and 2. by adverting to the rational importance, in conjunction with antecedents and consequents, if both these will not competently assist me to conclude inerrably from plain, and not enigmatical testimonies (written by pious and prudent men, not to instruct, and not to torment, to benefit and not amaze and puzzle their Reader) I must then give over the Trade whether of writing Controversies, or reading Books, yea, and conversing with men, whose words may by this account be as great riddles as sacred or ecclesiastical writings, and so be obliged to take my leave of my Dispatcher abruptly, whom certainly I may not seasonably attempt to answer, till I do understand, and can no more hope that I do not err in thinking I do understand him, than in thinking I understand St. Augustine or St. Matthew, or in expecting their words will bear the same sense with all other men, as they do with me, when I fairly make my representation of them.

15. How unkind and fastidious soever he shews himself to testimonies, even to all in my Book, (whether from Fathers or from Scripture it self) upon the account of a thousand Grammatical, Philological, Sophistical,
Pag. 17. Historical and Logical difficulties, 'tis certain he must in the change of the Scene, when he hath no interest concerned, or hypothesis served by it, discern his mistake, or else he would not so impertinently waste his time in reading, and answering, and writing of Books, each of which are his silent confession, that Books are intelligible, that words and periods, written, as well as unwritten, read, as spoken, found in ancient Records, as delivered from the Ancients by Father to Son, by word of mouth, which he stiles written in mens hearts, are surely and equally intelligible; and then again I may have his leave for all this rebuke, to make use of my talent, of producing testimonies, and not to complain of my portion, if whilst the matter chiefly, if not onely depends on testimonies, my chief, if not onely talent lie that way.

16. And so much for his ἰδίαι κρίσεις (I am still very subject to this vanity of using Greek, when I might have lived without it) his sweet and bitter cup, his praises, and his rebukes, mixt prudently, that I might not be immoderately afflicted with the one, or transported with the other.

SECT. III.

Patterns of bitterness from S. Jerome. (An Essay of Dispatch.) St. Jerome's dislike of it. Vigilantius's despising of Reliques; Our accord with St. Jerome in that doctrine; Our dissent from Vigilantius. Jerome's handling of Helvidius. His noting him, that he took Railing for Eloquence. S. W. his begging the questions. My counterfeited mistake of the Author of Rushworth's Dialogues, vindicated. Mr. White's treating of Mr. Daillee and others. The Bishop of Chalcedon's judgment of it. The honour of being opposed by Mr. Wh. His singular way of managing Controversies. His Apology for Tradition. Some observations on it. His interpretations of some passages in the Greek Testament, and in Johannes Thessalonicensis.

1. HIs third Section is taken up, all but the last leaf, in fetching patterns of bitterness from St. Hierom, to which he willingly appeals, and pretending I have chosen him for my Patron (afterwards for my Umpire) in this point, Let us stand, saith he, to his award and example, and see how he treated Vigilantius, Dr. H's and the Protestants fore-father in denying veneration to holy Reliques.] But let us first see how I have chosen St. Hierom for my Patron or Umpire, which is all the appearance of reason produced by him, why I should stand to his award or example in this point. After the Apostles denunciations against Contumely, I mentioned many other unhappy characters, all ready to fall upon this manner of Treaty, one from the words of our Saviour, Mat. 5. a second from the example of Michael, Jude 9. a third from its unreconcileableness to the Spirit of meekness, commanded by St. Paul, 2 Tim. 2. 23. 1 Cor. 4. 21. Gal. 6. 1. in opposition to biting one another, &c. characters of the Gnostick Heresie at that time, and a last in these words, That as this is a most unskilfull deviation from all rules of Art as well as Civility, and St. Hierom notes it as a great errour in Helvidius, that he took Railing for Eloquence, so it is not imaginable how so much learning and abilities as this Disarmer is believed to have, should admit so great a mixture of rudeness and scurrility, had it not appeared necessary to assist in the counterpoise to supply some other defects.—Now what hath this Disputant to return to all this? Why, of the three former particulars he takes not so much notice, as to offer any the least answer, in the compass of no less than 26 pages, which are all spent on this matter; nor of the fourth, save onely in catching hold of the name of S. Hierom, (incidentally mentioned) who therefore is presently noised for my chosen Patron, and the whole Umpirage referred not to the passage in him, to which alone I referred, but to his practice, and that especially in his Epistles against Vigilantius, which I did not so much as refer to, or mention.

2. First then we have here an Essay of Dispatch, to pass over all that had the weight laid on it, and strike in with some one incidental passage, and by that inch of ground get over presently into another Region, and there triumph over his adversary in a new Scene of Pageantry. This minds me of Trypho and
P. 287. D. the Jews dealing with Justin Martyr, ὑ σωιέναι τὰ λεγόμενα φάσκοντες, saith he, ἀλλά τι λέγειν μόνον σπεύδουσιν ἐικῆ, they endeavour not to understand what is said to them, onely they whet themselves to say something. And had not S. Hierom's name (which I might well enough have spared) casually fallen into that fourth branch branch of the Character of Contumely, 'tis hard to divine where S.W. would have found a Grindstone to have whet his stile, or given any more edge to this part of the fourth, than he had to the rest, and to all the three former branches.

3. Secondly, Here is a rule, by which I shall not fear to lose much, if it may be allowed of, that whosoever names an Author, and reflects on some one passage in him, is obliged to stand to his award; and then S. W. having named St. Paul, and cited as much from him, as I did from St. Hierom, must sit down with St. Paul's award; and then Contumelies must be exterminated from Christian Disputes, and be no longer own'd any part of his Duty. 2. If S.W.'s refutation of St. Hierom's words by his contrary practice, be of force, then though he that cites any Author's words to his purpose, must not expect to gain any thing by them (he hath told us * before, that all the testimonies of my Book are subject to a thousand difficulties) yet if that Author have done any thing contrary to his words, he that cited him must then stand to his award and example; and thus not onely Christ's speech of the Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites, must be inverted, though they sit in Moses chair, and say but doe not, ye we must doe after their works, not rule our selves by their commands, but even good mens frailties or crimes must become our patterns, and have more force with us, than their calmest advises, or severest resolutions, and so St. Peter's vow of never-forsaking Christ, must not deserve heeding by us, but be much preponderated by the Umpirage of his actions, the example of his denying him. 3. The short is, St. Hierom in the cool of the day, knew what was amiss in another, and justly noted it, and if he were sometime provoked to exceed the bounds, that his calmer and dispassionate reason prescribed, and exacted from others, it were more reverence to the Reliques of that holy man (of which S.W. pretends such care in this Section) to bury those practices, than to transcribe them, or reproach him by appealing to them; 'Tis evident from his words to † Ruffinus [Cornutam bestiam petis, & nisi caverem illud Apostoli, maledici regnum Dei non possidebunt, &c. (the very Text of which I minded S.W. and is the matter of our present debate, whether I did it seasonably or no) jam nunc sentires, &c.] that he observed this asperity of his own temper, and thought himself bound by that Apostle's denunciation, to restrain it, and accordingly he gives him that reason of saying no more than he did, [Sentisne quid taceam? quod æstuanti pectori verba non commodem, & cum Psalmista loquar, Psal. 141.3.] that he considered that vengeance belonged to God, which concluded him conscientiously obliged not to take it into his own hands. On which ground he tells him, l. 3. c. 11. of railing accusations, that non chartæ Ecclesiasticæ, sed libelli judicum debent continere, they become not the writings of Church Controversies.

* Pag. 17.

† L. 1. c. 7.

4. Lastly, Here is a compendious way (and that is dispatch still) of making D. H. and all Protestants, *heretick*s, and fit to be reviled, because forsooth Vigilantius for denying veneration to holy Reliques, was thus treated.] But to this I answer more explicitly, 1. That we Protestants are as far from Vigilantius's Heresie, if St. Hierom understood it aright, in his Epistle to Riparius, as St. Hierom himself was *. St. Hierom sets it down as a part of Vigilantius's charge, that those who did suspicere reliquias martyrum, he called Cinerarios & idololatras qui mortuorum hominum ossa venerentur. Against which charge that Father professes, Nos non dico martyrum reliquias, sed ne solem quidem & lunam, non angelos, non archangelos, non cherubim, non seraphim, & omne nomen quod nominatur in seculo presenti & futuro, colimus, & adoramus, ne serviamus creaturæ potius quam creatori. And we English this with a perfect accord to it, We are far from worshiping and adoring whether the Reliques of Martyrs, or the very highest Angels, or any creature in the World. 2. †S. Hierom professes, Honoramus reliquias Martyrum, ut eum cujus sunt Martyres, adoremus, and we do the same, honour the reliques of Martyrs, that we may adore God, whose Martyrs they are. 3. He concludes against him, that by his Doctrine, he affirmed the Reliques of Peter and Paul to be unclean, and that as oft as men entered the Basilicæ of the Apostles, Prophets and Martyrs, so oft they paid veneration to the Temples of Idols, that the Candles lighted before them were Ensigns of Idolatry; nay further, that the body of Christ laid in the Grave was unclean. And these consequences we dislike as much as St. Hierom, and the principle whatever it was that own'd them. 4. The honour which he avouched due to the Reliques of the Martyrs, he made good by the words of the Psalmist, Pretious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, (and we believe it as pretious, as any) that the bones of dead men do not pollute those that touch them, by Elisha's touching, when he raised the dead, and the like; and we doubt not of the conclusion, and so need not that medium to prove it. All that we differ in from St. Hierom in that Epistle, is, 1. That we use no reproaches against them that charge us with doctrines that we never taught. 2. That we do not impose our own consequences upon the Doctrine of Vigilantius, or any man else, without having seen his writings, as * it seems St. Hierom did. 3. That he could think Phinees's Javelin, Elias's austerity, the Zeal of Simon Cananæus, (not Simon of Cananee, as S.W. translates it, (I desire to know by the next, whether Cananee be the name of a place or a man) but in plain words Simon the Zelote, Luke 6. 15. called Καναναῖος or Κανανίτης, not from the name of a place, but from קנאה zeal) Peter's severity on Ananias and Saphira, &c. and the command of shedding the bloud of the Seducers, Deut. 13. any way applicable to the present circumstances, as the case then stood between him and Vigilantius. And S. W. which hath avouched these words from St. Hierom in defence of Contumely, might have done well to assure us, he would not extend them to any further liberty, than he hath already taken, (to the metaphorical onely, not real lance) or transcribe this more dangerous severity, this bloudier Copy from him.

* Plura dictare volueram, si librorum ipsius ad nos voluisses mittere cantilenas, ut scire possemus ad quæ rescribere deberemus. Nunc autem aerem verberavimus——

5. Secondly, 'Tis not duly suggested that these harsh expressions of S. Hierom, which had there been premised, fell on Vigilantius for denying Veneration to holy Reliques; In his Book against Vigilantius (which S.W. calls his Second Epistle, and produces the greatest store of the harsh expressions from thence) he might have seen other manner of Doctrines laid by St. Hierom to his charge, and that upon sight of his Writings, which by this time he saith he had received from Riparius and Desiderius, viz. that Vigils were to be condemned, that Allelujah was never to be sung but at Easter, that Continence was Heresie, that Pudicitiousness or single life was a Seminary of Lust. And till D. H. and the Protestants concur with him in all these, who as yet have not transcribed one of them, how can it be truly said, that these harsh expressions, which were poured out on all these conjoined, are due to us, upon that onely score, upon which, as hath been shewed, no least severity can be due to us?

Pag. 24.

6. Lastly, When with this matter of S. Hierom's dealing with Vigilantius, S.W. compares his own temper, and expects my thanks for his moderation, that he did not call me Monster, Prodigious Monster, possessed with the Devil, &c. adding that all these were my due, as I am in the same fault with Vigilantius, besides what

accrues

accrues to me of later titles.] I shall ask him these two questions, somewhat distant the one from the other; 1. How he can think to excuse this his great moderation, that he hath not called me so many Monsters and Demoniacks, as S. Hierom did Vigilantius? how he hath made good the ingagements, under which he hath concluded himself, both by standing to St Hierom's award and example, and by acknowledging it necessary duty, if he hath any zeal and care of his conscience, to use the means which Wit and Art can invent to discredit, disparage — as far as truth can justifie his words? Hath he not here resolved, that truth gives as much my due, as was paid to Vigilantius? with what care of his conscience then, if he were before in earnest, he could for the bribe of a few thanks (the utmost he demands) use this temper, and abstain from those obvious Arts and ways which St. Hierom had traced before him?] is my first question, not founded in what he hath really performed by way of temper, but what he saith he hath performed.

7. The second is, how he hath deserved my thanks for his moderation, when at the same time he tells me, there is as much due to me, on one score, as all S. Hierom's expressions amount to, and yet more accruing to me out of other titles? Doth he that tells a man publickly, that the title of Frantick Monster, Prodigious Monster, Possessed with a Devil, with an unclean Spirit, Snake, famous for Wickedness, Blockhead, &c. (as S.W. hath contracted them) are due to him for one fault, beside what accrues to him out of later titles, deserve his thanks, for not whipping him with Scorpions? What nice distinction hath he discovered betwixt giving me these titles, and publickly telling me and all other men, they are due to me? 'Tis true indeed, that money is not paid when 'tis onely acknowledged due, but it is so in railing. Is it not one of the Figures of that Art, to tell his Antagonist this and this worst of titles is his due, yea much more also than that, but he is kind, and will not deal thus with him, as he deserves. And this piece of Art, as all others, S.W. was obliged in conscience to make use of, and accordingly hath discharged his obligation to conscience, to the utmost farthing; and I that am not the Noon-shadow of Vigilantius's Pourtraiture, that assert not a syllable of all his heretical dictates, must thank, and be obliged, that I am thus meekly treated, and my onely question is, how these thanks came to be so due from me?

8. What he adds of his manner of handling Helvidius, and calling him Snake, and silliest of men, made famous by wickedness, dancing Camel,] is I hope by this time answered also, by analogie with his treating of Vigilantius, viz. That I mentioned his dislike of Helvidius's railing (which if it were the * appealing to his Authority, was not to his Example, which S.W. unduly joins together, as if I had appealed to both) and if he practised otherwise himself, his words are certainly to be heeded before his actions, and the rather because though through passion or weakness he were guilty of it himself, yet it was too foul for him to tolerate in another. I shall not therefore any farther reply to the parallel S.W. makes at large betwixt S. Hierom and himself, in this matter, I had rather be like that Father in his other excellencies, than come within any distance of him in that, which hath always been looked on as his blemish, and is so far from excusing S.W. that it self is unexcusable.

* P.25. l.1.

9. It remains onely, that I add a few words in mine own defence, to clear me from the more and more weakness that S.W. discovers in me, for construing, as he saith, loquacitas, to be railing, S. Hierom's words of Helvidius being these, loquacitatem facundiam existimat.] But I answer, that I cited neither these, nor any other words of S. Hierom, I onely said in my own words, that he noted it as a great errour in Helvidius, that he took Railing for Eloquence. If it be then now demanded, where he noted it, I answer, in the first Chapter of that Epistle against Helvidius, in several passages, especially in this (of which S.W. recites a part) loquacitatem facundiam existimat, & maledicere omnibus bonæ conscientiæ signum arbitratur, accepta materia disputandi amplius incipit blasphemare, & quasi de sublimi loco in totum orbem ferre sententiam, meque quia veritate non posset, lacerare convitiis. Here I not onely found mention of loquacity, but saw the sort of his loquacity expressed by evil speaking, blaspheming, censuring, raving, rending innocent persons with reproaches, and this is my ground for discriminating his loquacity from all other species of it, and interpreting it (but that is not construing it) railing. And if here I have shew'd more and more weakness than in all the Section, I shall thence take confidence, as far as S.W's judgment will support it, to believe, I have not been very culpable, and so am not as yet much humbled by his Discipline.

10. There be two things still behind in this Section, which being heterogeneous to that of S. Hierom, the main subject, come now to be attended to. 1. His dilemma concluding the justice of his rigorous expressions. 2. My counterfeiting a mistake that I may by that means fix a slie Calumny on a worthy Gentleman. His Dilemma is in these words, Either Doctor H*'s cause is false, and then 'tis laudable to use zeal against him — or it is true, and then he deserves as great a reprehension, who abuses his cause by going about to defend it by such wilfull falsifications, frauds and weaknesses, as he hath been discovered.*] And this as a cure for his begging the question, in supposing me an adversary of the true Faith.] This Dilemma I might retort with as much force as he hath begun it, (i.e. I confess with little enough, but yet with as much.) Thus either my Cause is true, and then it is not laudable in him to use zeal against it, or to labour to oppress it with noise and clamour; or it is false, and then I cannot be so much reprehended for using no better means to defend it, than a bad cause is capable of. But I like not the last part of my Dilemma much better than I did his, and therefore having onely shewed him the no force of it, by this image; I answer, 1. That I take this cure for his begging the question to be palliate, and that it is still a begging the question to affirm, that either my cause is false, or that I have defended it with falsifications, and that I have therein been so much as once discovered. There is a middle betwixt these, my having defended a true cause without any falsifications, &c. and till he hath not onely said, but proved the contrary, which cannot yet be done in the beginning of this Reply to my Discovery of his former Dexterities, his saying it, is the begging the question. 2. In case my cause were false, and his zeal laudable, yet whether Contumelies are that laudable zeal, or his twitchings by the beard, pure zeal, and not contumely, is another question, at this present under debate, and therefore now in this Section most unskilfully begg'd by him. 3. Supposing the cause good, and some faults and weaknesses discovered, in defending it, yet neither would it follow that those supposable faults were either frauds or falsifications, or any way wilfull (which includes their being known to the Author, as to me, I am sure, they are not) any more than the weaknesses are, which are generally most opposite to wilfull, nor that they deserved as great a reprehension, be they what they can, as the like in maintaining a bad cause would deserve, the badness of the cause being allowable to add some degree to the guilt, when the falsifications or whatsoever other crimes are supposed equal, and equally wilfull on both sides. 4. Faults may be repre-

Pag. 23.
Pag. 27.

reprehended without contumely, and so still, bare reprehensions come not home to the point in hand, and that S.W's twitchings are bare reprehensions, is another begging of the question; and these be frailties enough in his own Dilemma.

11. Then for the Counterfeited mistake and calumny, thus he lays it, I had, saith he, upon occasion of the evidence of our Churches Infallibility, in my Schism Disarm'd, p.20. told him he might to his amazement see it in that incomparable Treatise of Rushworth's Dialogues vindicated from all possible confute by that excellent Apology for it, writ by the learned Pen of Mr. Tho. White. Now what does Mr. H? he tells us that S. W. says his arrows are beyond all possible confute, meaning that S.W. the Author of Schism Disarm'd, was the same with the Author of the Apology for Tradition (though I am certainly informed that he knows S.W. to be another person) and reports again afterwards the same phrase to the same purpose, and so on, fansying two advantages that I meant to make by this one project.] But before we proceed to more, let us a while reflect on this.

12. His own words, of which there was no doubt, he cites from Schism Disarm'd naming the very page where they were, But my words, on which all depended, he gives his Reader no direction to find, either as he first cites them, or, as he saith, I report afterward the same phrase to the same purpose. Nor can I, who am presumable to be better acquainted with my own Writings than any other Reader, tell whither to repair for this second report of this phrase, and must therefore satisfie my self by resorting to the first, on which the weight seems to be laid, and that is in the Disarmer's Dexter, Exam.p.4 l.35. where having compared his treating me to the Æthiopians poisoning their little arrows, I added, having thus imbibed high vertues, they make very quick work, are very killing, or in the Disarmer's phrase, beyond all possible confute. And this it seems hath brought on me this unexpected displeasure, and censure of counterfeiting a mistake, and fixing a slie calumny upon a worthy person. But I demand, 1. How it is possible I should have mistaken in these words? Did not S.W. p.20. use this phrase [beyond all possible confute]? and is not S.W. my Disarmer? and might not I spell these together, and then write, [in my Disarmer's phrase, beyond all possible confute]. I confess, I that took [confute] for a Verb, should not on my own head have used it for a Substantive, and therefore using it so, cited it from my Disarmer, as if I should now render Simon Cananæus, Simon of Cananee, I would add, according to my Disarmer's interpretation) but who would think there were any least mistake committed in this, when 'tis palpable there was none?

13. This indeed, to yield some support to his charge, he hath disguised into another form, affirming that I tell him that S. W. says, his Arrows are beyond all possible confute, and adding that I mean that S.W. was the same with the Author of the Apology for Tradition. But 1. It is visible that I do not tell him or any man, that S.W. says so of his own arrows, but on the contrary, that 'twas no excellent indication of his persuasions of his own performances, that he deemed it necessary, geminare venenis vulnera, (which he could not think necessary, if they were of themselves, in his opinion beyond all possibility of being confuted.) What I farther add there, is evidently no more than this, that the killingness of his arrows, the impossibility of his being confuted, comes from the high vertues they have imbibed, i.e. from the contumelies (the onely parts of his Book, which I know my self unqualified to answer in kind, or make any proportionable return to) and what is this toward telling, that S.W. says this of his own arrows?

14. Secondly, having affixed on me words which I never wrote, 'tis no wonder, but consequent (and in his opinion, laudable) that he should proceed, aud give them a meaning which I never meant: And at this rate, who can be free from mistakes, from counterfeiting, from calumny, from any thing that S.W. will say I meant, by words, first of his own framing, and then interpreting also?

15. But neither will all this (which, if allowed, hath ill luck if it cannot doe any thing) prove what he hath charged on me, (i.e. my purposely counterfeiting a mistake, &c.) without one farther aid, and that he hath furnished it with also, affirming, that he is certainly informed that I know S. W. to be another person.] Certainly I have no least obligation to make any return to this; yet I shall by these steps, to perfect the Readers observations of S.W. 1. I am the most competent testifier of mine own secrets, and I am sure, I do not know who is the Author of that Book, nor 2. what one name S. W. are the first letters of, nor 3. do I, or ever did I so much as believe ('tis not imaginable I should know) that Mr. S. who was once a Servant to my Lord of D. and hath, as I have heard, assumed to be the Author of Schism Disarm'd, was the Author of that whole Book, but onely of a part of it. How then could he be certainly informed, that I knew this, which I know I never so much as believed? If he was informed so, he neither was, nor could be certainly informed (which to my ears signifies the certain truth of his information) and if he was any way informed that I believed it, yet that could not signifie that I knew it, when in truth I neither knew nor believed it. I was told (Sect. 2.) that he was much mine for the sake of some friends common to him and me; I now demand, did any of them ever so much as tell him, that I believed otherwise than now I affirm; If any did, let him be named; if they did not, what may not he say, that thus speaks? 4. Though I have now no least inducement or obligation to tell him my present thoughts or suspicions (for above those I cannot be imagined to have penetrated the disguise) of Schism Dispatcht, yet as far as my present information or conjectures lead me, I shall not be nice to discover it, and it is this, that Mr. S. must not enclose all the honour (or rather just reproach) either of the Scoffs, or, which is the second principal ingredient, the cavils of it; And if Mr. Wh. be suspected by many to have brought in liberal contributions to him, I have not much greater arguments to incline my assent to it, than these, 1. That without any occasion given by me, this remote opportunity was laid hold on, solicitously to avert that suspicion. 2. That in his answer to Mr Daillee, or Daillee's Arts discovered, he hath without any disguise treated him in as much ill language, and sometimes upon as little occasion, as I am treated in either of these Replies, and that he may with as much honour have written either, or both of these whole Tracts, as one passage against Mr. Daillee, which I shall for an essay desire S.W. to turn to p. 249. usher'd in, p. 248. with these words, [Here I particularly invite the eye of the serious Reader, to observe how maliciously he (*Mr.*Daillee) corrupts the Council of Trent in two very considerable passages.] On the second of these he sets the remark, that the abuse is more gross and palpable (concerning our Ladies immaculate conception) p. 248. and in the next page, 249. he that p. 4. had profest, beside his reason, to be beholding to his nature for its extreme averseness to incivilities, and captious proceedings, is yet induced (by what principle I guess not, but it seems neither of reason or nature) to fasten on it all these express charges of foul play, cheat, falseness, perverseness, want both of face and conscience, more than ordinary malice, desperate notorious absurdity, shame- shameless forehead outfacing the whole Catholick World, the title of a bold Jugler, all this and more in the compass of 30 lines) and then concludes at the top of the next page 250. in the greatest ☞ of Contumely that he could reach, [Can any thing be answered in his defence, or any excuse made, why he should not be accounted an impudent lying Knave?] This sure is the noting of some fault, personal and moral with a witness, and so by S.W's description of Contumely, must needs fall under it. And what was it that made all this severity so necessary? Why, saith he, He undertook to prove, that 'tis impossible so to expound the words of the Council of Trent, that they shall not in plain terms give the lie to all the Fathers, and to render this foul play the more plausible to such as look not well to his fingers, he translates [in hoc decreto] falsly and perversly [in this number] as if the Council had positively decreed the blessed Virgin not to be in the number of those who are born in Original sin.] This then being the Crime, and the former part of it [that it is impossible to explicate their words, En sort qu' elles ve donnent un desmenti a tous les Peres] being in that place assumed to be proved by an argument, there following by way of Dilemma (to which Mr. Wh. hath not offered a word of answer, and till he had done so, could not reasonably proceed to any sharp Discipline on the conclusion) I must suppose the second part to be it, which alone could be thought to support the crimen falsi, and so be charged in such variety of language, Cheat, Jugler, &c. viz. that he falsified the words of the Council, and translated in hoc decreto, in this number.] But that could not be, for Mr. Daillee wrote not English but French, and if the English Translator misrendred him, without his privity, 1. That should have been wholly charged on that Translator, and 2. it would not then have amounted to those enormous crimes, of Cheat, Jugler, &c. that now are fastened on it, by being misplaced upon Mr. Daillee, who was herein most perfectly innocent. And this is the very truth of the matter, The English Interpreter impertinently (yet probably without any design of seducing any) added those words [in that number] but Mr. Daillee set down the words of the Original Latine of the Council most punctually, as they lay in the Acts of the Council, and gave them no other rendring but this, Ils declarent a la fin Que leur intention n' est pas d' y comprendre le bien heuruſee et immaculee Vierge Marie mere de Diu. They declare in the end (of their Decree beforementioned, En leur Decret) that it was not their intention to comprehend the blessed and immaculate Virgin Mary the Mother of God] adding no syllable that sounded to that sense of [in that number.] Now 'tis not questioned but Mr. Wh. was abundantly qualified to reade, at least to consult the Author, whose Arts he undertook to discover, in his own language, which if he did, he must discern him free from this charge of falsifying; if he did not, he knows whose fault that was, to condemn a person without due cognizance of his fact, and so from whom the reparations are due. And 'tis not his proemial advertisement that [the Animadversions on Daillee are applied to the English Translation by T.S. not to the French Original] that will justifie him, for still the title of his Book is, Daillee's Arts discovered] to whom the errours of the Translator (by the way, with his good leave, that was not T.S.) are not with the least justice imputable, much less are the casual slips of the one, any way interpretable to be the inexcusable Lies and Knavery, and Impudencies of the other. By the way, it may be remembred, that even that which the Translator conceived to be the meaning of the Council, is expresly the definition, in the Romanists Catechism, compiled for universal use by Cardinal Bellarmine, Christ. Doctr. p. 142. Our Lady had never any spot of sin, neither Original nor Actual. This one instance I have chosen to give, by way of digression from my own to another person, having truly the same dislikes to this sort of treating, when others, as when my self am concerned in it. And lest it should be thought, that poor Hereticks are the onely men that meet with this course usage from him, I refer the Reader to his Ordinary the Bishop of Chalcedon his Letter to him, part of which is inserted in G.L's Manifest to his Brethren residing in England, in these words. Onely for your souls sake I request you to leave those naughty reproaches which you give to one equal to your self in all things, I pray you forget not the words of the Apostle, Maledici regnum Dei non consequentur, or of our Saviour, Qui dixerit fratri suo, Fatue, reus erit Gehennæ ignis, such reproachfull words as you use in your Letter, become neither Christian, nor Priest, but discover too too great passion; and again, —To omit the taunts of Paramount Bishop, and domineering ways, and such others, which you bestow upon my self, it seems you have forgotten your solemn promise which you made at your Ordination, to give reverence and obedience to your Ordinary, &c.

16. Ere I leave this Theme, I am yet farther to take notice of the two advantages which I am suggested to have aimed at in this wilfull mistake, 1. That I honour my self in making the world believe I had so worthy an adversary as that miracle of wit and learning. 2. That I dishonour my pretended adversary as the vainest person in the world, by intimating that himself gave himself such an high character. To these I answer jointly, 1. That I could have no aims in saying that, which, as hath already appeared, I never said. 2. That I could never foresee that the World would collect that from my words, which I neither said nor thought, and which my accuser at the same time saith, was contrary to my knowledge.

17. As for the severals, they now can need no reply, yet ex abundanti, I shall give them some, 1. That I might as reasonably be allowed thus to honour my self (if it were but to reward the patience of being *Pag.*5. in S.W's company so long) as 'tis certain Mr. Wh. assumes to have answered two persons of such a quality, as the Protestant Party never produced before, and seems to have chosen them to live by, or die with, whose eloquence none were found to exceed, whose wits none will be found to equal— adding much more in their praises, and
* *Pag.*260. thus much in Mr. Daillee's, * that those noble Lords had great reason highly to esteem him, and yet sure he doth more than desire to make the World believe, he had such worthy adversaries, 'twere but a poor satisfaction this, if they were not his Captives too. And why might not another man have S.W's pardon, if having such *Pag.*28. an example from a person of the profoundest humility (as S.W. that best knows, assures us also) he had permitted this spark of ambition a while to have warmed his breast? It might perhaps have inspirited him, and raised his faculties above that meanness, that S.W. at every turn discovers in him, and so contributed to the glories of his triumphs also, which now are likely to be obscured by the despicableness of his Captive. But whatever just title I might have to his pardon for this insolence, I may with truth profess, I have no inclination to be guilty of it, and assure him. 1. That I am not fond of so much as seeming to enter the Lists with Giants, of having to doe with Miracles of any sort, especially those of wit, having been advertised long since, that quanto ingeniosiores sunt, tanto iracundius docent, the more miraculously quick their own perceptions are, the less patience they have for those that that do not as nimbly apprehend, and submissively embrace them; were it not for this dread of this ill attendant of his wit, I should not diſown the ambition of beholding his learning, that I might benefit by it, which I never did in the leaſt from all my converſation with S. W. and therefore if he be but in the number of thoſe whom he calls the meaneſt and youngeſt of his Scholars, he muſt put me in mind of what Apuleius ſaith of the Indians, ad naſcentem ſolem ſiti ſunt, & in toto corpore nox eſt, for I yet diſcern not, that he hath conſiderably edified or improved by his nearneſs to him. Florid. l. 1. 2. I ſhall ask what honour it was to Mr. Daille that the world knew (which is more than believing) that this worthy man had written againſt him? Can any man be meaner, and more uncapable of true honour, than he is there (as even now appeared) repreſented to be? and yet he hath attained that honour; who then need deſpair, that were ambitious of the like? 3. What advantage were it for him, that had ſought honour from the worthineſs of his Adverſary, preſently (as S. W. ſuppoſes) to diſhonour him? were it ſtill an honour to combat with the vaineſt perſon in the world, or to have him appear thus vain, with whom I was to combate? Yet theſe, and thus unreconcilable are the advantages that S. W.'s mint would help me to. 'Tis certain Mr. White could not need his own praiſes (and ſo muſt have been impertinently vain in this contrivance) His friends have freely beſtowed them on him, and I heartily wiſh, that having ſo many titles to them, he may never doe any thing to blemiſh them.

not

18. My greateſt quarrel to him as a man, I have already expreſs'd, and ſhould not have done ſo, had it not been as legible to all under his own and anothers hand, as it is now under mine. But as to a writer of Controverſies, I have this other, that the anſwering of his Apology for the Dialogues, is not the way to ſatisfie the Romaniſts, there being few of thoſe which go on his grounds, either in the notion of Tradition, or ſome other particular points of Controverſie. In relation to the former it was, that Mr. White hath not onely told us expreſly in his Epiſtle Dedicatory before that Apology, that the Doctrine of Rushworth's Dialogues takes a path not much beaten by our modern Controvertiſts, but farther gives us (in the beginning of the Apology it ſelf) the firſt riſe of his way, from a ſlight familiar conference between him and his Kinſman, as it were onely for exerciſe to train themſelves, and practiſe their poſtures, which now by the oppoſitions of thoſe two Lords ſeems (to him) to ſpread it ſelf into a publick and ſolemn war.] Which though poetically ſpoken, and above the proportion of videas concurrere bellum, Atque virum—yet he can make good the phraſe, he ſaith, without much ſtraining, ſince the eminent names on the one ſide (a private Letter of the Lord Digby, and a ſhort Reply of the Lord Falkland) and the great advantages of ground on the other (one ſingle perſon on that advantageous ground) may juſtly be admitted to ſupply the number of an Army in both; I may add that that Army being of two ſides, muſt, if any, be two armies (and that would be news indeed, two Armies made up of three men.) That it is not, otherwiſe than in this poetick Dialect, and in the Author's fancy, grown much more numerous ſince, I may ſafely collect from S. W. who, I ſuppoſe, hath narrowly obſerved the progreſs of this doctrine, and without reſpect to his intereſt truely told me, that few there are that have refined their underſtanding to this degree of diſcerningneſs, though he perceived to his comfort that the beſt ſort of wits (himſelf, I ſuppoſe, and ſome, but ſtill few others) which ſure are not the moſt, begin (and do yet but begin) thus to own their reaſon. And for the latter 'tis no ſecret, that other of his tenets were not liked; if they had, they had not been, as himſelf in a ſecond Epiſtle Dedicatory before that Apology, ſaith, ſo deeply cenſured even by Catholicks (whom he there cenſures back again, as unworthy the Function they profeſs, and highly obſtructive of the progreſs of the Catholike Faith, noting them of Deſtructive errors, of ſtriving to poſſeſs the Church of God, and break the eternal rule of Faith) and in fine condemned at Rome. And then what honour it may be, I know not, but truly I ſee not the advantage would accrue from ſuch a duel, wherein ſo few beſide the Combatants, would think themſelves concerned; And that is one ſufficient reaſon (beſide the no obligation to be for ever in the Palæſtra) why the challenge ſo oft intimated in Sch. Diſarm'd and Diſpatch'd, to enter the liſts with that Apologiſt, is not yet accepted. It were not hard to make that return to him, which would ſatisfie all diſintereſted perſons of either party; but thoſe having no need of, nor demanding that ſatisfaction, there is no hope of ſatisfying thoſe few others, that are reſolved, it is beyond all poſſible refute, the deemed certainty of which perſwaſion lays on them a neceſſity of concluding every thing ridiculous, and nonſenſical, that is aimed againſt it. 'Tis fitter then that theſe few ſhould be permitted to enjoy their own humours, than that they ſhould be ſtudiouſly, but impertinently diſquieted. Another reaſon there is, which hath weight with me; The title of that Apology promiſes an anſwer to the exceptions of the Lords Falkland and Digby, the former of which I know hath very largely and fully refuted one anſwer of his (which therefore himſelf ſtyles * an unlicked mola) to that Lord's little diſcourſe of Infallibility; ſetting down the full of his argument, and well nigh of his words, and giving them ſo fair a Reply, that the ſweetneſs of it † ſurprized him, he acknowledges, with admiration. But to this the Apologiſt hath not made thoſe regular, and equal returns, that the Reader might expect, and were due (if but by way of reparation for the defects of his former, above * half of which was ſpent, before he pretends to give any anſwer to, or take the leaſt notice of his Adverſary) but † as he profeſſes, to ſelect ſuch objections as he (the onely judge in this matter) thinks really to intereſt the Controverſie, and to handle them without relation to books or diſtinction of Authors, or citations of places, as one that ſeeks truth, not the glory of confuting, or vanity of anſwering (when yet in the Title page, the moſt conſpicuous place in the City, it was diſtinctly proclaimed, that thoſe Lords exceptions were anſwered) ſo he hath accordingly performed, producing what objections he thought fit, not noting from whence they were produced. And if this have rendred that Lord's diſcourſe leſs defenſible, and his Adverſaries beyond all poſſible refute, this was a piece of skill in the manager, and let not S. W. feign to himſelf any other reaſon of it. I have now on his ſummons given my attendance and ſurveyed it a ſecond time, and find ſome things very true, and ſeaſonably obſerved, as that neither the Chiliaſts nor the Arrians had any title to univerſal Tradition (which if he learnt not from the Preaching Proteſtants, was yet ſurely no news to them, nor the leaſt prejudice to our pretenſions, nor refutation of his Lordſhip, as to that of the Chiliaſts, hath * elſewhere largely been manifeſted) that † if impertinent curioſities be hindred from importuning the Church, her truths will undoubtedly be ſeen in her belief and practice without making new deſinitions; that * probable arguments have no truth in them, nor is † a concluſion nearer being true for an hundred unconvincing arguments, than for one, that * the place urged by Mr. Daille out of Hegeſippus of hereſie deflowring the Church after the Apoſtles death, belonged onely to the riſing up of hereticks againſt the Church not to

* Apol. p. 3.
† Apol. p. 6.
* See Anſw. to L. Falkl. p. 27. and L. Falkl.'s Reply, p. 176.
† Apol. p. 4.
* View of Infal. lib. p. 87, &c.
† P. 111.
* P. 117.
† P. 146.
* P. 195.

the Churches corruption, (if he had added that the hereticks were there ſpecified to be the ψευδώνυμος γνῶσις, the Gnoſticks, he had fully confirmed his interpretation.) But in divers other particulars he hath not ſhew'd himſelf that miracle, that S. W. tells us of, eſpecially in interpreting the Greek of the †P. 165. New Teſtament, as πεπληροφορημένων, Lu. 1. 1. † in great abundance acted, παρηκολουθηκότι ἄνωθεν πᾶσιν ἀκριβῶς, v. 3. preſent at all things almoſt from the beginning, δοκεῖτε ἐν αὐταῖς (γραφαῖς) ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἔχειν, Joh. V. 39.
*P. 152. * you deceive your ſelves if you think you have life in them, μαρτύρεμαι καὶ μικρόν τι μὴ μεγάλου εἶδον ἐκπε λέγων, Act.
†P. 159. 26. 22. † teſtifying or proteſting to great and little that I ſpoke nothing. So likewiſe in his account of other
*P. 233. Greek paſſages, as of that of * Joannes Theſſalonicenſis, that he ſaith no ſuch thing as Daille makes him ſay, [viz. that the Church held Angels had ſubtile and airy bodies] onely this, that the Church knows Angels to be intelligent Creatures] when yet the expreſs words are, νοερὰς μὲν αὐτὰς ἡ καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία γινώσκει, ἀσωμάτους πάντη καὶ ἀοράτους, λεπτισμάτους δὲ καὶ ἀεροειδεῖς ἢ πυροειδεῖς, the Catholick Church acknowledges, or is of opinion) as γνώμη ſententia is from γινώσκω, and as ὀρθόδοξος and ὀρθογνώμων, are exactly the ſame both in
*P. 81. the nature of the words and in uſe, though he gueſs otherwiſe * elſewhere) that they are intelligent, not indeed altogether incorporeal and inviſible, but thin-bodyed, and airy or fiery. Theſe I mention, as things manifeſt to every eye, and ſhall not here, ſo much out of the place, (anon there will be a fitter ſeaſon) deſcend to any matters of the main diſpute or controverſie, wherein I muſt not expect S.W. will be of my mind: But if in theſe which I have named he will not, the Reader will know what ſentence to paſs on Tutor and Diſciple both. And thus much for this learned Author, upon S.W's importunity, and withall to give him the reaſon of that ſilence, which is, it ſeems, miſinterpreted amazement, the leaſt degree of which I know no perſon that ever was under, upon the account which S.W. mentions.

19. This Section concludes with a reflexion on Irenæus his words of much laughter, and he hath replyed to them by fiction of other words, that Irenæus might have ſaid, but hath not; And then paſſing them on Mr. H. and appealing to the Readers eyes, if they were not very ſutable, he hath ſhew'd him nothing, but that he was obliged to write another Defence, of Calumny, after this of Contumely, and then examine which were the moſt neceſſary accompliſhment of a Catholick Controvertiſt.

SECT. IV.

My grievous miſtakes vindicated, and the charge retorted. Contumelies the weapon onely of the conquered and deſperate. Launoy's judgement of them. The compariſon betwixt perjury, and perverſe treating of matters of Religion. The Anſwerers obligation to prove ſome things. What dealing is expectable from S. W. The affinity betwixt the Epiſtle of the Cath. Gentleman, and the firſt part of Sch. Diſ. Three other charges anſwered.

1. HIs fourth Section, the laſt on this Subject, wherein his Defence, in relation to contumelies, is compleated, is the charging on me a grievous miſtake committed in even ground, in a plain Epiſtle to the Reader. 'Twill coſt us ſome circuit and windlace, to diſcern wherein this miſtake conſiſts. Firſt he tells us the deſign of that his Epiſtle, to render the Reader an account, why the civility of his Adverſary ſhould not hinder him from giving him his own, if the care of an eternal good intereſted his zeal to lay him open, and then adds the two parallel queſtions, which he propoſed in theſe words, How would you take it, if one ſhould ſpit in your face, and juſtifie the affront, becauſe his breath is ſweet, &c. And then again repeating his deſign in the queſtions, he reproaches me for not underſtanding it in my anſwer, (which yet was punctual to his queſtion, telling him how a Chriſtian were bound to take it, if any man ſhould ſpit in his face, were the breath ſweet or otherwiſe) To this rebuke I anſwer, 1. That if to a queſtion aſked, I had given a punctual anſwer, abſtracting from the main deſign of it, this might yet be far from a grievous miſtake. For unleſs the particularity of the deſign have ſuch an influence on the queſtion, that the anſwer to the queſtion will be unſufficient, unleſs the deſign be explicitely taken notice of, there is ſure no miſtake at all in this method.

2. But then 2. the anſwer which I gave, was perfectly home to the deſign, as well as to the queſtion, which I ſhall thus manifeſt to him. The queſtion I muſt ſuppoſe pertinent to the buſineſs in hand, and that was certainly for the juſtifying of S.W's dealing in Sch. Diſ. and that preciſely in the point of rude blows, or contumelies onely, and not as 'tis now pretended, of giving the Adverſary his own (which is bare juſtice) or laying open, diſcovering the infirmities of his reaſoning (which if it be no more than ſo, is juſtice again) This is moſt viſible in the firſt words of the Epiſtle [I know you will be objecting, that the blows I give are too rude] (not, that I give him his own, &c.) Hence it follows, that this, which he now pretends to have been his deſign, could then have no influeuce on the queſtion, which was to juſtifie not his juſtice, but his rudeneſs, and therefore my anſwer, which reflected onely on rudeneſs, not on juſtice, was home to the deſign. So again for another ingredient in his deſign, the civility of his adverſary, and the influence of that upon his blows, that certainly I took notice of, and by proving to him from Chriſt's command, that an uncivil adverſary was not to be anſwered with rudeneſs, I inferred with advantage, that a civil adverſary was not thus to be anſwered. Laſtly, for the care of an eternal good, intereſſing zeal, which is the laſt circumſtance of his deſign, that onely in my anſwer I took notice of, and the reaſon is clear, becauſe no ſuch care can thus intereſs zeal, as to juſtifie contumely. No man's eternal good depends upon S. W's Contumelies; nor if it did, muſt he on that account neglect his own, as he certainly doth, that ſins in order to the beſt end, and that the contumelious doth ſo, had a little before been proved, and was not there again to be inſiſted on. Let the Reader now, or, if he pleaſe, his own conſcience judge, on whoſe ſide the grievous miſtake lies, on mine, who anſwered fully to the one true deſign, that rude blows were not for any, much leſs for a civil adverſary, or on his, that is now fain to ſubſtitute a feigned deſign, and convert Rudeneſs inhanſed by the civility of the adverſary, into exact diſtributive juſtice, which is known by this very form of words, ſuum cuique tribuere, giving every man, and ſo an adverſary, his own, which he could not know, as he ſaid he did, his Reader would object to him.

P. 30. 3. This is ſtill more manifeſt againſt S.W. when he ſaith, that D. H's courteous ſtyle could not oblige S. W. to treat him tenderly, and favourably.] Let him now reflect on the firſt words of his Epiſtle; Was the the Reader ſuppoſed to object that he did not treat the Doctor tenderly or favourably? Or had the ſtile of the Tract of Schiſm courted favour or tenderneſs from S. W. (who could not then by any divination be foreſeen) or from any man elſe? Or, is there no middle between favour and too much rudeneſs? Whoſe now is the guilt of totally miſtaking the common ſenſe, not of a ſtranger's, but of his own plain Epiſtle? And what can be imagined more plain, than that he hath ſtudiouſly endeavoured to impoſe this miſtake on others, if he have not really impoſed it on himſelf, which will be believed with moſt charity to the Deſigner.

4. But that he may indeed prove, that the Doctor's wits were not well awake, he lays to my charge, that I neither go about to grant or deny the invalidity of thoſe pretended excuſes, which onely was to be done] To which I have already anſwered, that Contumelies being proved exterminating ſins, 'twas evident none of thoſe pretended motives of them, could be imagined to have any force to juſtifie them, why then ſhould I grant, or deny the invalidity of theſe, when upon the grounds premiſed, all were indifferently invalidated? When then in great vehemence he appeals to my conſcience and reaſon, whether my anſwer taken from Chriſt's rule of bearing of injuries, be any thing to this queſtion, whether the ſweetneſs of the breath juſtifie the affront of ſpitting in ones face, or, civil language ſufficiently excuſe pernicious Doctrine.] I anſwer him again, that neither of theſe were queſtions between him and me, or his Reader, but this onely inſtead of them, whether rude blows were a ſuitable return to a civil adverſary, nay even to an uncivil, according to the law of Chriſt? And I am ſure my anſwer (and he cannot doubt it) was pertinent, and more than home to that queſtion. This manner of dealing I deſire may be entered into S. W.'s Character.

5. The anſwer to his ſecond queſtion, he ſaith, is yet more pleaſant, for inſtead of telling whether ſwearing demurely be any excuſe for perjury, ſo as to ſecure it from the puniſhment or treaty which otherwiſe might juſtly be given it, he tells us, ſaith he, in good ſober ſadneſs, that a man may uſe all lawfull means to defend his eſtate, and diſcover perjury, and blames me for accuſing him of perjurious tampering — as ſuperadding to the former errour, that I miſtake the compariſon for the thing that it is brought to reſemble] To the ſubſtantial part of this charge, the ſame account belongs, which was given to the former. That the queſtion betwixt us, was not whether civility could excuſe from juſtice, but whether it ought not to ſecure from rudeneſs; and ſo proportionably, not whether the demureneſs of the ſwearing or forſwearing, could ſecure the perjurious from any juſt returns, but whether ſo great a ſuppoſed crime as perjury would juſtifie the rude blows, or twitchings by the beard, declamation, or Satyr. Of theſe onely, he knows the queſtion was, and the Readers ſuppoſed objection, to which he undertook to give ſatisfaction by this other double queſtion, what return ſoever ſhould be made to it: To which therefore I was ſo to accommodate anſwer, that it might appear, whether he in his ſuppoſed rude blows were innocent, or no; and that he was not, did irrefragably appear by theſe two ſteps, 1. That as all lawfull means might be uſed to diſcover Perjury, and defend the Eſtate, ſo unlawfull might not, and the rude blows were of that number (the latter part of which being that, whereon the weight of the anſwer lay, he hath wholly omitted in his recitation, with what fairneſs, let him now judge.) 2. That this of demure Perjury was far from the caſe of S. W.'s adverſary) whoſe civility was all that was ſuppoſed in the objection) and who was as free from that, or any thing proportionable to that, as from Necromancy or ſacrificing to Idols. And then, what anſwer could be more pertinent and home to the purpoſe, than this, that his Plea for rude blows, depending on the conceſſion or ſuppoſition of two things, 1. That the adverſary was guilty of Perjury, or the like; 2. That rude blows were a juſtifiable return to that; neither of theſe had any degree of truth in them. How this, that was thus plain, made a ſhift to be diſguiſed, I leave the Reader to conſider, and account with S. W. for it.

6. And when for the inflaming of the Bill, he adds, that I miſtook the ſimilitude for the thing it is brought to reſemble, I wonder how he came to be ſo far of my counſel; If I repeated the words which he ſpake, and made anſwer in the ſame Dialect, and there was an allegory in his words, it is ſtrange I may not be allow'd to have had the ſame in mine; Is my keeping cloſe to his words, an evidence that I forſook his ſenſe? If it be not, I am ſure he hath no other from which to infer it. Nay, is it not yet more evident, that I began that period (now accuſed of this errour) thus, 'Tis certain and viſible that as the defending the Church of England from Schiſm, bears no proportion to the ruining S. W's eſtate, ſo neither is there any oath incumbent on us — and purſue it in like manner, that his ſtile, which was robuſt in the mention of Perjury, becomes much fainter when he comes to the ἀνταπόδοσις —— Now if I had miſtaken the ſimilitude for the thing it was brought to reſemble, how could I mention proportion, and ἀνταπόδοσις? Doth not proportion] expreſly ſignifie the compariſon, and though ἀνταπόδοσις be a Greek word, to which S W. hath a pique, yet ſure it is, in plain Engliſh, the ſecond part of a compariſon, or the thing reſembled by it, and having noted it twice in ſo few lines, why muſt I be obliged to note it a third time, to præclude, what I had not the ſagacity to foreſee, S. W.'s diſcovering of my errour? Let the Reader now adviſe, whether it were any great debaſement to S. W. to be ſet to pick thrums-ends out of over-worn garments as he is pleaſed to ſtile his examining of teſtimonies produced out of Scripture and Fathers) who when he is not ſo imployed, ſets himſelf to the picking of holes, where his fingers meet not with the leaſt temptations. Pag. 18.

7. Of the ſame thred exactly is the next that follows, and is, ſaith he, greater than all the reſt, that when he made it his onely Plea to the Reader for ſome blows — that our controverſie was about things concerning mens eternal ſalvation, and therefore the Reader knowing that he (as all Catholicks) hold their Faith certain, he had no reaſon to expect that S. W. ſhould favour an opponent in an act of ſuch a nature, as is publickly harmfull to mens ſouls, yet the Doctor takes no notice of this his Plea] But I anſwer 1. That I did take notice of it, and aſſured him that I took it for a plain begging the queſtion, to ſuppoſe that guilt which he was to prove, to aſſume ſo early, what he muſt, but hath not yet ſo much as attempted to demonſtrate. 2. That if I had not taken notice of it, I had not in the leaſt offended, as long as I had proved that Contumelies in a Controvertiſt were ſimply unlawfull, for then no ſuppoſed truth, or weight of the cauſe could juſtifie them. The more Chriſtian and important the cauſe were, the more it ſhould confine it ſelf to the uſe of means exactly Chriſtian; and Contumelies were not ſuch, and of theſe onely the controverſie was, though he now ſoftens the matter, and asks whether he ſhould favour an opponent in an act of ſuch a nature, and that he would have little contention with me, were the difference in things of leſs concernment than eternity. But ſure, 'twas not his favour was courted, nor his not contending, nor any thing expected of him, in return to civility, but what was ever under obligation of ſtrict Chriſtian duty to thoſe who are uncivil, and if without all temptation he will break through those rational, as well as religious ties, and pretend piety for doing so, and care of souls, and challenge me of wilfull mistakes, for not attending to his pleas, when he thus forsaketh his question, and substitutes another, which was never controverted, I foresee not, when I shall attain to any ordinary degree of his favour.

8. So when he saith, I transfer the matter from the publick injury to mens Souls, to the case of private injury and then asks, Whether if a man be certainly held to have ruin'd some souls eternally, Christ bids him let him ruine more?] He is doubly mistaken; for 1. I onely shewed from Christ's word, that even Injuries are not to be repaid with Injuries, much less Civility with Contumelies, and this must hold in the most publick Concernment, as well as in the most private, unless Contumely be proved to be in the number of those things that are allowed in God's Cause, or in the Cause of Souls, though not in Man's Cause, or the matters of his Body and Estate; which as it is most untrue, so 'tis not here pretended to be proved to have truth in it. 2. I do not endeavour to perswade him, that he that can hinder that which he deems the ruining of any Soul, shall be blameless in permitting it, or that Christ's precept, of turning the other Cheek belongs to him; but 1. That unlawfull means are not to be used for the most glorious end; and Contumely is such: And 2. That it hath no propriety to the pretended end, being but the Weapons of those that are desperately worsted, and not rationably supposable to be made use of by any other. One of their own * Sorbon Doctors, formerly mentioned, in his dispute with the Carmelites, about a supposititious Bull, gives for the seventeenth, or last reason to prove it such, the Contumelioſus ſcribendi modus, that the Advocates of the Bull used against their Adversaries, when they wanted Arguments substituting reproaches; and concluding in those words, which may be competent to conclude this matter. Quis autem nescit cordatos & eruditos viros in ea versari sententia, ut omnino putent calumnias argumentum esse desperatæ causæ, ac perditæ quam certissimum? Calumniæ siquidem arma sunt eorum qui vincuntur. The Argument appeared to him of so much force, that he makes use of it again upon a like occasion, and in the same words, de Bull. Alexand. V. *c.*12. Undecima suppositionis ratio ex contumelioso scribendi modo. And again, *de Bull. Clem.*VII. c. 3. Id est primo manifestum ex contumeliis, quæ bonarum rationum vices obeunt. His very first reason, and that sufficient to manifest the matter in hand, he takes from the Disputers Contumelies which supply the place of good reasons. And once more *de Bull. Alex.*V. c. 13. Ad convincendam fraudem accedunt probra & maledicta, quibus Cheronius & Aquinas enervia responsa, & aridas emaciataſque rationes contegunt, ac veluti ſaginant; ſperant fore, ut ſic bene curata responſionum & rationum ſuarum prima cutis tentura ſit lectorum oculos, & impeditura, ne in ipſam ſaniem earum & vitium penetrare poſſent. I leave S. W. to english it, and observe that it is not an heterodox-protestant-doctrine, this, to think that Contumely is not necessary to a Controvertist. What then shall be said of (that Shepherd) that care of Souls, which by its own ill managery tends so regularly to the betraying of them, and interpretatively joins with the deemed Wolf against the Sheep.

* D. Launoy de Bull. Sab. Johan. 22. p. 117.

9. Nec dum finitus--My weaknesses are not yet at an end; I said, that if he mark it, his Stile that was robust in the mention of perjury, is grown much fainter, when he comes to the ἀντιθέσις, pretends to no more than perverse meaning and abusive treating matters of Religion. And this is heavily charged upon me, that I make account that abusive treating matters of Religion, which is able to plunge millions of Souls into eternal damnation, is of less moment than perjury against ones temporal estate.] But I answer, that the phrase against ones temporal estate is here put in by S.W. above what my words yielded him. 'Tis evident the Comparison I observed, was betwixt Perjury on one side, and perverse meaning and abusive treating on the other side, and yet neither simply considered, but supposing the matter, viz. Matters of Religion, referred to, both in the comparison and the thing signified, to be the same. This I was to suppose in all Justice to his words, who used that mention of Perjury, as a resemblance, (and even now rebuked me, when he conceived I had not so understood it) and then could not confine it to his temporal estate, (as now to found his rebuke he hath chosen to doe) because on that he could not think my Tract of Schism had any influence, but indefinitely mentioned ruining their estate by Perjury; where I supposed there was a spiritual as well as temporal estate, and accordingly ('tis visible p. 7.) accommodated my answer, in relation whether to his earthly or heavenly possessions. Thus hard is it to forestall S.W's severities, when one while I am accused for not taking notice of his similitude, and after when I do take notice of it, and ground my answer upon it, I am then fetcht back to the letter, as if it had not been a similitude, and rebuked for my weakness in that also. But this artifice (by the interposition of [temporal] both to mine, and his own words) being now discovered, I appeal to him, whether it be not a growing fainter, when his stile, that began big, with ruining by Perjury, and, if it observed decorum, ought to be answered by somewhat as high and criminous as Perjury, and as noxious to the souls, as that which ruines the temporal estate, is to that, is yet dwindled into perverse meaning, which is not so much as perverse speaking (no man being able to affirm of anothers meaning, which is not expressed) when yet perverse speaking is not near so much as ruining by Perjury, and into abusive treating, which again supposing the matter the same (as it is manifest I supposed) is much less than perjurious ruining.

10. Having triumphed over this piece of conquered Air of his own creating, he asks very demurely if this Doctor be fit to have the charge of souls, who professes to set more by his temporal, than their eternal felicity?] And I as seriously demand, whether any the least heed be due to the observations of one, that can thus put words in his Adversaries mouth, and then accuse him for the ill consequences of them, which if he hath so little charity to hereticks, as to believe him guilty of, he will hardly have so mean an opinion of his skill, as to expect he should profess it, if he were guilty. 'Tis not long since I was rebuked for professing an earnest desire to speak the full truth of God, and then that was an indication of Pharisaical hypocrisie; and now I am brought on the Stage, without any disguise (and so my hypocrisie is dropt off) supposed to make open profession of profaneness, and no crimes fit enough for me, but those which are unreconcileable with one another, so that I shall have the honour to be a miracle of something; How much more then, will be owing to S.W. who hath the creative power to make me so?

Pag. 28.

11. The Reader will be glad of the news, that we are now coming to the last part in his charge in this matter. And what is that? That I complain he begs the question, to suppose that guilt which he was to prove, to assume so early in the Epistle to the Reader what he must (but hath not yet so much as attempted to) demonstrate. Where first he will note, that Doctor H. would have men believe that he made account that the Epistle to the Reader is to be writ by the Author before he writes the Book; next that he pretends that S. W. who was to answer his Book, ought to prove and demonstrate, i. e. oppose and object, which are saith he, two very good counterfeited and affected mistakes] And granting that they are so, my onely question is, who 'tis to whom the reward of them is due? to me, who onely supposed that an Epistle was prefixed before the Book, and would first be read, though written last, and could not desire to appear to think it written before the Book, when in my whole discourse I supposed it to be an Apology for the Errours of the Book; or to him that feigns me thus to mistake, when he could not but see I did not, and had no temptation to affix it on me, but that I said he begged the question in it, and assumed what he had not yet in that Epistle attempted to demonstrate, which whensoever 'tis done, be it before, or after the writing of the Book, is the guilt of that Elench, and must needs be so, unless being not attempted to be demonstrated in the Epistle, it were more than attempted in the Book, which I shall still avouch, and in due time make apparent, that it was not.

was

12. His other note, or branch of charge is more notable, making it an errour in me, to pretend that he who was to answer, ought to prove, &c. But I hope the Reader may be allowed to remember, what it was that I thought him bound to prove, even nothing else, but his charge of falsifying, which I deemed the lowest, which could bear any proportion with that of ruining his estate by Perjury. Of this 'tis evident I spake, when I said, I trust it shall appear, that there is not one single falsity in that whole Tract of Schism, and his supposing the contrary, was the onely petitio principii, which there I charged on him. And if now it be the privilege of an Answerer, that he may charge of falsifying, without proof of his charge, and may not have his charge denied, or the proofs of it required, (which is all that is meant by telling him, he begs the question) and this upon the prerogative of an Answerer; and because to prove or demonstrate, is to oppose and object, then I see there be other grounds to authorize Calumnies and Contumelies, beside that of the deemed certainty of his Faith, and he might but have said he was the Answerer, and superseded all this large trouble of any farther justification.

13. From these thus specified weaknesses, the Reader is advised to consider what a pitifull spectacle the Doctor would prove, if S.W. were but at leisure to pursue him.] And I believe so too, for it cannot but extort some degree of compassion, to see any man set to so sad a task, of wiping off all those phasms of guilt, which S. W's representations can fix on him. By this I suppose the Reader sees, what he is to look for, and that the watery colours which are said to be in the Rainbow, are onely in S.W's eye, and produced by it. And so we are at an end of his defence of the Blows which the Reader, he knew, would judge too rude, till he had timely met, and disabused him; with what rigorous evidences, he will now discern, better than through S.W's Optick.

14. What he adds, in conclusion of his fourth Section, concerning my opinion of the affinity betwixt the Epistle of the Catholick Gentleman, and the first part of Schism Disarm'd, I shall no farther reply to, than that I was cautious to set this down, as my opinion onely, wherein as I may be mistaken, so I may still be in the right, notwithstanding the argument drawn from the stile, which is not the same in a Letter, and in a Discourse, in haste, and on greater deliberation, when the Author desires to disguise, and when to discover himself. In either of these cases, more probable judgments are made by lesser characters, which are not so sure to be guarded by the Disguiser, as are those, which he knows are most visible. But I know such judgments to be deceivable, and the sagacity that Cæsar had in discerning any period of Cicero's, to have been far greater, and more unerring, than I ever aspire to have of S.W's lines, and that upon many reasons of difference. If I shall now upon his bare word change my mind, and persuade my self that the Author of that Epistle was one of my old acquaintance, I am sure I shall be prest with the same difficulty, not discerning it by the stile to be penn'd by any such, and having other arguments of so much more force to the contrary, that unless Mr. Cressey, which really is one of mine old acquaintance, tell me he was the Author of that Letter, or some other, whom my memory hath quite lost, remind me that he was of my old acquaintance, it will still be my wisest course to advise of it, and remember how extrinsecal to the arguments, and how impertinent it is, who is the Penner, or who the Suggester of them.

15. But ere this Section concludes, I must once more be rebuked, for stiling my Answer to Schism Disarm'd, an Appendix to the Reply to the Catholick Gentleman, and a Gleaning after the Rake, when the former consisted of 303. pages, and the latter but of 165. as if Husbandmen, saith he, used to rake armfulls, and leave Cart-loads to be gleaned.] But 1. I was not obliged to be a good Husbandman by that or any equal necessity, which is affirmed to lie on S.W. to render all that his Adversary saith, nonsensical. 2. My ill husbandry was not yet of that degree, as to qualifie it for his rebuke, who at the same time made the proportion of 165 to 303 to be parallel to the proportion of Armfulls to Cart-loads, which concludes less than two Armfulls to make a Cart-load. 3. I now see it was not really so great, nor so pleasant an errour (which p. 31. was in me accused as such) to mistake the comparison or similitude, for the thing it is brought to resemble, or else 2. that S. W. is a mortal, and subject to errour, like other men, or 3. that some kind of Creatures are refreshed with those plunges in the Water, which would drown others; for 'tis certain, had not S. W. here thus mistaken, he might well have understood, that I onely meant by the similitude of Gleaning, to express my care (in the second Answer, that to Schism Disarm'd) to gather up, and make returns, to all, were it much, or little, which I had not taken notice of in the Reply to the Catholick Gentleman. And yet 4. if he review that third Section of mine, to which he makes this Answer, he shall find that it was but the First Part of Schism Disarm'd, which I thought penn'd by the same hand that wrote that Catholick Gentleman's Letter, and consequently that my farther answer to that part, was it, which would have but the nature of an Appendage, and so it had, being evidently much shorter than the former Reply, amounting to no more than 74 pages, which notwithstanding, there remained still the two other parts, and those might be allowed to have many fresh passages, the answers to which might, with S. W's good leave, be bound up with that Appendix.

16. And yet there are two things more to be charged on me, 1. That I said he had time to have taken notice of my Reply to the Catholick Gentleman. 2. That I apprehended not all truth, because not that of his occasions.] I answer, 1. That if at the Printing of Schism Disarm'd, he had not seen, or heard of my Reply to that Letter, it must be through some circumstances, which I could not then, nor can now after his admonition apprehend. For where-ever he were, the Reply might reach him as well as the Original Tract of Schism. 2. I might also say with perfect truth, that he had time to take notice of it, it being competently certain, that the space of many months, which intervened between the one and the other is called time, and that that was afforded him, as well as any other; so that these two rebukes are of the strain of the many fore-going: Yet if in this Dispatch of his he shall be found to have made full returns to that whole Reply, the matter is not great; if he shall not, (as certainly I may have his leave to assume he hath not, having not offered any syllable to the latter half of it) then I have, under his hand here, his leave to conclude, that he deems it not likely to endamage those dear souls of his brethren; And so all may be safely believed, which he hath not attempted to refute, and that will prove a far greatest part of that Book; which is all I have need to say to these concluding charges. It is now somewhat more than time that I should set a period to this Theme and Chapter, whose length may yet usefully serve the Reader, and help him to some variety of experiments concerning S.W's manner of managing Controversies, over and above the satisfying of the main engagement, (the first perhaps that was ever solemnly written on the Subject) examining his Plea for Contumelies.

Schism

CHAP. II.

A View of S. W. his Eight first Grounds.

SECT. I.

S. W*'s diversion. His grounds generally reflected on, and therein the state of our Controversie. Demonstration promised. His pretension. Ours. The necessary* credenda, or whole Faith, stated from Athanasius, from the grand design of the Gospel, consent of all the Apostles. The Ephesine Canon, Testimony of Cyril, Gregory, the Council of Florence, Jeremias, Socolovius, the Council of Trent. The second Nicene Council, of the six foregoing. Bellarmine and the Bishop of Triers Catechism. The pretended self-evidence of S.W*'s Grounds.*

1. THE Scene is now altered, and S. W. from an Advocate of Contumely, having a while retired, comes out in a more venerable shape or dress, as an invincible Propugner of his Infallible Church, and speedy Dispatcher of Schism, and of all Protestants under that title. But before he thinks fit to enter the Lists, to set close to the one proper task, of frustrating all my attempts of Reply to his former Answers in Schism Disarm'd, he is resolved (as * elsewhere the manner is, and, it seems, it is the most usefull course in their esteem, else it would not be so constantly resorted to) to begin with a Diversion of some length, erecting a Fabrick of his own, therein to intrench and fortifie himself, but more distinctly designed to prepossess his Readers with some Grounds (summ'd up in possession, and Tradition of the present Roman Church) which when they have taken up on trust from him, and so imbibed no less than the very quintessence and Elixir of all Rushworth's Dialogues, he doubts not but they will be fit to give up their names with him, in perfect resignation to the dictates of the Apologist, and then I confess I am not likely to find any eminent favour from them.

* In the first six Chap. of Answer to the L. Falkland of Infallib. In the first encounter of the Apol. for Trad. in Schism Disarmed. Part. 2. Sect. 10, 11.

2. Should I now refuse or omit to take notice of this counter-work, he would easily be tempted to believe himself, and perhaps to persuade some others, that 'twere another invincible piece, and withall, out of this Trojan Horse once admitted, find no difficulty at every turn to draw out Instruments for his advantage both of Defence and Battery, which they that had entertained his grounds, would not know how to resist: On the other side, if I should be thus led out of the way, or but stopt, to make this halt at the entrance, and treat with him about these his grounds, it must, I see, be a business of some length (such is the ploughing up of Foundations) which yet with the Readers leave, I shall not avert or decline, hoping that the same advantages which he projected to himself from some mens embracing of his grounds, receiving his tinctures, may be really acquired to others, by discerning the faintness and fadingness of his best colours, the feebleness and unconcludency of the mediums, whereby he hath recommended them.

3. In order whereunto, if, in imitation of him, I should set out with another as large a digression, draw out also my parallel lines, and pitch my Camp over against his, and to his strong hold of Possession and Tradition (meaning by the latter, that which is retrograde, from this present Age, by way of ascent, to the foregoing, and so back to the Apostles, which for distinction sake, I shall know, by the stile of Tradition Revers'd) oppose ours of Scripture, and Tradition in the vulgar notion, progressive, and descending from the Apostles to their Successors, and from them to us; though I doubt not, the Parties thus intrenched would be so opposite, and withall so near, as to denounce Wrath, and War, articulately and audibly the one to the other, yet it will be impossible (by the nature, and the known demonstration of parallel lines) that they should ever meet, to trie out the Controversie, by entering the Lists, and combating the one with the other; I shall therefore no farther transcribe S.W's method of laying foundations, than to point out the clear and brief state of both our pretensions, which lies thus.

4. On the one side, S.W. puts in his claim, fetcht from a pretended possession, and the Tradition of the present Roman Church from Father to Son, upon which he undertakes to conclude, 1. The right of the Papacy to supreme universal Monarchy. 2. The Infallibility and Apostolicalness of every Article of the modern Roman Faith, and both these with that irrefragable evidence of conviction, that belongs to grounds: So that if in this his whole Scheme there shall appear to be any one line, which neither carries this evidence with it in its own terms, (as he most commonly pretends) nor receives it immediately from S.W's assistance, the whole Fabrick must necessarily fail, a demonstration (less than which he pretends not) being made up of nothing, that is either untrue, or onely probable, but all uniform, and like it self, evident, convincing, vincing, and demonstrative, Mr. White having with great truth assured us of probable arguments, that there is * nothing more certain than that they have no truth, i. e. no truth of an argument, no force of concluding in them; and grounds, in the vulgar notion of grounds, being equivalent with principles, of which there can be no dispute, or doubt of the truth of them. * Apol. p. 117.

3. This then being the state of S. W's pretensions on one side, his Protestant Adversary on the other side, not onely pretends, but (for his security) is by consent of parties acknowledged to have all the same grounds of assurance for all the parts, and for the intire body of his Faith (i. e. for all that he believes to be necessary to be believed for his souls health) which S.W. pretends to for his, viz. Possession and Tradition, yea and both in S. W's notion of them, 1. Present acknowledged (which is more than pretended, but not acknowledged) Possession, and 2. Tradition Oral, and that of the present Church, and of all the Churches of the Roman Communion, and that as received from our immediate ancestors, as received from theirs, and so up to the Apostles, and not onely thus much (which is all that S. W's pretensions really amount to) but much more than this.

6. First the like acknowledged (and not onely pretended, or by questionable deduction inferred) Possession through all ages of the Church: This is apparent, and cannot be denied of the Crede, and that evidently is the intire body of our Faith.

7. Secondly Tradition Oral, truely and unquestionably universal, both for time and place, of the East, as well as West, of the Greek, as well as the Latine Church, and that of all ages, including the Apostles, not any one, or more, but all the Apostles, and their immediate successors in the Churches of their plantations. That I add [all, and not onely one or more, Apostles] is in compliance with S. W's good friend Mr. White, who having defined Tradition by delivery of Christ's Doctrine, and express'd his notion of that phrase, for * that which was generally preached by the Apostles, doth after pronounce of a Tradition affirmed by St. Augustine (yea and Pope Innocentius) to be Apostolical (communicating of Infants) that it was so indeed, we, saith he, are of his mind, but with this qualification, it was a Tradition begun by some Apostles, not all, in some Countries not all, in some circumstances not all, and on this one account concludes, that as it was no superstition to use it, so it was no sacrilege to leave it off; which reasoning if it have any force in it (as with S. W. I shall presume it must) it will then conclude, first that no Tradition is sufficiently testified to be (not onely free from superstition, but withall) obligingly Apostolical, and so as it may not without sacrilege be left off, but what is testified to come from more than some, even from all the Apostles, and therefore 2. that nothing but the Crede is thus obliging, even by S. W's own rule, that of the Oral Tradition from Father to Son, as delivered generally, and not onely from one, or some, but from all the Apostles. * Apol. p. 7.

8. Thirdly, the written word of God, which Vincentius, the great acknowledged assertor of Catholick Tradition against Heresie, affirms to be the * prime, if not † onely way of propugning the Faith, as that which was by the Apostles (for the confirming at least of their faith, to whom they wrote, and for the instructing of others) delivered to the Churches, and which is by * Bellarmine himself acknowledged to be the most certain and most safe rule of believing, and by Roffensis, † (even when it was least his interest, in his dispute of Purgatory) Conclave quoddam omnium veritatum quæ Christianis scitu necessariæ sunt, a certain repository of all verities which are necessary to be known by Christians. * Duplici modo munire fidem, primò scilicet divina legis authoritate —contr. Hæres. c. 1. † Quascunque antiquiores vel Schismatum vel hæreseon profanitates nullo modo nos oportet convincere, nisi aut solâ, si opus est, Scripturarum authoritate —Ibid. c. 39. * De Verbo Dei, l. 1. c. 2. † Cons. Luther. Art. 37. de Purg.

9. Fourthly, the writings (which are somewhat more steady and * creditable, than the bare Oral Traditions) of Apostolical men, Fathers and general Councils, which not onely assure us by way of † unquestionable testification, that all these Articles of Faith, which we receive, were by Christ, and not one but all his Apostles, orally delivered; but also teach us, 1. That they were delivered as their depositum, carefully to be kept, and believed, i. e. as the Faith of the Christian Church, and foundation of special efficacy for the planting of Christian life in the world: and (not onely so, but) 2. as the whole Faith, or doctrine thus designed, intire, and wanting nothing, vera & unica Christiana fides, the true and onely Christian Faith, say the Greeks in their censure of the Germans, Ch. 2. and to which (consequently) no new Article might lawfully, or reasonably be added, Regula fidei una, sola, immobilis & irreformabilis, the one, sole, unmoveable, unreformable rule of Faith, says * Tertullian of the Crede, the repository of these; which two last particulars being the things principally considerable, on which as I expect, so I desire the Reader would lay the greatest weight, and of which when (formerly, in the † Tract of Schism) I made my profession, the Catholick Gentleman told me, that truly he knew not what a Catholick professed more, intimating his wish, that I would speak it aloud, and S.W. Schis. disarm'd, p. 233. resolved, that I was become a plain Papist, I shall therefore be as pliable as they can wish, and with some advantage repeat the grounds here, on which I have * elsewhere establish'd them, and so speak out as distinctly, and aloud, as is possible. * Ὅτα πίστιν ἀπισότερα εἶναι ὁδαλμῶν, Pallad. Laus. Hist. p. 966. B. † Literæ sunt una custodia fidelis memoriæ rerum gestarum, Liv. l. 1. * De Veland. Virg. c. 1. † Ch. 8. § 5. * Reply, p. 136.

10. First, that in St. Athanasius his judgment, those heads, (wherein we profess the Faith to be compleated) are αὐτάρκεις sufficient in themselves (without any additions) πρὸς ἀναίρεσιν πάσης ἀσεβείας καὶ σύστασιν εὐσεβείας, for the averting of all impiety (and so of all heresie, if heresie be any sort of impiety) and for the establishing of piety (that again by the force of indefinites, and by the laws of opposition, must be of all piety) in the Church.

11. And if Athanasius in this said true, or if we have a far greater testimony of it, than the affirmation of any one or more Fathers of the Church, even the one grand ruling design of the whole Gospel, the one end and aim of all divine revelations, and institutions, as of the very death of Christ, to purchase to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works, to advance our obedience to his precepts, and in order to this one end, the unerring because divinely directed judgment of the Apostles themselves, who being by Christ sent out as his great Commissioners, particularly intrusted, and instructed for this purpose, to call home sinners to repentance, and convert a world of Jewish and Heathen unbelievers to the Christian faith and obedience, did questionless know what was generally usefull or necessary to this design, and cannot be supposed to have been deficient in necessaries, and yet by joynt consent, all and every of them ‖ contented themselves with those few heads, which are summed up in their symbol; If, I say, this be thus ‖ Nobis curiositate opus non est post Christum Jesum, nec inquisitione post Evangelium. Hoc enim prius credimus, non esse quod ultra credere debemus. Tertull. præscript. adv. Hær. c. 8.

thus far unquestionable, the consequence must needs be so also, that either the Christian Doctors have now somewhat else in their design, than that one great end of their preaching proposed by Christ, the Reformation of Lives, that they have indeed (as Spectators are tempted to believe) converted their power and office, designed for ends purely divine, into an engine of state (the greatest pollution, violation and sacrilege imaginable) or else have received revelation of some new expedients toward that end, above what the Apostles thought such, in order to that same design, (the latter of which can as little be pretended, as the former will be owned by any sober man) or else it may be irrefragably concluded against them, that they ought to avoid all new definitions, and still allow the Apostles Crede to contain a compleat Catalogue of Fundamentals; all other Doctrines, how true or probable soever, being prejudged from being Articles of the Christian Faith, or tesserae of Communion; the Peace and charity and unity of all Christians, which eminently depends on this, being much more prizeable, than the uniform profession of any, or all those other doctrines, which have either none, or but an accidental, or questionable influence on good life (the one end of Christ's coming into the world) and the imposing of which unnecessarily, is experimented to be the occasion, if not the cause of the many breaches in Christendom, of the lessening of that reputation, and inward esteem which was wont to attend the institutions, and Ministers of Christ, of the same scandalous neglect of the one great necessary, and so the most direct contribution of strengths and aids to the subtilest and most vigilant and implacable enemy of our souls; for if by this, or any other arts of diversion (such certainly are passionate, and eternal disputes about things not necessary) he can either wholly wear out, or but abate the edge of our zeal to that, which is indispensably our duty, and is of such weight and fruit, and obligation to all, as to exact and deserve our utmost diligence, the united vigour of all our whole heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and then convert those weapons to the disquieting at least, if not wounding and destroying one another, which are all little enough for the guarding our selves from his enterprises, 'tis easie to divine, if we did not already daily discern, the inlarging of Satan's, and the too scandalous decay of Christ's Kingdome, (that not in word, but in power) in the hearts and lives of the far greatest number of Christians.

12. Secondly, that when this Faith ἅπαξ παραδοθεῖσα delivered once, or at once, was by the Council of Nice, and Constantinople, not inlarged in any new article, but onely somewhat explained, on occasion of heretical disturbers of this depositum; the great and general Council of * Ephesus, which came after that of Nice 106 years, solemnly decreed, and enacted, what was in it self thus highly reasonable, and what (if we may believe the †Romanists citation out of an Epistle of Liberius the Pope to St. Athanasius) the Nicene Council it self had before determin'd in the same words, though we find it not in the Acts of that Council, that it should not be lawfull for any man to produce, or write, or compose any other Faith, beside that which was defined by those Nicene Fathers, and that they that should dare to compose or offer any such to any, that would from Gentilism, Judaism, or whatsoever heresie, convert to the acknowledgment of the truth, if they were Bishops (such sure is the Pope) should be deposed, if Lay-men (such for ought I know is S. W.) anathematized.

* Can. 7. Ἕτερα πίστιν μηδενὶ ἐξεῖναι προφέρειν, ἤγουν συγγράφειν ἢ συντίθεναι παρὰ τὴν ὁρισθεῖσαν ——

† Stanisl. Socol. Ann. in Cens. Or. c. 1.

13. This is abundantly confirmed to us by Cyrill of Jerusalem * (who flourished between the sitting of the Nicene and Constantinopolitan Council, and accordingly the Crede which in the Barocian Manuscript is set down Κατηχ. Ε. concludes at εἰς τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, in the Holy Ghost, as at Nice it did) who commands his Catechumenus to receive and keep the Faith, and not onely so, but μόνην τὴν ὑπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας the Barocian Copy leaves out νυνὶ) σοι παραδιδομένην, τὴν ἐκ πάσης γραφῆς ἐχυρωμένην, that onely Faith which hath been delivered thee by the Church, that which is fenced or fortified from all the Scripture; adding that by way of provision for unlearned and sloathfull persons, that could not, or were not at leisure to reade the Scriptures, ἐν ὀλίγοις στίχοις τὸ πᾶν δόγμα τῆς πίστεως παραλαμβάνομεν, the whole Doctrine of the Faith was comprehended in a few lines, which they were therefore ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σπουδαστέον, to ingrave in their heart, their memory (so the Barocian Copy reads it intelligibly, ἐν καρδίᾳ τῇ μνήμῃ) this they were, saith he, to have for their ἐφόδιον, viaticum, all the time of their lives, καὶ ἀπὸ ταύτης μηκέτι δέξασθαι, and never to take any other beside this, no not if he himself should change his mind, and contradict what he now said, applying that of St. Paul that if an Angel from heaven shall εὐαγγελίζηται παρ' ὃ νυνὶ παρελάβετε, preach to them any Gospel beside what they have now received, let him be anathema, and again that the Articles of Faith were not composed, as it pleased men, ἀλλ' ἐκ πάσης γραφῆς τὰ κυριώτατα συνελθόντα μίαν ἀναπληροῖ τὴν τῆς πίστεως διδασκαλίαν, but the chiefest being collected out of all the Scripture compleated the Doctrine of Faith, and this Faith in few words, πᾶσαν τὴν ἐν τῇ παλαιᾷ καὶ καινῇ τὴν εὐσεβείας γνῶσιν ἐγκεκόλπισαι, involved as in its bosome all the knowledge of piety in the old and new Testament. And then requiring them to look, and hold fast the Traditions, which they then received and write them as on the † plate of their hearts, the Barocian Copy immediately adds (to assure us what Traditions these were) Πιστεύομεν εἰς ἕνα θεὸν —— We believe in one God, and so on to the end of the Nicene Crede, and this as the depositum and Tradition, which must be kept ἄσπιλον, unspotted unto the day of Jesus Christ.

* Edit. Morell. p. 115, 117.

† τὸ πλάτος.

14. To which in respect to the Romanist, I add the express ground, whereupon Pope Gregory the first, exalted the four first General Councils so high, as to * profess of them, that he received and reverenced them as the four Books of the Holy Gospel, † because, saith he, on these, as on a square stone, the structure of the Holy Faith riseth, and the rule of every life and action consists.

* Sicut sancti Evangelii quatuor libros, sic quatuor Concilia suscipere & venerari me fateor, Nicenum scilicet —— l. 1. Regest. Ep. 24. † Quia in his velut in quadrato lapide sanctæ fidei structura consurgit, & cujuslibet vitæ & actionis norma consistit. Ibid.

15. Thirdly, that when the authority of that Ephesine Canon was by the Greeks press'd to the Latines, in the Council of Florence, with this weight set on it, that * no wan will charge the Faith (there spoken of) with imperfection, unless he be mad, all the answer the Latines there give, is no more but this, that the Canon forbad not † another exposition agreeable to the truth in that Crede, confessing it did forbid διαφορὰν καὶ ἑτερότητα, a difference and contrariety, and so difference, as well as contrariety, and even for the bare explication, they esteemed not that lawfull for any to attempt, but the Fathers convened in Oecumenical Councils. And this they there cited from * Aquinas, adding their sense of his words, that they belonged to, and held of † any Crede whatsoever, which was common to the whole Church. And again, they there avouch it from the Epistle of Pope Celestine to Nestorius, that * the faith delivered by the Apostles requires neither addition nor diminution.

* ὑμεῖς ἐγκαλεῖτε ἀτελείαν πίστεως, εἰ μή τις εἶη μανησόμενος. Conc. Tom. 7. p. 642.

† ἑτέραν ἔκθεσιν συμφωνον τῇ ἀληθείᾳ ἐν τῇ πίστει, p. 644. B.

* 2ª 2æ qu. 1. art. 10.

† περὶ ἕτερος ἓν συμβόλῳ, ὅπερ ὡς κοινὸν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, p. 641. D. * ἡ πίστις ἡ παραδοθεῖσα ὑφ' ἡμῶν τῶν Ἀποστόλων ὅτε προσθήκην, ὅτε μείωσιν ἀπαιτεῖ, p. 644. D.

16. So

16. So when the Eastern Church in their Censure written to the Germans, set down the † Constantinopolitan Crede, as that treasure of the true uncorrupted Faith, sacredly sealed by the holy Ghost, that nothing should be taken from it, nothing aliene, or adulterine added to it, as that divine, most holy, perfect and universal Tessera of the Christian people diffused over all the world, the common Confession of all the Holy Fathers, the most certain boundary of the whole Christian Faith —— the * Romanist publisher, though considering the Western interest in the point of Filioque, he think himself obliged to shew that this Ephesine Canon excluded not such interpretations as that († adding that it was made by the Roman Synod assembled by Damasus at the very time of the Constantinopolitan Councils sitting, and of that Pope's confirming that Council) yet he doubts not but it hath force against all that shall * aliam fidem conscribere, write any other faith, instancing in our latter unhappy age, and not onely in some followers of the *ancient Heretick*s, but in the Lutherans and Calvinists, who, saith he, do not blush to compose another Faith: when yet he knows they teach nothing repugnant to the Nicene; which therefore infers his confession, that all additions (not onely contrarieties) to the Nicene rule of Faith, are contrary to the Ephesine Canon. Nay the Council of Trent it self hath not denyed to give us its suffrage; for † being willing so far to transcribe the ancient copies, as to begin with the Crede, they give it the title of Scutum fidei in quo possunt omnia tela nequissimi ignea extinguere; the shield of faith by which they may extinguish all the fiery darts of the most wicked one. And again, that the more sacred Councils were wont to set this up in the beginning of their Actions, Scutum contra omnes Hæreses, A shield against all Hereses, quo solo aliquando & infideles ad fidem traxerunt, Hæreticos expugnarunt, & fideles confirmarunt, by which alone heretofore as they drew the Infidels to the Faith, and confirmed the faithfull, so they overcame the Hereticks (which sure they could not, if those doctrines might pass for Heretical which were no way contrary to this Faith) and in brief, that it is fundamentum firmum ac unicum, the onely, as well as firm foundation, against which the gates of hell shall never prevail, an argument that either Heresies are no parts of the interpretation of the Gates of hell, in Christ's promise, or that there are none such, but which are contrary to the doctrine of the Crede, against which (and which onely) the promise is that they shall not prevail.

† Cens. Or. c. 1.
* Stan. Socol. ad Greg. XIII. Pontif.
† P. 17.
* P. 22.
† Sess. 3.
Ibid.
Ibid.

17. Fourthly, that in the seventh Council, the second of Nice, which hath full authority with a Romanist, speaking of the six Councils foregoing, we have these words, * They have confirmed and establisht all that from the first times have been delivered in the Catholick Church, written and unwritten, (and yet I suppose it will easily appear to any that will look, that no one of those additionals, which are taken in by the Romanist, and denied by us; was so much as named, or any way confirmed in those six Councils.) ἐκκλησίᾳ καὶ ἐγγράφως καὶ ἀγράφως ἐν τῇ αρχῇ τὸν χρόνον αὐτοῖς καὶ βεβαιώσας, καὶ ἐστήριξαν.

* Act. 6. Conc. Tom. 5. p. 732. A. Πάντα τὰ ἀδιαθέτως ἐν τῇ καθολικῇ

18. To all which may be annext the plain words of Cardinal Bellarmine's Catechism, that * in believing and professing these two mysteries (1. the Trinity and Unity. 2. the Incarnation) † we manifest our selves distinct from all the false Sects of Gentiles, Turks, Jews and Hereticks (and so from all the false Sects of Hereticks, as well as the other three) under these four names (as soon * after he declares) comprising all the enemies of the holy Church. Which renders it less necessary to have added in the last place, that the Catechism collected out of the Works of Costerus, Petrus à Soto, &c. and published by the command of the Bishop of Triers, hath these words, † There was never any Heresie which might not be condemned by the Apostles Crede. Which resolutions so expres of so considerable Romanists, would give us some ground of hopes, if we saw them not too largely and daily confuted, that we should not be Hereticks for this, which is the first, and signal part of our pretension, not admitting into our Crede any more than the Apostles, Fathers, and first Councils have taught de fide, and recommended to the Church as such; which therefore by these precedents we desire may be judged of, in the first place.

* Ample Decla. Chr. Doct. ch. 2.
† P. 12.
* P. 14.
† Neque ulla unquam extitit Hæresis, quæ non hoc Symbolo damnari potuerit. Resp. ad 2. qu.

19. Secondly then, the Protestant which thus pretends, doth also solemnly oblige himself to stand to, and acknowledge the infallible truth of all, whatsoever shall be regularly deduced, and avouched from any, or all of these grounds of necessary belief.

20. Thirdly, having gone thus far, he demandeth it, as part of Christ's depositum to him (as to all) and every Christians debt of peace and charity to every Christian, that he may not be anathematized and exterminated, adjudged to the fagot, and to hell, for his not farther believing, what is not thus avouched to him, and which consequently he hath no solid unerrable ground, on which to believe it, and for which the Romanist doth not pretend to offer him any but those, which in the very first proposal of the question he knows are not acknowledged (with what reason, he now sees) but renounced by him.

21. Fourthly, he professeth his incapacity of apprehending, how, or that he should be obliged to affirm any thing as de fide, which on either of these grounds, common to him with all Christians (Scripture and Apostolical Tradition) he can find no cause to believe.

22. And lastly, having been instructed and assured by Christ and his Apostles, that the condition of Evangelical obedience is not onely an easie yoke, but a reasonable service, and that no man shall be required to doe, what he cannot doe, or believe what he hath no sufficient motive to believe; he hopes his mistake, if there should lurk any, will be pardonable, if having repentance for all his sins known and unknown, of wilfulness and weakness, he onely refuse to profess, what he doth not believe, and cannot force, or incline his belief to the accepting of all the Roman Additionals, without some other and better grounds and motives, than that of their pretended possession, and infallibility of their Church, the former of which he believes to be a pretension without force and reality, and the latter he more disbelieves, and upon greater strength of evidence, than any of their particular doctrines, which yet he hath no least colour of motive to assent to, but what is fetch'd from those least credible (which is far from infallible) grounds.

23. This then is the sum of that which comes to be debated betwixt S. W. and me at this time, Whether it be tolerably reasonable on his part, what is by him, and whether sufficient to affix on us the guilt and condemnation of Schism, what is by us thus pretended. And herein I desire not to forestall or incline the Reader's sentence, or to lay ambush for his favour by any circuit of words, or aid of Rhetorical exaggerations, but to leave him disingaged to pass it for himself, according as the demonstrative grounds, which S. W. promises him, and which alone by consent of parties deserve to be attended to, ſhall in the iſſue appear to be ſuch, both in themſelves, and in counterpoiſe with that, which we thus barely offer to him, as the true ſtate of our pretenſion, without boaſting either of the ſeverity, or rigorouſneſs of our demonſtrations.

24. Having thus prepared the field, ſet down the terms on which this debate is to be managed betwixt us, let us ſet forth to a view of thoſe weighty grounds and deductions emergent thence, which S. W. thought fit (as he ſaith) to ſet down in moſt manifeſt and evident terms, from the bare poſition and explication of which (it ſeems they need nothing elſe; but as principles, will be granted, as ſoon as by explication they are rendred intelligible) he doubts not to gain ſo far upon the rational Reader (he then that will not thus be gained on, muſt, by his award, be content to lie down with the herd of irrationals) that he ſhall confeſs he ſees the queſtion truly ſtated (that I hope he doth, by what hath been already ſaid) and not onely ſo, but (he adds) according to plain reaſon (this the Authour of Ruſhworth's Dialogues calls the judgment of common ſenſe) reſolved] alſo: which again aſſures us of S. W's opinion, and undertaking, that his Grounds are to every the plaineſt, if rational, man, evident, as principles, in themſelves, and the undoubted parents of the deductions he hath brought from them. So * elſewhere he ſaith of Grounds, that the nature of them is to intrench near on the firſt principles, and that their terms for the moſt part are unqueſtionably true; And that you may not conclude leſs from thoſe fainter words [near, and for the moſt part] hear the layer of grounds himſelf, † Mr. White, ſpeaking of a Romaniſt, He (but with a [perhaps] which ſure was not meant to ſignifie, and ſo deſtroy the whole period) would have offered you choice either of faith or knowledge; produced in order to this as perfect demonſtrations, as Ariſtotle is adored for, and towards that, ingaged you in the moſt evident directours of humane life, and clearly evidenc'd by the principles of common ſenſe, that if you refuſe the authority of the Roman Church, you renounce all the certainties on which you build every ſerious action of your life, and in a word conſtreined you to deny or affirm ſomewhat, that your ſelf in another caſe will confeſs a mere madneſs to deny or affirm.

P. 36. * P. 96. † Daille's Arts Diſcov. p. 191.

25. This then I deſire may be taken notice of, concerning his Grounds in general, the irrefragable evidence which they undertake to bring with them: The Reader ſhall judge of their performance, by the more particular view of them.

SECT. II.

The firſt ground examined. What meant by the Pope's Authority. What acknowledgment it had before the Extinguiſhing Act. The Judgment of the Univerſities (Patriarches and Primates all one in reſpect of power) of Eraſmus. Three arguments propoſed, to prove the non-acknowledgment. The firſt taken from the opinion of no power given by Chriſt to Peter over the reſt of the Apoſtles, by Tu es Petrus, and Paſce oves. Lyra, Durandus à Sancto Porciano, Abulenſis, Cuſanus, Victoria. Adolphus and the Biſhops of the Province of Colen. John of Antioch. Cuſanus from Auguſtine. Bellarmine's πρῶτον ψεῦδος derided at Trent, as new. The Biſhop of Granada, and of Paris. Cuſanus again. The ſecond argument from the authority of Councils above the Pope, unreconcilable with his univerſal Paſtorſhip from Chriſt. The number of great Authours for it. Of the then Church of England, of France, of Germany, Pope Martine the fifth. The Fathers of Baſil. Leo the tenth in the Lateran Council. The quarrel wide, between Jeſuites and Sorboniſts, as wide as between either of them or us. The Sorboniſts concord. Gerſon's Tract. Bellarmine's rejecting of his ſtating. Some Neutrals. Picus Mirandula. The third argument from the Supreme power of Princes, in oppoſition to the Pope. Proofs of it in England. Arguments from reaſon. The proof of his Ground reduced to Syllogiſm. The Major examined. What force in the word Reformers, to prove S. W's demonſtration. Aſſuming, no proof of acknowledgment. A Dilemna on ſuppoſition of Rome's Reforming. The Minor examined, the Greeks equal with us in denying the Supremany. Gregory the ninth of the Greek Church of the fourth Century. Henry VIII. no Reformer. The propriety of that word for Doctrine, and Manners. Enormous encroachments invite oppoſition. Leo the tenth the Schiſmatick. The ſtrange miſcarriages of S. W's firſt ground, 1. in point of truth, as to the Concluſion, 2. of demonſtrativeneſs, in both the propoſitions.

1. THe firſt then of theſe ſelf-evident Grounds is this, That the firſt pretenders to reform in the point of the Pope's authority in England, found England actually ſubject to that authority in Eccleſiaſtical matters.] And this, ſaith he, carries its evidence in its own terms, ſince they could not be truly ſaid the firſt Reformers from it, unleſs before, that authority had been there acknowledged, for the word Reformation, which they pretend, argues that tenet was held there before.

2. If the Reader ſhall here obſerve what is introduced with [ſince] and [for] the ordinary dialect of probations, he will indeed ſoon diſcern the ſelf-evidence of this ground, as far as concerns S. W's perſuaſions of it, all the ſtrength which he hath lent it, being but that which is proper to principles, the proving the queſtion by it ſelf, or a demonſtration, which is made up of thrice repeating the ſame thing in words lightly varied, uſing this his firſt ground, as Balak did Balaam, when he did not his buſineſs in one, removing him to another place of advantage, from the high places of Baal to Piſgah, and again from Piſgah to Peor, and then 'tis an ill-natured unimprovable ground, a very ἀδικωτάτη γῆ, a reprobate ſoil, in the husbandman's ſtyle, if in none of the thrice-varied appearances, it will afford or yield what he would have it, become ſelf-evident, and demonſtrative, to the bringing down curſes upon Iſrael, anathema's on the poor Proteſtant.

3. But to ſhew that this great luſtre is not in the object or medium, but onely in S. W's Optick nerve, or fancy, I ſhall briefly demand, what he means by [the Pope's, and that Authority] If onely the Primacy and dignity of the Patriarch of the Weſt, introduced by the Canons, or Cuſtomes of the Church, or any other acquired, or aſſumed precarious and mutable authority, or power in ſome Eccleſiaſtical matters, depending wholly on the conceſſions of Princes; and revocable at the pleaſure of them, or their ſucceſſours;

ceſſours, I may ſafely grant the acknowledgedneſs of that in England, at what time ſoever he ſhall date the firſt pretending to Reform in the point of the Pope's authority, that yielding no advantage to S. W's pretenſions, who (in his ſecond ground) defines this authority to be that of the head of the univerſal Church, and (in his third) derived to the Pope as ſucceſſour to St. Peter, and cenſures it in me for frivolous and impertinent to talk of the King's power to change Patriarchates, when, ſaith he, they are queſtioning an authority above Pacriarchs, and pretended to be conſtituted by Chriſt himſelf; and again, as held then of Chriſt's inſtitution.

4. If then (as muſt hence he aſſumed, and his ſecond and third inſuing grounds expreſs) he here means, 1. this ſupereminent tranſcendental, far more than Patriarchal power, as it is pretended to be conſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, and 2. the ſelf-evidence, that this was acknowledged in England, when the firſt pretenders to reform appeared, I ſhall then firſt conſider the truth of what he here concludes; [that the firſt pretenders to reform found England actually ſubject to it in Eccleſiaſtical matters] and again, [that that authority was acknowledged, that tenet held there before (that muſt be immediately before) the firſt Reformers] And 2. I ſhall examine (what he ſo confidently pretends) the ſelf-evidence of it.

5. In examining the truth of his concluſion, I may firſt take notice of his interpoſing that reſtrictive phraſe [in Eccleſiaſtical matters] not that I have any diſlike to his moderation therein, becauſe I ſuppoſe he meant by interpoſing it, to make a difference between the acknowledgment of the Pope's ſupreme power over this Nation in Eccleſiaſtical, and in temporal matters, and that he was ſo poſſeſt of the former, as he was not of the latter, which indeed very well agrees with what he adds of this power being conſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, by the line of St. Peter; for that muſt needs be confined to that ſort of power which alone was given to St. Peter by Chriſt, viz. a regiment Eccleſiaſtical.

22. This then being ſuppoſed to be the expreſs ſenſe of S. W's. firſt ground, that the Pope's ſupereminent authority or plenitude of power over all Churches, and ſo over the Chruch of England, as conferred on him by Chriſt, was here acknowledged before (and if his inference have any force, immediately before) the firſt pretenders to reform in the point of the Pope's authority, I ſuppoſe it will be brought to a ſpeedy iſſue, if we ſhall inquire, and obſerve, what was the declared opinion in this point in the years immediately preceding the rejection of the Papal power in this Nation.

6. Who it was that ſignally rejected it, is ſufficiently agreed, Henry VIII. by Act of Parliament, Anno Dom. 1536. in the 28 year of his reign, called An Act of extinguiſhing the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, and preſcribing an Oath to all Officers Eccleſiaſtical and Lay, of renouncing the ſaid Biſhop and his authority. Here then is the point of time to be faſtened, as the date of the firſt Reformers, to which S. W's firſt ground refers, and then 'twill coſt us little pains to diſcover what immediately before that, was the acknowledgment of this Kingdom.

7. Herein I refer him to one competent κριτηριον, (though formerly mention'd) the deciſion of the Univerſities and chief Monaſteries, in the XXVI year of his reign, i. e. two years before the fore-mention'd date, a Record fitted to the point in hand, and a proof that at that time it was not thus acknowledged. For when Henry VIII May 18. 1534. willing to be duly adviſed how he might fitly behave himſelf toward the Pope, applyed himſelf, after the example of his Predeceſſours, to the faithfull Council of the Engliſh Church, and diſpatch'd his Letters to the Univerſities, as to men of virtue and profound literature (and ſo likewiſe to the chief Monaſteries, and the reſt of the Clergy) requiring their opinion of a certain queſtion, in writing, under their Seal, according to the mere and ſincere truth of the ſame, and propoſing the queſtion in no higher a ſtyle than this, Whether the Biſhop of Rome have in this Kingdom any greater juriſdiction in holy Scripture conferred on him, than any other foreign Biſhop? they after mature deliberation, and conſideration of the whole matter, returned anſwer, Jun. 27. expreſly in the Negative, Romanum Epiſcopum majorem aliquam juriſdictionem non habere ſibi à Deo collatam in S. Scr. in hoc regno Angliæ, quam alium quemvis externum Epiſcopum. That the Biſhop of Rome hath not any greater juriſdiction conferred on him by God in holy Scripture, in this Kingdom of England, than any other foreign Biſhop. Theſe were the words of the Anſwer of the Univerſity of Oxford, as appears in their Regiſter.

8. If it be here ſuggeſted by any man elſe (for S. W. is not capable of receiving advantage by it) that this deciſion of the Univerſity ſet down in thoſe large terms of non majorem quam alium quemvis] was in prejudice alſo to the Patriarchal dignity, as well as to the Papal Monarchick power of Rome, the bare Patriarchal dignity being ſuperiour to that of other foreign Biſhops, the anſwer is obvious, that the deciſion is peculiarly of majorem aliquam juriſdictionem, any greater juriſdiction, and not of ſuperiour dignity, and ſo that the Patriarch, which in reſpect of power was no more than a Primate, and had nothing of juriſdiction annext to him, farther than in relation to the διοικησις (Diœceſe in the ancient notion of it for a joynt adminiſtration of more Provinces, of which the Patriarch was Primate) but onely a priority of dignity, was not touched or violated by this deciſion.

9. To which purpoſe I refer the Reader to the Corpus Juris Canonici (formerly cited) Decret. Par. 1. diſt. 99. c. 3. Primæ ſedis Epiſcopus non appelletur Princeps ſacerdotum, vel ſummus ſacerdos. The Biſhop of the firſt See, i. e. the Patriarch, is not to be called Prince of the Prieſts, or ſupreme Prieſt, nor (as the * African Canon adds) aliquid hujuſmodi, any other thing of the ſame kind under another title. And the practice was agreeable, as hath appeared (Reply to Cath. Gentl. p. 39.) from the Milevitane Council where St. Auguſtine was preſent, Can. XXII. forbidding under pain of Excommunication any appeal from the African Councils or Primates of thoſe Provinces, to any foreign Councils or Judicatures, and this again (as there appears) conſonant to the V. Canon of Nice, and (before that) to the XXXIV. Apoſtolick, where the Primate in every Nation is to be accounted their head. But this is by the way. * Afric. Conc. Can. VI.

10. Teſtimonies of other Writers of that time we cannot fail of. Eraſmus alone will furniſh us with ſufficient, who thereby hath brought that character upon himſelf, Neminem probè Catholicum dicimus, qui Eraſmo nimium delectatur, He that is exceedingly delighted in his writings, may not be deemed a good Catholick, though he himſelf lived and dyed a member of the Romiſh Communion. How far he was from owning the Divine right of the Univerſal Paſtorſhip, appears ſufficiently by that one ingenuous confeſſion of his, of the firſt ages, Certè nomen hoc nondum illis temporibus erat auditum, quantum ex veterum omnium ſcriptis licet colligere; Tituli iſti, nempe Univerſalis Pontifex, Caput Univerſalis Eccleſiæ, Chriſti in terris Vicarius, Princeps Sacerdotum, non vulgò recipiebantur ante Bonifacium tertium: Surely that name, as far as we can collect from the writings of all the Ancients, was not heard of in those times. Those titles, Universal Bishop, Head of the Universal Church, Vicar of Christ on Earth, Prince of Priests, were not vulgarly received before Boniface the third. But instead of such particular, personal, (or such as may by S. W. be deemed partial) affirmations (which yet are competently qualified to supersede the pretended universal acknowledgment of those times, immediately foregoing the extinguishing Act) and for the farther clearing of this matter I shall assume to prove this proposition (by as undeniable evidences as a matter of this nature is well capable of) that the universal Pastorship of the Bishop of Rome, as it is explained, and interpreted by S. W. to be derived to him by St. Peter from Christ, was not held as Catholick Doctrine generally in the Christian Church of the West, more particularly in the Church of England, at the time, when Henry VIII. abrogated the authority of that Bishop in this Nation.

11. My first argument shall be drawn from the opinion, that was had of the equality of the power given to the Apostles, in Tu es Petrus, Thou art Peter, and Feed my sheep, &c. For the first (to omit the current of the ancient Fathers in this point) I shall insist rather on those that are nearer hand, such is Lyra on Mat. 16. Durand. à St. Porciano in 4. Sent. dist. 18. qu. 2. both which wrote in the fourteenth Century. Thus Abulensis in the fifteenth Century argues vehemently more than once, that none of the Apostles did understand that any supremacy was given to Peter by those words of Christ; for saith he, afterward they contended for superiority, Matt. 18. Again, the two Sons of Zebedee have their desire of Preference promoted by their Mother, Matt. 20. At the last Supper, the contention is up again, which of them should be the greater, Luke 22. and ista contentio fuit omnium duodecim, * saith he, that contention was of all the twelve, and † again, Quilibet Apostolorum dubitabat, quis eorum esset major, & istud dubium mansit usque ad diem mortis Christi, nam in cœna ultima Christi inceperunt inter se conquirere quis eorum major videretur, Luke 22. Et tamen non facerent publicè istam disputationem, si putarent Petrum per collatas claves eis præpositum. Ideo adhuc putabant se æquales, cum nescirent quis eorum esset major. Every of the Apostles doubted which of them should be the greater, and that doubt remained until the day of Christ's death, for in his last Supper they began to enquire among themselves which of them should seem the greater, Luke 22. and yet they would not publickly have made that dispute, if they thought Peter by the collating of the Keys preferred before them, therefore they yet thought they were equal, when they knew not which of them was greater. * Again, dicendum verisimilius quod valdè ambiebant omnes discipuli mutuum Primatum, it is to be said with more probability that all the Disciples vehemently desired Primacy one over another, which they could not doe, if Christ had declared for St. Peter. † Cusanus, his contemporary, argues thus; If Prelates derived their jurisdiction from the Pope, verum foret, Petrum aliquid singularitatis recepisse, & Papam in hoc successorem esse, It would be true that Peter had received somewhat of singularity, and that the Pope were in this his successour, but we know, saith he, quod Petrus nihil plus potestatis à Christo recepit aliis Apostolis, that Peter received no more power from Christ than the other Apostles, Nihil enim dictum est ad Petrum, quod etiam aliis dictum non sit; nonne sicut Petro dictum, Quodcunque ligaveris super terram, ita aliis, Quæcunque ligaveritis? For there was nothing said to Peter, which was not also said to the rest. As it was said to Peter, whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, so was it not said to the rest, whatsoever ye shall bind? So * Franciscus à Victoria, about the year 1500. Quilibet Apostolus habebat potestatem Ecclesiasticam in toto Orbe, & ad omnes actus ad quos Petrus habuit, Every Apostle had power Ecclesiastical in the whole world, and to all acts to which Peter had; And he proves it by this, as well as other Texts, Whatsoever ye shall loose——

* Abulens. in Matt. 18. qu. 7. † Id. in Matt. 20. qu. 83.

* Qu. 84.

† De Concordant. Cathol. l. 2. c. 13. & c. 34.

* Relect. 2 de Pot. Eccl. Concl. 2.

12. This is the common interpretation also of the Doctors of Paris. So it was of Adolphus Archbishop of Colen, and of the Bishops of his Province. * They recite the promise made to St. Peter, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdome of heaven, Matt. 16. and say, Quam promissionem non ad unum Petrum pertinere, sed in omnes Apostolos transmissam alio loco insinuat ubi dicit, Amen, dico vobis, quæcunque alligaveritis——Which promise that it belongs not to Peter onely, but was transmitted to all the Apostles, he insinuates in another place, where he saith, Verily I say to you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, Matt. 18. This Synod, and all the Decrees thereof, were ratified by Charles V. and injoyned to be observed in omnibus suis punctis, clausulis, articulis, sententiis, & verborum expressionibus, in all the points, clauses, articles, sentences, and expressions of words; And this Adolphus, saith † Surius, was so addicted to the Roman Church, that when the Pope had removed Hermannus out of that Bishoprick, he was placed in his stead.

* Bin. Concil. Anno. 1549.

† Chron. Anno. 1547.

13. For the second, Feed my sheep, (to omit again the ancients, Ambros. de Dignit. Sacerd. c. 2. August. de Agone Christiano, c. 30. Theophyl. in Johan. c. 21.) it appears by the Opusculum of John Patriarch of Antioch, publickly pronounced in the Covent of the Fryers Minors, to be subscribed by as many as were willing. In his answer to the several arguments for the superiority of the Pope above General Councils (taken from some ancients) he saith, * They are founded on the words spoken to Peter by Christ, which being understood aright, according to what was above-said, are not a foundation for the Pope's having any presidency above the body of the universal Church; neither, saith he, do those words, [Feed my sheep,] withstand; which if they be understood de pascuo spirituali, of spiritual feeding, that, saith he, is comprehended under the power of binding and loosing, quæ data est Ecclesiæ principaliter, which was given principally to the Church. And † Cardinal Cusanus, who lived at the same time makes them words of Precept, not of institution of authority, and equally spoken to all the Apostles, Et si Petro dictum est, Pasce oves, tamen manifestum est, quod illa pascentia est verbo & exemplo, though it were said to Peter, Feed my sheep, yet it is manifest, that that Feeding is by word and example. And so, saith he, according to St. Augustine in his gloss upon that word, omnibus idem est præceptum, ibi euntes——the same is commanded all in that place, Go into all the world, and preach——in the last of Matthew and Mark. Nihil reperitur Petro aliud dictum, quod potestatem impertit aliquam; ideo rectè dicimus, omnes Apostolos in potestate cum Petro æquales, There is not found any thing else said to Peter, which imparts any power; therefore we truly say, that all the Apostles were equal in power with Peter. Nay Bellarmine himself did * sometimes understand the words of Christ, Feed my sheep, confirm thy brethren, whatsoever thou shalt bind] to be said to all Pastors. And to this day the † greatest Advocates for the Papacy, say that no more was given in Feed my sheep, than was promised in, I will give thee the Keys, so that all those that said that the words Matt. 16. belong to all the Apostles equally, must be interpreted (on this account) to apply [Feed my sheep] to them likewise.

* Concil. Basil. Append. Fundantur super verbis dictis Petro à Christo, quæ sanè intellecta juxta jam dicta supra, non fundant Papam Præsidentiam habere supra corpus universalis Ecclesiæ; nec obstant illa verba Pasce oves meas,——

† De Concord. Cathol. l. 1. c. 23.

* De Rom. Pontif. l. 2. c. 12. Edit. Ingolstad. 1586.

† Baron. Ann. 34. n. 201. Rhemists Annot. in Matt. 16. 19. See also the Dispatcher, Par. 3. Sect. 2.

14. One

14. One thing onely more I shall offer on this head. Bellarmine is under some considerable difficulty in supporting his Hypothesis in this matter; for in * one place he saith, Summa potestas Ecclesiastica non solum data est Petro, sed etiam aliis Apostolis, the Supreme Ecclesiastick power was not onely given to Peter, but also to the other Apostles; and † again, Omnes fuerunt capita, & Pastores Universa Ecclesia, They were all heads, and Pastors of the Universal Church; and * again, Omnibus fuit collata summa potestas, the supreme power was conferred on all. But in each place he brings in an adversative, which if it be observed, contradicts rather than excepts, † Sed ita tamen ut Petrus esset caput eorum, & ab illo penderetur, quadam subjectione ad Petrum, but yet so as Peter should be the head of them, and that they should depend on him, with a kind of subjection to Peter. Where if any shall say, that the supreme power and headship given to all, and yet Peter's being the head of all, and their depending on, and some kind of subjection to Peter, is a kind of contradictious subjected Supremacy, inferior headship, and unequal equality, I must not wrong the Cardinal so much as to conceal his σφοδρὸν φάρμακον, his way of answering and reconciling this difficulty (and that indeed is the onely thing I designed for the Readers observation at this time) the way of escape is, Sed Petro ut ordinario Pastori cui perpetuò succederetur, aliis verò tanquam Delegatis quibus non succederetur, This was given to Peter as to an ordinary Pastor, who should be perpetually succeeded to, but to others as to Delegates to whom none should succeed.

* De Rom. Pont. l. 1. c. 9.
† Ibid. c. 11.
* c. 12.
† Ib. c. 11.
* c. 12.

15. Here I shall not be so impertinent as to confront to him the suffrages of ancient Fathers, which, in perfect opposition, affirm the Bishops in the Churches, to be the Successors of these Delegates, the other Apostles, which, he saith, were to have no successors; My present business leads me another way, to advertise the Reader, that Bellarmine was not the author of this artifice, Cajetane and Victoria had made use of this exquisite remedy before, and being derived from them, it had the honour to come into the Council of Trent; Onely the unluckiness of it was, that the Bishop of Granada in that Council, made bold to deride them that said the supreme power was personal in the Apostles, and descended not to their successors, and then demands confidently, * Quo fundamento, qua authoritate, qua ratione in assertionem adeo audacem prorupissent, On what ground, what authority, what reason, they had broken out into an assertion so audacious, and says it was invented but fifty years before, (I desire S. W. will observe that.)

* Hist. Concil. Trid. 13. Oct. 1562.

16. And this was not onely the opinion of that Bishop, but soon after the † Bishop of Paris doth there expresly affirm, that Cajetane fifty years before did first devise it, to obtain a Cardinal's Hat, that it was unknown to former ages, and at the first broaching ignominiously censured by the Divines of Sorbon. Yet farther, the Bishop of Granada refuted it from Scripture appositely, Christ, saith he, promised to all the Apostles, that he would be with them to the end of the world, which could not be understood of their own persons, but must be of their succession, and so it had been understood by all the Fathers and Schoolmen. The same * Cusanus concludes from the words of St. Augustine ad Esitium de die Novissimo. The words, saith he, which Christ spake to the Apostles, must be understood of their successors, as that speech, Ye shall be hated by all, and ye shall be for witnesses to me, and behold I am with you always to the end of the world, which who understands not that he promised to the Universal Church, which should continue, some dying, and others being born, to the end of the world; as also that is said to them (which belongs not to them, and yet is so said, as if it belonged to them alone) when ye see the abomination of desolation——and when ye see these things, know—— From these words Cusanus infers this consideration, quod verba Christi ad Apostolos, trahi debent ad Ecclesiam, that the words of Christ to the Apostles, ought to be drawn to the Church, i. e. Not confined to their persons, but applyed to their Successors; And then what becomes of Bellarmine's expedient, to reconcile his contradiction, or of S. W's Oral Tradition and possession of this interpretation of Christ's words to Peter. And let this serve for the confirming my first argument.

† Ibid. paulo post.
* Concord. Cathol. l. 1. c. 11.

17. My second is, in consequence to that, drawn from the contestation about the superiority of authority and power of General Councils above Popes. For I shall suppose it undeniable, that the supreme Pastorship vested in the Pope by Christ's donation to St. Peter (as S. W. maintains it) is not reconcileable with his being inferior, or subjected to any other person or persons in the Church, nor to the whole Church it self either diffused, or collected in the Representative, any more than a Prince by God immediately set over a people (I say, as the case here lies, not by Man, but by God) shall be inferior to those, over whom he is set. And therefore * Bellarmine doth with great reason say, that to hold that a General Council is superior to the Pope, is to make the Pope as the Duke of Venice, or the General of an Army. And † Gregory de Valentiâ argues, that to give the supreme and infallible judgment to an Universal Council, is * repugnant to the Primacy of St. Peter and the Bishop of Rome, for, saith he, if Councils should judge infallibly, the Pope himself were bound to accept their decrees, or there should be two supreme powers in the Church, which is impossible.

* De Concil. l. 2. c. 14.
† Analys. Fid. l. 8. c. 7.
* Pugnat cum Primatu——

18. And yet 'tis certain that Universal Councils have exercised authority over Popes, one while deposing Popes, and disposing of their Sees, as the Council of Constance did lately three together, another while making Canons in opposition to their pretensions, witness that of Chalcedon, for the (ἴσα πρεσβεῖα) equal privileges of New to Old Rome, witness the XIII of the sixth Council in Trullo made expresly and * by name, in opposition to a Roman Canon, but in compliance with an Apostolical; And though 'tis true the Romanists, as it is their interest, † reject those Canons, yet the seventh Council, strongly propugned by the Romanist, hath no higher authority to pretend to, than that of this sixth Council, see * Act. 6. and accordingly asserts the Canons thereof, and cites the LXXXII. for their turn, which therefore founds an argument (ad hominem, at least,) from this Canon of that Council. And if some flatterers of the Popes have undertaken, and asserted their cause against Councils, yet (which is sufficient to our present argument) we know a very great number, if not much the greater, who were reputed true Catholick members even of the Roman Church, did constantly assert the power and authority of General Councils to be superior to that of the Bishop of Rome, to exercise authority over him, to give Laws to him, and to censure him.

* Ἐπειδὴ ἐν τῇ Ρωμαίων ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐν τάξει κανόνος φέρεσθαι δοκεῖ ὑγκωμιὸ ἡμεῖς τῷ ἀρχαίῳ ἐξακολουθοῦντες κανόνι τὰ Ἀποστολικῆς ἀξιοβεῖα—— † Conc. Tom. 5. p. 8. and p. 311.
* Conc. Tom. 5. p. 732. E.

19. Of this number was the Pope himself, † Adrian VI. who was Bishop of Rome but seven years before Henry VIII. was acknowledged here Supreme. Of this were * Petrus de Alliaco Cardinalis Cameracensis, Eccles.

† Quæst. de Confirm.
* Ir. de authorit.

† De Concord. Cathol. l. 2. c. ult.
* Ca. Significasti. extr. de electione.
† Ibid.
* In Matt. 18. qu. 108. & in Defensor. par. 2. c. 69.
† Tract. de Potest. Eccl.
* Relect. de Potest. Papæ & Concil. Propos. 3.

Cameracensis, † Nicol. Cusanus Cardinalis, * Panormitanus Cardinalis, † Florentinus Cardinalis, * Alphonsus Tostatus Episcopus Abulensis; And, in the same time of Henry VIII. † Joannes Major, and Jacobus Almainus. And * Franciscus a Victoria, who stood at the same time doubtfull, gives us a large and fair account of the question, that there were two opinions of it, one of Thomas Aquinas, and many of his followers, and other Doctors learned both in Theology and Canon Law, that the Pope is above the Council; the other the common opinion of the Parisians, and also of many other Doctors both in Theology and Canon Law, as Panormitane and others, that the Council is above the Pope; and his resolution is, Puto utramque esse probabilem, I think that both are probable; and if so, then sure this on the Pope's side was not by him taken to belong to him by any divine right, devolved to him by St. Peter. To the same purpose

* In C. Novit. de Judiciis Notab. 3. num. 84.

* Navarre, There is, saith he, a great dissension between the Romans and the Parisians, to whom the Ecclesiastical power was more principally conferred by Christ, whether to the whole Church, or to St. Peter; the Roman pretension was favoured by St. Thomas, and Thomas a Vio, the Parisian by Panormitan, whom, frequentiùs nostri sequuntur, our men more frequently follow, as Decius saith. This James Almain a Divine of the Sorbone, constantly defends, and answers Thomas a Vio in a full Tract, and so doth John Major, saying, that at Rome no man is permitted to maintain the Parisian Doctrine, and at Paris none suffered to assert the contrary. To this number must belong Sir Thomas More, whom the Romanist and particularly † S. W. hath most confidence in, next the Bishop of Rochester, of any man in those times. His words are expres in his * Letter to Cromwell (the Original of which is in Sir Robert Cotton's Library) that upon perusing the King's book against Luther, he dissuaded him so much to exalt the Papal authority, lest it diminished his own; and though he denyed not the Pope a Primacy, yet he could not hold it such, as that the authority derived to him thereby, was to be preferred before a General Council. (Of Bishop Fisher I have † formerly spoken as to the point of the Primacy.) And that it stood as the received opinion of the Church of England, thus appears. The superiority of the Council above the Pope, being decreed by the * Council of Constance ending Ann. 1418. Archbishop Chichley † summoned a Convocation of the Province of Canterbury to be holden Octav. Apost. Pet. & Pauli 1422. and recites, that whereas it was decreed in the holy Council of Constance, lately congregated with the holy Ghost, that another General Council should be holden in May 1423. Nos decretis —— We resolving as far as belongs to our person, to obey the decrees of that said Council, and desiring that all our Suffragans and Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Canterbury would obey them —— Then they met according to his summons, chose Procurators for the Church of England, raised a Tax for the support of their charge, and that Council met at Pavia according to the * decree of the Council of Constance. In that Council of Constance the English appeared, and as † Platina tells us, affairs were carried by the Suffrages of five Nations, Italy, France, Germany, Spain, and England, and the * Orator from the Council of Basil to the King of England, saith, that in the Council of Constance this renowned and most learned Nation was present with honour to it. And in the Council of Basil, (by the interposition especially of those two famous Lawyers, Abbas Panormitanus, and Ludovicus Romanus, Legates from Alfonsus the great, King of Arragon) the same being decreed, and often urged, as was before at Constance, and † sworn to be observed by the Legates of the Pope Eugenius, after he had three years opposed it, as to this point, the English Church received it, as it had formerly in Constance. And the particular inclination of the King of England toward the Council of Basil, appears by his * Letter sent to Pope Eugenius, telling him that he intends to conform to them as he ought, and exhorting the Pope to promote the proceedings of the Council.

† Sch. Disarm. p. 187.
* See L. Cherb. Hen. VIII. p. 394. and Sir Thom. More's works in the end.
† Answ. to Sch. Disarm. p. 218.
* Sess. 4. & 5. Concilium œcumenicum immediatè à Christo potestatem habet, eique subest Pontifex Romanus.
† Regist. Hen. Chichl.
* Concil. Const. Sess. 44.
† In vit. Johan. XXIV.
* App. Concil. Basil.

20. If we look out into France, we shall find it most vigorously † asserted in the Council of Bourges, Ann. 1438. Let the authority of the Council of Basil (say the Fathers) and the constancy of the decrees thereof be perpetual, which none, not even the Pope of Rome shall presume to take away or weaken. And the narration of the acting for the Pragmatick Sanction, by * Duarenus, saith as much. Charles VII. King of France, saith he, yielded to the Orators of the Council of Basil, that the decrees of the Council should be received and defended in his Kingdom, having first assembled at Bourges a Synod of Nobles, Prelates, and other most learned and grave men, by whose authority and counsel he was lead to receive and confirm the Decrees of that Synod, and set forth that noble Constitution, called ordinarily the Pragmatick Sanction, than which, saith he, nothing was more popular, nothing more received with the applause of all good men, being usually styled the Palladium of France.

† Concil. Bas. Sess. 16. & 17. in Append.
* Ep. Synod. Consil. Basil.
† Binii Not. in Conc. Bitur. ex Gaguino.
* De Benefic. l. 5. c. 11.

21. This Pius II. laboured hard with Lewis XI. to get repealed, Cardinal Balva acting earnestly for him, and obtaining the King's command to the Parliament of Paris. But this was strenuously resisted, and the attempt very gravely and prudently repressed by the Court, and a book by them exhibited to the King, to convince him that nothing could be more destructive to France, than that he should grant the Pope's desire in this matter, and to this he consented, though greatly devoted to reverence the Pope's authority. Afterward the Council of Tours assembled by Lewis XII. and consisting of * all the Bishops of France, and many learned men, decreed that the Pragmatick Sanction was to be † kept throughout France. And when Francis I. in his distress yielded to the abrogation of it, and ratified the Concordate in the Lateran Council, he * professeth he did it being constrained by his necessity, and so Rebuffus, one sufficiently addicted to the Roman greatness, in his interpretation of the Concordate, makes the † necessity of that King an excuse for the abrogation of the Pragmatick. Notwithstanding, this abrogation was protested against by the University of Paris, An. 1517. Mar. 27. in these words, * Leo the tenth in a certain assembly in the City of Rome congregated we know not how, but not in the Spirit of the Lord, thought fit that these so wholesom Statutes should be abrogated, and going against the Catholick Faith, and the authority of the sacred General Councils, hath condemned the sacred Council of Basil, Therefore they appeal from their Lord the Pope not well advised, and from his infringing the sacred Council of Basil, and the Pragmatick Sanction, to the next Council that shall be lawfully and freely called.

* Genebr. l. 4 Chronol. omnium Episcoporum Galliæ —— † Chronic. Massæi, An. 1510.

* Concordat. Quando ita ferebat ratio difficultasque temporis, rerumque nos circumstantium necessitas.
† Temporis difficultas aliquando permittit non concedenda. Ca. Licet de feriis. Necessitas rerum circumstantium, quæ non habet legem. l. 1. ff. de Offic. Cons.
* Orthwinus Gratius fascic. rer. expetend. Bochell. l. 8. decret. Eccl. Gall. c. 4.

22. The Germans stood after the same manner affected; whatsoever was done in the Councils of Constance and Basil, was done chiefly under the protection of the Emperor Sigismund. Afterward

† Maximilian

† Maximilian I. joyned with Lewis XII of France, to call a General Council at Pisa, for reforming the enormities of Julius II. and * Ann. 1525 Charles V. appealed from Clement VII to a General Council. † Sabellic. & Onuphr. in vit. Jul. II. * Rescript. Caroli V. ad Crimin. Clement. VII.

23. In brief, † Nauclerus shews how universal this opinion was of the authority of the Councils; the Germans, saith he, the King of France, and of England, favoured the Council of Basil with all their power, and the Council of Basil pronounces, * Nec unquam aliquis peritorum, Never any skilfull man doubted but the Pope was subject to the judgment of General Councils in matters which concern the Faith. What he saith of the periti, skilfull, hath an eminent and signal truth in the Jurisperiti, the Lawyers and Canonists. Panormitan, as was said, in his Tract de Concil. Bas. where he demonstrates that the Council's power is above the Pope's, that the Pope hath no power over a Council, but may be questioned, coerced, removed by it, so likewise Lud. Romanus, a most eminent person of his age, of whom Æneas Sylvius (that was in that Council of Basil with him, and was after Pope) † saith, Vir non Româ tantum, sed cœlo dignus, a person worthy not onely of Rome, but of Heaven, who affirms in his answers, that it is * lawfull to appeal from the Pope to the Church, † that to the Pope dismissing the Council no obligation was due, that * he might be deposed by the Council; see Card. Zabarell Cons. 150. Ancharanus Cons. 181. Felinus ad c. super literis, n. 21. de Rescript. Joh. Roias de hæret. n. 518. Fr. Marc. decis. 944. and others (noted in the margin of Archbishop Chichley's life) as long as they were permitted to deliver their minds with freedom. † Generat. 48. circa An. 1438. * In fine Sess. 45. Conclus. 5. † L. 1. de Act. Concil. Bas. * Cons. 521. † Cons. 522. * Cons. 523. P. 101.

24. Thus then stood the opinion of the Princes of Europe, which continued communion with the Bishops of Rome, concerning the subjecting them to the authority of such Councils, as then in the title and style of the Western European Churches, were reputed General, and above an hundred years before Henry VIII. in their several Dominions, by the advice, suggestions and assistance of National Synods, Peers and People, they proceeded in vigorous attempts to bring under Order and Reformation the usurpations of the Bishops of Rome, as appears by the † Schedule of enormities in the Pope and Court of Rome, &c. drawn up by Petrus de Alliaco, Bishop of Cambray and Cardinal, by the appointment of Sigismund the Emperour, in the Council of Constance, though the new Pope Martine V. delayed and evaded it. The like might be manifested in many other instances; see Theodoric à Niem in Nemore Unionis, Tract. 5. and Quintinus Heduus Repetit. lection. de Aristocr. Christ. Civitat. † Orthuin Gratius in fascic. per expetend.

25. How the dissenting parties may be reconciled, so as to be one Church and communion, is not easily set down. * Martine V. with the consent of the whole Council of Constance, by his Letters gave Order to all Bishops and Inquisitours, quod est de necessitate salutis credere Generale Concilium habere supremam authoritatem in Ecclesia, That it is of necessity to salvation to believe that a General Council hath supreme authority in the Church. The Fathers of that Council of Basil do oft repeat, that it is de necessitate salutis, of necessity to salvation, and they † call it Veritas Fidei Catholicæ, Truth of Catholick Faith, and whosoever pertinaciously opposes it, censendus est hæreticus, is to be deemed an heretick. * Leo X. with his Lateran Council first saith, that the Pope hath authority over all Councils, and afterwards adds, cum de necessitate salutis existat, seeing it is of necessity to salvation that all that believe in Christ should be subject to the Bishop of Rome. The difference indeed extremely wide, and the Fathers of the Society, and the Doctours of the Sorbon continue the contest betwixt these two Councils to this day. * Concil. Bas. Epist. Synod. † Concil. Bas. Sess. 33. * Concil. Later. Sess. 11.

26. The Jesuites earnest propugners of the superiority of the Pope, speak contemptibly of the authority of Councils without him, and give that virtue to the Pope's sole direction, that by it, every Plebeian may be rendred Infallible. But all this, both in the fountain and streams, is as earnestly oppugned by the Sorbonists, who will have a General Council superiour to the Pope; Neither hath the Jesuit reason to accuse the Church of England as Schismatical in this, any more than to accuse the Sorbonist. And on the other side, the Sorbonist hath more reason to forbear censure on the Church of England as Schismatical, than on the Jesuite; because a General Council (which is of so little weight with the Jesuite without the Pope) is acknowledged by us to be the supreme external, living determiner of Controversies, and we, together with the Council of Basil, do hold a Pope Schismatical, that pertinaciously opposeth, and divideth himself from a lawfull General Council.

27. And if after all this, the Doctours of the Sorbon will have the Pope Universal Pastour, yet is not our argument hereby weakned, as far as I now intend to press it, viz. against the universal acknowledgment of the supreme Pastourship, as from Christ to St. Peter, because neither do they so maintain his supreme Pastourship, as de fide to be jure divino, nor is their Doctrine of the superiority of Councils any way reconcileable with that stating, being utterly repugnant to the Papal Primacy, as Valentia told us.

28. The accord which the Sorbonist makes, is set down by Gerson in his Tractate called Concordia, quod plenitudo potestatis Ecclesiasticæ sit in Pontifice, & in Ecclesia, in this manner, Est ntrobique, & principaliùs in Ecclesia suo modo, The plenitude of power is on both sides, and more principally in the Church after her manner. And what is that manner? Why, saith he, Quadruplici respectu, scil. indeviabilitatis, & indefectibilitatis, extensionis, regulationis, & generalis obligationis, cui subjicitur etiam ipse Papa, tanquam Imperatrici Sponsæ Regis summi, quæ potest condere Canones, & definire etiamsi fuerit Papa præsens, In a fourfold respect, to wit, of indeviability, and indefectibility, of extension, of regulation, and of general obligation, to which even the Pope himself is subject, as to the Imperial Spouse of the supreme King, which can make Canons and define, although the Pope be present. But this, as it is perfectly contradictory to the Supremacy of the Pope, as given to St. Peter by Christ, both over all the Apostles, and over the whole flock, so * Bellarmine utterly rejecteth it, and will not allow the Church to have the Supremacy either formally, or suppletivè, or principally, but places it absolutely and immediately in the Pope, and so is every one obliged to do, that derives it from Christ's donation to St. Peter, which therefore the Sorbonist, for all his concord, and his titular acknowledgment, must still be presumed to deny, as placing the plenitude of Power principaliùs, more principally in the Church. Concord. Concl. 3. * De Concil. l. 2. c. 16.

29. But beside these eager litigants on both sides, of whom we have hitherto spoken, and therein founded our argument, there is yet a third sort, and many no doubt there were, and are of it, viz. of the judgment of Navarre and Victoria forecited, that each opinion is probable, and no faith to be grounded in either (and that is as much to my purpose, as others contesting it on the Councils side.) So we find in the the Synodical Epiſtle of the Synod of Baſil, that when the contention was ſo fierce betwixt that Council and Eugenius, ſome remained neuters, and adviſed the obſerving a neutrality of obedience. And Picus Mirandula * goes farther, liquet varias — It appears that the Doctours have delivered divers ſentences of the firmneſs of the judgment of Councils, and the Pope, nor, ſaith he, is there any thing that he knows promulgated, by virtue of which we may be bound to believe either. To conclude, the † Council of Baſil calls Eugenius Schiſmatick for not acknowledging their authority above him, and denounces the cenſures of the Church againſt all that adhere to him, as favourers of ſchiſm and hereſie. And * Leo X. doth as much againſt all the Prelates of France, that maintain the Sanction made and injoyned at Baſil.

* Theorem. 4. de Fide & Ord. Credendi.

† Seſſ. 34. & 41.

* Concil. Lateran. Seſſ. 11.

30. Thus much may ſerve for a Mixis of the conteſting of this point, before, and about Henry VIII. his times (wherein onely, and not in the reſolution of either ſide, my ſecond argument is founded.)

31. My third argument ariſeth from the acknowledged ſupremacy of Princes within their own Dominions. In this Kingdom of ours, the caſe is clear; when Henry VIII began his Reign, the Laws were fixed, and unrepealed, which aſſerted the King's ſupreme authority in cauſes and over perſons Eccleſiaſtical. The Papal uſurpations growing exorbitant in the Reigns of King John and Henry III. produced a law for reſtraint thereof, in the XXV. year of Edward I. which was ratified in his XXXV. year. The incroachments of Rome continuing, the law was ſtrengthned in the XXV. of Edward III. and again in the XXVII. and again in the XXXVIII. and the XII of Richard II. and afterwards more † expreſly in the XVI of his Reign, where complaining of proceſſes and cenſures upon Biſhops of England made by the Pope, becauſe the Biſhops made executions of the King's commandments in his Courts, &c. they expreſs the miſchiefs hereupon growing, the open diſinheriſon of the Crown, the deſtruction of the King, his Law and his Realm, that theſe things are againſt the Crown and Regality — And the Commons aſſert, that the Crown of England hath been ſo free at all times, that it hath been in ſubjection to no Realm, but immediately ſubject to God, and to none other — And as they oblige themſelves to aſſiſt the King and his Crown in the caſes aforeſaid, to live and to dye, ſo every of the Lords Temporal anſwered by himſelf, that the caſes aforeſaid are clearly in derogation of the King's Crown, as was well known, and had been long time known, and that they will ſtand with the Crown — And the Biſhops and Prelates did every one ſeverally (after Proteſtation that it was not their mind to deny, or affirm, that the Biſhop of Rome may not excommunicate Biſhops, nor that he may make tranſlation of Prelates, after the law of the Church) ſay, that if any Cenſures made againſt any for the execution of the commandments of the King's Courts — that is againſt the King's Crown, they will and ought to ſtand with the King in thoſe caſes, and in all other touching his Crown, as bound by their Leigeance. The Biſhop of Rome, 'tis true, did much contend againſt theſe Statutes, * Gregorie XI. wrote earneſtly to Edward III. and ſaid, To make ſuch a law, as that of the Proviſoes, was nothing elſe but to divide Chriſt's Church, to deſtroy Chriſtian Religion (the Schiſm and noxious effects which S. W. is now preſſing on us, in the behalf of his ſucceſſours) but the King reſcinded them not. And though Martine V. wrote more ſharply to Henry VI. yet the King kept up the force and execution of the laws, † Humfrey Duke of Gloceſter, Protectour and Uncle to the King, burnt the letters; and when that Pope made Archbiſhop Chichley Legate, * he proteſted it was not his intention to exerciſe, without the King's permiſſion, the Legatine power, which he had received, nor to derogate from the rights, manners, laws, priviledges, liberties and cuſtomes of the King and Kingdom, in any thing, but to conſerve, defend and ſtrengthen them. The inſtances are continued by † Sir Edward Coke through ſucceeding times. And in the VII. of Henry VIII. it was reſolved by all the * Judges, that Canons Eccleſiaſtical may be allowed, or refuſed, by the conſent or rejection of the King and his people. And in fine, the abſolute Supremacy of the King was in the Articles againſt Cardinal Wolſey, aſſerted by all the Lords of the Council, * Sir Thomas More Lord Chancellour firſt ſubſcribing, and this in expreſs oppoſition to the † Pope's Holineſs, and as uſed and injoyed without interruption for the ſpace of above two hundred years by the Kings of theſe Realms.

* Walſingham Hiſt. An. 1374.

† An. 1. Hen. 7. fol. 10.

* Antiq. Brit. p. 284.

† Cawdry's Caſe.

* Ibid. fol. 326.

* Lord Cherbury Hen VIII. p. 266, 274.

† Ibid. p. 266.

32. And it is yet farther obſervable, that although attempts and incroachments were oft made by the Popes againſt theſe Laws, yet it was the reſolution of our Laws, that no right could thereby accrew to them, and that no preſcription of time can be a bar to the Supreme Power, but that for the publick good it may revoke any Conceſſions, Permiſſions, or Privileges; Thus 'twas declared in * Parliament in Edward III. his reign, when reciting the Statute of Edward I. they ſay, The Statute holdeth alway his force, and that the King is bound by his Oath to cauſe the ſame to be kept as the Law of his Realm.

* Ch. 25.

33. And as thus it was in the Laws and practice of this Kingdom (which is ſufficient to have been confronted to S. W.'s contrary ſuggeſtion) ſo it will be found in the more Univerſal Reaſon of all Nations. For if Supremacy be examined according to the inſeparable properties of it, the pretenſion or acknowledgment of it, will appear incompetible to the Biſhop of Rome in this or other Prince's Dominions, by the Rules and practice of the Chriſtian Church; For,

34. Firſt, the Supreme Power gives force and power to all Laws, made in Convocations; and without aſſent thereof, though all in the Convention beſides concur, yet it hath not the virtue of a Law. † Johan. de Turrecremata diſtinguiſheth betwixt honorary Preſidency (ſuch as would be allowed the Biſhop of Rome) and authoritative; It is, ſaith he, the part of authoritative Preſidency, jus habere non modo dirigendi, ſed regendi — to have right not onely of directing, but ruling their actions, and of pronouncing ſentence of affairs, out of his own judgment, though it be not approved by the greater part of the Council, yea though it be approved by none.

† De. Eccl. l. 3. c. 28.

35. That this hath not been thought to belong to the Biſhop of Rome, the fourth and fifth General Councils are inſtances: The fourth, that of Chalcedon, ordered Eccleſiaſtical Government without, and againſt the conſent of Pope Leo and his Legates; And the fifth, at * Conſtantinople, decreed a matter of Faith contradictory to the determination of Vigilius in his Apoſtolical conſtitution, ſubſcribed by himſelf and ſixteen other Biſhops adhering to him; whereas a true Supreme power can not onely invalidate a Law made by an Aſſembly, but alſo by a ſole edict make a Law, unleſs it pleaſeth to limit it ſelf by taking in an admixtion of Aſſiſtants in Council (which the Romaniſt acknowledgeth not of his Pope) But neither then can it (salvo contenemento) so debar it self, that it should be overruled by plurality of voices, and thereby forced to consent to the major part. 'Tis the Civilians doctrine of Summum Imperium, that it is of that nature, † ut parte amissâ, substantiam suam amittat, that by losing a part, it loseth its substance or essence. † Grotii Apolog. c. 2.

* Baron. An. 553. n. 209.

not

36. Secondly, Though Supreme authority may limit it self in some particulars, yet can it not be restrained, and limitted by subjects; And yet 'tis evident, the Bishops of Rome have been limited both by Councils and Princes; which assure us, those are not his proper subjects.

37. Thirdly, Supreme authority is the fountain of all Jurisdiction, which must consequently be derived thence by emanation. Yet it is evident, the Power of Ecclesiasticks is not thus derived from the Pope. * The Power of Excommunication is the onely coercive Ecclesiastical power, that is by divine Right; and this is not derived from the Bishop of Rome, but was conferred on all the Apostles together, Joh. XX. 23. and belongs to all Prelates as their successours; and accordingly it is a received opinion among the Romanists, that Bishops have the power of binding and loosing Jure divino; † Alphonsus à Castro saith, that the opposite opinion is contrary to all the Doctours: * Gabriel Vasquez concurs with him; And this power, saith Alphonsus, given the Bishop by virtue of his consecration, is not onely of Order, but Jurisdiction also; and it is no less than Schismatical, not to acknowledge the power residing in every Bishop. The Nicene † Canon being therein grounded, τὸς ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἀποβληθέντας, ὑφ' ἑτέρων μὴ προσίεσθαι, that those that are cast out by any, are not to be admitted by others. To which * Synesius's suffrage is express, that if any neglects his authority ὡς μικρόπολιν, as the Bishop of a small City, and receives into communion Andronicus and the other, as if there were no necessity to obey a mean poor Cities Bishop, ἴσω ὄχους, Let that man know he causes a Schism in the Church, which Christ would have to be one; And this unity proceeds from co-ordination in this power of excommunicating; whereupon St. Cyprian oft speaks of Episcopatus unus, the same office in so many several Bishops. In the exercise of this power there is indeed subordination according to Canons or Custome, but, as Suarez saith, the censure of Excommunication, i. e. the actual exercise of that power, in any infliction of penalty, is not jure divino, but humano, being ordered or temper'd according to the prudence of the Church, and so that makes no difference.

* Gerson de Origine Juris. † De Justa Hær. pun. c. 24. * L. 2. Disp. 152. c. 3. † Can. V. * Epist. 58. Tom. V. dis. 2. Sect. 1.

38. And so likewise the regulating or legislative power Ecclesiastical, in making Canons or Decrees, is co-ordinate also, all Bishops having their votes in it. Accordingly the Bishops of Rome and their Legates, were wont to sign Decrees as well as other Bishops, whereas in every polity, as the same * Suarez affirms, the legislative power is constantly Supreme, † it extends to Universality of Subjects, to Universality of Actions, and in all these must have an immutability, quia nec augeri, nec minui potest, because it is capable neither of augmentation nor diminution.

* De leg. l. 4. c. 4. † Ib. n. 17.

39. Thus much I hope at this time (he shall have much more * anon) will satisfie S. W. of the truth of his first ground, or if not him, yet his less interested Reader, which hath not so unreconcileable a quarrel to written Testimonies, thou h these have not wanted the suffrage of Reason also, which is one sort of unwritten, for the evidencing matters of fact of elder ti es.

* Answ. to the IV. Ground.

40. Secondly then, for the pretended self-evidence of his ground, wherein doth that consist? why, saith he, it carries it in its own terms; what are its own terms, which are thus illustrious? The first pretenders to reform found England actually subject———But this is onely his affirmation, by others denied, and no shew of self-evidence in it. Yes, in that they pretended to reform, They could not be said to reform in this point of the Pope's authority, if they had not found England actually subject to it; This he insists on over and over again, They could not be truly called the first Reformers from it, unless before, that authority had been there acknowledged; and again, for the very word Reformation, which they pretend, argues that tenet was held before.]

41. But to this I answer, 1. That it is very strange a writer of Controversies, as S. W. desires to be esteemed, as also a great pretender to demonstration, and immediate connexion of terms, and a profest enemy to wordish testimonies, even of Scripture it self, because they are subject to so many sorts of mis-understandings, should yet lay the foundation of all his impregnable fabrick, the whole weight of his first pretended demonstration, on the most uncertain unconsiderable use of the word Reformers, [they could not, saith he, be truly said the first Reformers, unless——] and [for the word Reformation, which they pretend, argues——] When 1. it appears not, that they were at all called Reformers, and then what is become of his foundation? 2. In case they were called Reformers, it might be by others a nick-name imposed, and not by themselves; Or, 3. if by themselves, it might be assumed hypocritically, when they establisht and setled by a law, what before was more modestly and sparingly practised, (Such Reformations we have heard of from Trent, and from other coasts) or else, 4. they might be casually adopted to that title, when they neither looked for it, nor did any thing to deserve it. If any of these be affirmed by his adversary, or if not, because it is possible some one of these might be the truth, what then is become of his demonstration? And truly if S. W. be as he intimates, a disciple of that great Master, of whom he saith [It is worthy of him to write grounds] and consider that now they are some previous grounds, which he is proposing, he will have reason to think with others, that it must reflect on some body beyond himself, that his first ground should so very ill deserve that title, being but a Topical argument at most, drawn from a title or appellation, which seldom agrees to them on whom 'tis bestowed, and certainly doth not signifie by nature, or by any such necessity from whence any can pretend to conclude demonstratively.

P. 27.

42. Secondly, If we should pass over this, and acknowledge his demonstration valid, as far as it pretends, yet 'twill be far from inferring what it ought to infer, the acknowledgedness of the Papal power, in the modern notion of it, (for the Universal Pastourship and Vicarship of Christ, by him constituted in St. Peter) for they might reform from many other things in the point of the Pope's authority without reforming from that.

43. But I shall not need to exact thus much from it, above what in terminis it proposeth to perform: It is indeed far from doing what it pretends to doe, far from demonstrating any the barest, meagerest conclusion: It will be visible; if taking it in the looser terms, wherein he hath (as to his own interests) most advantageously chosen to set it, we shall reduce it to Syllogistical form, thus,

They that uſe, or pretend to the word Reformation, in point of the Pope's authority, acknowledge that tenet was held before in England, or that England was actually ſubject to it.

But they that diſclaimed the Pope's Supreme authority in England, called themſelves Reformers, or pretended to the word Reformation, Ergo.

44. In which proceſs, as it pretends to be demonſtrative, if upon due examination, either of the propoſitions ſhall be found to fail of ſelf-evidence, 'tis certain his whole fabrick is demoliſhed. But if beyond expectation both ſhould prove to do ſo, S. W. muſt even go for a Saint or Preacher in his own dialect, i. e. for a moſt ſad unfortunate demonſtrator, let the iſſue teſtifie of the juſtice of this intimation.

45. And at firſt view 'tis diſcernible, that there is no evidence in, or neceſſary connexion between the terms of the major propoſition, i. e. between pretending Reformation in that point] and acknowledging that tenet was held before in England] or even that England was then acknowledged to be actually ſubject to the Pope's authority. 'Tis on both ſides granted, that the Pope aſſumed, or claimed this authority at that time, and I need not deny but ſome of the people, nay Prelates of England, once acknowledged and willingly ſubmitted to this claim, and in reſpect to one, or at leaſt to both of theſe, the uſe of the word Reformation in that point might be very proper, without Englands being found actually ſubject to it, which is far diſtant from either of theſe, yet is the one thing which the words of this ground exact.

46. In the former reſpect, the Pope's aſſuming] that I hope doth not infer that the Nation acknowledged his claim; The man that ſtood upon the Strand, firſt phanſied, and then aſſumed that all the Ships in the Haven, and then in the Ocean, were his, but ſure this had no ſuch influence on the minds of the true owners, Pilots and Mariners, as irreſiſtibly to work, or infallibly conclude in all them an acknowledgment of his claim; Nor was it needfull they ſhould ſet out any ſolemn manifeſts to vindicate their title againſt this Hypocondriack, their taking no notice of his dreams, was a ſufficient refutation of them, whilſt they went no farther than his own phancy. But ſhould the ſame man in one of his Paroxyſmes, in the full tide of high phancy, have attempted to board one of the Ships, not as a Paſſenger, nor yet as a Conquerer, but as one that had the Original and unqueſtioned right of dominion over it, the true owners denying him admiſſion, or (in caſe of entrance undiſcerned) the telling him his miſtake, that he was gone aſtray into another man's quarters, and ſhewing him the way home again, had been a very fair and charitative attempt of reforming and rectifying him, no man elſe in this caſe needing any reformation.

47. But when to this we add, that ſome of the good people of England were ſeduced, and abuſed by this his claim, and withdrew part of their obedience from their lawfull ſuperiours, to ſubject it to him, though this cannot be termed the ſubjection or acknowledgment of England, (for ſome are as diſtant from all, as a particular from an univerſal) yet here is a proper place for Reformation, to diſabuſe the ſeduced, and reduce them to the conſcientious diſcharge of their unqueſtionable duty; as when Jehoſophat, at a time when Judah was far from any univerſal defection, (Aſa his immediate predeceſſour having * entred them into a Covenant under pain of death to ſeek the Lord God of their Fathers) is yet reported to have † gone through the people from Beerſheba to Mount Ephraim, to bring them back to the Lord God of their Fathers.

* 2 Chron. XV. 12, 13.
† Ch. XIX. 4.

48. In this point 'tis of no force for S. W. to deſcend to the examination and balancing of the number of the ſeduced, what proportion it bare to the reſt which were not ſeduced, 1. Becauſe what is thus to be examined, is not evident before, and perhaps will be as little clear after examination; and 2. it can be no ingredient in the ſelf-evidence of this his firſt ground, which from the bare pretending to reform, concludes that England was acknowledged ſubject, and not from the number of thoſe that yielded this ſubjection; and 3. 'tis not the great number of particular men, that makes a nation, but either the whole collective body, or their legal Repreſentatives, or the Kingdom ſpeaking by its known eſtabliſh'd Laws. And I need not now inquire into each or any of theſe, whether they acknowledged what S. W. would have them, becauſe 1. if it were not notorious that they did not, yet ſure it is not evident that they did, (the leaſt that will ſerve S. W.'s turn) or if it were, yet ſtill it could not be inferred from the uſe of the word Reformation, and that is prejudice enough to the ſelf-evidence of his major propoſition, which is all we have now under conſideration. So that unleſs S. W. will acknowledge his arguing guilty of that ſtrange amphibology, that by [held in England] he meant either held onely at Rome, or onely by ſome particular perſons in England, and then from thence aſſume to infer the poſſeſſion, viz. that England was actually ſubject to it, as afterwards from the bare poſſeſſion he infers a right (three rare ſteps of ſevere diſcourſe) he muſt acknowledge the feebleneſs of the connexion betwixt the terms of his major propoſition, and that certainly is ſufficient to ſuperſede his concluſion, and prejudge the ſelf-evidence of his ground.

49. Before I leave this, I ſhall ask S. W.'s opinion of one queſtion, What if the Pope ſhould attempt to reform, retrench the abuſes of the Court or See of Rome, whether in Doctrine or Government, would that infer the Church of Rome to have been formerly ſubject to that from which the change ſhould be made? If it would, then either it was in errour before, or muſt become erroneous by the change, and ſo neither way be infallible. There is but one thing poſſible for him to anſwer upon his principles, viz. that it is an impoſſible ſuppoſition. And if without conſidering whether the Reformation be to the better or to the worſe, it be reſolved impoſſible for the Pope to doe it, then 'tis not the promiſe of Chriſt to his Vicar, by which he is become infallible, but the ſyllogiſm of S. W. not the privilege of the Paraclete (to which Tertullian imputed it, * quod diſciplina dirigitur, quod intellectus reformatur, ſuppoſing, that the Apoſtles Creed remaining firm, cætera admittunt novitatem correctionis, other things are capable of Reformation) but the inmoſt nature of the thing, an impoſſibility of its being otherwiſe, whereby the certainty becomes as irrefragable, that the Church of Rome cannot amend, as that it cannot fall, nay, the former the greater certainty, being a part of S. W.'s ſelf-evident ground, whereas St. Paul ſuppoſes it poſſible that the whole Church of the Gentiles may be cut off, which is ſomewhat more than the Church of Rome onely; and Mr. White being preſs'd with the poſſibility of the latter, thinks fit to wave that queſtion, Apol. p. 114. contenting himſelf to have told my L. of F. that their Writers intend to prove her indefectibility, which differs much from having rigorously demonstrated it. Mean while, as that Miracle of wit had never a word to say to another parallel part of that Lord's question concerning the possibility of Schism among the Churches now adhering to Rome, but pass'd it over insensibly, so I will not importune S. W. in that matter, but content my self with having said thus much on the first part of his demonstration.

* De Veland. Virgin. c. 1.

their

50. But what if the Minor prove as little self-evident, and so as feeble a supporter, as the Major hath shewed it self to be? What stability then shall be hoped for to the Conclusion? The Minor was this, They that disclaimed the Pope's supreme authority in England, called themselves Reformers.] But where is the ἐνάργεια or self-evidence of this? Is this a principle, or a fact so notorious, as to be assented to, as soon as proposed? Certainly it hath no universal truth in it (and that is necessary to render it an ingredient in demonstration) for the Greek Church, which deny the Pope's universal Pastorship, pretend not to have wrought any Reformation in this point, but to follow all their Ancestours in it, and then by this argument we are no more Schismaticks, than they.

51. I speak not now of the Greek Church of the last three hundred years, who I know are by the Pontificians concluded under the same guilt with us, but of the fourth age of the Christian Church, when the Grecians were most flourishing in piety and learning. For Gregory IX. sticks not to charge those Churches even in that age, with schism, because they acknowledged not the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome. * It is in an Epistle of his to Germanus Archbishop of Constantinople, where he compares those Churches with the Schismatical and Rebellious ten Tribes of Israel, that divided themselves from the house of David, Præsumpta divisio Tribuum patenter signat Schisma Græcorum, & multitudo abominationum Samariæ, diversas hæreses multitudinis à veneratione veri Templi, Romanæ scilicet Ecclesiæ, & reverentiâ separatæ. The division of the Tribes openly signifies the schism of the Greeks, and the multitude of the abominations of Samaria, the divers heresies of the multitude, which is severed from the veneration and reverence of the true Temple, the Church of Rome. Adding, to make the parallel complete, that whereas Chrysostome, and Nazianzene, and Cyril, and Basil the Great, were eminent in the assembly of the Revolters, this was the same height of the heavenly counsel, by which he would have Elias, and Elizæus, and the sons of the Prophets, to live among the Idolaters. This was the liberal concession of a Pope, † that Pope, who by the help of Raimundus his penitentiary compiled the Decretal Epistles. But this by the way.

* Mat. Paris, Ann. 1237.

† Platina in vit. Greg. IX.

52. But neither hath his Minor any more particular limited truth, in relation to this our Nation. King Henry VIII. and the Houses of Parliament disclaimed the Pope's supreme authority in England, and are the first that S. W. can probably accuse for doing so; but where did these style themselves Reformers? was Stephen Gardiner, in delivering and publishing his Latine Oration De vera Obedientia, and Dr. Bonner that prefixt the Preface to it, fit to be styled Reformers by themselves or others? Or they that put men afterwards to death upon the score of the Six Articles, did they call themselves Reformers, or would a Protestant of this age style them so, for burning those then, which believed, as he doth now? When Cardinal Poole had written his Book De unione Ecclesiastica, inveighing against the King's supremacy, and soon after advised the King to redintegrate himself with the Pope, and accept the Council then offered, he used this as an argument to inforce his advice, that * thereby he might have the honour of being the cause of a Reformation of the Church in doctrine and manners. That title then of Reformation in those days, had no propriety to the point of denying the Pope's supremacy, nor was that express'd in other dialect, than of declaring the supremacy to be invested in the King—(which sure in no-wise concluded, that it had not been so invested) yielding him the title of Supremum caput Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, which Bishop Fisher subscribing with this temperament, [quantum per Christi legem licet] was not sure beholding to that, for his rescue from the title of Reformer. The clear truth is, the word Reformation began with respect to doctrine and manners (as Cardinal Poole used it) and was frequently in the mouth of all Christian Princes, and Prelates too, in this notion, who desired and press'd long for a General Council, peculiarly to this end of reforming and rectifying what was amiss in either of those respects, and no farther concerned the point of the Pope's supremacy, than as that was conceived to be either unjustly assumed by him, or Tyrannically exercised.

* L. Cherbury, Hist. Hen. VIII. p. 350.

53. The truth is, Leo the tenth, with his Laterane Council, made at that time an exorbitant incroachment upon the authorities both of Councils and Princes, † expressly defining the Papal supremacy, solum Romanum Pontificem authoritatem super omnia Concilia habere, That the Pope alone had authority over all Councils, and that it was de necessitate salutis, of necessity to salvation, that all believers should be subject to the Pope, and reprobated the Council of Basil as a Conventicle. And as when injuries grow to the highest pitch, they then invite a strenuous opposition (thus as was said, the unreasonable oppression of Innocentius the third, and Innocentius the fourth, and some other Popes, that pursued the Dictates of Gregory the seventh, caused Edward the first, Edward the third, and Richard the second to awaken and maintain their and their peoples rights, and in like manner the Schisms of Rome and Avinion, that pester'd the Church for fifty years, caused the Christian Princes and Churches to vindicate and execute their authority in the Council of Constance upon the Pope's) so 'tis not strange, if so enormous an attempt of Leo the tenth, met with a semblable opposition from a Prince of a known courage. Herein I shall appeal to S. W's acknowledged Master, Thomas de Albiis, if that Pope were not the Schismatick, when he wrote and defined against the sacred authority of Councils, and whether all they are not so too, who pursue the same attempt?

† Conc. Later. Sess. 2.

54. And then (to return to the point in hand) a complete Reformation being long desired both in capite & membris, in the head and the members, the design of Reforming in this point of the Supremacy had respect to the former of these, and was to be acted by the Pope on himself, or by the Council on the Pope, or by Sovereign Princes with the advice of their Clergy in their several Dominions, and so still onely implies what he formerly assumed, not what had been formerly acknowledged his due by those who sought Reformation.

55. Here then we have a clear and candid view of S. W's self-evidencing and demonstrative faculty, his first ground (chief stone in the corner of his impregnable Fabrick, which all our ἐλέπολεις, or engines of battery must never have the confidence to approach) 1. being considered as an affirmation, or assertion of a matter of fact, hath appeared to have no truth in it, in the sense wherein alone he is concerned to have it true; then 2. as a concluſion, aſſumed to be demonſtratively inferred from two ſelf-evident premiſſes, both of theſe (could a man with any charity ſuſpect it?) have proved diſcernibly falſe; And then why ſhould not every propoſition in the Alcoran ſet up for ſelf-evident, when ſome one (which but half ſo much as two) falſe prolepſis would certainly be able to infer it? The Reader therefore muſt needs be obliged to S. W's ſuperabundant mercy, that having poſſeſs'd himſelf of this enormous gyantly faculty of concluding or atchieving any thing, whatſoever he had pleaſed, that twice two were but three, or the like (for I ſhall beg but one falſe prolepſis, to infer many millions of ſuch) he hath uſed theſe powers ſo temperately, as to conclude no more from two ſuch vaſt advantages, but that the Pope's authority had once poſſeſſion in England, diſtinguiſhing mean-while between poſſeſſion and right, and rebuking me that I * did not diſtinguiſh between them, a fault, which if I had been guilty of, I ſhould readily reform, and then leave him to make his advantage of it, which will ſure be ſmall, as long as he is ſo far from having proved the right, that he hath thus ſtrangely and above once miſcarried, in attempting to prove the poſſeſſion.

* The Dr. miſtaking, and not diſtinguiſhing between Poſſeſſion and right, p. 37.

55. Yet in the ſtrength of this, thus deplorably improſperous onſet, he makes no delay to ſet up his Trophees, and prepare for the ſolemneſt triumph, Hence, ſaith he, all the evaſions of D. H. (no leſs than all) are concluded vain, who when we (the Romaniſts) plead that the Pope was found in poſſeſſion of this authority in England, flies off preſently and denies it (who elſe would have call'd down-right denying of the adverſaries propoſition, a flying off? but it now alſo appears, I had ſome ſmall reaſon to deny it) ſaying he had no title to ſuch an authority there; and miſtaking and not diſtinguiſhing betwixt poſſeſſion and right, ſaith, we beg the queſtion, when we onely take what is evident, that he was in poſſeſſion, and thence infer a right, till the contrary be proved.] How far I now am, or formerly have been from miſtaking in denying the right, and charging him of begging the queſtion, when he hath no other way of inferring the right, but from the poſſeſſion, and that by us was alſo denied, and not formerly attempted to be proved by him, and now forſooth is propoſed as a ſelf-evident ground, a principle taken for granted, which alſo being now pretended to be inferred from demonſtrative premiſſes, both thoſe premiſſes are demonſtrably falſe, is, I ſhall now ſuppoſe, as manifeſt, as that the begging the queſtion is the Engliſh of petitio principii, or that the Latine of taking that for ſelf-evident, which is ſo much leſs than ſo, as to have neither evidence nor truth in it. He hath now but one Reſerve left, viz. to accuſe me for ridiculous and ſenſeleſs, that I can charge that Elench upon an anſwerer, whoſe part it is not, to object or diſpute. But it falls out unfortunately, that there is no place for that forlorn χρησφύγετον at this time when he is a laying of ſelf-evident grounds, for thoſe being equivalent to principles, if they fail of the native evidence, and borrow none from his Armory that produced them, that Sophiſm muſt be daſht out of Ariſtotle's Elenchs, or S. W's proceſs will inevitably fall under it.

SECT. III.

His ſecond Ground, evacuated from the Anſwers given to the firſt. Patriarchal power affording the Pope no authority over England.

1. HAving ſpent ſo much time in a large but neceſſary ſurvey of his firſt ground, we ſhall reap ſome ſmall fruit of it, in the brevity of the next. For the ſecond ground being by him propoſed in theſe terms, that This authority actually over England, and acknowledged there, was acknowledged likewiſe to be that of the Head of the Univerſal Church, and not of a Patriarchate onely] and his Epiphonema affix'd to it, this, that this Ground is no leſs evident than the former, by our adverſaries confeſſion, ſince that, i. e. the authority of the head of the Univerſal Church, above Patriarchs, and (as he adds in the cloſe of the Paragraph) pretended to be inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, is the authority they impugn as lawfull, and from which they reformed, which laſt word implies the actual acknowledgment that Authority had before] the Anſwer is briefly this, That we have already ſuperſeded every the minuteſt part of this pretenſion, in what hath been ſo largely returned to the former ground, having there ſhew'd him, 1. That the Pope's pretended authority, as of an head of the Univerſal Church, and as conſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, was not actually over England, and acknowledged there (though it is true that the Pope did then pretend it, and ſome ill ſubjects owned, or at leaſt ſeemed to own and ſubmit to thoſe his pretenſions) 2. by the way, that the dignity of a Patriarch includes not any authority over more than the Province or διοίκησις that belongs to him as a Primate or Metropolitane, and therefore infers no kind of authority over all thoſe that belong to the circuit of his Patriarchate; which ſhews the impropriety of his ſpeech, that ſpeaking of an Authority over England (which is no part of the διοίκησις of the Primate of Rome) he ſaith it was not of a Patriarchate onely] as if that of a Patriarchate onely, were ſome authority over all whoſe Patriarch he were, though not ſo great as that of the head of the Church, whereas indeed the word Patriarch, as it differs from Primate, or in relation to any that are not his peculiar διοίκησις, hath no connotation of authority or juriſdiction, but onely of primacy of order and dignity. 3. That S. W's adverſaries confeſſion hath afforded him no advantage, their impugning the Papal pretenſions as unlawfull, no way implying the actual acknowledgment which that authorty had before; and 4. that they that diſclaimed the Pope's pretended authority in England, did not call themſelves Reformers, ſo that S. W. is far from a ſevere, as that is more moderate than a rigorous demonſtrator, in all that he pretends from that word [Reforming.]

2. All that can with any colour of right be yielded him in this proceſs, is, that this ſecond Ground is no leſs evident than the firſt, and that he hath indeed by his adverſaries confeſſion, who withall aſſigns his reaſons of believing, that neither hath the leaſt evidence in it.

3. So

3. So happy is S. W. in building of bulwarks, so hugely prosperous in the art of prepossessing his Readers, he might sure have vindicated his old answers as successfully, and demolished all the Doctour's Replies to his second and third part, from which he was diverted by this more inviting employment of laying of grounds, if he had maturely considered and timely foreseen the advantages he hath reaped by it.

SECT. IV.

His third Ground. What is meant by the [then Roman Church] The Romanists confession that 'tis no point of Faith. The contestations of the Gallican Church. Of Germany. Some testimonies fetch'd from the histories and pretensions of the ancient Popes themselves, Julius, Melchiades, Leo. Gregory, exclaiming at the title of Universal, setting down the steps of Ecclesiastical judicature, acknowledging his own subjection to the Emperour. Of Agatho. The subjection of Canterbury to Rome, as of York to Canterbury, onely on the title of receiving the Faith thence.

1. HIS third Ground, like the continued attempts of rebuilding Jerusalem, falls presently under the unhappy presages of the two former. It is but this, that the Papal authority actually over the Ecclesiastical affairs in England was held then as of Christ's institution, and to have been derived to the Pope as he was successour to St. Peter.] This I took to be his meaning in his first Ground (it now appears I did not mistake or misrepresent him) and accordingly evidenced his self-evident ground to be not onely infirm, but false, and that contrarywise the whole Kingdom professed that the Bishop of Rome had no greater jurisdiction conferred on him by God in Scripture, in this Kingdom of England, than any other Bishop. If this had not real truth in it on our part, or if on his part any more force could be now given his pretension by a hand so able, and so liberal, as is that of S. W. this were now the season of it, and it were in reason to be expected from him at his more explicite proposal of his ground in these terms [held then as of Christ's institution, and as derived to the Pope as he was successour to St. Peter] but it is a little remarkable, how he hath served this third ground of his, or rather how he hath disserved the two former, by the very few words he hath here added concerning the evidence of this third. The truth, saith he, of this appears by the known confession of the then Roman Church, and the self same controversie perpetually continued till this day.]

2. This is all he hath produced to clear up the self-evidence of this ground. And the ambiguity of the phrase [the then Roman Church] being removed, there will be no more colour of truth in this ground, than I acknowledged in the two former, when I refuted them. For either the phrase [the then Roman Church] must signifie what we vulgarly call by that name, the particular Church of Rome, as then it was, together with all those that acknowledged the authority, and submitted to the Bishop of Rome in all things, particularly in his assuming to be Christ's sole Vicar by him authorized over the Christian Church of the whole world; or it must signifie in the more Catholick notion, all the several Churches of Christendom, that then lived in communion with the Church of Rome, and neither voluntarily parted, nor were excommunicate, or separated from that, yet without any connotation of any such acknowledgement, or giving up their names to his Universal Pastourship.

3. If it be taken in the former sense, then I now acknowledge again what in answer to his first ground I willingly yielded, that this Papal authority in England, held then as of Christ's institution — was confess'd by the then Roman Church; But what hath S. W. gained by this? nay what hath he advanced either by his first or second ground, if they were both granted him, viz. that the Pope's authority, and that not as of a Patriarch onely, but as of the head of the Universal Church, was acknowledged, and acknowledged in England before the Reformation, meaning still by the word acknowledged, no more, than acknowledged by the Roman Church, the Bishop of Rome, and those that were marked by his signature submitted to this his assumed power, for that is no more than that this present power of his, was acknowledged by himself, and all others (every where, and so consequently in England) that did acknowledge it. This therefore as I must in charity to S. W. believe was not his meaning, so I have reason to complain in behalf of his two former grounds, that having before with some confidence pretended the acknowledgedness of the Papal power in England, indefinitely, his third ground should pretend to no more than the confession of the then Roman Church, which is interpretable to a sense thus far removed from that of England indefinitely, or all England. This therefore I think was either the disserving his own grounds, or the Reader, that had but a shadow of grounds given him instead of grounds, for, such are all such as are proposed in such ambiguous terms, that he that hath taken them on trust, in the more obvious sense, shall lose them again, when he comes to build on them.

4. But if he take the phrase [the then Roman Church] in the second sense, 'tis then most manifest, that as his first and second, so now his third ground hath no shew of truth in it, for it is visible, in the matter of fact, that the then Church and Kingdom of England, whilst it lived in communion with the Church of Rome, and neither voluntarily departed, nor was excommunicated by that Church, did yet protest their joynt and most constant perswasion, that this Papal authority over Ecclesiastical affairs in England was not held as of Christ's institution, or derived to the Pope as successour to St. Peter (which is the direct contradictory to what is assumed in S. W.'s third ground) but contrariwise that he had no greater power conferred on him by Christ in the Scripture (and there is no more pretended to by the Pope from God, than what is deduced by him out of Christ's words set down in Scripture) than any other foreign Bishop had, and therefore that he that was born in England had nothing to doe with Rome.

5. So in the year 1534. the same with the date of the Universities answer, and two years before the extinguishing Act, the book De vera differentia Regiæ et Ecclesiasticæ potestatis, was written by the Bishops of London, Duresm, Winchester, &c. The first part of which clearly evidenceth their sense of three things, 1 That the texts of the Gospels have no appearance of conferring this supreme authority upon the Pope. 2. That the decrees and practices of the ancient Church, yea and of pious and modeſt Popes were expreſſely againſt it. 3. That this power is evidenced from Scripture to be intruſted to Princes in their own Kingdoms, and that in all ſorts of cauſes. This then being the acknowledgment of thoſe very times to which his third ground belongs, he hath, it ſeems, acquired no great advantages by appealing to their confeſſions, as his firſt proof. But of this I have ſpoken more largely in Anſwer to his firſt Ground.

6. The other ſlender proof of his aſſertion is conformable; The truth ſaith he, appears as by the known confeſſion of the Roman Church, ſo by the ſelf ſame controverſie perpetually continued till this day.] I muſt ask, Betwixt whom continued? The Reformed, I ſuppoſe on one ſide, but whom on the other ſide? All thoſe that live and are allowed, as good Catholicks, to live in communion with the Church of Rome?

7. That he muſt mean, if he do not again avowedly betray the deceitfulneſs of all his three grounds. But in this ſenſe his proof will it ſelf want confirming: For it is not a principle indiſputable, that all that defend the Pope's power in the Church, hold it as of Chriſt's inſtitution, and derived to him, as he was ſucceſſour to St. Peter. I have * elſewhere ſhewed from his Ordinary, the † Biſhop of Chalcedon, at a time when he was defending the Pope's power, that he yet acknowledged, that whether the Biſhop of Rome be St. Peter's ſucceſſour, jure divino, or humano, is no point of faith] and Bellarmine's two conceſſions conclude no leſs, de Pontif. l. 4. c. 4. Non eſſe de fide, divino & immutabili præcepto Romæ ſedem Petri eſſe conſtitutam, & forte non eſt de jure divino Romanum Pontificem Petro ſuccedere. That it is no point of Faith that Peter's See was by divine immutable law ſetled at Rome, and perhaps it is not of divine right that the Biſhop of Rome ſucceeds Peter. And he cannot but know 'tis the common opinion of the Doctours of Paris, (who ſure defend the Pope's power againſt thoſe of the Religion, who deny it) that the Pope hath not univerſal juriſdiction jure divino; I ſuppoſe he may have heard of the no ſmall collection of Catholick Writers made by Melchior Goldaſtus, in his three Volumes De Monarchia, which will ſhew him, that all that live in the communion of the Biſhop of Rome, and acknowledge his power in the Church, do not yet acknowledge the divine right to ſupreme Paſtourſhip, and this will not be refuted, or loſe any part of its truth, by ſuggeſting that Goldaſtus himſelf was not of that number. And he may alſo remember the Tracts, and proofs of the liberties of the Gallican Church not long ſince publiſhed, and not be wholly ignorant alſo, by whom they were publiſhed.

* Anſw. to Schiſm. Diſarm. p. 237.
† Anſw. to Bp. of Derry, p. 69.

8. But inſtead of theſe looſer references, I ſhall add to what hath here lately been ſaid of the judgment and practice of the Gallican Church, (witneſs'd by the Pragmatick Sanction) theſe two or three inſtances. The former out of Bochellus, Ann. 1484. That whereas by ancient cuſtome of France, no Legate of the Pope, nor Reſcript or Mandate of his, might be received, but by conſent of the moſt Chriſtian King, and unleſs he did exhibite his Letters of Delegation by the King's Procurator, to be viewed and allowed by the Court of Parliament, limited ſo as no diminution ariſe to Regal right, immunity of the Church, or authority of Laws; Contrary to this Law, Cardinal Balva, entring France as Legate, without advertiſing the King, the King's Procurator entred action againſt him, the Court of Parliament decreed that he ſhould be accuſed by two Advocates, and interdicted him the exerciſe of his Legatine power. Is this reconcilable with their beleif or acknowledgment, that the ſupreme univerſal Paſtourſhip (including France as well as England) was by Chriſt's inſtitution derived to the Pope as ſucceſſour to St. Peter? The ſecond is that of the * Council of Tours, which concluded and decreed that Lewis XII. might not onely with ſafety of conſcience contemn Bullas abuſivas injuſtaſque, the abuſive and unjuſt Bulls of Julius II but he might withdraw himſelf from his obedience. So when the Pope laboured with Lewis XI. to have the Pragmatick Sanction abrogated, the Court of Paris exhibited to the King a † defence of the Gallican liberties branched into many Articles, the third to this ſenſe, that the King their ſupreme Lord, the chief Founder and Defender and Keeper and Vindicater of the Churches when their rights are violated, hath power to convocate the Prelates and other the like Eccleſiaſtical perſons of his dominions, to obviate their attempts and beginnings who ſhall have dared to indeavour any thing againſt this liberty. The Fourth, that in theſe Aſſemblies anciently indicted by the King's authority, many things are recorded to have been excellently conſtituted, and not without great deliberation of the Princes of the bloud, and the Eccleſiaſtical Order, &c. obviating the vexations, moleſtations and injuries which were offered by the Court of Rome to the great damage of the people; and theſe Conſtitutions were of great authority. The ſixth, that theſe Conſtitutions being long obſerved, when the Court of Rome in proceſs of time attempted many things againſt the liberty of the Gallican Church, Charles VI. by the advice of his Nobles, Prelates, Colleges, Univerſities, Ann. 1408. ſet out a Conſtitution which vindicated the Church to the ancient liberty, and was publiſhed ſolemnly, and recorded in the Acts of the Court of Parliament. The ninth, that decree was made by the Court of Paris againſt papal exactions. The tenth, that ſoon after, that decree was confirmed by the King's Edict, and publiſhed in Court, Ann. 1408. May 15. Whereupon the Pope ſending out his Bulls of excommunication againſt the King and Kingdom, * the Univerſity of Paris cauſed it to be torn in pieces, and declared the Pope Benedict himſelf to be an heretick, ſchiſmatick, and diſturber of the peace, (in which particular † Carolus Molinæus addes from the acts of the Court of Paris, that two officers of the Pope's, which brought with them his Bulls of Excommunication, * were dreſs'd in paper Mitres, and carted through the City ignominiouſly) which will hardly be competible with the acknowledgment of the divine right of his ſupreme univerſal paſtourſhip. The like inſtances are not hard to be found in other Kingdoms. When Pius II. ſent his Legate Cardinal Cuſanus into Auſtria, † Cum veniſſet——When he came to his own Church of Brixia on the Alpes, and would have diſpoſed of that, according to the ancient right of the Popes, Sigiſmund Duke of Auſtria permitted not, that any ſuch cuſtome ſhould be brought into Germany,

* Maſſæi Chron. Ann. 1510.

† Pro lib. Eccl. Gall. adverſus Roman. Aulam Defenſio Pariſ. Cur. in Duareni Append.

* Theodoric. à Niem in nemore Union. Tract. 6.
† De Monarch. Franc. n. 140, 141, 142.
* See the life of Archb. Chichley, p. 15.
† Paralipem. Abbat. Urſperg.

9. In like manner, when the * Princes of Germany repreſented to Maximilian the Emperour ten grievances in matters Eccleſiaſtical, the Emperour for redreſs of theſe, called a Council at Triers and Coloine, Ann. 1512. There it was decreed neceſſary, that the Emperour and Princes ſhould conſider of means for redreſs of thoſe grievances. Whereupon † Maximilian ſet forth a decree, That though of his

* Paralip. Abbat. Urſperg.
† Orthuin Gratius Faſcic. Rer. Expet.

his clemency he had tolerated the Pope and Clergy herein, as did his Father Frederick, yet becauſe by that favour the ſervice of God had fallen to decay, it appertain'd to his duty that Religion decay not, that the worſhip and ſervice of God be not diminiſhed. And immediately Maximilian with * Lewis XII. of France with ſome Cardinals called a Council at Piſa.

* Galli ſucceſſu rerum elati Cæſare & Cardinalibus authoribus Pontificem ad Concilium---citant. Onuph. in vit. Julii II.

10. But I ſhall now carry him a little higher (that he may have the fairer proſpect of this matter) to the practice of ſome of the ancient Popes themſelves. 1. Pope Julius who was willing enough not onely to defend, but to take advantage to exalt his power, and accordingly took upon him in caſe of diviſion among Biſhops, to abſolve Athanaſius, and was therein oppoſed by the Oriental, not onely Euſebian, or Semi-arian, but Catholick Biſhops, (who in the Council of Antioch † reſolved that Julius's abſolution was not to be admitted) doth yet in his Epiſtle written on that occaſion, defend the right of his act by * ancient cuſtome eſpecially, and by the Canon of Nice (which yet 'tis plain would not juſtifie it) and not by pretence of any divine authority, or in any ſuch dialect, that could ſignifie or intimate his pretenſion, that from St. Peter this belonged to him, which ſure he would have done, and thereby have ſilenced all Catholick oppoſers, if thus it had then been believed by them, or even by himſelf, to have belonged to him. For the injuſtice of their dealing with Athanaſius and with him, he ſaith in the cloſe of the Epiſtle, † Οὐχ ὅπως δὲ Παύλου διατάξεως——Paul's ordinances are not thus, the Fathers have not thus delivered, 'tis a new courſe, this that they have taken; and again, Ἃ παρειλήφαμεν ἀπὸ μακαρίου Πέτρου ——What things we have received from the bleſſed Apoſtle Peter, thoſe we ſignifie to you. But in the debate of the queſtion of right of the Pope's drawing a buſineſs to himſelf from the Oriental Biſhops, he pretends not to juſtifie his act from any divine right or ſupreme juriſdiction devolved to him from St. Peter, but onely from the authority of the Nicene Canon, and ancient cuſtome, and that not for any Papal right in him, but upon the ſcore of appealing from one Council to another, and yet neither of theſe truely appliable in that cauſe, which made it more neceſſary to have appealed to his ſupreme Paſtourſhip, flowing from Chriſt's donation to St. Peter, if he could with any opinion or appearance of juſtice have pretended to it.

† See Socrates, l. 2. c. 11. Sozom. l. 3. c. 3. & Jul. Epiſt. in Athanaſ. t. 1.

* Οἱ ἐν τῇ κατὰ Νικαίαν—Ep. Jul. p. 741. A.

εἰδὲ τὶ πιθανὸν ἔθος παλαιὸν συγχωρεῖ, καὶ γενέσθαι ἐν τῷ μεγάλῃ σωτῆρι ὑμεῖς παρ' ὑμῖν ἰσχύειν ὁ δὲλεγε, ἀφεπὼν μὴ ἡ παράδοσις παρείπησε. Ib. B. Η ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι τοῦτο ἔθος ἦν——Ib. p. 753. C.

† P. 753. D.

11. So in that African Council where St. Auguſtine was preſent, and the Pope's pretenſions were diſputed, and his power in their Churches denyed, he made no ſuch challenge from Chriſt's donation to St. Peter, but from the Canons of Nice, which yet were ſo far from juſtifying his pretenſions, (no ſuch Canon being found upon examination) that if he could have thought that other pleadable, he would certainly have diſcerned cauſe to make uſe of it.

12. In that buſineſs of the Africans heretofore largely inſiſted on, theſe farther paſſages are conſiderable (beſides thoſe many which I then offered him, Anſw. to Schiſ. Diſarm. ch. VI. Sect. 13. and to which I have yet received never a word of Reply from him) 1. That at the firſt, Pope Melchiades had never had cogniſance of the Africans affairs, had they been able to accord them themſelves, and had it not been by the Africans own permiſſion and allowance brought to him for a brotherly not authoritative deciſion, pergant ad fratres & collegas noſtros tranſmarinarum Eccleſiarum Epiſcopos, Aug. Ep. 162. and ſo no act of authority or juriſdiction in him, for that depends not on allowance of the Subjects. 2. That the ſame Auguſtine much doubts whether Melchiades with his Collegues ought to uſurp to themſelves this judgment, which had before been determined by ſeventy Africans, * An forte non debuit—by this his doubt aſſuring us, that if he had done it without their allowance, it had been unqueſtionably an uſurpation. 3. That the Pope did not exerciſe that power † himſelf, but had Biſhops joyned to ſit Judges with him. 4. That the * Emperour ſent or commiſſionated thoſe Biſhops to ſit with him. 5. That this was no uſurpation in the Emperour (as it muſt be, if the Pope were by Chriſt's Law above the Emperour, Univerſal Paſtour) but, if we will believe † St. Auguſtine, that which belonged to his office, of the diſcharge of which he was to give account unto God.

* Ibid.

† Necipſe uſurpavit.

* Rogatus enim Imperator judices miſit Epiſcopos, qui cum eo ſederent, &c. Aug. Ib.

† Ep. 162. Ad cujus curam, de qua rationem Deo redditurus eſt, res illa maxime pertinebat.

13. Add to this 3. that other inſtance of Pope Leo in the great cauſe of the ἴσα πρεσβεῖα in the Council of Chalcedon, of which we have * formerly inlarged, and ſhewed. 1. That that General, and one of the four General Councils, acknowledged the Pope no ſuch primacy or ſupremacy of juriſdiction at all, but defined the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſhould have equal privileges with him. 2. That the Pope interprets the injury done in that Council, to have been a breach againſt the Nicene Canons, and diſpoſitions of Eccleſiaſtical affairs, without mention of any other. 3. That through the Epiſtles written on that occaſion, he deduces not his primacy from St. Peter. 4. That he takes no notice of any injury done to himſelf in that Council, but onely to the Biſhop of Alexandria and Antioch, and other Metropolitanes. 5. That the reducing the dignity of the Roman See from the greatneſs of that Imperial City, which was more than pretended by that Council, was never ſo much as quarrel'd at by the Pope's Legates in that Controverſie, which ſure is a competent prejudice to the deducing it from St. Peter.

* Anſw. to Schiſ. Diſarm. p. 96.

14. Add 4. that of Gregory ſo vulgarly known in his Epiſtle to Eulogius Biſhop of Alexandria, telling him that he had prohibited him to call him † Univerſal Father, that he was not to doe it, that reaſon required the contrary, that it was derogatory to his brethren, that this honour had by a * Council, that of Chalcedon, been offered to his predeceſſours, but refuſed, and never uſed by any. A manifold teſtimony that this did not in his opinion belong to him by the law of Chriſt, for then 1. According to Chriſt's own pronouncing, Joh. XIII. 13. Ye call me Maſter and Lord, ye doe well, for ſo I am, they ſhould doe well who gave that title to him, and he alſo that took it to himſelf; 2. it could have been derogatory to none, 3. reaſon could not have forbid it, 4. he could not have averted it with an abſit, recedant, (any more than Peter could the ſufferings of Chriſt) without even fighting againſt God

† Ep. ex Reg. l. VII. Indict. 1. c. 30.

* See again l. IV. Indict. 13. c. 72. & 76.

15. Much

15. Much leſs could he have told † Mauritius, that whoſoever (not onely if the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, but whoſoever) calls himſelf Univerſal Prieſt, or deſires to be ſo called (either, or both) in elatione ſua Antichriſtum præcurrit, is a fore-runner of Antichriſt by his pride. And again to the Empreſs, l. IV. Ep. 34. In hac ejus ſuperbia quid aliud niſi propinqua jam Antichriſti eſſe tempora deſignatur, his pride was an indication of Antichriſt's approaching. And to John himſelf he ſets it higher, that 'tis * imitating none but the Devil, who I pray in this perverſe fooliſh proud title is propoſed for imitation, but he that deſpiſing the Legions of Angels which were ſocially created with him, endeavoured to break out to the top of ſingularity, that he might ſeem to be under none, and above all? And ſo on at large, makeing it to be the tranſcribing of Lucifer's act of arrogance to aſſume to be Univerſal Paſtour. And again, † that the King of pride is at hand, and the deſtruction of Prieſts prepared, becauſe they cervici militant elationis, qui ad hoc poſiti fuerant, ut ducatum præberent humilitatis, God, ſaith he, having decreed to reſiſt the proud, and humble him whoſoever exalts himſelf; * elſewhere he calls it Blaſphemiæ nomen, the name of blaſphemy; and † again, that to conſent to that wicked title, is fidem perdere, to deſtroy the faith. And that S. W. may not have ſo ill an opinion of Gregory, as to imagine that he ſhould declaim againſt this as Antichriſtian and diabolical in another that he might have the monopoly of it himſelf; beſides that what was cited from his Epiſtle to Eulogius, looked on it onely in reſpect of himſelf, he may alſo hear him in the application ſpeaking in the firſt perſon plural, and ſo including himſelf, * Quid ergo nos Epiſcopi dicimus, What then ſay we Biſhops, who have received our place of honour from the humility of our Redeemer, and yet imitate the pride of his enemy? and again, that the Council of Chalcedon had offered it to the See of Rome, but † none of his Anceſtors would receive it, and * elſewhere that he pleads not his own cauſe, but the cauſe of God, of the whole Church, of the laws, the venerable Councils, the commands of Chriſt, which are all diſturbed with the invention of this proud pompatick ſtyle of Univerſal Biſhop, that † the care of the whole was by Chriſt committed to the chief of the Apoſtles, St. Peter, and yet he is not called Univerſal Apoſtle; which ſhews evidently that whatever title belonged to Peter, yet not that of Univerſal Paſtour, and that Princeps Apoſtolorum was not ſo to be underſtood.

† L. VII. Ep. 30. Fidenter dico quia quiſquis ſe Univerſum Sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari deſiderat—

* Quis, rogo, in hoc tam perverſo (before ſtulto ac ſuperbo) vocabulo niſi ille ad imitandum proponitur, qui deſpectis Angelorum legionibus ſecum ſocialiter conſtitutis, ad culmen conatus eſt ſingularitatis erumpere, ut & nulli ſubeſſe, & ſolus præeſſe videretur. Greg. Ep. ex Reg. l. 4. Ep. 38.

† Ibid.

* Ibid. Ep. 32.

† Ibid. Ep. 40.

* Ibid.

† Nullus unquam tali vocabulo appellari voluit, nullus ſibi hoc temerarium nomen arripuit. Ibid.

* Ib. Ep. 32.

† Voce dominicâ ſanctâ & omnium Apoſtolorum Petro principi Apoſtolo totius Eccleſiæ cura commiſſa eſt, & tamen Univerſalis Apoſtolus non vocatur. Ibid.

16. From the ſame Gregorie's confeſſion we have it, that the whole matter of Eccleſiaſtical judicature is to be concluded in this manner according to the words of the Novelle, * that if any complaint be made againſt a Biſhop by any, the cauſe ſhall be judged before his Metropolitane, ſecundum ſanctas regulas & noſtras leges, according to the Canons and ours, i. e. (for they are the words of the Emperour's Novelle) the Imperial laws; If the party ſtand not to his judgment, the cauſe is to be brought to the Archbiſhop or Patriarch of that Dioceſe, & ille ſecundum Canones & Leges ei præbeat finem, he ſhall give it a concluſion (a finally concluſive determination) according to the Canons and Laws aforeſaid. Here then is the laſt appeal to the Archbiſhop or Patriarch of the διοίκησις, and as yet no notice taken of the Biſhop of Rome, unleſs in his own Patriarchate, which is abſolutely excluſive of his univerſal juriſdiction; onely now he addes, which I muſt not conceal, Si dictum fuerit, quia nec Metropolitanum habuerit nec Patriarcham, dicendum eſt, quia à ſede Apoſtolica, quæ omnium Eccleſiarum caput eſt, cauſa hæc audienda ac dirimenda fuerat. Here then is the place for the Pope's cogniſance and deciſion to interpoſe, according to his opinion, viz. in this one ſingle forlorn caſe, that the plaintiff hath neither Metropolitane nor Patriarch; and then, Exceptio firmat regulam in non exceptis, this one exception of thoſe incognite corners of the world (which where they lie, I leave S. W. to diſcover) that have a Biſhop but no Metropolitane or Patriarch, confirms his rule as far as Britain, which certainly hath been always eſteemed one of the ſix Dioceſes of the Weſt, and hath had a Metropolitane, more than one, and a Primate or Patriarch, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (acknowledged by the Pope himſelf to be ſuch, alterius Orbis Apoſtolicus & Patriarcha, ſaith Urbane II. of † Anſelme) and ſo by this Novelle of the Emperour's, cited and approved by Gregory, it is moſt evident that in his time, and his opinion, the Pope had neither by divine law, nor humane, nor by his own pretending, any ſuch univerſal juriſdiction.

* Greg. Ep. ex Reg. l. XI. Ep. 54.

† Guil. Malmeſbur. de Geſt. Pontif. Angl. p. 223.

17. The ſame Gregory, ſure more than in complement, addreſſes himſelf to Mauritius, in the ſtyle of Ego indignus pietatis veſtræ famulus, and in the greateſt expreſſion of ſubjection, Ego hæc dominis meis loquens, quis ſum niſi pulvis & vermis, his unworthy ſervant, nothing but duſt and aſhes, in Compariſon, and relation to him; and having declaimed againſt a law of the Emperour's, that Soulaiers ſhould not become Monaſtikes, ſaith, * Ego juſſioni ſubjectus, eandem legem per diverſas terrarum partes tranſmitti feci—— I being ſubject to the Imperial command, have cauſed publication of the law, though he took it to be impious, onely adding, becauſe the law is not agreeable to the law of God, Ecce per ſubjectionis meæ paginam ſereniſſimis Dominis nunciavi, Behold, I have written to my Lords of it. Thus 'tis ſure the Edict of Wenceſlaus the Emperour, underſtood his language, affirming, Noſtrum jus patronatus, ne vitium ingratitudinis incurrerent, plures antiquitus ſummi Pontifices agnoverunt, Auguſtos Dominos appellantes, & eis in re & nomine reverentiam tanquam ſuis Patronis exhibentes, ut diffuſe in Regiſtro Magni Gregorii habetur——Many of the Popes anciently have acknowledged our right of Patronage, that they might not incur the crime of ingratitude, calling us their Imperial Lords, and both in deed and words performing reverence to the Emperours as to their Patrons, citing thoſe Epiſtles of Gregory in many places throughout, and referring to other teſtimonies.

* L. 2. Indict. II. Ep. 61.

18. Add 5. that of Pope Agatho in his † Letters ſent to the Emperour concerning a General Council to be holden at Conſtantinople, who there plainly declareth and confeſſeth his Primacy to extend * onely to the Biſhops of the Weſt, and not to the Eaſt, and ſo as it is evident that at that time the Biſhops of Rome, neither by the words of Scripture, nor by the conſent of the whole Catholick Church, had any ſuch Univerſal Primacy as he now requireth.

† In Sexta Syn. Act. 4.

* Ἀγάθων σὺν πάσαις ταῖς συνόδοις ταῖς ἀνηκούσαις τῇ συνόδῳ τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ θρόνου, Concil. t. 5. p. 60. B. Ἡμῶν πάντες—ἐντὶ δούλοις καὶ ἀρκτοῖς μᾶλλον τυγχάνοντες—. Ib. F. vid. & p. 64. E. & 65. B.

19. I shall conclude with that ancient resolution at the ordaining of Paulinus Archbishop of York by Justus, the third Archbishop of Canterbury after Augustine, cited by our Britannicæ Antiquitates out of Radulphus de Diceto, and briefly set down in the Abbreviationes Chron. of the said Radulphus; Sicut Cantia subjicitur Romæ, quod ex ea fidem accepit, ita Eboracum subjicitur Cantuariæ, quæ eo prædicatores misit, As Kent is subjected to Rome, because it received the Faith from it, so is York to Canterbury, which sent Preachers thither, making the * reception of the faith from Rome, and not any title from Christ to St. Peter, the onely ground of any kind of subjection to it; and then (to omit many other observations, which that passage would suggest) that is distant enough from S. W.'s onely tenure, the divine right of Universal Pastourship, on the account whereof he utterly rejects that other of receiving the Faith from Rome, as we have formerly seen. From all these, let the Reader now judge, if there were ever such a layer of self-evident grounds, as S. W. hath thus far acquitted himself to be.

* Sicut—prima fuit in fide, prima sit in honore, Radul. de Dic. Ibid.

SECT. V.

The fourth Ground invalidated. Regal power of force against all but what is of divine right. Sacra Individua. The Adversaries grant how unjustly pretended by S. W. The verdict of our English Laws, and ancient practice from Henry the VIII. backward to the Conquest. Stapleton's confession. Bracton. Quintinus Hæduus. Sir Roger Twisden. The Bishops Book de Vera Differentia, &c. Stephen Gardiner's Oration. Practice of other Nations. S. W's argument from Augustine the Monk's carriage to the Abbat of Bangor, considered at large, with reflexion on what had been formerly objected by Mr. H. Turbervile.

1. HIS fourth ground, that this actual power the Pope then had in England had been of long continuance, and setled in an ancient possession] is necessarily lyable to all the feebleness of the three former, amass'd together, and so is incomparably inefficacious to support S. W's pretensions. For, remembring from the former discoveries, what was the utmost that the power the Pope then had in England, amounted to, a power by himself assumed to be divine and over the whole Church of Christ, but not so acknowledged by the Nation, nor by S. W. attempted to be proved with the least probability, that it was thus acknowledged, it follows that if it were true, or in liberality granted, that the actual power which the Pope then really had in England, (and no greater) had been of long continuance and settled in an ancient possession, it would never stand S. W. in the least stead. For still it might be but a Patriarchal power, and that is not the power of the Universal Pastour, or it might be but a power extorted from some one, or more Kings, or by them voluntarily granted, or but permitted and winked at, without any formal concession, and all such personal acts or indulgences of Kings are temporary, and revocable by themselves, and no way binding to their successours, and none of these hath so much as a pretense to divine institution. Nay on the contrary, the * Romanists themselves confess, that those things which are intrinsecally due and proper to the Prince, as to punish offenders, to make them subject to his laws, for subjects to appeal to him from inferiour Judges, paying Tributes, and the like, cannot by any other, by possession of never so long time, be prescribed. These, saith † Baldus, are incommunicable, sacra individua, they cannot be * usurped, or prescribed, or aliened, or absolutely exercised by any other than by them who bear the supreme Majesty. And if so indefinitely, then chiefly in the most considerable matters, those of religion, which most pertain to the end of Government publick good and happiness. And accordingly they acknowledge also, that it is the duty of the Prince, to command, and exact the observation of divine law, and of the Canons of the church, that he onely can make them obliging under exteriour penalties, mulcts, imprisonment, exile; as when Justinian decreed the Canons of the Code, † ὡς νόμους φυλάττεσθαι, to be observed as laws, i. e. so as might constrain the unwilling. And as the * suggesting these to be derived from the Church, or Pope, as acts of obedience in Princes, and execution of the Churches commands, is but a begging the question; so it shall, when we come to the 12th. Ground, be farther examined. Meanwhile the very possibility of any or all of these, is enough to keep his contrary affirmation from being a ground, which cannot be such, unless either it be by some prosyllogism demonstrated to be true, or else the contrary be impossible.

* Molina de Just. Tract. 2. disp. 69. & 74.

† In Authent. Hoc amplius c. de sid. Commiss. & Felinus Rubric. de Præscript.

* Alex. in l. Filia quam de lib. Imola in Rubr. de verbo Oblig.

† Novell. 131.

* Twelfth Ground. p. 52.

2. For the truth of it, that, he saith, is evinced; but by what medium? Why, saith he, both from our Adversaries grant, the evidence of the fact it self, and even by the carriage of St. Austin the Monk. What [even the carriage of St. Austin the Monk] will evince, shall anon be considered. At the present let us examine the eviction from the adversaries grant, the evidence of the fact.

3. But doth the adversary grant indeed, that the Pope's Universal Pastourship, as held by divine right from Christ's grant to St. Peter, had been of long continuance and setled in ancient possession in England? Nay, doth not S. W. know, that the adversary doth not grant it? and that the evidence of the fact is so far from being on his side, that 'tis on the contrary? Hath he never heard of the Statutes of the Kingdom before the Reign (that sure is before the pretended Reformation) of Henry VIII. which are competently to the prejudice of this Papal Pretention, and can he dream that his adversaries will grant so much to their own prejudice, what is so much contrary to their own senses also? From a small piece printed lately at Bruges, De Antiqua Ecclesiæ Britanicæ libertate, besides the evidence that his advarsary denyes, what he here pretends him to grant, he shall find in the margin in one place, a collection of many Statutes of the former times, which may in part help to illuminate him in the point of his adversaries concession, and evidence of the fact; I shall give him them, with addition of some more.

4. In the first year of Henry VII. fol. 18. we reade, The King is a mixt person, having Ecclesiastical as well as temporal jurisdiction; In the same year Fol. 20. The Pope cannot erect any privilege of Sanctuary in England.

In the same year, fol. 23. 25. the Act of King Kenulphus in exempting the Abbat of Abingdon from Episcopal jurisdiction, was judged regular and lawfull.

In the 6th. of Hen. 7. 13. Union to a Priory cannot be without the King's consent.

In the second of Richard III. fol. 22. Excommunications and Sentences of the Bishop of Rome are of no force in England.

In the twelfth of Edward IV. fol. 16. A Legate landing in England was obliged to take Oath that he would attempt nothing to the derogation of the rights of the King or Crown.

Under Henry VI. his nonage, when his Unkle was made a Cardinal and sent Legate by Martin the fifth, the King's Attorney Ri. Cawdray made protestation against him, that none was to come as Legate from the Pope, or enter the Kingdom without the King's appointment; and this by singular privilege of our Kings, who had enjoyed this right from all memory. On which, that Cardinal publickly promised conformity. Yet that this privilege was not so singular to our Kings, but that in like manner it belonged to others, particularly to the King of France, see Ludovicus Servinus his † Plea before the Parliament of Paris, An. 1590. when Cardinal Cajetane was sent Legate to Henry IV.

† Anx. Ploid. vol. 4.

In the same King's Reign, not onely the * Clergy refused obedience to the Pope's Mandate for money, and disposal of the Archbishoprick of York, to Ri. Fleming, but the Pope's Messenger Jo. Opizanus, for acting against the King's Laws, in getting money for the Pope, was cast into prison.

* Vit. Henr. Chichley p. 86.

So in the Reign of Henry V. when Pope Martin, whilst the King was busied in the affairs of France, had assumed some powers which were interdicted by the Laws of Edward III. and Richard II. the * Bishop of Lichfield and Dean of York, the King's Legates in the Council of Constance, were sent to him for redress, which they had promise of in some things; And at the same time, other Ambassadours were dispatcht to demand that he meddle not with disposing of those Benefices in England, which both by pacts, and jure Regio belong to the King's disposal, and for divers other things; with instructions, upon the Pope's refusal, to profess, Regem in iis singulis jure suo usurum, That the King will use his own right in each of them, and to make publick protestation thereof before the Congregation of Cardinals.

* Vid. vit. Hen. Chichley Arch. Cant. p. 56.

Vit. Arch. Chi. P. 78. 80.

In his Reign also, the design of sending a Legate from Rome, though it were the King's own Brother, was opposed, as appears by Archbishop Chichley's Letter to the King, and the consequent of it, the desisting from that enterprise whilst that King lived.

In the second of Henry IV. 'twas enacted, That the Popes Collectors had, by virtue of their Bull's, no authority or jurisdiction in England, but that the Archbishops and Bishops of England are the King's spiritual Judges.

In the eleventh of the same King, fol. 37. The Pope cannot alter the Laws of England.

In the same year fol. 69. 76. the Judges pronounce with one voice, that the foregoing Statutes were onely declarative of the common custome of England, and not introductory of any new Law.

In the Reign of Richard II. Ch. 5. 'Twas enacted, That because the King of England holds the Crown immediately from God, therefore if any man shall follow in the Court of Rome any translation of suit, or excommunication, he shall incur the loss of his Goods, and forfeit the King's protection.

In the sixth of the same King (M. 6. R. 2. Rot. 8. en lescheq.) The Pope on complaint of the Bishop of Coventry, of one Moses a Prior there, ordained, that there should be no more Prior there, Mes que ferra, but that he or it should be ad mensam (perhaps it should be ad mentem) Episcopi. Upon which the Prior and Convent assaulted the Bishop, and beat him, and brake his head with a Cross: And afterward an Assise was brought, and it was held that the dissolution of the Pope was not good.

In the sixteenth of Edward the third, the excommunication of the Archbishop of Canterbury is judged valid, notwithstanding the Pope's sentence to the contrary.

In the seventeenth of the same King, fol. 23. The King by his Sovereign power exempted the Archdeacon of Richmond from Episcopal Jurisdiction, as also all Colleges or Monasteries founded by the King are exempt by the same Law.

In the twenty fifth of the same King, it was enacted. The Pope had no right in England to confer any Archbishoprick, or Bishopricks.

In the twenty seventh of the same King, fol. 84. The King, as supreme Ordinary, presents by lapse.

In the same year, whosoever shall by citation, or impleading draw any of the Subjects of the King of England out of the Kingdom, shall incur the loss of all his goods, which our Law calls incurring a Præmunire.

In the thirty third of the same King, fol. 103. Kings being anointed with Oil are capable of Spiritual jurisdiction.

In the same King's Reign, the dissolution of the Order of Templars by the Pope was not good, untill confirmed by the King. Walsingham 59. and 46 Ed. 3. 28.

* Goldast. monarch.

In this King's Reign I refer the Reader to Peter Cassiodor's complaint * De tyrannide Pontificum Romanorum in jura regni & Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. Of the Tyranny of the Popes on the Rites of the Realm and Church of England.

In the fourth of Edward 1. One that had brought a Bull derogatory to the right of the Crown, was therefore condemned to banishment, and the Fact adjudged to have the nature of Treason.

In the Reign of Henry the third, the Lords and Commons complain of the great sums carryed hence into Italy, above four hundred thousand pounds yearly. Epist. Angl. ad Innocent. which sure was mentioned by them as a gravamen, and usurpation, and is not by me designed to be farther argumentative; yet may, by the way, mind us, what may possibly incite and accend so much zeal in dispatching their Missaries at this time, to reduce this stray Island to the fold of their universal Pastour, and interpret in part, the affectionateness of S. W's harangues so frequently interlaced to his dear Countrymen, there being other motives imaginable to found zeal, besides the deemed certainty of his faith.

5. Henry

5. Henry II. ſaith Mat. Paris, An. 1164. gave out Orders to be obſerved by the Archbiſhop, Thomas Becket, and Biſhops, tanquam avita, i. e. received under his Grandfather Henry I. and his Predeceſſours; Theſe Surius interprets, ab avo Regis inſtitutas, enacted by his Grandfather, but that is a deceit, for Mat. Paris ſaith, they were the Inſtitutes of his Predeceſſours. And

6. William Rufus telling Anſelme, that he had promiſed to keep all the Cuſtoms of England, commands him thereupon, that he ſhould not make any appeal to the Pope, (Guil. Malmsb. de Geſt. Pontif. Angl. l. 1.) and Eadmer an Acquaintance of Anſelme's, affirms, that the King required of him to promiſe the ſame under Oath. de vit. Anſel. l. 2. On which occaſions, that eſpecially of Henry II. Stapleton (de tribus Thomis, in Thom. Cantuar.) cryes out, Quid aliud hic Henricus ſecundus tectè poſtulavit, quàm quod Henricus VIII. completâ jam malitiâ apertè ſibi uſurpavit, ut ſupremum Eccleſiæ caput in Anglia eſſet? What difference was there betwixt that demand of Henry II. and the more open uſurpation of Henry VIII. when he aſſumed to be head of the Church in England? And again, Quid hoc aliud rurſum eſt, niſi ut Rex Angliæ ſit apud ſuos Papa? What is this other than to make the King of England Pope among his own Subjects? A competent teſtimony of the practice from the mouth of an Enemy, and irrefragable to him, that concludes the right from the poſſeſſion.

7. Thus 'tis not onely reſolved in the Novells, that the King hath ſupreme power over † all perſons in all, and ſo Eccleſiaſtical affairs; and by our own Law, that the King hath no equal, as * Bracton ſaith, ſpeaking of the Pope, and Archbiſhops, and other Prelates, and giving this reaſon, for elſe the King might loſe his precept and authority of commanding, becauſe an equal hath no rule over an equal. But the matter is yet more clear by another Argument which † Bracton gives, taken from the practice of the Courts in England; That when an Eccleſiaſtical Judge hath received a Prohibition from the King, ſuperſedere debet, in omni caſu, He is in all cauſes bound to ſuperſede, at leaſt till in the King's Court it be reſolved, to whom the Juriſdiction belongs, becauſe if the Eccleſiaſtical Judge might reſolve of this queſtion, whether it were his Juriſdiction or no, he would in all caſes indifferently proceed, notwithſtanding the King's prohibition.

Novel 132.

† Nihil non pervium ad inquiſitionem Majeſtati extitit Imperatoriæ, quæ communem in omnes homines moderationem & principatum percipit.

* L. 1.

† L. V. de exception. c. 15. Sect. 3.

8. In ſum, 'tis among the Laws of Edward the Confeſſour, Chap. 10. that the King is appointed God's Vicegerent to rule the Kingdom and people of the Lord, and above all, the holy Church.

This concurrence of our ancient Laws in this matter minds me of † Joannes Quint. Heduus, who flouriſhed at the ſame time when Henry VIII. abrogated the Papal pretenſions in England, and was alſo of the Roman Communion, and attributed much to that See. He lays for his ground. In ſolo principe omnis eſt poteſtas. All power is in the Prince alone; and from a learned Lawyer Lotharius aſſerts, Principem eſſe fontem omnis juriſdictionis, that the Prince is the fountain of all Juriſdiction: citing the C. Quando vult Deus, Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. Thence he ſaith, the Reaſon is, why it is lawfull for the Prince ſometimes to determine thoſe things which concern the Church, leſt the honour of the Mother (the Church) ſhould in any thing be violated. If any thing, ſaith he, be an Eccleſiaſtical matter, that of convocating Councils is certainly one; and yet 'tis the opinion of many learned men, that the Emperour may call a General Council, ſo oft as he ſees the Pope and Cardinals be noted of any ſuſpicion, and neglect to doe their duty, either for want of skill, or out of ſiniſter intention, or peradventure of both, or when there is any ſchiſm. He puts a particular caſe, The Pope calls the Biſhops to Rome, or to ſome other place; the King forbids them to go, or commands them to come to his Court or Council: The Biſhops muſt, ſaith he, obey the King's precept; and not onely in this, but in any other matter whatſoever, beſide ſin; for he that doth not obſerve his bounden fidelity to the King, whether Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon, he ought to be ejected from his degree. This he proves by many Canons, and concludes his opinion to be, when the King calls together the Prelates to a Council, and to reform the State of the Church, they are bound to obey, yea though the Pope forbid it. But this by the way.

† Joan. Quint. Heduus Juriſconſult. & Lutetiæ Profeſſor publicus in Repet. lectione de Chriſtianæ Civitatis Ariſtocratia, defendit Ariſtocratiam Chriſtianæ Civitatis, qua deſcriptio Pontificii & Regii Imperii continetur. Poſſevin.

10. 'Twere not difficult farther to purſue this through the ſeries of times, and evidence it out of our Hiſtories of almoſt each former Age from the beginning of Chriſtianity in this Iſland, to thoſe days of the extinguiſhing Act: But for a fair view of that, I refer the Reader to our learned Countryman, Sir Roger Twiſden, in his Hiſtorical vindication of the Church of England, in point of Schiſm, who hath of late fully and ſatisfactorily performed that part.

11. All that I ſhall here farther inſert concerning our own Affairs, I ſhall chuſe to tranſcribe out of two of our firſt pieces, which the Biſhops ſet out on this ſubject, in King Henry's days (the former, two years before, the latter in the year of the exterminating Act) that it may at once appear, that not the luxuriant enormous will of the Prince, but the diſpaſſionate judgment of the Prelates, and the conviction of ſolid reaſon, uſher'd in this (change in the outward face of things, or rather) vindication of the intrinſick Rites, and Liberties of the Anglicane Church, that extinguiſhing Act being, as hath been ſaid, from a competent Authority, not introductory of a new Law, but onely declaratory of ancient cuſtome, which had prevailed through all times, and was refreſhed and revived, as often as occaſion demanded.

12. In the ſame year then, as hath been ſaid, with the deciſion of the Univerſities forementioned, An. 1534. was written the Book, De vera differentia——where beſides what was even now mentioned thence, 'tis punctually demonſtrated, that thoſe powers which by S. W. are ſuppoſed to have been of long continuance and ſetled in an ancient poſſeſſion in the Papacy, were acknowledgedly veſted in the Kings of England. Their proofs I have elſewhere pointed at, I ſhall now more largely ſet them down.

13. Firſt from the Statute of Appeals, and the method of them from Biſhop to Archbiſhop, & poſtremo ad Regem, in the laſt reſort to the King, ut præcepto ipſius in Curia Archiepiſcopi controverſia terminetur, ita quod non debet ulterius procedere ſine conſenſu Regis, That by his Commiſſion the Controverſie may be ended in the Archbiſhop's Court, ſo that there may be no farther proceeding without the conſent of the King. 2. By the Statute againſt any Biſhop or Archbiſhop, his going out of the Kingdom without the King's licence, and giving ſecurity, that neither in going nor ſtaying perquirant malum vel damnum Regi vel Regno, they will cauſe any damage to King or Kingdome. (Either of which, what a deſtructive influence it muſt have on all foreign, and ſo Papal authority, is moſt viſible.) 3. By the Example of Thurſtan Archbiſhop of York, who when he obtained the King's licence to go to the Council called, by Calixtus, he was required firſt to take Oath, give faith (and ſo did) that he would not receive Epiſcopal benediction from the Pope. (Another clear evidence that the King's power over Eccleſiaſticks 1. In impoſing Oaths on them, 2. In prohibiting them all acknowledgment of Papal juriſdiction, was then in full force againſt the Pope's pretentions.) 4. By our Kings, Canutus, Ethelred, Edgar, Edmund, Æthelſtane, Ina, Alfred, making of Laws in Eccleſiaſtical matters, the ſeverals whereof are there recited. 5. By their authority of inveſting of Biſhops. 6. By the exemptions from all Epiſcopal authority given by them, as they pleaſed; for example, by William the Conquerour to the Abbat of Battaile, by him inſtituted. 7. By the Letter and Proteſtation of that King to the Pope, that if he did not reform the abuſes, which he minded him of, he would himſelf take a courſe to doe it, with a Torpeſcere non valemus, quin (ut tenemur) tanta diſcrimina pro viribus evitemus. We cannot be ſo ſluggiſh, as not to doe our utmoſt (as we are obliged) to avert ſo great dangers. 8. By the Oration of King Edgar to his Clergy, requiring them to cauſe a Reformation by the conjunction of his and their power. Epiſcopali cenſura & Regia authoritate, committing the matter to ſo many Biſhops, as are there named. 9. By the Letters of the Parliament to the Pope, when he took upon him to diſpoſe of the Kingdom of Scotland, which our King claimed. This certainly (being the work of the Biſhops at that time) was another large teſtimony of the acknowledgment of the Kingdom at that time (which is ſomewhat more than of his preſent adverſaries) And the force of it was ſo great, and the truth ſo generally acknowledged then, that Stephen Gardiner one of the compoſers of it, in an Oration of his, ſoon after delivered on this matter, makes no ſcruple to ſay, Omnes planè conſtantiſſimo conſenſu in hoc convenerunt docti pariter atque indocti, viri atque fœminæ nihil ei cum Româ eſſe negotii quem Anglia genuit, All are moſt conſtantly agreed, learned and unlearned, men and women, that he that is born in England hath nothing to doe with Rome, nothing which can be claimed from him by any tenure of right humane or divine by Chriſt in Scripture or out of Scripture.

De Ver. Obed. p. 731. 18.

14. That Oration of his, De vera Obedientia, written Ann. 1536. the year of that Extinguiſhing Act, is the other piece which even now I mention'd, the Penman whereof being far from a Reformer, living and dying an eminent perſecuter of ſuch, his name poſſibly may add ſome weight to his obſervations; From one * Paragraph of that Oration, the Book being not in every man's hands I ſhall give the Reader a ἔκθεσις of the whole diſcourſe, and a repreſentation of the intire truth in this matter.

* P. 726.

15. To this very objection then, that we have now before us, that the Biſhop of Rome had been by our Princes acknowledged the head of the Univerſal Church, honours given, ſubmiſſions performed to him, his authority acknowledged, ſo that if right be judged by fact, the advantage will be on the Pope's ſide, he accommodates this anſwer, that in thoſe times and paſſages which ſeem moſt to derogate from the right and authority of our Princes, ſome light of the truth was yet always diſcernible, by which he that will look cloſe, and carefully, ſhall eaſily find that the acknowledgments that were made them, were not ſolid and intire, and built on any foundation of right, but ſpecious rather than true, acts of civility, not of duty, and * arguments that the honour was lent for advantages, not paid them for any obligation. For if our Princes had been reſolved that the Biſhop of Rome was Chriſt's Vicar on earth whom all were bound to obey, and without whoſe intervention nothing could be firm or valid, or if the Popes themſelves had been really thus perſwaded, 'tis not to be imagined, that they ſhould have uſed humane arts and policies, yea and plain terrours, and aſſociations of ſecular force to gain this power in this Kingdom (but have made their appeals to the ſolid teſtimony of divine truth, if they had any ſuch to produce) or that the Princes, ſuch eſpecially who after their death were honoured as Saints, would by facts openly have diminiſh'd that their authority, which by words and titles they ſo acknowledged; Had they believed that the adminiſtration and care of the whole world was committed to the Pope by God, with what confidence could they have made ſo many † Decrees, contrary and derogatory to this principle, expreſſing their diſlike of his fatherly care; diſclaiming the exerciſe of his piety, and forbidding him to meddle with their affairs, or have inſpection of them, whom they deemed to be ſet in the Watch Tower by God for this purpoſe? Beſides, the doing this, had been ſtrangely irregular, it being not in the power of Inferiours to make Laws for, or againſt their Superiours, or to reſtrain them in their adminiſtrations, and yet this our Princes (not paſſionately in their Courts, but) on mature advice in their Parliaments frequently did, making laws againſt the Popes interpoſition in ſuch or ſuch things; to which alſo the Popes were ſo far from expreſſing any diſlikes, or returning their rebukes, that they took no leaſt notice of them, but liberally commended the actours for their faith and obedience, imitating the ſubtleſt Merchants, when they have made any very circumventing advantageous bargain, they ſit down contentedly with half, and preſs not rigorouſly for all, eſteeming it perfect gain, whatſoever they can get by ſuch arts, when they know nothing is due to them. 'Twas from the benefit they received by it, not from any opinion of his being the Vicar of Chriſt, that our Princes allowed him any authority in their Realms, and that * cum moderamine, ſo ſoon as they could relieve themſelves from ſuffering any conſiderable damage by it, and could caſt it out when they pleaſed, their authority being but precarious, † as long as the Princes judged it beſt for their own intereſts, and as ſoon as they thought fit to ſtand on their certain right, the Pope's authority was preſently retrench'd; till then, they prudentially diſſembled, and took no notice of his uſurpations, and ſatisfied themſelves, that they, as well as he, were the gainers by it. Thus it was for the main, and if there were any ſingular inſtances, which ſeemed contrary to this, yet the conceſſions of weak, and maſter'd, or deluded, or temerarious, or negligent Princes can have no force to prejudge the powers which are given to Kings by God. They called them Fathers, and heads, and dignified them with many titles, but this was no prejudice to

* Honoris fœnerati potius quam ſolutiargumenta.

† Quamvis corona Angliæ & jura ejuſdem coronæ ipſumque regnum fuerunt ab omni tempore retro actо adeo libera, ut nec Dominus ſummus Pontifex nec aliquis extra regnum ſe intromittere debeat, de eiſdem---- Act. Dep. Rich. II. M. S. citat. ab Ad. Reutero. p. 4.

* Salvis nobis & hæredibus noſtris juſtitiis, libertatibus, & regalibus noſtris. Inſtrum. Conceſſion. & obligation. à Joanne à Rege fact. ap. Guil. Paris.

† Foraſmuch as the King hath ordained theſe things to the honour of God and holy Church, and for the Common-wealth, and for the remedy of ſuch as be grieved, he would not that any other time it ſhould turn in prejudice of himſelf or of his Crown, but that ſuch rights as appertain to him, ſhould be ſaved in all points. Stat. Edwardi I. in his 3d year, Weſtm. 1. cap. 48. tit. Conceſſ. fact. Eccleſ. ſemper ſine præjud. Coron.

their

their Monarchick prerogatives; Again, the ancient Church of Rome was for the luſtre of their ſanctity, and amplitude of power, not onely of great name in the Weſtern Church, and particularly in ours, but of eminent authority, in the ſenſe, that Cicero uſeth authority, when in giving of teſtimonies, he attributes authority to men of parts and wealth, not that they are always in the right, but becauſe the multitude are willing to be lead by ſuch, and do not eaſily diſtruſt them; But for any Divinely eſtabliſh'd authority, the Pope neither hath, nor hath had among us any more, than any other Biſhop. What Princes have done for their intereſts, or from the neceſſities of their affairs, or through ignorance, or circumvention, or on any ſuch other reſpect, can be no prejudice to the truth, or to the native rights of the Diadem veſted in them by God; and therefore if it were the cuſtome at any or all times, to adviſe with the Biſhop of Rome in governing the Church, and to doe nothing without conſulting him, and if Princes permitted their Subjects to repair to him, this was far from freeing their Subjects from their own juriſdiction, which being committed to them by God, could not without violation of the Paternal care due to their Subjects, be abdicated by them. As on the other ſide, when they had no need of the Pope, when his interpoſitions grew inconvenient, the Prince might as ſafely, and without violation of religion, diſmiſs him, as a Lord may do his Chaplain, (they are his own words) whom he had formerly received, and hired to officiate in his Family, eſpecially if he diſcerned him to aſſume beyond his bounds, to exact ſubjection from him and his Family.

16. Thus far that Great Biſhop, who profeſſing that he had formerly ſworn to defend the Papal power and authority, and ſince to have been convinced with the evidence of the contrary, may be an example to others to doe the like, on the conviction of his reaſons; nor can it much prejudice his teſtimony (if we ſtood on that, as we do not, but on the truth of his obſervations, and the evidence, that S. W's adverſaries do not grant what he would have them) that in Queen Maries days he returned to the Papacy again; Whatſoever he thought of the Original right pretended from St. Peter, he might think it lawfull for the Queen by Act of State to ſet up the Pope's power in ſome degree, and then when it was ſo, account it his duty to ſubmit to it.

17. Meanwhile it may be added, ex abundanti, that what in that Oration he maintained, is in very full accord with the declared judgment and practice of other Nations through all times; Alciat, whom * Baronius juſtly ſtyles doctiſſimum, moſt learned, reſolves it in general, † Nemini dubium eſſe quin in primitiva Eccleſia de rebus & perſonis Eccleſiaſticis jus dicerent Imperatores, That no man doubts but in the Primitive Church the Emperours had juriſdiction over Eccleſiaſtical matters and perſons. * An. 534. † Cod. Rubric. de ſacr. Eccle. §. 3.

18. Matthias Corvinus King of Hungary puniſhed Biſhops and Prieſts, when they offended, &c. Laurence Roborella the Pope's Legate not diſallowing it. Ant. Bonfin. Rer. Hungar. Decad. IV. l. 1. & 3.

19. Charles the great, Capitular. l. 1. Præf. deſires that no man will think he took too much upon him, that in Eccleſiaſtical matters and perſons he took care to correct what was amiſs, defending himſelf by the example of Joſias. The ninth Council of Toledo, c. 1. c. filiis. 16. q. 7. admoniſhes the Curatours of the goods of the Church, that if a Miniſter fraudulently imbezille any of them, he complain to the Biſhop, but if the Biſhop be the offender, to the Metropolitane, if the Metropolitane, to the King. And many the like, which I ſhall not now (extra orbitam) inſiſt on.

20. And thus much to his firſt mediums of eviction, his adverſaries grant, and the evidence of the fact it ſelf, of the ancient poſſeſſion and long continuance of Papal power through the Reigns of our former Kings, that the Reader may diſcern the diſtance betwixt S. W's ſelf-evident grounds, and plain matters of fact.

21. It remains that I take notice of his other medium of eviction, the carriage of St. Auſtin the Monk, and the Abbat of Bangor, expreſs'd, ſaith S. W. in that counterfeited teſtimony alledged by Dr. H. whence we ſee it was the Doctrine St. Auſtin taught the Saxons.] But it would even move ones compaſſion to think, how many fruſtrations he will here meet with alſo, in this attempt of eviction.

22. For 1. how can he evince that Monk's carriage from a teſtimony, which the ſame time that he appeals to it, he charges of being counterfeit? Can he think fit to found Principles on the quick-ſand, and pretend to evince demonſtratively, when he confeſſes his medium not onely to be fallible, but fallacious, and actually counterfeited? 'Tis not enough to ſay that Dr. H. alledges it, and ſo, that ad hominem it is convincing; for an argument ad hominem is at moſt but a probable argument, and ſo cannot be ſufficient for the evincing of a ground or ſelf-evident principle, (which mankind, and not onely hic homo is concerned in) eſpecially when 'tis uſed by him that doth not himſelf believe it, but on the contrary charges it for counterfeit, when he thus produces it for evincing. This is ſtill the ſame rate of demonſtrating, that we have oft minded him of, ψευδώνυμος γνώσις, ſcientifical falſely ſo called, a teſtimony acknowledgedly counterfeit, yet fit to be a medium of a ſevere, if not rigorous demonſtration.

23. But then 2. I may be allowed to think that there is no truth in his Epithet, and that that teſtimony was not counterfeited, having had the leiſure particularly to examine and invalidate all the ſuggeſtions of ſo learned a man as Mr. H. T. is commended to be by no meaner a perſon than Thomas de Albiis, very elaborately and pompouſly offered, in a peculiar diſcourſe, againſt that one teſtimony. And as if there had never paſs'd any ſuch thing, or at leaſt as if ſome kind of reply had been made to it, this can yet obtain no more than a faſtidious mention of [that counterfeited teſtimony] I deſire S. W. will for once ſo far take notice of the rules of common juſtice among men, that the brand of counterfeit be not affix'd ad libitum to whatever comes in his way, unleſs he be at leiſure to prove his charge, or be reſolved to take a fit opportunity to prove it; and if in order thereto he will in ſome earneſt reflect on that buſineſs betwixt H. T. the Romaniſt and me, he ſhall ſoon find who was the gainer by it, it being viſible in the entrance, how ſafe I ſtood, and how firm the concluſion which I inferr'd from that teſtimony, it being no other but a matter of fact, of known truth, and no more but what, from all ſorts of writers that ever dealt in that ſubject, I except not Baronius himſelf, is notorious, and confeſs'd by the Romaniſts, viz. that the Britans, thoſe of Bangor particularly, denyed to yield obedience to the Pope, upon Auſtin's demand of it.

24. Whether S. W's concluſion be of this kind, that it can receive benefit by this teſtimony, if it be valid, and no prejudice, in caſe it be counterfeit, let us next conſider; and in order to this, I will be good natured, and afford him this odds, that what paſs'd for utterly invalid (becauſe counterfeit) when urged againſt him, ſhall be of full force and validity, as far as it can be argumentative againſt me, which I mean for an eſſay how happy S. W. would be, if he might have all the gains, and none of the inconveniences of his own wiſhes.

* Tr. of Schiſ. p. 111.

25. What then was this carriage of Auſtin the Monk, and the Abbat of Bangor, as it is * there ſet down? Why, that when Auguſtine required ſubjection to the Pope and Church of Rome, the Abbat anſwered, Notum ſit vobis—— Be it known unto you that we are all ſubject and obedient to the Church of God and the Pope of Rome, but ſo as we are alſo to every pious and good Chriſtian, viz. to love every one in his degree and place, in perfect charity, and to help every one by word and deed, to attain to be the Sons of God, and for other obedience I know none due to him, whom you call the Pope, and as little do I know by what right he can challenge to be Father of Fathers, or (as it is * better rendred from a due punctation of the Welſh) and any other obedience than that, I acknowledge not to be any man's, or to belong to any man, whom ye name Pope or Father of Fathers, to challenge and require. As for us we are under the rule of the Biſhop of Caerlegion upon Uske, who is to overlook and govern us under God.

* See App. to H. T. p. 184.

26. Now with this teſtimony let us, in the name of truth and ſobriety, compare S. W's concluſion, which he ſaith is evinced by the carriage of St. Auſtin and that Abbat, expreſs'd in this teſtimony: The Concluſion is, that this actual power the Pope then had in England, had been of long continuance and ſetled in an ancient poſſeſſion.] But from what part of this teſtimony can that be drawn? ſure not from the Abbat's telling him they are all ſubject to the Church of God and Pope of Rome, for ſubjection is expreſs'd to be no other than what he pay'd to every pious and good Chriſtian, and then every good Chriſtian by this argument is equally inſtated in this power. No more ſure will it be inferred from his denying him all other power, but this. It remains then neceſſarily, that it be inferred from Auguſtine's requiring the Abbat's ſubjection to the Pope, or it cannot be evinced from this teſtimony. But, 1. doth Auguſtine the Monk his requiring it, when it was as roundly denyed him, and never afterwards granted him, evince the poſſeſſion thereof? Doth he poſſeſs what he never had, and is finally rejected from his claim of it?

27. But ſaith S. W. Hence we ſee it was the Doctrine Auſtin taught the Saxons. In good time, Auſtin taught it the Saxons, therefore the Pope was ſetled in an ancient poſſeſſion of it. The argument is of force the quite contrary way; the Abbat of Bangor refuſed it, and in the name of the whole Britiſh Church renounced all ſuch right as he pretended, therefore infallibly he had it not. Doth not the Univerſal Paſtourſhip include the Britiſh as well as the Saxons, and can then the teaching it the Saxons conclude him poſſeſs'd of it among the Britans, when 'tis evident he is not poſſeſs'd of it? Doth not a particular negative deſtroy an univerſal affirmative? if then he were not poſſeſs'd of this power over the Britans, he was not at that time, nor had ever been (as far as can from that, I ſhall add, or from any other unſuſpected teſtimony appear) poſſeſs'd of an Univerſal Paſtourſhip, or acknowledged to be poſſeſs'd of it in this Kingdom. Such evictions are S. W's, which unavoidably evince the direct contrary to the concluſion he projected from them.

28. But let us for once endeavour to forget the difference betwixt Univerſals and Particulars, and take the Saxons, thoſe few that were then converted by Auſtin, to be this whole Nation, what hath S. W. gained toward his unimproveable concluſion by this great liberality? all that he pretends to, is but Auſtin's teaching it. But 1. the teſtimony is for no more than petens ſubjectionem Eccleſiæ Romanæ, demanding or requiring ſubjection to that Church, which differs from teaching, and can never be any ſeeming proof of poſſeſſion.

29. Secondly, ſubjection to the Roman Church, doth not neceſſarily import that ſupereminent power of headſhip of the univerſal Church, and that as derived to him from Chriſt as St. Peter's ſucceſſour. This is the leaſt that can ſerve S. W's pretenſions; and teaching or requiring ſubjection indefinitely, can never come home to that, any more than the Abbat's anſwer did, that they were all obedient and ſubject to him, which we know ſignified the quite contrary. S. W. muſt pardon me this ſtrictneſs, that I allow him no more, than the teſtimony (his onely proof) exacts; for beſides that this ſtrictneſs, were it never ſo great, is no more than is neceſſary to a demonſtratour, (and ſuch the layer of grounds aſſumes to be) the Records from Bede, and ſuch other Hiſtorians, as the Romaniſt moſt depends on, in this matter, amount to no more than this, that Auſtin finding the Britans to retain ſome practices different from the Roman uſages, as in the celebrating of Eaſter, &c. laboured to conform them to the Roman way, under the title of Catholick peace, and ſo to bring all to an uniformity; but the Britans conſtant to their own Traditions, were not moved with the mention of the authority of the Roman Church or Pope; ſo Bede ſets down his ſpeech to them, In multis quidem noſtræ conſuetudini imò univerſalis Eccleſiæ contraria geritis, In many things ye doe contrary to our cuſtome, yea to the cuſtome of the Univerſal Church (where by the way, ſome difference there is betwixt our i. e. the Roman, and the Univerſal Church. And ſo in the Pope's anſwer to his third Interrogatory, he tells Auſtin, that if he found any thing that might be more acceptable to God * whether in the Church of Rome or of France, or any other Church, he ſhould infuſe it into the Church of England) and then all that is thence concluſible is, that the practice of the Church of Rome being conſonant to the reſt of the whole Church, was uſed by Auſtin as an argument to draw the Britans to the like practice, but ſure that differs much from his teaching his Supremacy of power by divine right.

* Sive in Romana, ſive in Galliarum, ſeu in qualibet Eccleſia aliquid invenîſti quod plus omnipotenti Deo poſſet placere, ſolicitè eligas & in Anglorum Eccleſia—infundas. Bed. l. 1. c. 27.

† Bed. l. 2. c. 2.

* Ut Paſcha ſuo tempore celebretis, ut miniſterium baptizandi juxta morem Romanæ ſanctæ Eccleſiæ & Apoſtolicæ Eccleſiæ compleatis, ut Genti Anglorum una nobiſcum prædicetis. Bed. Ibid.

30. And this is yet more manifeſt, for the difference ſtill continuing among them (what difference? Why, that the Britans would not † priſcis abdicare moribus, leave their old cuſtoms) Auſtin in fine demands their accord with him but in theſe three particulars, * the time of celebrating Eaſter, the miniſtering baptiſm according to the manner of the Roman Church and the Apoſtolick Church (which again one would not take for the ſame, being ſo ſevered) and the preaching the word of God together with them; adding expreſſely, Cætera quæ agitis quamvis moribus noſtris contraria, æquanimiter nimiter cuncta tolerabimus, Other things which ye doe, though contrary to our manners, we will bear them all patiently. Where it is moſt manifeſt, that Auſtin preſſes not, nor demands a ſubjection to the Papal authority, as that ſignifies juriſdiction; but ſubjection to, or rather complyance with a few cuſtoms of the Roman, being alſo the practices of the reſt of the Church; to which the Britiſh thought they had no reaſon to yield, knowing that they were not under the Pope's juriſdiction.

25. One thing more is here to be obſerved, that Auſtin being now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, expected to have the Britans acknowledge him as their Archbiſhop; but as Balæus tells us, * the Britans thought it not for their profit to admit either the pride of Rome, or the known tyranny of the Anglo-Saxons, and ſtrongly defended the juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of St. Davids in the affairs of their Churches, ſo Bede expreſſely adds, Neque illum pro Archiepiſcopo habituros eſſe reſpondebant, they anſwered, that they would not have him for their Archbiſhop. All which is very remote from inferring the Pope's poſſeſſion of England at that time; yea if he were yielded to be poſſeſs'd of all that Auſtin did but petere, demand, or deſire, yet it would yield S. W. no more advantage toward inferring the long continuance, and ſettledneſs in poſſeſſion, than the Pope hath here had ever ſince he was diſclaimed, for the Britiſh Biſhops have all that time been ſubjected to the Biſhop of Canterbury, the Succeſſour of that Auſtin. This I ſuppoſe is not enough to ſatisfie S. W's appetite, and yet from the moſt favourable repreſentment of this hiſtory, there is not a crumb more to be had for him, not the leaſt news of Univerſal Paſtourſhip by divine right here ſo much as pretended to, (and for the title of converſion from Rome, beſides that this is peculiar to the Saxons, and the Britans are not concern'd in it, S. W. diſclaims building any thing on that title) and this cannot appear ſtrange to any, that remembers this was in the time of that Gregory, who diſclaimed that wicked, faſtuous, monſtrous, blaſphemous, Antichriſtian, Luciferian title of Univerſal Paſtourſhip, which therefore 'tis not ſoberly imaginable that Auſtin ſhould challenge for him, much leſs that he was thus anciently ſetled in this poſſeſſion. Thus much for his fourth Ground, exact in nothing, but its conformity with the other three, All equally capable of, and furniſhed with his Demonſtrative evictions.

* Dion — fortiter tuebatur Menevenſis Archiepiſcopi in Eccleſiarum ſuarum rebus ratam juriſdictionem, concludens non eſſe in Britannorum commodum futurum, in communionem admittere vel Romanorum faſtum vel cognitam Anglo-Saxonum tyrannidem. Balæus.

SECT. VI.

His fifth Ground how far from having any leaſt force in it againſt us. No poſſeſſion, and no validity of it, if there were. S. W*'s proofs ſpent on that onely which wanted them not. Some force of Poſſeſſion acknowledged. No breach on our part, and ſo no need to conſider cauſes of diviſion.* S. W*'s unſucceſsfull acts.*

1. HIS fifth Ground, that No poſſeſſion ought to be diſturbed without ſufficient motives and reaſons, and conſequently it is it ſelf a title, till thoſe reaſons invalidate it, and ſhew it null,] is long ſince, as far as it is appliable to our queſtion, diſappointed and invalidated, not onely by the evidences formerly produced, for an Original right to an αὐτοκεφαλία, or independency from all foreign juriſdiction, parallel to that of the Africans, and conſequent to that, the unlawfulneſs of all intruſions, and the obligation of reducing unjuſt poſſeſſions to what it was ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἄνωθεν, from the beginning, by the force of the Epheſine Canon, in caſe of the Cypriots; but now farther by conſidering, what power it is, which is by S. W. pretended to have been in poſſeſſion ſo long, viz. that of Univerſal Paſtourſhip by divine right, which till he hath proved demonſtratively to have been in poſſeſſion among us, he muſt no longer aſſume; and I ſhall flatter my ſelf that I have abundantly evinced in the four former Sections, that he hath yet been very far from all appearance of thus proving it.

2. Had the four former grounds been ſolidly evinced, had this of Univerſal Paſtourſhip approved it ſelf to have been really in poſſeſſion, the one acknowledged Doctrine for many hundred years, and the Scepters of this and all other Kingdoms willingly ſubjected to it, as to the undoubted Sceptre of Chriſt, there might then be a reaſon for the fifth ground, though ſtill there would be juſt place alſo for Writers of errour, and right once evinced (as ſoon it would be) muſt have the deference from unjuſt, though aged poſſeſſion, eſpecially when the minds of men were the poſſeſſion, and pride on one ſide, and errour on the other the evil Spirits (little better than Devils) that poſſeſs it, for ſure humility and truth can never be forbidden by the moſt inveterate contrary cuſtome, to return jure poſtliminii to their due habitations.

3. But when the poſſeſſion it ſelf, as it is by S. W. ſtated, is the πρῶτον ψεῦδος, the firſt thing that is ſuppoſed, but not duly evinced by him, and all the ſlight offers of proof for that, already ſhewn to be uneffectual (for which I refer the Reader to the four former Sections) 'tis viſible that there is no farther conſideration due from me to this his fifth ground: which having a general truth in it, till it be applyed to our hypotheſis, and ſo being in theſi by me moſt willingly, and ſecurely granted to his firſt demand, is yet by S. W. beyond all the former, whoſe wants were more viſible and importunate, allowed a liberal proportion of proofs from Nature, Morality, Policy, Common Law; but all theſe pains, as now appears, miſplaced by him, like the charity which the Phariſee was warned of, the calling in onely of his rich neighbours to his Feaſt; It had been well if in complyance with that Text, any of the four former, the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind, had been thought capable of it.

4. Briefly

4. Briefly therefore, I cannot affix any probable ſenſe to this propoſition in theſi, wherein I have any concernment to deny, or queſtion it; All the queſtion is of the hypotheſis; I ſhall never pretend the diſturbing of any ſort of poſſeſſions without ſufficient motives or reaſons. I, as readily as he could wiſh, acknowledge poſſeſſion it ſelf a title, till reaſons are produced to invalidate it, and farther, I have no diſlike to his proofs, but diſcern reaſon to conclude, that that part of S. W. which wrote this Paragraph, is very well inabled to demonſtrate a truth, and conſequently that his former faileurs have not with any juſtice been imputable to him, who had ſagacity enough to invent, but to the matter, which was too barren to yield arguments, other than Topical or Sophiſtical. Onely I cannot ſay of him, as Zeno of himſelf, that he ſometimes wanted opinions, but never arguments; for if I may judge by theſe five propoſals of ſo many grounds, I muſt reſolve he hath more opinions than arguments; concluſions than premiſſes, five grounds, but no tolerable mediums of eviction, ſave for one of them.

5. All that I have to reſiſt in his deſcant on this fifth ground, is his Corollary, that I was very little adviſed in ſtating the queſtion rightly and clearly, Sch. p. 10. Where I tell him that the motives are not worth heeding in this controverſie, but onely the truth of the matter of fact.] For the rebuke in this Corollary of his, the reaſon he aſſigns, is, [for the matter of fact, to wit, that there was then an actual government, and that we broke from it, being evident to all the world, and confeſs'd by the Proteſtants themſelves, if there be no reaſons to be examined, I am convinced to be a Schiſmatick ſo flatly and plainly, that it is left impoſſible even to plead a defence.

6. But he was certainly told long ſince, and need not be now reminded, that we do not confeſs any breach on our part, that we ſtill are where we ever were, under our lawfull Paſtours, of whom the Primate of England reſiding at Canterbury, is the chief, whom the Pope hath himſelf look'd on. * as it were his Compeer, and Patriarch of this other little world, from whom having never ſeparated, nor from our immediate ſuperiours under him, we have no need to conſider cauſes of diviſions, or breaches of that kind, which as upon mature advice we know they cannot be juſt, ſo we are without all ſcruple perſwaded that we have not been guilty of them, nor can, ſave by one of theſe three ways, either by caſting off our Biſhops, or calling in and ſubmitting to ſome foreign power, or ſeparating from other ſiſter Churches, who are not before hand with us herein, to cut us off from their Communion.

* Quaſi comparem velut alterius Orbis Apoſtolicum & Patriarcham. Eadmer. apgrav. in vit. Anſelmi.

7. In managing this part of his cauſe, where truth wholly deſtitutes him, 'tis ſtrange to ſee, what arts he reſorts to, one while preſſing me to change my method, and inſiſt on the cauſes of our ſeparation, when I aſſure him of the deliberate choice of this part of my method, and (which he of all men hath no pretence to complain of) my perfect concurrence with him in an unextorted profeſſion, that no cauſe can juſtifie a ſeparation (and that therefore we have much rather choſen to preſerve our ſelves from this guilt, than to incur firſt, and then palliate it, to injoy innocence, than to forecaſt and ſtudy Apologies) Another while telling us, that the breach is viſible to all the world, and by us confeſs'd, when he knows that all the magnifying glaſſes in the world cannot help any the ſharpeſt ſight to ſee what is not, and that there is nothing we more deny, than what he ſaith we confeſs, viz. that we have ever broken off from any; Our lot having conſtantly been that which Chriſt foretold the earlyeſt Chriſtians, to be caſt out of the Synagogue, in which we had elſe remained, and now to have the πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα from thoſe that have caſt us out, and ſo made it impoſſible for us to be guilty of what they charge us; Let him but take notice, what I inſiſt on this third time, that we confeſs no breach on our part, but are ready, if yet they pleaſe, to redintegrate ſecundum Canones, and that if herein we are proved liable, we ſhall contentedly fall under the guilt, and entertain no advocate to plead our cauſes, and he will be forced to confeſs his Corollary had as much injuſtice, as I willingly acknowledge his fifth ground (conſidered, as here it is, onely in theſi) to have truth in it.

SECT. VII.

His ſixth Ground, ſafely, denyed, or granted. What demonſtration required to our denying their Poſſeſſion. S. W's demonſtration producible by us, Oral Tradition of a preſent age, that of Gregorie's. Tradition reverſ'd. The Pope's whatſoever poſſeſſion far from Divine right, S. W's reaſons examined. The Papal authority being held of Faith, Univerſal Tradition, Neceſſity of acknowledging it in order to Unity. The no force of reaſons barely probable, (On whoſe ſide the Schiſm is) Of teſtimony-proofs; The argument from the title of Reformers. The true foundation of their poſſeſſion. Multitude of learned on which ſide. No pretence for continuing in Schiſm.

1. IT now from the premiſſes ſufficiently appears, what weight or ſolidity there is in his ſixth ground, or what benefit he is likely to receive by it, whether it be denyed or granted. The Ground is, That ſuch a poſſeſſion as that of the Pope's authority in England was held, ought not to be changed or rejected upon any leſſer motives or reaſons, than rigorous and moſt manifeſt evidence that it was uſurp'd] Now, I ſay, S. W. hath ſo imperfectly managed the former part of his undertaking, ſo far from deeply or ſubſtantially, laid and ſettled his former grounds, that this, which is but the improvement and advancement of them, may be indifferently, either denyed, or granted by me, yet upon diſtant accounts.

2. If I grant it, it is upon this ſecurity, that we have evidences as manifeſt, as matter of this nature will bear, and as rigorous as S. W. hath reaſon to exact of us, that the authority which the Pope pretended to, but was never poſſeſs'd of, in this Kingdom, viz. that of the Univerſal juriſdiction held to be conferred on him by Chriſt, was by him unduely pretended to, i. e. uſurp'd; Mathematical, or Phyſical demonſtrations, we ſuppoſe, the matter is not capable of; for there is no natural repugnancy in the terms, no common notions reſiſted, by affirming that the Pope ſhould have ſuch an authority; nay, if it could appear that Chriſt ever promiſed him ſuch authority, 'tis not onely juſt that he ſhould have it, but as neceſſarily concluded, that he hath had it, as it is concluſible that Chriſt cannot but perform his promiſe.

3. And

3. And yet even of this sort, if S. W's rigorous demonstrations might really pass for such (as ad hominem to S. W. they ought to pass) I doubt not to affirm that we can thus demonstrate also, being readily able to produce more than one age, wherein this authority was not onely not acknowledged, but disclaimed; I instance in that of Gregory I. where the Pope's own repeated confession, that the title of Universal Pastor was wicked, monstrous, blasphemous, Antichristian, Diabolical, and by his Predecessors of duty rejected] being testified to us by his own Epistles ex Registro to the Emperour, the Empress, the Patriarch of Constantinople, and of Alexandria, are a competent and undenyable evidence of the possessions not being held in that age; from whence it will follow by S. W's laying of grounds, and way of demonstrating possession, that if in Boniface's time, or before that, in any year, between Gregory I. and Boniface, i. e. in Sabinianus his time, it were assumed by the Pope, that Pope found the Church of God actually possess'd of a freedom from, and the Papacy not possess'd of that authority.

4. I may add also his other way of demonstrating by Tradition Reverst'd, for if the Church of Rome believe nothing but what they receive from their immediate Ancestours, as received from all former, ascending in a continued line to Christ, then neither the Church in Sabinianus's nor in Boniface's age could believe the Doctrine of the Universal Pastorship, which it is visible was not derived to them from their immediate Ancestour, Gregory I. much less from their more remote Ancestours, the Apostles, or Christ himself. But I believe not S. W's rigorous, to be just demonstrations, and therefore pretend not to prove matters of fact by any other mediums, than those of testimonies divine and humane, and am thereby sufficiently insured, that neither S. W. hath pretended, nor any other performed, what is necessary to the establishing his affirmative, that the Universal Pastorship, as from Christ, is by the Pope duely pretended to, and on the contrary, that we can evidence by undenyable testimony, that the Pope hath not through all ages been possess'd of this Authority in England, as from Christ, in the notion of possession, which we have expres's'd, and which S. W. must accept it in, or else his pretensions will signifie nothing towards his, or against our advantage. What our evidences are, I must not here recite, That were to transcribe what I have so lately set down, in answer to the former grounds, in the foregoing Sections,

5. On the other side, if I shall deny what is affirmed by him in this his sixth ground, it will be sub hac forma; That the possession which the Pope had of Authority and jurisdiction in this Kingdom, was so weak and precarious, acquired by means so distant from, and unlike that of Christ's donation, from time to time maintained by the like, yielded with such a moderamen, and kept always so dependent from the wills of our Princes, that we need no stronger motives or reasons for rejecting or extinguishing it, than that they that either granted it, whether willingly or unwillingly, on fear, or other prudential considerations, or even on designs of piety, or that onely permitted and winked at it, did still retain their liberty, they or at least their Successours, to recall their concessions or permissions, and could no more be prescribed against by their own, or their predecessors acts, of this kind, than they were formerly bound up from making such concessions, whensoever they first made them, or than grants made by the Crown, with reservation of power to recall them, or grants unduely made to the prejudice of the Crown, are to all succession immutable and irrevocable.

6. I have therefore no obligation solicitously to examine, because no least concernment to deny the force of those his reasons, which are here produced also, the same I commended on the last Section, onely reprinted in a smaller letter, from Nature, from Morals, &c. Onely in the application of the thesis to our hypothesis, recur all the sand-stones that were laid in his four first grounds, and those as I have already shewed to be very infirm, so I need not again take them up, and evince their soft parts.

7. Such were, 1. that the authority was held of faith, as constituted by Christ's own mouth, and acknowledgedly accounted for such by multitudes (it should be, if he kept to his grounds, and would infer any thing, the Universality, and not onely multitudes) of pious and learned men, in all Countries of the Communion of the Roman Church (it should be again, in all Countreys absolutely, for else some particular Churches alone, will found but a very Topical argument) whereof England, saith he, was one. But the contrary, I shall suppose as yet, hath sufficiently been manifested.

8. Such again 2. the claim of Universal Tradition, and the heynous Schism in rejecting it, which though not yet insisted on in these grounds, and so is here an abortive, broken out before its time, yet hath already incidentally by the testimonies of the contrary belief, been forestalled and superseded also.

9. Such 3. the charge of unknitting the frame of the whole Churches government, which yet by Pope Gregorie's own verdict (lately produced) is so perfected in the upper stories by the hierarchy and subordination of Bishops, Metropolitanes and Archbishops, i. e. Primates or Patriarchs, that where such are, there is neither need nor place for any other, nor consequently for that of Monarchick Universal Pastorship, which is it self, if we may believe that Pope, a name of Schism, and division in the Church; and a prejudice to other Bishops, If one, saith he, be Universal, it remains that you be not Bishops; and therefore though he admitted the Responsalis of the Patriarch of Constantinople to his Communion, yet he permitted not his own Responsalis to communicate with Cyriacus, because he assumed the title of Universalis, l. 6. Ep. 30. & 31. and again he saith istud nomen facere in discissionem Ecclesiæ. l. 7. Ep. 69. that that name tended to the cutting the Church asunder, which sure is not to the uniting of it.

10. Such again 4. the comparing the force of reasons barely probable, and rejecting an Authority of so long continuance, held sacred and of Christ's institution, of such importance to the peace of the Church, in rejecting of which if one happen to mistake, he is lyable to the horrid sin of Schism, and its condign punishment. All this is an heap of misapplyed exaggerations, when he knows our reasons for what we have done, pretend to more than probable, to arrive as high, as, considering the matter, can be expected, that the authority according to its pretended sacredness, and descending from Christ, is not of that long continuance, that the peace of the Church was long secured without it, and may be so again, if they would please to come out of the fire of contention, to prefer the life of an Angel or Saint, before that of a fiend or Salamander, to doe justice, and love mercy, and walk humbly with God, rather than inlarge their borders, ſow definitions, like teeth of Serpents, and fence them in with a wall as high as heaven; that the Schiſm is not on their part, that are blameleſly caſt out by thoſe that have no authority over them, but on theirs, that Diotrephes-like caſt out their brethren, and then accuſe them for not joyning with them, transform their unjuſt ſufferings into their haynous crime, break unity, and then bitterly complain of the breach of it.

11. Such again 5. that they muſt not be common ſlight teſtimony-proofs which will ſerve our turn, which compared with the tenour of their Government, Univerſal Tradition, vaniſh into air, or nothing] When the queſtion being of a matter of fact, there is no poſſible deciding it, but by teſtimonies, which the commoner, and more known and viſible they are, the more force and eviction they have with them (and ours are carefull not to deſerve the Epithet of common, any other way) and the more they are ſlighted, if not ſatisfactorily invalidated by the adverſary, the more they are preſumable to be conſtringent to him; and when on the other ſide, the Univerſal Tradition rightly deduced from the Apoſtles through the purer ages downward, is not their, but our tenure, inſtead of which their retrograde Tradition being invented (and reſorted to, as the Mountebank newly arrived) is a ſhrewd ſymptome, that the other regular, deſcendent Tradition was not proper for their diſeaſe, or diſcerned ſufficient for their ſafety.

12. Such again 6. the doughty argument drawn from the notation of the title of firſt Reformers) and which is equivalent, of new begun disbelief and diſobedience) which we ſhewed both to be unappliable to our matter, and to be no fountain of eviction or evidence, a moſt ſlender Topical argument at beſt, if it were appliable.

13. In a word, it hath been the attempt (I hope not improſperous) of the foregoing Sections, to ſhew, that that Government which he hath eſpouſed, was not in the ages he ſpeaks of, generally held of faith, or acknowledged to be received upon the ſame ſole rule of faith, which aſſured men that Chriſt was God, (which are, he knows, his meaneſt beggings of the queſtion, and nothing elſe) but onely as a voluntary, mutable, whether deemedly pious, or but ſimply prudential politick conceſſion, or onely permiſſion of Princes, and ſo never found in poſſeſſion, as ſacred, or as held from Chriſt,* nor Univerſal Oral Tradition, (meaning ſuch from the Apoſtles) with any appearance of truth, ever found pleadable for it; And when we have actually produced plain teſtimonies of Tradition the other way, to tell us, we cannot be imagined to produce ſuch, becauſe then we muſt diſclaim the title of Reformers in this point, is a ſymptome of a moſt forlorn deſtituted cauſe, that which Mr. White would ſeverely chaſtiſe in any but a friend or a Diſciple, and tell him that a probable argument againſt an evident fact is nothing, becauſe no argument, and ſuch certainly is that thin Topick from the notation of a pretended name, which we neither own, nor would affix any real guilt on us, if we did, there being another innocent notation of it, which we ſhall be ſo wiſe to chuſe, now we know there is one, which is deemed ſo tranſcendently criminous, as to bring the heinous brand of Schiſm on us, from which otherwiſe we have full confidence to guard our ſelves.

14. To conclude, the ſome kind of change in the outward appearance of things, made in Henry VIII. his days, was ſo far from being ſuch a Reformation, which, as S. W. thinks, concluded millions of Doctors, which had been in that Church, to be ignorant in compariſon of themſelves, that if we may judge by both the Univerſities, Great Monaſteries, and Clergy of England, the multitude of learned men was on the ſide which I now defend, as appeared in my Anſwer to his firſt ground; And let me add, the Biſhops and Prelates, by whoſe aſſiſtence he began and finiſh'd this work, were men of ſo great wiſedom and learning, as this Kingdom had never ſeen, neither at that time had Europe the like, if we may credit Eraſmus, a moſt competent judge, who tells us ſo in ſeveral Epiſtles. And ſo 'twere to be wiſhed, that what S. W. aſſumes and propoſes for evident and demonſtrative, might, at ſome one time at leaſt, be ſecured from the moſt oppoſite fate of being demonſtrably falſe.

15. But I ſhall take it for a good Omen, that he hath concluded his harangue on this ſixth ground, with ſome appearance of truth, but that ſtill, which our hypotheſis is not concern'd in, being granted alſo by us moſt willingly, that if thoſe, whom he calls the firſt Reformers, could have no juſt lawfull evident ground to begin their diſobedience to that Government, neither can their Proſelytes and Succeſſours have any pretence for continuing in it. This, I ſay, we willingly ſubmit to, as far as they then could be ſaid to begin their diſobedience to that Government, or if inſtead of that phraſe we may be allowed to inſert this other, in declaring, as they did, againſt the Pope's pretended Univerſal Paſtourſhip, deſcended to him from Chriſt. And on theſe terms of ſome kind of agreement, I ſhall part with his inlargements on his ſixth ground.

SECT. VIII.

His Seventh Ground very confounding to Proteſtants. Impoſſibility pretended againſt evidence. Reaſons muſt be allow'd to have ſome force, againſt all but Rigorous demonſtrations. Such pretended but not performed by S. W. Five problemes left in one Demonſtration. Many faileurs found in a ſecond. Force of Teſtimonies to oblige belief that the Pope's authority was uſurp'd. Canons in force at Rome. Perſpicuity of their deciſions. Lawfulneſs of the matter. Liableneſs to miſinterpretation cauſeleſly objected. Words heard as liable to miſinterpretation as Read. Who are S. W's indifferent part of the World. S. W's retractation. The demonſtration fallen into a bare probability. The different ſignifications of words. Wordiſh Teſtimonies. Authorities, whence to produce Teſtimonies. Apoſtolick, Nicene, Epheſine, Chalcedon Canons.

1. COme we now to his ſeventh ground, in theſe words [No evidence can poſſibly be given by the Proteſtants obliging the underſtanding to believe that this authority was uſurp'd.] The whole weight of this ground is laid on theſe words [can poſſibly] This indeed, if made good, lays us flat before him; and I humbly conceive, if not made good, it concludes S. W's attempted uſurpations upon his Readers minds, intolerable uſurpations.

2. Till this Magiſterial principle appeared, we Poteſtants might with ſome chearfull proſpect, reade the Scrip-

Scriptures, ſtudy the ancient Records of the Church, lay up in our minds what we find in the diffuſed body of the Fathers writings delivered us by themſelves (which if we may believe our eyes, do really ſupport our pretenſions, and from whence we fetch our Doctrines, and at once diſclaim all that we do not thus fetch, and not onely labour to fetch colours of proofs for them) and compare theſe with what Baronius or Bellarmine have collected from them, and given us with Romiſh deſcants or tinctures on them; Till then, we had liberty to uſe the natural talents and faculties of intellect, &c. which God had given us, and from Gregorie's affirming, that Peter himſelf was not called Univerſal Paſtour, that the title was Antichriſtian and Diabolical, and many the like, to conclude irrefragably, that he neither pretended to the title, nor derived any right to it from St. Peter. Till then, it was to ſome purpoſe to cull out the moſt unanſwerable records of the pureſt antiquity, and to expect from a Romaniſt fair words, and vouchſafements of ſo much patience, as to conſider, whether they indeed proved, what we undertook them to prove, and as long as reaſon weighed down the balance on our ſide, to think our underſtandings, if not his alſo, regularly obliged to aſſent, and believe, what without violence to our underſtandings we were not able to disbelieve. Till then, matters of Doctrine, and of faith (which are no more born with us, than revealed to us by daily voices from heaven, or oracular reſponſes out of the cave, no more by (the ἐγγαστρίμυθος) natural reaſon, or common notions, than (the ὑπαθήλης) the private ſpirit, (or Enthuſiaſm) were left to be concluded regularly, by that one medium, divine Revelation from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, by any ſufficient means (uncorrupted Conduits, i. e. impartial teſtifications) conveyed to us. And this left us ſome faint gleams of hopes, that however the Romaniſt deemed his Church infallible, yet having alſo admitted this teſt of Univerſal Tradition, the real and placid vigour of that, might ſo far prevail, againſt the but gives, and tyranny, and ſimulated force of the other, that a temper by mutual condeſcenſions, a ſuſpenſion, if not compoſure of impertinent diſputes and controverſies, might at leaſt be prayed for with faith (which is not competible to impoſſibilities) and attempted with charity, and expected with patience, when God ſhould ſee the Chriſtian world tolerably qualified for ſuch a bleſſing. But as ſoon as this fatal thred of S. W's ſpinning came out, to inſnare, and intangle our ſteps; as ſoon as it commenced Ground, and ſelf-evident Principle, not that no evidence is (that had left us ſome hopes of rallying our forces, or coming off with life) but [that no evidence can] and yet that not killing enough, but [that no evidence can poſſibly be given by the Proteſtants, obliging the underſtanding to believe——] we are left either to attempt removing of mountains, or to fall into fits of deſpair, to force nature, or to yeild up our throats to our immortal combatant.

3. But in ſober earneſt, I think not all the Contumelies in both his books ſo enormouſly inhumane, as this one ground of his, that [when a matter of fact being ſufficiently teſtified, reaſon requires our belief of it, when upon the ſtrength of this ground in reaſon, our underſtandings are actually ſwayed with ſuch prevailing arguments, and ſo obliged to aſſent, drawn with the cords of a man, convincing reaſons] will yet bear down and out-face us, that this is impoſſible; undertaking to demonſtrate againſt our ſenſes, to evince that what we ſee in matter of fact, or have teſtified to us as infallibly by others repeated ſenſations, cannot poſſibly be; which is not to remove us into the field, but the quarry, not to ſentence us to Nebuchadnezar's, but to Niobe's transformation; whilſt ſhe had her animal faculties unpetrified, ſhe was able by walking to confute the Mountebanks demonſtrations againſt motion, and believe the ſnow white in deſpight of the other as demure artificers evictions that it was black, but when no evidence can poſſibly be given to oblige her underſtanding, then certainly her ſoul both ſenſitive and rational, hath undergone its ἀπαλλοίωσις, And Arrian hath but abuſed, in telling us, that none but the Practical faculty is capable of that metamorphoſis. But I hope we may plead our cauſe before we be thus more than condemned to the mines, even to be parts of them our ſelves, and treatably propoſe our caſe to any other Romaniſt, and deſire him to be Umpire between us.

4. What if the Proteſtants (I may make ſuppoſitions for arguments ſake) ſhould undeniably prove, that the Popes themſelves for four Centuries did not ſo much as pretend Univerſal Paſtourſhip, that all the Texts of Scripture which are now brought for it, did in their opinion conclude no ſuch matter, that the four firſt General Councils, the authentick conſervatories of Apoſtolical Tradition, did inſtead of atteſting or favouring, give manifold prejudices againſt it; were it now utterly impoſſible that theſe, and innumerable ſuch like (joyned with this advantage, that no argument of any ſolidity were after ſixteen hundred years leiſure of ſearch, produced to the contrary) ſhould oblige the underſtanding to believe that this authority were uſurp'd? I ask not whether theſe are actually produced by us, nor if they were, whether S. W. would believe them, not whether (ſuppoſing his pretended demonſtration to the contrary, to be before-hand by himſelf aſſented to) it were poſſible for whatſoever evidence to oblige his underſtanding; I know not what withes can hold, or bind Sampſon, before his locks are cut, whilſt his new kind of Nazarites-vow is on him; But, I ſay whether there may not ſome tolerable underſtanding be found, which ſhall not be able to reſiſt, and ſo ſhall be bound and obliged to believe ſuch evidences.

5. If this be poſſible, there is then no truth in his ſeventh ground; If it be demonſtratively impoſſible, he is obliged in charity to his ground, to perfect his demonſtration, if it be but by way of additional ſupply to the defects of Ruſhworth's Dialogues, which I think hath not had leiſure to demonſtrate fully this vulgar problome. This I am forced to importune, 1. becauſe 'tis certainly of concernment to me, who would not always be a combating with gyants, battering impregnable forts, attempting impoſſibilities, and ſhould hope my fondneſs to the Gallies were ſo moderate, that I might be content to be manumitted, and not defie or diſclaim that reſt, and acquieſcence of underſtanding, which a rigorous demonſtration ſhould commend to me; 2. becauſe in the two pages, which are here annex'd for the proof of this ſeventh ground; my underſtanding doth not diſcern its obligation to believe that it is yet evidenced. I muſt be fain to give an account of my dulneſs in this particular, leſt it be thought affected.

6. His firſt proof is taken from the caſe of the Reformers, whoſe words, ſaith he, could not in any reaſon be imagined evident againſt ſuch an univerſal verdict of the whole Church they left, and particularly of all the learned men in it, incomparably and confeſs'dly more numerous, and as knowing, as any have been ſince. But I take it, this is far from a demonſtration in many reſpects. That, if it be truely ſo called, muſt consist of nothing that is not true, immediate, and so necessary; whereas here be no fewer than five questions which may very problematically at least be disputed.

7. As 1. if those whom he calls first Reformers, were actually and properly so styled, yet 'tis, questionable, whether they left the whole Church, or indeed any part of it, untill (and 'tis impossible they should, after) they were inexorably sentenced, and cast out of it. 2 Whether for the Universal Pastourship as constituted in St. Peter and his Successours by Christ, an Universal Verdict of the whole Church were then produced to them; it being not demonstrated, 1. that all that was producible, was produced to them; nor 2. that the verdict of the whole was with any truth producible this way, for that must imply, that either the Greek Church was of this mind, or that it was no part of the whole Church; nor yet 3. that the Negative decision of the Universities, Monasteries, whole Clergy of England, and the united profession of all men and women in this Kingdom, that by the Laws of God and the Nation, the Bishop of Rome had no such right in this Nation] was reconcileable with the whole Churches verdict for the Affirmative. 4. That the French Church was then included in that universal verdict, (not to mention others also.)

8. Thirdly, whether S. W's meaning, when he saith, [whose words could not in any reason be imagined evident] be this, that their bare words, without any authority of reason to back them, i. e. their bare confirmed affirmations, could not be imagined evident; or whether 2. by their words] may be understood the Testimonies against the Pope's pretended authority, produced by the Bishops about the time of the extinguishing Act, and that he resolve that those could not in any reason be imagined evident; or whether 3. his meaning be somewhat else, which I cannot divine at? If it be the first, then though I doubt not but their words, if but bare words, might be evident, as that signifies intelligible, yet supposing that not to be his meaning of the Predicate, I shall onely mind him of the subject of his proposition, that I imagine not the evidence to belong to their bare affirmations, but the Testimonies by them produced to confirm their sense; Secondly then, if by their words] he mean plainly these their testimonies, then what impossibility is there in imagining those testimonies might be evident (I say not were, but might be) which being not taken into consideration at all (not so much as produced) by S. W. may possibly have more force in them of evidence, than he can yet, before he consider them, be qualified to imagine. But if his meaning be somewhat, which I cannot divine, then how can that be demonstrative to me, which is not to me, perhaps no more to others, intelligible?

9. Fourthly whether both the Universities, the Greater Monasteries, and all the Clergy of England that then were, before the Extinguishing Act came out, were no greater barr to the extensive style of [All the learned men in the Church] than they were before to the supposed verdict of the whole Church, for though they were no considerable part of the one, they might be of the other.

10. Fifthly, whether in the comparison here proposed between the number and knowledge of learned men in that age, and since, wherein, for the number, that age is said incomparably and confess'dly to carry it from all succeeding ages, and for the knowledge to equal them, his meaning be of those of that age in this Nation that asserted the Universal Pastourship compared with all others of the same, since that time, that have profess'd learning among us? some ground there may be for this slight question, because the learned men of one age, are not probably so numerous, cæteris paribus, as of many, at least the learned men, which were neither members of the Universities, chief Monasteries, and whole Clergy in Convocation (who were unanimous against the Pope's pretensions) are not readily supposeable to be quite so numerous, as the whole diffused society of all the learned men of an age together.

11. If he will consider these questions, he will find that something may possibly be said by a good manager on each of them, though I, whom S. W. hath sent to preach, and not to dispute, be resolved incompetent for it, and therefore shall not take that task upon me. But still because another may, and the matter appears not uncapable, here are competent prejudices against the demonstrative efficacy of this first proof of his.

12. But he rests not in this, he hath another eviction for it. They pretend not, saith he, to any evidence from natural principles, concluding demonstratively that the former Government was usurp'd, nor yet from Oral Tradition, since their immediate Forefathers delivered them other Doctrine, else the Reformation could never have begun, against our common supposition; their grounds then must be Testimonial proofs, from Scriptures, Fathers, or Councils, which being manifestly liable to be interpreted divers ways, no sufficient assurance can be pretended hence, without evidencing either more skill to fetch out their certain sense, or more sincerity to acknowledge what they knew, than was in the Church they left———] Here again we must apply the tube, and work very narrowly, ere we shall discern the demonstration.

13. For 1. I suppose 'tis not a fault that we pretend not to natural principles for a matter of divine Revelation; that we must leave to Rushworth's Dialogues, which hath the Monopoly of demonstrating all the Romanists Religion, from common notions, for which we short-sighted preachers must content our selves with the directions of one Text of Scripture, that Faith cometh by hearing, and that by the word of God, and nothing else, i. e. divine Revelation.

14. Secondly for Oral Tradition, as that is distinguish'd from what we fetch from testimonial proofs, 'tis no otherwise impossible, that they which extinguish'd the Papal power here, should be able to avouch that, than because that were not reconcileable with their beginning the Reformation; but this hath already appeared to be a very wateriſh colour, far from real and demonstrative, when neither they that extinguish'd the Papacy, were called Reformers, but the Act declaratory of former right and common custome of England, not introductory of new Law; nor 2. if they had been called Reformers, would it follow, that their forefathers taught them other Doctrine; they might retrench the Pope's pretensions, and undeceive some seducible followers, without teaching contrary to the doctrine of their forefathers.

15. Thirdly then, for Testimonial proofs of Scriptures, Fathers and Councils, if those were the onely evidences our Forefathers made use of, there is yet no impossibility, but they might be so tendred, as to convince and so oblige the understanding.

evidences

16. For example, if the Apostolical Canon shall tell us, that the πρῶτον ἐν ἑκάστοις ἔθνεσι, the first or Primate among the Bishops of every Nation shall be accounted ὡς κεφαλὴν, as their head, and that every one of those Primates shall ἐκεῖνα μόνα πράττειν, doe onely those things ὅσα τῇ ἰδίᾳ παροικίᾳ ἐπιβάλλει, καὶ τῶν ὑπ' αὐτὸν χώρας, which belong to his province and the Regions under it, and that God shall thus be glorified through the Lord Jesus Christ in the holy Ghost; and again, that he that is excommunicated in one City, shall not be received in another without commendatory Letters from the former; and again, that it shall not be lawfull for a Bishop leaving his own Province, εἰς ἑτέραν ἐπαρχίαν, to invade another's, unless there be a sufficient cause forcing him to it, and this too, ἐξ ἰδίου ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ, not of himself, but by the κρίσιν πολλῶν ἐπισκόπων, καὶ παράκλησιν μετὰ σπουδῆς, the judgment and vehement exhortation of many Bishops, where if κρίσις judgment do signifie, as the Scholiast reasonably resolves, συνοδικὴν γνώμην, a Synodica sentence then the many Bishops must be no less than a Council of Bishops; and if in pursuance of these grounds Apostolical, and καλὸν τὸν κανόνα τὸν διαῤῥήδην τα, according to the Canon thus pronouncing, the first Nicene Council shall decree, τοὺς ὑπ' ἑτέρων ἀποβληθέντας ὑπ' ἐτέρων μὴ προσίεσθαι, that they that are cast out by some shall not be received by other Bishops, and that this must be observed κατὰ τὰς καθ' ἑκάστην παροικίαν ἐπισκόπους, by the Bishops through every Province; And when in a farther harmony of accord, the Milevitane Council shall expressly prohibit all appeal from their Bishops, but to the African Councils, and Primates of their own Provinces, and that they which shall appeal to any foreign whether Bishop or Council, shall not be received to Communion by any in Africk; and when the practice of all this is visible in the Synodical Epistle of the African Council to Pope Celestine (as is to be seen both in the book of Canons of the Roman Church, and the Greek collection of the Canons of the African Church) where they beseech him τὸ λοιπὸν, for the future, that he will not receive to his Communion, those that come to him from them, being excommunicate, ἐπειδὴ τοῦτο καὶ τῇ ἐν Νικαίᾳ συνόδῳ δεδεῖχθαι εὐχερῶς εὕρῃ, because he may easily find it defined in the Council of Nice; If, I say, upon one such collection of Testimonial proofs, from the most unquestion'd and obliging Canons, and the like concurrence of innumerable Primitive writers, our Ancestours did actually conclude, that there lay no place for appeal from the Bishop of any Diocese in England, but to the Primate of Canterbury, that the Pope was not to meddle among us, but upon the sentence and importunate intreaty of a Council of Bishops, and that 'twere a crime censurable with excommunication, to acknowledge any foreign (such was the Papal) Jurisdiction, my question now is, whether this evidence cannot possibly oblige the understanding to believe, that authority was usurp'd, which was assumed by the Pope in direct opposition to all these Canons?

Apost. Can. 34. Ap. Can. 12. Can. 14. Nic. Can. 5. Can. 22. Non provocent nisi ad Africana Concilia, vel ad Primates provinciarum suarum, ad transmarina autem qui putaverint——

17. If it cannot possibly oblige, that impossibility must proceed either 1. from some abrogation of the Canons; or 2. unintelligibleness of the obligation; or 3. unlawfulness of the matter arising from a contrariety to some other valid Law, or from some repugnance in nature) or 4. from some other hindrance of equal (or greater) weight with any of these; but there is no place for any one or more of these pleas, therefore I may conclude, no foundation for this pretended impossibility.

18. For the first, the Canons recited are all received and continue in force, in the very Roman Codex, and so cannot by them be pretended to be invalid, and to some of them the Pope himself makes Oath, that he will inviolably observe them, see the Diurnal Book of the professions of the Bishop of Rome, in Corp. Jur. Can. Decret. par. 1. dist. 16. c. 8. And from that very Oath of the Pope, our Bishops then made this very conclusion, that the Popes, that exercised a primacy over any other Bishops but those of their own Province in Italy, transgress'd their own profession made in their creation, as hath been * elsewhere shewed from the institution of a Christian man, in the year 1537.

* Tr. of Schism. p. 105.

19. For the second, the intelligibleness of the obligation, that hath already appeared from the Nicene Fathers citing it from the Apostolick Canon, and the African Fathers from the Nicene, which they could not have done, and withall advertised the Pope, that he might εὐχερῶς very readily, and with a wet finger find it there, if like the Sybills or other enigmatical Oracles, the words had no obvious sense belonging to them, or such as an ordinary understanding could not possibly receive and assent to.

20. Thirdly for the unlawfulness of the matter in any respect, that can no otherwise be pleaded, than by charging the Writers of the Apostolick Canons whether Apostles, or Apostolical persons, and so again the Council, for enacting sacrilegious Decrees, yea and the Pope also for swearing the inviolable observation of them. As for any fourth kind of hinderance beyond these, all that I can say is, that I cannot foresee nor consequently forewarn my Reader of any such. And here it may be worth adverting which of these hinderances, or obstructions to the obliging the understanding it is, which S. W. hath chosen to pitch on, even that which all others would by some men have been least expected of him, as being most extremely void of the least probability (the reason I suppose, not because this was seemly pretensible, but because his seats of arguments are most of them this way, as some men have vehement prejudices, and arguments against any science they have not much dealt in) viz. that these testimonies are most manifestly lyable to be interpreted divers ways, as, saith he, appears de facto.]

21. But 1. where doth any such fact appear, both for these, and for all the like Testimonies, that have here formerly, or elsewhere been produced by us? Or to omit that, because I know 'tis in any ill man's power to attempt to deceive, and so to misinterpret, I demand, Is that unjust, irrational fact (a precedent for the confounding of all that is most sacred, whether divine or humane) able to prove demonstratively, that the testimonies are really lyable to it? Nay, are they not as secure from it, as plain words that have no ambiguity in them can make a plain matter of ordinary practice? May not I as well say, that the plainest proposition in Euclide, when 'tis read there, is lyable to be misinterpreted; nay, that the most common notion, when 'tis once put into words, is so too, as [that twice two makes four] &c. For if a man should come out of Bedlam, and say that four in his Dictionary denotes but three unites, or that two signifies two decads, but four is four unites, it is certain that this propoſition is then de facto miſinterpreted, and by the ſame proportion may theſe, and many the like Teſtimonies, of which without hyperbole I may aſſume, that by the ſame arts, that S. W. ſhall be able to reconcile them to the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, as in his four firſt grounds he hath ſtated it, any man ſhall be able to interpret S. W.'s words wherein he doth this, to ſuch a ſenſe, as ſhall render him extremely oppoſite to the Papacy.

22. Meanwhile I ſhall lay it up among my Obſervations, though it be no more than this, that the univerſal liableneſs to be miſinterpreted, not of theſe onely which I have been ſo weak to produce, or of any particulars, but of Teſtimonies at all adventures, of whatſoever Teſtimonial proofs wordiſh Teſtimonies, as he * ſtreightway calls them, is the one medium of S. W.'s demonſtration, that no evidence can poſſibly be given by the Proteſtants obliging the underſtanding—— 'Tis, it ſeems, onely the Oral Tradition, the Child's hearing his Father ſay it, that his Father hath ſaid it, and not reading it out of an hundred books of all his firſt and moſt creditable anceſtours, that is of any conſiderable authority in this matter. But why a man may not underſtand, what he reads, as well as what he hears, or miſinterpret what he hears as well as what he reads, and why frequent fact makes not this apparent, as well as the other, I foreſee another opportunity ere long to examine with him.

* P. 44.

23. At the preſent I demand in behalf of him that ſubjects his underſtanding to the force of eaſie words, and by that means believes many ancient teſtimonies, brought againſt the Pope's ſacred authority, (which is no more arrogance, than to believe what he thinks evident, and knows not how to diſbelieve, without queſtioning the truth of the teſtifier, which alſo he hath not the leaſt reaſon to queſtion) what neceſſity ſhould be incumbent on this man to evidence either his own greater skill, or that his ſincerity is greater than was found in the Church (that leaves him, or he is forced to leave) or in any one ingaged advocate of that Church? that he muſt be thus inſolent, that he is by his very undertaking obliged to aſſume one of theſe, and having aſſumed, to evidence it, is the laſt part of this demonſtration, which S. W. hath not yet perfected, though it want his hand, as much as any of the former, whereon his pains were laid out; at his beſt leiſure I preſume to expect his ſevere evidences for it, not diſcerning, as yet, the force it hath to oblige my underſtanding.

24. An Appendix to this demonſtration he thinks fit to caſt in, to add ſome weight to it, that their late Doctors and Controvertiſts have not feared to anſwer all theſe teſtimonies, and produced a far greater number, and not ſo behaved themſelves therein, that the indifferent part of the world have held them nonſenſical, which ſurely they would, had they deemed the other a perfect and rigorous evidence.] But ſure neither is this demonſtrating; It neither appears to S. W. what the indifferent part of the world think, nor to me, whom he will allow to be the indifferent part of the world; ſure not the whole Eaſtern Church, whoſe Delegates in the Council of Florence charged the introducing of new articles of downright madneſs; none that they have caſt out of their Communion; none that living within it, diſlike (as the French have been long ſuſpected to do) the Jus divinum of the Papacy; Who then are left to be the indifferent umpires? Of neceſſity either thoſe which have received it as an Article of their Faith, all the faithfull adherents to that Apoſtolick See, their ὁι κατὰ πάντα ὀρθογνώμονες, who are of their opinion in this, elſe could not be orthodox in all things, and theſe are very fitly pick'd out, as indifferent men to judge it on their ſide, or elſe it muſt remain that we fetch them from the Turks, or Heathens, or Jews; and bating onely that firſt ſort, thoſe that are, and muſt be of his mind, I might, I think, ſafely, (as once the like was done in a great Council) adventure my part of the controverſie to any indifferently choſen Umpire of any of the three other denominations, that doth but ſpeak the ſame language that we do, and underſtands our ſeveral pretenſions, to judge, whether the Univerſal Paſtourſhip is more clearly inferred from Tu es Petrus, and Feed my Sheep, or the contrary from the Teſtimonies I have here and elſewhere tendred to him againſt it.

25. By the way he muſt be admoniſh'd, that all indifferent men do not preſently call that nonſenſical, which they do not aſſent to, any more than they fall into other parts of S. W.'s ſtyle, when they are not perſwaded by his pretenſions. They that ſay he is a Cunning Merchant, and ſo far from nonſenſical, have as ill an opinion of his practices, and would be more unwilling to be he, than any of the beſpattered Preachers that have had to deal with him.

26. But this is not all he hath to ſay in defence of his important ground; For though he have ſome remorſe, and ſo be forced to confeſs, that if they would demonſtrate by evident and unavoidable connexion of terms from ſome undenyable authority, that this Government was unjuſt, their underſtands would in that caſe be obliged to aſſent to that inference.] Yet leſt upon ſuch a vaſt liberality as this, I ſhould make ſhift to conclude, that what may be done in ſome caſe, is not utterly impoſſible, and ſo that his Ground had confeſs'dly fail'd under him, that [no evidence can poſſibly be given by the Proteſtants——] his method obliges him to draw back his alms, before I had ſup'd it up, and ſo I behold my faireſt hopes ſoon blaſted again, for, ſaith he, this is not to be hoped as long as divers words have divers ſignifications] This is ſomewhat hard indeed, to be thus irremediably diſappointed, when I was ſo near my prize, to loſe all ſcent ſo ſoon, when 'twas at the hotteſt.

27. But methinks, 'twere yet poſſible to recover it again, for I may thus argue, that what is poſſible upon an hopeleſs condition, is at moſt but hopeleſs, not impoſſible; and therefore S. W. is really grown meek, hath for once retracted the [No evidence can poſſibly] upon which one term depended the whole demonſtrativeneſs of his ground, which if it be ſuch, conſiſts ex neceſſariis, and ſuch is not that, which may poſſibly be otherwiſe, the phraſe [not to be hoped] is a milder ſtyle, and ſuits well with a Topical argument, and a thouſand ſuch, as Mr. White hath taught us, will no more amount to a demonſtration, than a thouſand mild writers will make one ſevere or rigorous.

28. If this will not ſtand me in ſtead, to avert this diſcomfiture, I have no other reſerve, for 'tis impoſſible to except againſt his proviſo, that divers words have divers ſignifications] I cannot but be convinced of that, for [a man] is capable of ſignifying either one of the gueſts, or part of the furniture, him that ſits, and eats at the Table, or that hangs by, and is pourtrayed in the Arras, and ſo in like manner [a rigorous demonſtration] may ſignifie either according to Ariſtotle's, or S. W.'s meaſures, and import no more in the latter notion, than either a probability, or a Sophiſm, a well aſſured, yet demonſtrably infirm argumentation.

29. But

29. But neither is there any such πολύσημον, or ambiguous word in the Testimonies which I humbly have offered him; If there be, I beseech his directions, where the ambush is to be look'd for, where the ambiguous enigmatical part of the Oracle lies; I confess I cannot divine, but S. W's gifts lie this way, in making a plain testimony as perplexed as he can, and therefore if single words will be obstinate, and resolve not to be unintelligible, yet it seems by his suggestions, that sentences are great jugglers and Stage-players, never come abroad but with Vizards, or Periwigs, or false sets of teeth about them, they, saith S. W. put on different faces, or if they are not thus fully provided, yet, saith he, by relation to several circumstances in history they give us occasion to raise several conjectures, and so still though the whole matter in the issue amount to no more but this, [occasion] not just cause [to raise] though with never such violence to plain words and senses [several conjectures] several, all equally pretending, i. e. equally groundless, and when all is done, but conjectures still, yet this is enough with S. W. to preclude the poor Protestant all hope of ever obliging any others, or his own understanding by any wordish testimony, to believe any thing that S. W. will not make it lawfull for him to believe. Had this Demonstratour but a calling to his gifts, what miracles would he, nay what would he not be able to doe?

30. Lastly, If all this will not establish one ground, He hath still a reserve behind, If evidence were easily producible from such kind of wordish Testimonies, yet they would still be as far to seek for an authority whence to alledge those testimonies comparable to that of the Church they left.] But 1. what is his dislike to wordish Testimonies, i. e. (as he opposes them to Oral Traditions) Testimonies written in words? Is not this Oral Tradition, wordish Tradition, and is not that equally wordish, that is spoken, as that which is written in words? and may not that be written in my heart (as he will have it phrased also) which is transcribed thither out of the Records of a Council, as what is stored up there from my Father, or Mother, or Romish Catechists?

31. Secondly, What difficulty is there to have as good an authority as the Church of Rome is, from whence to alledge Testimonies against her? I shall make short of this difficulty; The Universal Council of Nice is as good an authority as the Church of Rome can be, or (that I know of) pretends to be, and 'tis no hard thing, as de facto hath appeared, to alledge testimonies from thence, as much as an enemy could wish, to Rome's prejudice. Nay the Church of Rome diffused in its amplitude, or collected in a Council, or contracted into a Pope, is sure of as good authority, as the Church we left, or rather cast us from them; And I doubt not to bring Testimonies that will fit my turn, from those, that are avowed, and allow'd an authority, by the consent of this Church in all these capacities; As when from the genuine Apostolick Canons, from General Councils, approved by the Pope, the Nicene and the Ephesine, yea and that of Chalcedon too (for as far as 'tis from the Pope's pretensions, he is by Oath bound to observe it inviolably) and in like manner from the Popes themselves (by the token, that Gregory wrote so many Epistles against the title that Boniface soon after him assumed) 'tis manifest we are provided with ample testimonies, which will by necessary connexion of terms infer all that we would have infer'd from them. And then what is thus visible to have been actually done, we will not be so tame, as to imagine impossible to be done, nor consequently attend to him any longer, whilst by a collection of little colours he again attempts to perswade us, against our senses, that 'tis impossible. And so much for his seventh ground.

SECT. IX.

His eighth Ground yet more severe. His notion of Testimonies. Wits to play on them. Some place sometimes for other than rigorous demonstrations. The Romanists pretended veneration of Fathers and Councils, and skill in them. S. W's unkindness to Testimonies, obliging him to think their Doctors studyed them not. The truth examined, first for veneration of Fathers. Mr. White's notion of Fathers, Cardinal Perron's censure of them. Secondly, for skill in them. The way of the Schools no friend to all the Fathers and Councils. The fends in Oxford between Grecians and Trojans. The Franciscans Library. Nothing concluded against us from the number and learning of his Doctors, or their pretended conversation in all the Fathers and Councils. As little from their sincerity. Some examples of that kind, one in the sixth African Council, about a Canon of Nice; another about the place of Theodoret for Purgatory; A third transcribed from Mr. White, about the Molinists. Corruption of our nature no argument against us. S. W's change of medium from that of Possession to Tradition.

1. THE Eighth ground is yet more severe and confounding, under this form, that The proofs alledged by Protestants against them, bear not even the weight of a probability to any prudent man, who penetrates and considers the contrary motives.] This as amazing as it is, will at large be demonstrated also; and then, what retreat possible for S. W's adversary? Our case being thus desperate, we will again trie whether our φύσει ἴσχει may not stand us in stead, and an auspicious Spring or plunge, the ultimus conatus, repell, and quit the danger; If it do, it may be a seed of long life, for I have look'd over the leaf, and see, to my Reader's joy, that this is the concluding ground of this Section.

2. It begins thus, For the proofs they alledge are Testimonies.] I answer, they are indeed; and we have been taught to call Testimonies, witnesses of a debated truth, and such witnesses (if they be ἴσαι μαρτυρίαι, competent witnesses) proofs. But S. W. it seems, hath another description of them, [testimonies, saith he, i. e. words capable of divers senses] If that be all, we hope well of the κείσει. For this is but the very trick played over before, and already discovered, and hath not so much as put on a new face, as even now Testimonies were allowed to do.

3. 'Tis

3. 'Tis therefore added in terrorem, that words are capable of different ſenſes, as they ſhall be play'd upon by Wits, Scholars and Criticks, and if S. W. be all theſe, how harmoniouſly and variouſly indeed will his Adverſary, and his Teſtimonies be ſure to be play'd upon? 'Tis no good time to ſtand at the gaze here, and examine whether as all Wits be not Scholars, ſo all his Scholars be not Criticks, for if the terms be coincident, why might not Criticks have ſtood for all three? If they be not, I ſhould not be willing the life of my Client (Teſtimony) ſhould depend upon a Jury of Wits, ſuch as S. W. which I cannot diſcover to be any deep either Scholar or Critick. But in great earneſt, doth the trade of a Controvertiſt conſiſt in this, to call for Teſtimonies, to magnifie Tradition, to make ſolemn appeals to Scriptures and Fathers, and when they are from undenyable authorities produced, then to ſend to the next Tavern for a Wit to play upon them.

4. We have now the diſcovery (drop'd from him, 'tis poſſible, before he thought of it) how it comes to paſs, what he next preſſeth, that [It is found by experience, that generally ſpeaking, their party and ours give ſeveral meanings to all the Teſtimonies controverted between us.] for if when we bring plain words, and take no pains to affix any other interpretations on them, than what either ordinary ſtyle, the law of ſpeaking, or the three parts of Grammer, πχικὴ, ἐξηγητικὴ and κριτικὴ, without any violence direct us to; the Wit, when we ſleep, enter with his falſe finger, and take out a ſmall ſyllable [not] or turn a comma, or colon into an interrogative, or tell us, the words ſignifie quite contrary to what all ordinary Readers underſtand of them, as, * ſearch the Scriptures, for in them ye think to have eternal life, i. e. ye deceive your ſelves if you think you have eternal life in them (and then we ſhall be deceived indeed, if we think, or hope to be gainers by any Teſtimony) or inſtead of theſe nicer ſubtilties, cry out upon all wordiſh Teſtimonies, at a venture tell us they are capable of divers, though they have but one ſenſe, they may be plaid upon by Wits, though the Wits have not yet been at leiſure to play actually upon them; If, I ſay, this be but part of the character of ſuch a Controvertiſt, as S. W. profeſſes to be, I ſhall not account my ſelf fitted with weapons to enter combate with him, yet think it may with any other man have the weight at leaſt of a probability (and 'tis that is denyed in this eighth ground) that what is regularly concluded from the obvious both literal and rational importance of the plain words of a written teſtimony, of undeniable authority, may be ſufficient to compoſe a debate betwixt two ſober Diſputers. For how oft ſoever I have been warned by S. W. and am in his Poſtſcript (upon peril of his treating with me no longer) ſolemnly required to deal in no other, but a rigorouſly demonſtrative way, I am ſtill obſtinately bent upon my courſe, to lie down in my Bed, at the ſeaſon of reſt, though I know 'tis poſſible the roof may fall upon me there, to eat the meat, that is ſet before me, and expect to be nouriſhed by it, though I cannot demonſtrate, that 'tis not my poyſon, to write on, till I am a little more tired, though I have no aſſurance, that one man ſhall reade what I write, and ſo to produce teſtimonies to S. W. (and ſometimes in Greek too) though it be poſſible he may find occaſion, and as he ſaith, to raiſe ſeveral conjectures, to amuſe the Reader, and inſtead of being wrought on, to exerciſe himſelf and Reader, and play upon them.

* Mr. Whites Apol. for Tradit. p. 153.

5. But if this be allowed him, that by experience 'tis found that their party and ours give ſeveral meanings to all the teſtimonies controverted between them, he hath then a medium, which will prove all irrefragably on his ſide; for 'tis manifeſt, ſaith he, that computing the vaſtneſs of times and places in which our profeſſion hath born ſway; we have had near a thouſand Doctors for one of the Proteſtants, who though they highly venerated and were well verſed in all the ancient Fathers and Councils, yet expreſs'd no difficulty in thoſe proofs, but made certain account, that all antiquity was for them.

6. But again how far is this which begins with [It is manifeſt] from demonſtrating or truely manifeſting his concluſion? Let us firſt try it by parts, every improvement of it ſingle; 1. It is not demonſtrated, that the multitude of their Doctors hath been ſo great, as he pretends. Gerſon complains of it, as of an abomination, (declar. defect. vir. Eccl.) that one held two hundred, another three hundred Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, and as that might be one, ſo we may gueſs at many other, not improbable means to leſſen the number of learned Doctors. 2. If the number were granted, yet it will not be concluded with any evidence, that if they that have had much longer time, and much larger circuit, and withall a fairer Sunſhine, by much, of Halcyon days, to beget Doctors, than the Proteſtants, have proportionably had many (be it a thouſand) more ſuch Commencers in their Schools,] then all the proofs alledged by Proteſtants bear not the weight of a probability. Are theſe materials able to furniſh out a Syllogiſm of immediate connexion of terms? 3. Will it follow, that becauſe [S. W. ſaith of his Doctors, though perhaps he hath not converſed ſo much as with the writings of half a thouſand of them, that they ever highly venerated, and were well verſed in all the ancient Fathers and Councils] therefore they did indeed ſo venerate, and were well verſed in all of them? In this place, firſt I muſt mind the Reader, who 'tis that ſaith it, even S. W. that * not long ſince having commended his adverſary for unwearied induſtry, and looking into ſuch variety of authours, not onely tells him, what rare productions half that induſtry might be mother of, if employed by ſome ſtrong brain in a rational way, but withall gives him no obſcure intimation, that this way of teſtimonies is not in it ſelf much eſtimable. And then, if thoſe Doctors brains were indeed weak; what advantage would it have been to them, to have laid out the moſt unwearied induſtry in Fathers and Councils? the height they ſhould have arrived to, would have been, but ſome declamatory proofs, ſome ſlight quotation arguments, as he there ſaith; But if their brains were ſtrong, they muſt have been, in all obligation of conſcience, employed in the rational way, as that is viſibly oppoſed to reading or producing of teſtimonies, (i. e. all the Fathers and Councils, which are the fountains of thoſe Teſtimonies) And if it were ſo ſcandalous an errour in courſe of ſtudy, thus to have miſpent their time in this converſation, methinks S. W. ſhould have ſo ill an opinion of his friends, as to conceit, they highly venerated, or were well verſed in all them.

* P. 19.

8. If this have no more force with him, I muſt then apply my ſelf more immediately to his propoſition, that they ever highly venerated and were well verſed, &c.] The former part of which, that reſpects the high veneration, at firſt ſight is diſcovered to ſignifie nothing, by the good token of Memnon's Statues, which had all their veneration by not * being convers'd with, or the mysteries of the Heathens, which were moſt venerated by thoſe which knew leaſt of them, and ſo there might be the fewer Epoptæ, † veri arcani conſcii, the more veneratours there were. But even for thoſe of them that have known moſt, 'tis not uneaſie to diſcern what ſolid veneration they have afforded the Fathers; For firſt if Mr. White be to be heeded, there lies ſuch an equivocation in the word Fathers, as being diſcovered, will bring this matter to a ſpeedy iſſue, (as far as belongs to all the Fathers, in our preſent notion of them) for when he learn'd Latine, Pater, * ſaith he, ſignified the immediate Progenitor of the Son, and St. Paul is cited for it, telling his Converts they had no Father but himſelf, becauſe he had in perſon begotten them in the Goſpel, and though by ampliation, this word hath included alſo the parents of our Fathers, and upwards even to Adam, yet how it comes ſo to ſignifie the moſt remote, as to exclude the neareſt, is, ſaith he, beyond his skill in Grammar] and more to this purpoſe to bring down the notion of Fathers from that of the Primitive Fathers of the Church or ancient Doctors onely (as when the Romaniſts themſelves call St. Bernard ultimum Patrum, the laſt of the Fathers) to his immediate Romiſh Anceſtours, his Mothers, rather than Fathers, as elſewhere his Grammar of exact ſpeaking directs him to ſtyle them; and if theſe do not joyn with thoſe remoter Fathers, we know how little ſhall be attributed to thoſe. And then it matters not much to our preſent diſcourſe, what veneration their Doctors be deemed to afford to all the (in this notion of) Fathers, (and indeed S. W's way of Oral Tradition well hardly admit of any other.) He knows well enough, that there are Fathers of the Countrey as well as the Family, and again, Grand and firſt, as well as the laſt and immediate Fathers; ſo there are by analogie, the Fathers of the whole Church, Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and their Succeſſours, thoſe, which by advantage of living neareſt their times, and receiving th ir Doctrine from them, without mixture, are more competently qualified to teſtifie of it, than thoſe that live at the utmoſt poſſible diſtance from them; And when to this propriety, the uſe alſo of the ſtyle is added, and the title of the Fathers] in common ſpeaking of Papiſts as well as Proteſtants, appropriated to thoſe ancient, and not to theſe modern Fathers, I ſhall ſtill hope we may be allow'd to uſe the word in this notion, yet not confining it to the ages ſimply firſt, but to all thoſe that maintain the line of Doctrine from them without additions of their own, which whether the Rom niſt parents be guilty of in theſe latter ages, is now the queſtion, and till it be decided, excludes them; if the Grammatical notion of the word do not, from the number of the Fathers. If there be yet any doubt of this, I ſhall to his quotation from St. Paul return that other from our Saviour Mat. XXIII. 9. Call no man Father upon earth, and ask whether by the force of that Text all that cannot approve (not onely pretend) their Doctrine to come from heaven, be not excluded from that title, and conſequently their preſent Romiſh Fathers, if they have no better evidence for themſelves than that they had it from their immediate Anceſtours, which we know is Mr. White's Tradition Oral.

Memnon's

10. But then for thoſe Romaniſts that have taken the Fathers in the ſtricter notion, onely for the ancient writers of the Church of Chriſt, and declamed at others for Innovatours, what ſubſtantial Reverence have they afforded them, when they ſeem not to favour their intereſts? Witneſs their Great Cardinal Perron, who certainly was as converſant in them, as moſt of the Romaniſts, and profeſſed ſeveral times that he had done the Church of Rome eminent ſervice in this kind, invented anſwers to the teſtimonies of the Fathers (brought by the Proteſtants) which were perfectly new, and had * never any authour before him; How agreeable to veneration this inventing of new anſwers to their teſtimonies was, I take not on me to judge; The paſſages in him that I meant to refer to, are ſuch as theſe, that the Fathers in their writings againſt the Gentiles ſaid oft thoſe things, not which they did believe, but diſſembling or diſguiſing them, ſaid thoſe things which ſerved their cauſe to refute the Gentiles objections, and much more to the ſame purpoſe, † upon the head of invocation of Saints, that he might give ſome kind of account, why the firſt Chriſtian writers never ſpake as the Romaniſt would have men believe, on that ſubject, intimating hereby not obſcurely, the two great (ſaith he, but ſeeming) accordance between the modern Roman practice, and that of their Gentile Anceſtours, which when another Romaniſt, Ludov. Vives ingenuouſly confeſs'd to be real, or the † difference to him inviſible, the Inquiſition was to paſs on ſuch plain dealing, and the words were appointed to be left out by the Lovane Divines, wherein the Paris Edition of St. Auguſtine 1613. hath readily obeyed them. But this by the way.

quod ſit diſcrimen inter illorum opinionem de ſanctis, & id quod Gentiles putabant de Diis ſuis. Not. in Auguſt. de Civ. Dei, l.8.c.27.Edit. Baſil.Col.494. B

11. I ſhall no longer inſiſt on this Theme, 'tis ſure ſuch veneration as this, is no argument of what even now was preſumed, that they made certain account that all antiquity was for them; If they did, there would have been leſs need of ſuch extraordinary new anſwers of that Cardinal.

12. For the latter then, their being well verſed, &c. before the truth of it will be acknowledged demonſtrative, the quantity of the indefinite propoſition muſt be reſolved, for elſe he knows it will not be argumentative; and if upon inquiry it be found to be but particular, 'twill then fail ſtill of being demonſtrative; Is it then univerſally true, that all the Romiſh Doctors ſuppoſing them to have had near a thouſand to one of ours, were very well verſed in all the ancient Fathers and Councils, in the ages before Printing came into the World, or in the Century next preceding the Extinguiſhing Act?

13. Perhaps in the mention of all the Fathers and Councils, the Scriptures were purpoſely left out, leſt we ſhould have heard of ſome one, or more ſuch, as Andreas Caroloſtadius, that had been a Doctor of theirs, of good (above ſeven years) ſtanding, before he read the Bible; and conſidering how little the people are allowed to know of it, we need not wonder, if there were more Doctors of no higher form in that kind of knowledge.

14. But even for learning leſs profound than that, or of all the Fathers and Councils, we may be allowed to make ſome queſtion, if we conſider their own complaints, how little that was taken notice of for ſome time, in the beſtowing of ſpiritual promotions; Alfonſus de Caſtro laments the ſtate of the Church under * Popes plainly illiterate, and not a few, but many ſuch; And when ſome have aſcended that higheſt throne, at the age of ten, and eighteen years old, and having ſo little themſelves, cannot be preſumed to have been any paſſionate advancers of learning; when we cannot but have heard

* Ideo Splendebant quia non viſebantur. Tac.

† Contenti ſint ad veneracionem figuris defendentibus à vilitate ſecretum, Macrob. in Som. Scip. l. 1. c. 2. Macrob. Ibid.

* Dailles Arts Diſcov. p. 182.

* Author ante me nullus, &c. ad Bellarm. ſee Bellarmine's life, l. 2. c. 7. R. 3.

† P. 1044, 1045.

† Divos Divaſque non aliter venerantur quam Deum. Nec vel deo in multis

* Multos Papas adeo illiteratos, ut Grammaticam penitus ignorent. l. 1. de Hær.

heard of beardleſs youths and School-boys, ſitting in great gravity in Councils; when 'tis preſs'd (as none of the leaſt grievances of our Church under the Papacy) by Peter Caſſiodor about the year 1250. that the † good Paſtors were removed, and the Pope's Nephews and Kindred and others advanced, ſome not knowing letters, mute and d'af, as he phraſeth it, not underſtanding the bleating of the Sheep: and this no peculiar infelicity of that time, but 180 years after, one of the complaints ſent from this Nation to the Council of Baſil, was, * that puberes vix facti, they which were but boys are admitted to the higheſt dignities of the Church, and yet nearer our times, 120 years after that, (in the year 1550.) Franc. Duarenus, a Romaniſt, and learned Lawyer of France, † makes the obſervation principally of the age wherein he lived, that Biſhopricks and Prieſtly Offices uſed to be conferr'd on the moſt unlearned, and thoſe that were far from Religion; and (which is of a more comprehenſive importance) the Court or Parliament of Paris among their reaſons given to King Lewis the eleventh, againſt the abrogation of the Pragmatick Sanction, * mentions this for one, that by the continual applications to Rome for the preferments of the Church, † Scholaſtici conventus, & Univerſitates ſtudioſorum deſolatæ ac deſertæ jacebant, The Scholaſtick meetings, and Univerſities of Students lay deſolate and deſerted; When ignorance was proclaimed the Mother of devotion, and Mr. White himſelf, at this day, a prime Luminary, in an age of noon-day light, can deſcend from his great learning to give many good words to the Colliers Faith, believing as the Church believes, and hath not yet demonſtrated, that either the learned'ſt Doctor is bound to believe any otherwiſe, or conſequently to impoſe this ſo ill method of ſtudy, as a penance on himſelf, to be well verſed in all the Fathers and Councils, or any other ſort of wordiſh writings of dead men; In a word, when common fame is ſo ready to give in its ſuffrages telling us of whole ages ſo ſcandalouſly ignorant, that Paſquil the marble Pillar in Rome, can tell Pope Eugenius, from the voice of the people,

Complures quoque Epiſcopos——
Ipſo me mage ſaxeos videmus, that a multitude of Biſhops were ordinarily to be ſeen more ſtony than himſelf, we may then take leave to adviſe farther before we yield, what S. W. cheaply aſſumes, that near a thouſand of theirs to one of our Doctors were all well verſed in all the Fathers and Councils; eſpecially when it is known to have fallen out ſo unluckily, that the Biſhops, and others in Henry the Eighth's days, which concurred in the Exterminating Act, were learned beyond any example of former times, and did teſtifie their converſation in Fathers and Councils by what they wrote againſt the Papacy in that point, more than all their Anceſtors had done before in defence of it.

15. In brief, for other parts of the World, I appeal to Eraſmus (that lived in the wane of thoſe dark times, and was a competent judge of abilities) whether the way of the Schools, even that which S. W. profeſſes, St. Thomas's way, was really experimented to ingage men in the ſtudy of any (that is much leſs than all) the Fathers and Councils.

16. And for our Nation, a little ſearch into our Antiquities, if it be but in the Univerſity of Oxford, as famous as any other, * Æmula Pariſienſis, and, † the fountain and mother of our Chriſtian Faith, will give us ſome light; for there we have the memories of the bitter feuds betwixt the Grecians and the Trojans, implacably purſued for ſome time, till it was compoſed at length by Sir Thomas More's Letter, and the interpoſition of his authority; This aſſures us, that even thus late (what think we then of the Century foregoing?) a competent part of the Doctors had not much Greek; and were not all of them rarely qualified for converſation with all the Ancient Fathers and Councils, when S. W.'s Reader may have heard, that very many, if not the moſt eſtimable, and venerable of them, were written in that language, which was a Barbarian to ſo many of thoſe Doctors? This I take to be ſomewhat near demonſtrating, that they that were avowedly but Trojans, that underſtood no Greek, as they had not the gift of Tongues, ſo they could not work ſuch miracles, as to be very well verſed in Greek Writers.

17. And even for the Latine Fathers and Councils, a man might make ſome gueſs from the account that * Jo. Leland gives of the Franciſcans Library at Oxford, inriched by the bountifull Legacy of Biſhop Groſthead, but ſadly deſpoiled by the Friers, who, ſaith he, had filched and diſſipated all the books, but, if we may judge by ſymptomes, very little of the learning. The Records of thoſe dark times have not yet left us unfurniſhed of many other the like paſſages, which will render it probable, that all the Doctors of that age were not well verſed in all the Fathers and Councils. And for their venerable Council of Trent it ſelf, we cannot but obſerve, what the Hiſtorian tells us, in the debate about the Latine tranſlation of the Bible; There was, ſaith he, much difference between ſome few who had good knowledge of the Latine, and ſome taſte of the Greek, (but few, it ſeems, of ſuch in that Aſſembly) and others who were ignorant in the Tongues: and ſpeaking of Cardinal Cajetane as of the prime Divine of that and many more ages, unto whom there was no Prelate or perſon in the Council who would not yield in learning, or thought himſelf too good to learn of him, and of his ſtudy of the Scripture, expounding not the Latine tranſlation, but the Hebrew roots of the Old, and Greek of the New Teſtament, he adds; In which Tongues being ignorant himſelf, he employed men of good underſtanding, who made conſtruction of the Text unto him word by word——It were not difficult to inforce this obſervation, and ſhew the accordance exact in other their learnedſt Doctors of thoſe times. But I ſhall not endeavour to help this to its probabilities, but onely remind, what I have oft told him, that when this point, which we have now before us, was once ſtudied, and the Fathers and Councils conſulted in it, the whole Army of Doctors and learned men uniformly conſented to what we contend for.

18. But then 3. how is it approved to be evident, that all the Doctors expreſs'd no difficulty in thoſe proofs, or how doth this advance S. W.'s intereſts? 1. They that conſidered not thoſe proofs, could find no difficulty in them. 2. They that conſidered them, and found difficulties, might yet have motives to diſſwade expreſſing themſelves. 3. They that did expreſs themſelves, might if they were not ſentenced by them, be many of them concealed from poſterity, if they were caſt out by cenſures, and the † Alioſque nonnullos literas ignorantes, & velut mutos & ſurdos, ovium earundem non intelligentes balatum. Pet. Caſſ. de Tyran. Pont. Rom. in jura Reg. & Eccl. Angl.

* Vid. vit. Archiep. Chichl. p. 86.
† Maximè hoc ſæculo----quo Epiſcopatus & Sacerdotia indoctiſſimis hominibus & à religione alienis deferri ſolent. de Benef. l. 1. c. 11.

* Libert. Eccl. Gall. Defenſ. in App. ad Duaren. de Benef.
† Cap. LXIV.

* Mat. Paris. Ann. 1252.
† Rot. Parl. 1. Hen. VI. n. 43.

* De Scriptor. Angl. To. IV. p. 217.

Hiſt. of Coun. Trent. p. 155.

Ibid.

the noiſe of them ſo loud, that we hear of it (as ſure Biſhop Groſthead was, when he appealed from the * Pope's Court to the Tribunal of Chriſt) they might paſs for Schiſmaticks, upon the ſame account that we are put in that form. * Hen. Knighton. de eventub. Angl. l. 2. c. 15.

19. Laſtly, how is it demonſtrated, that all their Doctours made certain account that all antiquity was for the Doctrine that S. W. now defends? May not the affirming this (if it be not abſolutely falſe) be the fallacy plurium interrogationum? They 1. knew, or might know that the Pope was Biſhop of Rome by ſucceſſion from St. Peter, and St. Paul, and ſo by divine right, and by the ſame power inſtated in a Primacy over his own Province; 2. that by Canon and Cuſtome of the Church, as Biſhop of the Imperial City, he was the firſt and chief of the Weſt, ſtyled Patriarch; 3. That by his own ambition, and the advantage of Phocas's collation on Boniface III. he came to be call'd Univerſal Biſhop, and to aſſume, and exerciſe many acts of juriſdiction accordingly, and ſo in other parts by the conceſſion or connivence of Princes; and 4. that at length he began to believe himſelf, at leaſt perſwade others, that this was it (and not the bare forementioned Primacy) which was conferred on St. Peter firſt, and ſo on him by Chriſt. And they that ſaw, and were well adviſed of all this, might make account, that the firſt antiquity was for the firſt of theſe, a ſecond ſort of antiquity, after Conſtantine's time, for the ſecond of theſe; and though they knew nothing in antiquity for the two latter, might yet live quietly under thoſe aſſumers. And this is all he hath advanced by his inſiſting again on the number and learning of his Doctours.

20. For their ſincerity, he ſaith, it ought not to run in a leſs proportion, than their number, and I ſay ſo too in his very ſtyle, that it ought not; Yet becauſe he adds, he hears not it is pretended, that the contrary can be evidently manifeſted, and ſo he need not take pains to prove it, It is not amiſs ſhortly to intimate, how far this is from demonſtrative, if it be but by minding him of two paſſages which he cannot but have heard of, the one in former, the other in later times, of ſome publick cogniſance both.

21. Firſt I may be allowed to ſuppoſe, that he may have heard of the managery of the cauſe concerning the Pope's receiving appeals from Africk, in the ſixth great Council of Carthage, in debating of which, the Pope's Legates, in the name of their Maſter, alledged a Canon, of the firſt Council of Nice, and the Africans denyed there was any ſuch Canon, and upon ſending to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt for a perfect Volume of Canons, there was no ſuch Canon to be found, as the Pope's Legates alledged; I need not ask what ſincerity there was in this. I know what is anſwered to this, by the great Abetters of the Roman cauſe, Card. Bellarmine and Baronius, confeſſing that this was a miſtake, and to be rectifyed by ſubſtituting, in ſtead of the Nicene, the Sardican Canon; but firſt, this was no great eſſay of their converſation, and skill in the Councils, which juſt now was pleaded, to miſtake a Grand General Council of Nice, for the petty Sardican. Secondly, 'tis evident enough, that the Council of Chalcedon, 105 years after that of Sardice, in the reckoning of the Canons of the Univerſal Church, mentions not the Sardican at all. And Pope Nicholas the firſt writing to Photius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, teſtifies that the Greeks receive not that Council (ſee his ſixth Epiſtle in the ſixth tome of the Councils, p. 494.) reciting their words, which alſo are put into Gratian's Codex, Can. quod dicitis, 16. diſt. which ſufficiently evacuates the force of that anſwer, without farther reflecting on the quality of that Council, all the Eaſtern Biſhops being departed, and but twenty Weſtern ſubſcribing it, as Sulpitius tells us Vol. 1. Concil. and all in a manner tranſacted by Oſius Cordubenſis (as by the Canons appears) of whom we are told, that he had been twice excommunicated, firſt for favouring the Donatiſts, and then the Arians. But this by the way.

22. The ſecond is more freſh, in another difference of the Papal concernment, that of Purgatory, between them and the Greeks, when there was but one teſtimony, that could have any force in it to the Romaniſts conclusion, that out of Theodoret, upon examination of all his writings * he was not found to have ſaid any ſuch thing, as was by the Latines cited from him, And this was no ſecret, being by the Greeks declared to the Council of Baſil.

* Ἃ φάπε τὸν μακάριον Θεοδώρητον λέγειν, ἄνδρα σφόδρα κὰ θεῖον, κὰ μέγα ἐπὶ λόγοις ὄντα τὸ κλέος, εἰ μὴ κὰ παρ' ἡμῖν ὅπως ἠυρέθη ἔχοντα, εἶχον ἂν πνα λόγον, κὰ πῦ ἴσως ἀπολογίας ἐδέησεν. ἐπεὶ δὲ πολλῶν ὄντων τῶ ὁκείνε παρ' ἡμῖν συγγεγραμμάτων, ἐν ἑνὶ φαίνεται πώποτε εἰρηκὼς, ὑδὲ λόγε ἡμῖν δεῖν ποιῆς τὰκεῖθεν. Græc. Apol. l. 1. p. 145. 147.

23. Being thus far entred on an ungratefull ſubject, I ſhall not allow my ſelf any farther line, than by reflecting on one paſſage of Mr. White's, which may not be either offenſive or unheard of to S. W. being in his irrefragable Apology for Tradition, cited from the very Manuſcript Acts of ſome Congregations at Rome, not long before the death of the laſt Pope. The buſineſs of no ſmall concernment, and acted, † he ſaith, on one part by the choiceſt wits, and ancienteſt Scholars could be pickt out of that ſo famed ſociety (the great maintainers of the Papal Supremacy, againſt the pretenſions of Biſhops) and the manner and upſhot of the managery he gives you in theſe words [But let us hear the Pope ſpeak, Upon the 8. of July was held the ſecond Congregation, His Holyneſs began with theſe words, Nos perſonaliter vidimus congeriem locorum quam vos qui Molinam defenditis, induxiſti ex Auguſtino, & nullus inventus eſt qui faveat, imo contrarium tenuit Auguſtinus, Unde * mirum quod tot artibus utamini; And hence it ſeems they were forced to corrupt St. Auſtin to the Pope's face, the 30. of September following; which being diſcovered, the Authour dyed of melancholy and diſgrace. Again in the tenth Congregation, the ſame Pope taxed them, quod Scholaſticis maximè ſuis, non Scripturâ, Conciliis, Patribus uterentur, a ſign how ſound their way of Doctrine is, how ſincere their proceedings to defend it.] Thus far Mr. White, and methinks ſomewhat home to the preſent purpoſe, both for the way of learning (not that of the Father's and Councils) and alſo for the ſincerity, and both exemplified in thoſe men which are not deemed the leaſt eminent of the Romaniſts, and are now ſure advanced to a much higher pitch of the one (whatſoever proportion will be allowed them of the other) than was obſervable in the times before the Extinguiſhing Act; And 'tis farther obſervable, that thoſe which were thus paradigmatized for ſincerity, and that, as he ſaith, by the Pope himſelf, did ſoon obtain a definition on their ſide from the ſame Pope, the Conſtitution of Pope Innocent the 10th, An. 1653. † Apol. p. 62. * It is wonderfull you ſhould uſe ſo many artifices.

24. I ſhall make no farther additions to this out of mine own Supellex, nor examine the ſolidity of what Hildebrand the advancer of the Papacy to its preſent geatneſs, hath defined concerning the * ſanctified, as well as infallible ſtate of thoſe that Canonically aſcend that throne, that by the merits of St. Peter they are undoubtedly made holy, (and then I know not what privilege he may have, of conveying this to all that ſhall eſpouſe ſo ſanctified a cauſe.) Yet not for this, but other reaſons, eſpecially becauſe I abhor the paſſing ſentence on any man elſe, but my ſelf, I ſhall no farther reply to that head of ſincerity, than to mind him of the no perfect invincibleneſs of his demonſtration, which in this particular depends wholly on his not hearing that it is pretended that the contrary is made manifeſt, and therefore that if his adverſary ſhould now tell him, and ſo he now hear it, or becauſe many things are ſaid, which he hears not, or becauſe many things are manifeſt, which are not ſaid to be ſo, and laſtly many things might be made manifeſt, which are not, his concluſion that holds its being ſo precariouſly, and by the courteſie of ſo many caſualties is ſtill a demonſtrative concluſion of the new mode, as homogeneous to the former, as if the ſeventh and eighth Ground had been both framed, and proved by the ſame numerical S. W.

* Romanus Pontifex ſi Canonicè fuerit ordinatus, meritis Beati Petri indubitanter efficitur ſanctus. Sent. 22.

25. Meanwhile I cannot omit to take notice of one auxiliary conſideration, taken in to approve the ſincerity of his Doctours, conſidering, ſaith he, the corruptneſs of our nature, the prejudice ought rather to ſtand on the part of the diſobeyers than obeyers of any Government. And truly I ſhould think ſo too, though I did not conſider the corruptneſs of our nature, ſuppoſing 'twere, as S. W. pretends, a Government of God's erecting, a reality, and not onely a phaſm of Government; But in our queſtion I diſcern not, why the corruption of our nature may not incline ſome to aſſume, what is not their due, as well as others to deny it them. I ſuppoſe S. W. had a reach I cannot aim at, and I will not unneceſſarily diſturb him in his conſiderations.

26. At ſuch a rate of demonſtrating as this, he hath certainly gained his deſigned purchaſe, and ſo goes off the Stage with no leſs than a thouſand to one in a moral eſtimation in the means of underſtanding aright theſe Teſtimonial proofs] 'Twas but a mere charity that he did not drop a Cyphre or two more, and ſay ten, or an hundred thouſand to one, by which reckoning I cannot but yield to him, and think he hath reaſon not to take that to have any real probability, which hath ſuch vaſt odds, be it but a thouſand to one againſt it. Onely the unluckineſs of it is, that ſome things come to paſs which S. W. by giving heed to his own arguings, thinks moſt improbable, and ſo it will often be, till he hath got cure for that (ſome call it diabetick) paſſion, by which demonſtrations ſuch as they are, run from him ſo inſenſibly.

27. But I muſt look forward, and then I find by his next words that I have inſiſted too long on the ſurvey of this proof, when, though he have made uſe of it twice, for the confirming his ſeventh and eighth ground, yet he better bethinks himſelf, and (as he now ſaith) ſtands not much upon it. And if the Printer had ſpared his pains, and not ſtood upon it alſo, I might have been ſome minutes ſooner at my journeys end. 'Tis now too late to complain of it. But why is this medium, of ſo ſevere, and immediate connexion of terms, deſpiſed and caſt off, as ſoon as it hath done its beſt for him? He tells it plainly, He hath a far better game to play] It ſeems if he had not, this deſpicable creature, as mean an account as he now makes of it, ſhould have been kept up in a reputation, and traffick'd for him ſtill. And I cannot but ſay, I am half ſorry for the change, having gotten ſome little acquaintance with this medium, which took off the ruggedneſs and amazingneſs of it. But in what ſuit lies his better game? Why he ſoon tells us, he means the force of Tradition.

28. And then unexpectedly in the cloſe of a very long and tough Section, which hath coſt me at leaſt eight times as much paper, to give it the due conſideration, I muſt begin again, and as if the vaſt efficacy of Poſſeſſion were blaſted, or thunderſtruck and vaniſhed, and ſo, he could not think fit to ſtand much upon that, at leaſt on that alone, without this ſupply from another Coaſt, in comes his new trick upon the Cards, the very Idea of Ruſhworth's Dialogues, that we might not doubt from what architect his Grounds were derived to him, the force of Tradition.

29. But for this I muſt take a little breath, before I ſet to it, and though he is ſo familiar with it, as to introduce it here at the fag end of a Section, yet I muſt uſe it with more reſpect, and ſolemnly dedicate, and ſet apart a whole Chapter for it; and that I ſhall not refuſe to doe, that I may not diſappoint all his former challenges, and attempts to engage me in this point.

CHAP. III.

Of Tradition.

SECT. I.

The Doctrine of Tradition, in the way of Ruſhworth's Dialogues. The method of conſidering it. Four previous conſiderations. The Encomiums of this way, how unreconcileably large. Some faith to Teſtimonies ſo great, that more Teſtimonies cannot ſtrengthen it. Five queſtions by which to judge of the truth of the Encomiums. Canus's way of inveſtigating Tradition, a prejudice to S. W's.

1. TO advance then to the due beholding of the beauties of this Helena, the Common Miſtreſs of the Authour of Ruſhworth's Dialogues, Mr. White the Apologiſt for thoſe Dialogues, and S. W. the Diſpatcher (whether all theſe make up but one, or more perſons, is not much material) the firſt thing I conceive neceſſary, is, that we put our thoughts in ſome order, not gazing on all at once, and ſo dazling, and confounding our ſights, but diſtributing the object into its parts, and accordingly martialing our views of them. And conſidering that the full portraicture, which

in

in a large map makes up no leſs than all Ruſhworth's Dialogues, is yet ſeveral times abbreviated, and given us in little, from thoſe who are acknowledged to have fully penetrated and comprehended it, particularly in this place to the end of this Section, and in Mr. VVhite's Apology, in the firſt incounter, p. 7. and 8. I ſhall labour to direct my courſe by the ſtearage of theſe two together, and for methods ſake bound my ſelf to theſe limits.

2. Firſt, and by way of Apparatus, I ſhall take notice of the character, as that is expreſs'd by the large Encomiums, which are given of this way; and ſecondly, (that I may fit it for defining) clear it from all ambiguity, and ſeparate it from the other notion of which the word Tradition is capable, and to which 'tis ordinarily applied; then thirdly, gather the briefeſt definition or deſcription of it, and fourthly and laſtly conſider the proofs, on which it is eſtabliſhed. And each of theſe being firſt ſet down from their own writings, and then allowed their due eſtimate, will afford the Reader as diſtinct a view of the whole, as any thing but Oral Tradition (which I confeſs I have not in this matter) can furniſh him, and I ſhall then leave him, or the Roman Conclave to paſs judgment on it.

3. And firſt the Encomiums of it you have here in theſe words,—— A far better game to play, I mean the force of Tradition, which is fortified with ſuch, and ſo many invincible reaſons, that to lay them out at large, and as they deſerve, were to tranſcribe the Dialogues of Ruſhworth, the rich ſtore-houſe of them, To them I refer the Reader for as ample a ſatisfaction as even Scepticiſm can deſire. Another Encomium I ſhall tranſcribe from Sch. Diſar. p. 19. in theſe words, I doubt not but the Doctor will grant it impoſſible, that all the Proteſtants in England ſhould be fallible or miſtake in witneſſing whether 20. years agoe there were Proteſtant Biſhops in England or no, and that ſuch was the tenet and Government of the Church at that time. Yet 1000 times greater evidence have we of the indefectibility of the Churches faith, and her infallibility, As you may to your amazement ſee (if you will but open your eyes) in that incomparable Treatiſe of Ruſhworth's Dialogues.

4. With theſe two I will ſatisfie my ſelf (though there be as many more, as but caſual mentions of this matter) the truth of which it is not my purpoſe (nor would it be reconciled with any civility) to examine, but onely to conclude from thence the very leaſt that is concluſible (according to S. W's own rule) by immediate connexion of terms, that if S. VV. write as he thinks, then in his opinion, this Schem of proving the infallibility of the Church of Rome by Mr. VVhite's way, is more than clearly demonſtrative, for that which is no more than ſo, doth not ſatisfie a Sceptick, for he, we know, doth maintain his ἐποχὴ and ἀναλαμψία, i. e. his ſuſpenſe, and diſſatisfaction, againſt demonſtration it ſelf, if they that write of the Scepticks pretenſions deceive us not, or if S. VV. cannot give us better intelligence of them, than Sextus Empiricus in Pyrrho's life hath done. 2. That in his opinion this way is a thouſand times more evident than what was really done 20 years agoe, and what I ſaw my ſelf, and had the concurrent ſenſations, of all both Papiſts and Proteſtants too, that then lived, and are ready to teſtifie that I was not miſtaken in thus judging of my own ſenſations, i. e. than what many millions of men not ſo much as agreeing in any intereſts hereon depending, did unqueſtionably ſee and hear.

5. And having, I ſuppoſe, regularly inferred thus much, what hinders, but that I proceed to conclude, that this diſcovery of Mr. VVhite's, as it is the greateſt bleſſing, the richeſt Jewell, ſo 'tis the greateſt riddle and myſtery in the world, Thuanus's, or Dr. Harvey's Miſado is nothing to it. But in ſtead of owning this as my own Corollary, I ſhall onely propoſe it to conſideration, Firſt whether there be at this day on earth to humane finite underſtandings, any way of more convincing proof, than that of clear demonſtration. 2. Whether there be really any evidence of which a Romaniſt is capable, in judging of his Faith, a thouſand times greater, than that of a plain matter of fact, which many millions of men have undoubtedly ſeen and heard; He muſt remember, that evidence is the ſubject of this quere, and that to make good his affirmation, he muſt at the leaſt prove thoſe three things, 1. That the number and authority (one or both) of Romaniſts is 1000 times greater than of Proteſtants. 2. That the Romaniſts Faith is Orally teſtified to them by all theſe, as the matter of fact done in England twenty years agoe, is teſtified by all Proteſtants there. 3. That when a thing is ſo teſtified already by a number, and authority, much more than ſufficient to make it unqueſtionable, yet the addition of a greater number of teſtifiers will ſtill proportionably increaſe this evidence, ſo as one myriad being much more than enough to evidence a plain matter of fact, a thouſand myriads ſhall produce a thouſand times greater evidence, i. e. a thouſand times more than ſufficient.

6. That the proving of theſe three things are neceſſarily required of him, to conclude his affirmative of the queſtion, though I have no cauſe to doubt of his aſſent, yet I ſhall here add my reaſon, why I conceive it incumbent on him: My reaſon is, becauſe all the evidence of the concluſion inferred by Mr. VVhite's way, is derived from the teſtification, and not from the matter of the Teſtimony, or any other ſuch conſideration, the matter of the Teſtimony being the thing concluded, and therefore no part of the medium to conclude it; For example, Oral Tradition evidences to a Romaniſt by many links of ſucceſſive teſtifications, that the Apoſtles ſent by Chriſt, univerſally preach'd, and confirmed with miracles, the Doctrine of the Crede, as neceſſary to all men to believe to their ſouls health; The concluſion here teſtified and believed upon this medium of Oral teſtification, is this matter of fact [that the Apoſtles preached and confirmed with miracles this Doctrine ——] which concluſion being believed upon this teſtification onely, as all matters of fact are, and not from any intrinſick arguments from the thing it ſelf, (which are branches of the concluſion, and not mediums to infer, or evidence it) it neceſſarily follows, that the evidence of this concluſion is greater or leſs, as the teſtification is more or leſs weighty and vigorous, and receives not its increaſe of weight at all from any thing elſe. And if ſo, then 'tis evident, that to make the evidence, as he ſaith, a thouſand times greater, he muſt make good that there are thoſe circumſtances of number and authority, one or both, in the teſtification, thus multiplyed above thoſe in the other Scale, ſo far as to make it a thouſand times more evident. Now that the evidence of any one thing depending upon Oral Teſtimony, is not thus increaſable, as to be a thouſand times greater, than the evidence of another thing, which is ſufficiently and unqueſtionably evidenced, and wherein, as he ſuppoſeth, it is impoſſible that the teſtifiers ſhould miſtake, I offer him this argument, which to me ſeems to have force in it: Some things which are teſtified to us by all the Chriſtian world in all ages, are not onely not teſtified, but actually denyed and rejected as Fables by a far greater part of the men of the world in all the ſame ages. In this caſe I demand what other reaſon can be given, why, when I believe an article upon tradition of the Chriſtian world, ſo far a greater number of men to the contrary, ſhould not beget ſome leaſt dubitancy in my belief, thus founded, unleſs it be this, that the number and authority I have to depend on, is ſufficient to induce a faith ſo firm, that nothing of this kind to the contrary can weaken it in the leaſt degree; and if nothing of this kind can weaken it, then by the ſame reaſon nothing of this kind can ſtrengthen it; the reaſon holding equally on both ſides. And that the Romaniſt will conſent to this reaſoning of mine, I have this ground to perſwade my ſelf, Becauſe many of his Articles of faith are, he knows, disbelieved, upon the ſame ground of tradition, by a far greater part of the Chriſtian world (for I ſuppoſe I may ſtyle them part of the Chriſtian world, whom yet he ſtyles Schiſmaticks, the Greek Church, Abiſſines, Georgians, and Proteſtants;) and yet this no way ſtaggers or but gradually weakens his deemed infallibility; Why ſo? Becauſe he ſuppoſes he hath from the teſtification of the Church of Rome ſo compleat an evidence, that no oppoſitions of others can weaken, and then by the ſame reaſon alſo, no ſuppoſeable humane addition will have any force to ſtrengthen it.

7. A third queſtion propoſeable will be, whether the leaſt that can be affirmed of Mr. White's way will not be this, that the demonſtrativeneſs it pretends to, doth at the loweſt amount to that of a Mathematical demonſtration exactly ſuch in every link of it, ſo that the denying of any ſuch link, ſhall imply no leſs than a flat contradiction. This I wiſh may be remembred, becauſe hereafter perhaps there will be uſe of it.

8. A fourth, whether it be credible, that ſo great a jewel as this pretends to be, ſhould be withheld from the Chriſtian world for above 1600. years, and at laſt brought forth, not onely by one man that pretends not to inſpiration, but alſo in a ſlight familiar conference between two Kinſmen, Apol. p. 1. It hath been a work of great ſubtilty and labour among the Romaniſts, to inveſtigate the Traditions of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, * Melchior Canus in a ſingular manner hath travailed in it, and among other ways hath ſet down for the third, Si quicquam eſt nunc in Eccleſia communi fidelium conſenſione probatum, quod tamen humana poteſtas efficere non potuit, id ab Apoſtolorum traditione neceſſariò derivatum eſt, If any thing be now in the Church approved by the common conſent of the faithfull, which yet no humane power could do, that muſt neceſſarily have been from the Apoſtles, As, ſaith he, to diſſolve vows, remit Oaths, was not of humane power, becauſe by the Law of Nature we are bound to perform to God our Vows, and keep Oaths, and humane power cannot pardon and take away thoſe things which are due by the Law of Nature, Nec enim credi poteſt, for it cannot be believed that the Church of God hath generally aſſumed any power in thoſe things which belong to the Law of Nature, but what they had received from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, for then this were a great errour in manners, which the Church muſt not be thought guilty of. Here indeed was an extraordinary reach, to conclude a power from Chriſt, becauſe it was againſt the Law of Nature (which yet Chriſt came not to deſtroy, but πληρώσαι, to fill up and improve) which I cannot imagine any ſober man would ever have adventured on (Ocham, I am ſure, reſolves the quite contrary, that the power of Chriſt's Vicar is but limited to thoſe things, † quæ nec legi divinæ nec legi naturæ reperiuntur adverſa, which are not found contrary either to the Law of God or Nature) if this other of the Oral of the preſent Church, without any Auxiliary, would have ſalved the difficulty; and that is matter of ſome conjecture at leaſt, that it is, as was ſaid, a novell invention; and being of ſuch efficacy, 'tis ſtrange it ſhould be envyed the world ſo long.

* Loc. Comm. l. III. c. 4.

† De Juriſdict. Imp. de cauſ. Matrim.

9. The fifth, whether, if this do not make good what it undertakes, eſpecially if in the iſſue it prove ſo far from a ſolid demonſtration, that it arrives not ſo much as to a fair probability, the conſequence be not clear, that it is a temerity ſeldome exemplified in other perſons, or times, all circumſtances being conſidered, as that he that pretends it, is a rational man, and though he ſaith it not in Greek, ὃ πιθανῶς εἰπὼν ψεύδος νικήσαι δύναται, ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἀλήθειαν μετ' ἀκριβοῦς ἐξετάσεως, (Philocal. c. XXIV.) yet avows it in plain Engliſh, as oft as any, that he deſpiſeth, and diſcerns the inconcludency of a thouſand barely probable arguments, and admits of nothing in a Controvertiſt under rigorous, i. e. the moſt ſevere demonſtration.

10. Other pertinent queſtions, conſectaries of the premiſſes, I might propoſe, and likewiſe offer grounds of debating and deciding theſe, But that will better be done, when we have had particular inſpection of the way, and then perhaps there will be no uſe of it; At the preſent this may ſuffice for the firſt previous conſideration.

SECT.

SECT. II.

The ſecond previous conſideration. Oral Tradition in oppoſition to Scripture or Fathers. Mr. White's paſſages concerning Scripture, in his Apology conſonant to Ruſhworth's Dialogues. The Scales ſet betwixt S. W's way of Oral Tradition (Mr. White's invention) and ours of Apoſtolical Tradition, Scripture and Fathers. Our way eſtabliſh'd. Writing no prejudice to Tradition. This prove dby the Suffrages of the Ancients of the five firſt ages, St. Irenæus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Baſil, Auguſtine, Vincentius, Salvian, The Greek Church of the laſt Century, the Romaniſt publiſher. The practice at Nice, and Epheſus. Capreolus. Juſtinian. Mr. White. Gregory XIII. Julius Rogerius, Suarez, Abulenſis, Mr. White again, Bellarmine, Suarez again. The true notion of Tradition from Pereſius. Records overrule cuſtome. Driedo's account. S. W's three objections anſwered. Perſpicuity of Scripture. Helps for interpreting it. No advantage of Oral. The Romiſh mothers teaching written words not accuſable of muteneſs. The Scriptures want of artificial rules of demonſtration objected by S. W. So their not being written of latter Controverſies. Charity to diſſenters taught by Scripture and Councils. Their Univerſal Paſtourſhip and Infallibility deduced from Scripture by themſelves.

I. SEcondly then to clear the ſubject of our debate from all ambiguity, and diſtinguiſh it from any other pretenders, I have my directions here from the * cloſe of this Section in theſe words, [To ſtop the way againſt the voluntary miſtakes of mine adverſary, I declare my ſelf to ſpeak here not of written tradition to be ſought for in the Scriptures and Fathers, which lies open to ſo many cavils and exceptions, but of Oral Tradition] ſo frequently elſewhere. To which alſo I refer that of the Apologiſt p. 8. that this Maxime † [The Churches Doctrine is received from Chriſt, and ſtill handed along to the preſent generation] is the onely undoubted and ſelf-evident principle; and again that of the ſame hand p. 11. that A conſiderer, were it his deſign to ſet up a Religion, which he would have conſtantly and univerſally propagated, he muſt of neceſſity pitch upon this way, pronouncing, that if God hath not already taken this courſe, certainly he ſhould have done it. Which ſpeeches how untunable ſoever to ſofter ears, muſt yet be taken in good part from ſo great an Authority, and are to be underſtood, with analogy to the former, of Oral Tradition, and not of written either in Scriptures or Fathers. * Schiſ. Diſpati p. 47.

2. To this head again I refer the paſſages in this authour, which to my weaker ſenſes, ſavour much of diminution and unkindneſs (at leaſt comparative) to the Scriptures. As when he ſaith, Juſtin Martyr proved his Millinary Doctrine merely out of the Prophets, and never mentions Tradition for it (where yet by the way, he that avouched it as the Doctrine of all that were in all things of right opinions at that time, will hardly be denyable to have propoſed Oral Tradition for it, which is S. W's way though neither Apoſtolical nor Univerſal, which is our way of urging Tradition) the [merely out of the Prophets] lays blemiſh on ſuch Teſtimonies out of the Prophets, i. e. the Scriptures in compariſon of the other of Tradition. So when he ſaith 'tis a ſhamefull propoſition to ſay the Scriptures were written of Controverſies, long after their date, ſprung up in the Chriſtian world] As if it were a great impudence in a Chriſtian to think that the Apoſtles could foreſee by God's ſpirit, and obviat the hereſies which ſhould after riſe in the Church. And yet as * St. Irenæus obſerves of St. John's Goſpel, in relation to the Valentinians and Marcionites, ſo I doubt not but the Arians hereſie which after ſprung (to omit others of yet later date) might, without ſhame, be defenſible from ſome Text of Scripture, there be three that bear witneſs in heaven—and theſe three are one, I and my Father are one, and the like, which made me the more take notice of his ſuggeſtion, that he hath ground to believe that ſome learned men in Court were prevented by Arius and ſolicited into a ſecret favour of his errour, from whom 'tis likely proceeded that motion of Conſtantine to the Council for determining the point out of Scripture, and when the Biſhops contradicted not the propoſition of the Emperour in words, and (he ſaith) had reaſon for it, yet he adds, that was not to that end to which the Emperour propoſed it, viz. the ſolution of the queſtion, but to the Conviction of the Arians, and ſatisfaction of the world, where I might ask why the Arians ſhould firſt contrive underhand the determining the point by that means, and then be ſo far from wits, as to be convinced by it? and again how the world ſhould be ſatisfied with it, if that were not deemed by the world at that time the proper way of determining Controverſies? which if it might be yielded of any one age of the world, there were then alſo a determination and end of this Controverſie. Apol. p. 79. * Contr. Her. l. 3. c. 11. Ap. p. 39.

3. So when he makes the compariſon betwixt the * authority of the Church, as the living word written in their breaſts (that is the periphraſis peculiar to his Oral Tradition) and the dead letter of the Scriptures, and yet plainer, a † mute ambiguous dead writing, not quickned with reaſon and diſcourſe, and this, becauſe, as he again explains himſelf more fully, the ſtyle of the Bible is accommodated to vulgar capacities (and yet alas it muſt not be permitted to the uſe of the vulgar) and the delivery by way of plain and direct affirmation (who would then ever have thought, it had been ſo exceſſively ambiguous) without attending to the artificial rules of demonſtration (which the authour ſo much affecting and attending to, muſt be excuſed, if he ſay ſome things, that vulgar capacities cannot comprehend to have the leaſt even probable truth in them.) And as this is the ground, ſo it is the interpretation of his grand diſtribution of Profeſſours of Chriſtianity into believers of the word taught or delivered Orally, and believers of the word taught or delivered in Paper, in the beginning of his Preface to the Dialogues. As for the Dialogues themſelves, it were a long, and joyfull labour to recount, what, beyond the induſtry and ſagacity of all former writers in the world, I ſay not, Romaniſt Chriſtians, or * Tridentine Fathers (who profeſs to make uſe of Scripture teſtimonies in confirmandis dogmatibus, acknowledging God for the authour of them) but even the moſt profeſs'd enemies of Chriſtianity, Jews, and ſcoffing Heathens, (Mahumetanes have not attempted any thing of the kind) he hath compiled and heaped together, to diminiſh the conſideration of the books both of the Old and New Teſtament, on this one account of their being written, both in the Originals and Tranſlations: One ſingle * operation of his (for he hath † P. 149. * Seſſ. 4. decr. 1. * Dial. 2. Sect. 4.

hath many more that bear proportion with it) is so successfull to him, that having made one easie supposition, that there have been as many Copies taken in some age of an 100 years as there are columns in the Bible, he demands, May not we well reckon as many faults escaped in every Copy (one with another) as there are words in a Column (which he supposes to be 336) which admitted ('tis then beyond a may be, it commences certain) you will find, saith he, the number of errours in all the Copies made since the Apostles times, amount to fifteen or sixteen times as many as there are words in the Bible, and so by this account, it would be fifteen or sixteen to one, of any particular place, that it were not the true Text. And although this be but the Nephew's account in the Dialogue; who is feigned to think it too dangerous to be possible, yet the demure Uncle tells him plainly, I do not conceive you have taken your proportions too high, and hath but one exception to this reckoning, viz. that the errours of many Copies may have been the same in divers of them. Which being his onely obstacle to concluding that we might look for Scripture in Scripture, and doubt whether we meet with one true syllable of it, and this most unluckily chosen, and the least for the Christians interest of any, (for the more Copies agree in an errour, the more likelihood there is, that this errour should prevail, and supplant the truth, such accordances being not easily supposeable to be casual, or imputable to the Scribes) the Result is obvious, and of near concernment to more than † the City-wives (whom he jeers for turning their Bibles) or the * people at St. Antholins (who he thinks would stone him with their Brazencorner'd Bibles (by the figure, you must suppose, of a Leaden Ink-horn) but could not answer his argument) even to all Christians, that shall ever think it their serious interest, to keep Paganism from returning to overrun the world, or Judaism to defie Christianity; which how would they miss to do, should they use but ordinary industry, the Christian being thus deprived of the writings of Moses, his cheif weapons of defence and security from the one, and of the writings of the Prophets also, from whence Christ and the Apostles fetch'd their principal evidences and offensive arms against the other; both which, with the rest of the written word, are by the judgment of common sense, if we will heed the Dialogist's reasonings, voted to be so uncertain, that they can never be relyed on with any confidence (any more than * a beetle to cut with) against any adversary, and accordingly the † rule is given expressly, that Catholicks never undertake to convince their Adversaries out of Scripture, and so not Jews or Mahumetans, when they are such. This minds me of Mr. White's arguings against Purgatory pains being inflicted by God's vindicative justice, the very same, that will equally hold against adjudging men to the torments of hell, viz. 1. * Because there accrues no profit either to the Souls themselves, or to any other, single person, or Universe, 2. Because † neither the cause of restitution nor caution perswade it, which alone can have place, saith he, with a wise God, 3. Because the sins to which the pains are apportioned, seem not to him to be any * injury to God, for how can they, saith he, volens vel nolens? si nolenti fit, non erat omnipotens, cum vellet impedire neque potuit, volenti si factum est, injuria non est] The very Logick and Dilemma that the Ranters have lately used, to conclude all the foulest acts of men or devils, the will of God, and thence to resolve, that there is nothing culpable in them. All that I shall think fit to reply, at this time, to all this, is, in these few lines to take notice of the full image and character of immoderate opposition (ἀμετρία ἀνθρακῆς) which, so it may impugn enough the present Christian adversary, foresees not what aids it brings in to the Jew, or Pagan, or even to the Devil himself; But this by the by, I would it might have been spared.

* Dial. 2. Sect. 14. p. 130.
† Ibid. p. 129.
† P. 79.
* P. 101.
* De Med. an. Stat. p. 39.
† P. 41.
* P. 43.

4. He that will have a complete Collection of such passages for extolling the Oral, and depressing all written Tradition, must transcribe those Dialogues and the whole Apology for them, and therefore may more cheaply content himself with S. W's Epitome of it in these two expressions, 1. Positive † [the incomparable force of Universal Tradition, our onely tenour] 2. compared to the [what small merit of assent can be pretended to by words of men dead long agoe, left to be toss'd by our various expositions and criticisms, and liable to a thousand evasions——

† Sch. Disp. p. 17.

5. All that I note them for in this place, is to give the undoubted notion of the Tradition he speaks of, not so as that word properly signifies any kind of conveiance to us from the Apostles, whether by the Scriptures or the writings of the Fathers, &c. but precisely Oral Tradition, that, which, saith Mr. White, the Mothers flatter into their children, and is * the most sweet and connatural way that can be imagined to beget a firm and undoubted assent——and this still if not exclusively, yet comparatively, so as to carry it clearly from Scriptures and Fathers, which are all but dead letters and mute writings, in comparison of this which alone he looks on as God's living word.

Apol. p 10.
* P. 11.

6 The subject then being thus explain'd, and removed from all ambiguity, and the competition cleared to lye betwixt Oral Tradition, or the Mothers teaching their Children the Faith, on one side, and Apostolical Tradition conveyed to us by Scripture and Fathers, on the other, the former S. W's sole pretension, the latter conjoyned (and taking in also Oral) ours, It is not amiss in this place, before we come to the definition and fuller discussion of it, to poise the Scales a while, and consider what rational demonstrative grounds he can be discerned to have, to depress our way, of Scripture and ancient Records of the Apostles depositum, both which remain to us in writing, and are our test, to discern what belief is due to what is orally delivered us; for by this we shall be prepared to discern afterward, what incomparable force there is in his motives, to advance, and give the deference so much to this Invention, which with him hath supplanted that other.

7. Invention I call it, from Mr. White's own Profession, that it is a † path not much beaten by their own modern Controvertists, and by his telling us the beginning of it in a * slight familiar conference, and by S. W's † great comfort, that he professes to take, that the best sort of Wits begin to own their Reason in this particular, though yet he cannot but discern there be few of them. And that, me thinks, to one that acknowledges any kind of Tradition for his onely ground, should be a competent prejudice against it. But of this we shall hereafter consider more seasonably.

† Ep. Ded. to the Apol.
* Apol. p. 1.
† Schis. Disp. p. 18.

8. Let us then a while 1. establish, and 2. secure our own way, And therein first, consider the rational grounds upon which it proceeds, acknowledged to be such by the Romanists themselves, and such as in other matters bear sway with the Romanists.

9. And first for the establishing, It is by all confess'd that the whole Christian Faith hath its intire begin-beginning from the preaching of Christ, and the teaching of the Holy Ghost who should lead the Apostles into all necessary truths; 2. That the Apostles orally communicated all such to all Churches of their Plantations; 3. That their writings, as far as they are perspicuous, and as they set down these Christian Doctrines, so far they ought to have force with all Christians, the same that their words would have, if they were orally conveyed to us, there being no such difference imaginable betwixt words written, and spoken, and the reading of one, and hearing the other, as that one should found certainty of belief, and the other be uncapable of founding it. 4. That if (on supposition) there be any thing in their preachings which they delivered as necessary, but committed not to writing, yet in case we have this their delivering it competently testified by those that heard their preachings, and in case this testification of those hearers, be plainly and intelligibly conveyed to us by their own writings, or by the consentient writings of those which received it, thus delivered down to them successively from their preachings in the several Churches, we have then no more reason to doubt of the truth of these written testifications, than if they who first wrote, had orally delivered to us the same things, which they wrote.

10. This then, thus briefly deduced, is the ground why Tradition being yielded to be the onely Rule of Faith, and that nothing is to be imposed as de Fide, and necessary, but what is thus delivered by the Apostles of Christ, we think not this Tradition prejudiced or any way weakened (I need add no more to S. W.) by being committed to writing.

11. For this, it is not amiss to add the testimonies of antiquity, and I refer him in the first place to St. Irenæus in the second Century, who having in his Preface to his third book promised the Christian Reader, a * most full resistance against all hereticks, and establishment in the † sole true and vivifick faith, which the Church received from the Apostles, and distributed to her Children, tells him in the beginning of the first Chapter, that we know not that the disposition of our salvation is by any others, but those * by whom the Gospel came to us, which they then preached, but after by the will of God delivered to us in the Scriptures, to be the foundation and pillar of our faith. Thus, saith he, Matthew among the Hebrews † set out the Scripture or writing of the Gospel in their tongue; Thus Mark, the Disciple and Interpreter of St. Peter, * delivered to us in writing what was preached by Peter; thus Luke a follower of Paul, † set down in a book the Gospel which was preached by him; and afterward John——Then in his second Chapter, branding the hereticks, he sets this for the first part of their charge, that when they are found fault with from Scriptures, they fall to accusing the Scriptures, that they are not right, that they are not authoritative, because they are variè dictæ, and because truth cannot out of them be found by those that know not Tradition, for that was not delivered by writing, but by live voice. And as this was one of the hereticks foul guilts, to reject, and appeal from Scripture to Oral Tradition, so in the next words we are taught the true notion of Tradition, which next to Scripture was set up by the Church, as the rule of judging the truth, viz. That * which is from the Apostles, which by the succession of the Elders is kept in the Churches, (the descending and not revers'd Tradition) and to this the Orthodox Christians made their appeal. And then the brief of the hereticks charge is, that they neither consent to the Scriptures * nor to tradition, in which respect the slipperiness of the Serpent is there said to be their Copy. For the confounding of whom † he first opposes the tradition of the Apostles, * manifested through all the world in every Church, and for † brevity sake, not to enumerate all, in the greatest, and most ancient and known to all, the Church of Rome, founded by two most glorious Apostles, Peter and Paul, shewing there the tradition which that had from the Apostles, and the faith declared to men, coming down by successions of Bishops to his time; and so on, in those expressions of * honour to that Church, for conserving Apostolical Tradition in it, which we willingly acknowledge, was by him most justly bestowed on it; wherein he nameth the immediate successours of those Apostles, Linus, Anacletus, and Clemens, who saw and confer'd with them, and had their preaching sounding in their ears, and Tradition † before their eyes (which they could not well be supposed to have had, unless it were written) under the last of which, Clemens, the Church of Rome, saith he, wrote to them at Corinth * a writing (the first Epistle of Clemens) most sufficient and powerfull, reducing them to peace, and † repairing their faith, and declaring the Tradition which it had newly received from the Apostles. Then setting down the heads of Faith, * They, saith he, that will, may learn out of the writing it self, and understand the Apostolical Tradition, seeing that Epistle is ancienter than the false teachers; And from Clemens deducing the succession of Bishops to Eleutherius in the twelfth place, by this succession, saith he, the tradition which is in the Church from the Apostles, and the preaching of the truth is come down even to us. And this, he concludes, is a most full demonstration, that it is one and the same inlivening faith, which in the Church from the Apostles untill his time is conserved and delivered in truth. The like he instances again in Polycarpe Bishop of Smyrna in Asia, who received his Doctrine from the Apostles, and delivered it to the Church, and concludes of him that he hath * written a most sufficient or powerfull Epistle to the Philippians (the phrase, which when 'twas used before, of the Church of Rome gave occasion of Fevardentius's note, that from the beginning that Church had authority in moderating the Greek Churches, and then so had Polycarpe too) from which they that are willing, and have a care of their own salvations, may learn the character of his faith, and the preaching of truth. And though ch. 4. he ask, in

* Plenissimam adversus omnes hæreticos contradictionem.

† Sola vera ac vivifica fide quam ab Apostolis Ecclesia percepit, & distribuit filiis suis.

* Per quos evangelium pervenit ad nos, quod quidem tunc præconiaverunt, postea vero per Dei voluntatem in Scripturis nobis tradiderunt, fundamentum & columnam fidei nostræ futurum.

† Scripturam edidit evangelii, in Greek, Γραφὴν ἐξήνεγκεν εὐαγγελίου, Euseb. l. 5. c. 8.

* Τὰ ὑπὸ Πέτρου κηρυσσόμενα ἐγγράφως ἡμῖν παρέδωκε.

† Τὸ ὑπ' ἐκείνου κηρυσσόμενον εὐαγγέλιον ἐν βιβλίῳ κηρύξαντα.

* Ad Traditionem quæ est ab Apostolis, quæ per successionem Presbyterorum in Ecclesiis custoditur, provocamus eos.

* Evenit itaque neque Scripturis, neque Traditioni consentire eos.

† Ch. 3.

* In toto mundo manifestatam in omni Ecclesia.

† Quoniam valde longum est in hoc tali volumine omnium Ecclesiarum enumerare successiones, maximæ & antiquissimæ & omnibus cognitæ, à gloriosissimis duobus Apostolis Petro & Paulo Romæ fundatæ & constitutæ Ecclesiæ.

* Potentiorem principalitatem——

† Τῷ παραδοθέντι ὑφ' ἡμῶν λόγῳ

* ἐκκαταστάσιν γεγραφώς.

† Ἀνανεοῦσαν τὴν πίστιν, καὶ τὸν ληφθέντα ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων παράδοσιν κλήρου.

* Ex ipsa Scriptura qui volunt discere possunt & Apostolicam Ecclesiæ traditionem intelligere, cùm sit vetustior Epistola his qui nunc falsa docent.

* Ἐγὼ δὲ ἐπιστολὴν Πολυκάρπου πρὸς Φιλιππησίους γεγραμμένην ἐκανωτάτην, ἐξ ἧς ἂν τὸν χαρακτῆρα τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα τῆς ἀληθείας οἱ ἐνδιάθετοι καὶ φροντίζοντες τῆς ἑαυτῶν σωτηρίας μανθάνειν.

† Quid si neque Apostoli Scripturas reliquissent, nonne oportebat ordinem sequi Traditionis?

* Cui ordinationi assentiunt multæ gentes barbarorum, quorum qui in Christum credunt sine charta & atramento scriptam habentes per spiritum in cordibus suis salutem——

† Revertamur ad eam quæ est ex Scripturis ostensionem.

* Omnia talia circumscribere volens, & regulam veritatis constituere in Ecclesia——

† Abstulit à nobis dissensiones omnes Joannes dicens In mundo erat——

case † the Apostles had not left writings, must we not have followed the order of Tradition, and affirm the faith to have been * preserved in some barbarous Nations without Paper and Ink, in their hearts by the Spirit (an authority better perhaps, than S. W. knew of, for the affirming of Oral Tradition, that 'tis written in mens hearts) yet ch. 5. he † reverts to the demonstrating of the faith against the hereticks out of Scriptures; and ch. 11. resolves that St. John having preached the faith wrote his Gospel * on purpose to constitute a rule of truth in the Church, that hereticks not onely such as were in his own, but such as in that Father's time, (the Marcionites by name, &c.) were refuted by what he wrote, and by his Gospel † dissensions taken out of the Church.

12. The observations which this large transcript out of that one so Primitive a Father (a Controvertist, as well as S. W.) will yield, I shall leave the Reader to make to himself (for to S. W. I know 'tis but a wordish testimony) The least that he can, is the most that I shall conclude from it, that at that time, Scripture and Tradition Apostolical (that is not Oral) where they were both to be had, were the means of establishing truth, and that it was no prejudice to Tradition, that it was written, in order to this of demonstrating against Hereticks.

13. Tertullian in the beginning of the next age, the third Century, the greatest asserter of unwritten Traditions, where no more is to be had, doth evidently set the written first, and then, by way of supply, the unwritten. He that will better exercise his curiosity in the business of his salvation, Let him, saith he, survey the Apostolical Churches with whom the very chairs of the Apostles preside in their places, * with whom the very authentick Letters of them are recited, sounding the voice and representing the face of every one of them, and instancing in the Church of Rome, an happy Church, in which the Apostles poured out their whole Doctrine with their bloud, he saith of it, that it † mixes Law and Prophets with Evangelical and Apostolical writings, and from thence drinks the faith, and signs it with baptism, &c.

* Apud quas ipsas authenticæ literæ eorum recitantur sonantes vocem---uniuscujusque, De Præscr. Adv. Hær. c. 26.

† Legem & Prophetas cum Evangelicis & Apostolicis literis miscet, & inde potat fidem eam, aquâ signat —Ibid.

14. The same it is manifest was the rule in St. Cyprian's time, in the middle of that third Century, Ep. 74. to Pompeius, where, upon Pope Stephen's pressing Tradition to him, he replies, * Whence is the Tradition? doth it descend from the authority of the Lord and the Gospel, doth it come from the commands and Epistles of the Apostles? for God, saith he, testifies and proposes to Joshuah son of Nun, † that those things are to be done which are written, saying, the Book of this Law shall not depart from thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate in it day and night, and observe to doe those things that are written in it (God it seems then thought that written words might be intelligible, and the rule of their lives) * If then it be commanded in the Gospel or contained in the Epistles, or Acts of the Apostles, Let this divine and holy Tradition be observed; But * if in all former times it be no where commanded nor written, what obstinacy, what presumption is it to prefer an humane Tradition before God's disposing? Adding that † Custome without truth, is but antiquity of errour; and concluding, that it is the duty of Priests that kept God's Laws, that * if in any particular the truth totter, or be ready to fall, they revert to the beginning in Christ and the Gospel, and Apostolical Tradition (not what the present age teaches) and from thence let the reason, saith he, of our action arise, whence our ordination and beginning (of our Christianity) arose.

* Unde est ista Traditio? utrumne de dominica & evangelica authoritate descendens, an de Apostolorum mandatis atque Epistolis veniens?
† Ea facienda esse quæ scripta sunt.

* Si aut in evangelio præcipitur, aut in Apostolorum Epistolis aut Actibus continetur——observetur divina hæc & sancta traditio.

* Si retrò nusquam omnino præceptum est, neque conscriptum, quæ est ista obstinatio, humanam traditionem divinæ dispositioni anteponere?

† Consuetudo sine veritate vetustas erroris est.

* Si in aliquo nutaverit aut vacillaverit veritas, ad originem dominicam & Evangelicam & Apostolicam traditionem revertamur. Inde surgat actus nostri ratio, unde & ordo & origo surrexit.

15. Here certainly Tradition, if truly so called, was conceived to refer to the Authours in the first place, and to the remains of them that were in writing (and so to the wordish testimonies so fastidiously rejected by S. W.) and but secondarily, and as it accordeth with those, to after-custome.

16. So St. Basil in the fourth Century, as one while his appeal is from the disputers subtilties, to Christ, Apostles, Fathers, Martyrs, (sufficiently opposed to the Revers'd Tradition) † Συσχετέον σε ἡ παράδοσις, ὁ Κύριος ὕπως ἐδίδαξεν, ἀπόστολοι ἐκήρυξαν, πατέρες διετήρησαν, μάρτυρες ἐξεβεβαίωσαν, ἀρκείσθηι λέγειν ὡς ἐδιδάχθης, καὶ μὴ μοι τὰ σοφὰ ταῦτα, Let Tradition put thee to the blush, the Lord hath thus taught, the Apostles preach'd, the Fathers observed, the Martyrs confirmed, be thou content to speak as thou hast been taught, and bring not me these captious Sophisms; So * another while more expressly, by way of definition, in his morals, Δεῖ πᾶν ῥῆμα ἢ πρᾶγμα πιστοῦσθαι τῇ μαρτυρίᾳ τῆς Θεοπνεύστου γραφῆς, Every word or thing ought to be confirmed or ratified by the testimony of inspired Scripture.

† To. 1. Hom. 27. cont. Sabel. p. 608. A.

* Ὅρος ες το. 2. p. 307.

17. And St. Augustine, in the beginning of the fifth Century, though he differed in opinion from Cyprian about the baptizing of those that had baptism from hereticks, yet he avowedly adheres to his grounds (onely adding that of † conciliar determinations, by which he came to see what Cyprian had not seen) * When, saith he, he adviseth us to recur to the fountain, Apostolical Tradition, and from thence to bring down the Conduit to our own times, it is best, and without doubt to be practised; and accordingly fetches his testimonies out of Scripture. So again de Unit. Eccles. c. XIX. Utrum ipsi teneant Ecclesiam, non nisi de divinarum Scripturarum Canonicis libris ostendant, requiring the Donatists to shew from the Canonical Books of holy Scriptures, whether they be in the right or no in their pretensions; as, saith he, when Christ rose from the dead, and shewed himself to his Disciples, lest they might think there were any deceit in it, magis nos testimoniis Legis & Prophetarum & Psalmorum confirmandos esse judicavit, he thought fit to confirm them by testimonies of the Law and Prophets and Psalms, shewing that those things were fulfilled in him, which had been so long before foretold. An eminent testimonie from Christ's own judgment, what was the fittest way of concluding controversies of Faith. So † against the Letters of Petilian; Whether I, † Universalis Ecclesia admonitus firmitate vidit aliquid quod ille non vidit, quia plenarium de hac re concilium nondum habebat Ecclesia. de bapt. Contr. Donat. l. 4. c. 6.

* Quod autem nos admonet ut ad fontem recurramus, i. e. ad Apostolicam traditionem, & inde canalem in nostra tempora dirigamus, optimum est, & sine dubitatione faciendum, l. V. c. 26.

† L. 4. c. 85.

or

or you be Schismaticks, non ego nec tu, sed Christus interrogetur ut indicet Ecclesiam suam, Let Christ be asked, and neither I nor you, that he may shew or point out his Church. And so more expresly in his 166th. Epistle, In Scripturis discimus Ecclesiam, the Scriptures which teach us Christ, are the means to teach us the Church also; and * again, Lest any should tell thee, that is Christ, which is not Christ, aut Ecclesia est, quæ non est Ecclesia, or that is the Church which is not the Church, audi vocem Pastoris, hear the voice of the Shepherd, i. e. of Christ, in Scripture: Elsewhere we have him as punctual for our way of descendent, against this new of ascendent, Revers'd Tradition; Puritas doctrinæ expendenda est non secundum Traditionem presentis aut hujus, vel illius particularis Ecclesiæ, hujus vel illius interpretis, sed secundum Traditionem ab initio à temporibus Apostolorum concordi Patrum sententia ad nos usque deductam, The purity of Doctrine is to be weighed, not according to the Tradition of the present Church or of this or that particular Church, of this or that Interpreter, but according to Tradition deduced from the beginning from the times of the Apostles even to us by a concordant opinion of the Fathers. Many the like are to be had in that Father.

* In Psal. 69.

18. About 20. years after him, Vincentius Lirinensis in his Commonitory against heresies, resolves the way of refuting them to be by * producing and comparing the concordant opinions of the old Masters, and in case the heresies be of some standing, so as to have falsified and corrupted those rules of ancient Faith, (this it seems by him is no impossibility) then the onely way is † either by the sole authority of Scriptures, or by the ancient Universal Councils.

* Prolatis atque collatis veterum magistrorum concordantibus sibimet sententiis. c. 39.

† Aut sola Scripturarum authoritate aut jam antiquitus Universalibus Catholicorum Conciliis. Ibid.

19. And about 20. years after him, Salvian speaking of the Goths and other barbarous Nations, that received the Faith, but as it was corrupted by the Arians, gives this account of them, that Though they have the Scriptures, yet for want of literature * they know nothing, but what they hear from their Teachers, and what they hear they follow. And again, they that † being ignorant of all literature do know the sacred mystery of God's Law by teaching rather than reading (a direct image of S. W.'s sole principle, Oral Tradition) do rather retain what they are taught, than the Law of God, and therefore the Tradition of their Masters and inveterate teaching is as it were law to them, who know that which they are taught; they are therefore hereticks, but know it not, hereticks in our, but not in their own account, for they are so confident that they are Catholicks, that they defame us for hereticks. (Whose practice this is, both in the root and fruit, S. W. will soon recollect if he be so minded.)

* Nihil omnino sciunt nisi quod à doctoribus suis audiunt, quod audiunt, hoc sequuntur, de Gub. l. V. p. 153. Ed. Oxon.

† Necesse est eos qui totius literaturæ ac scientiæ ignari, sacramentum divinæ legis doctrina magis quam lectione cognoscunt, doctrinam potius retinere quam legem. Itaque eis traditio Magistrorum suorum & doctrinæ inveterata quasi lex est, qui hoc sciunt quod docentur, hæretici ergo sunt, sed non scientes; Denique apud nos sunt hæretici apud se non sunt. Nam in tantum se Catholicos esse judicant, ut nos ipsos titulo hæreticæ appellationis infament. Ibid.

20. I might multiply authorities in each Century, and thereby demonstrate that S. W.'s one principle hath not been received in all ages of the Church, and so according to his own demonstration, is infallibly to be degraded from that dignity which he hath bestowed on it, and Scripture and Tradition together set up in its stead, the one to interpret and supply whatsoever imaginable omissions in the other, and that the latter of these is not to be prejudged (any more than the former) on this onely account that it hath been written, and so me-thinks the testimonies which his preaching adversary fetcheth from thence for deciding controversies, should not for ever fall under the reproach of wordish testimonies.

21. I shall onely add the Profession of the Greek Church, which the * Romanist that publish'd it, recommends to all, as the means to recall them to the Catholick Church, by shewing they can have no sort of company out of it, the Eastern, as well as the Western Church refusing to countenance them; And yet in this so considerable a point, the resolving on the ground of all our faith, it is evident we are agreed; For thus in their name Jeremias the Patriarch of Constantinople, † sets it, the very truth and wisedom of our Lord Jesus Christ, which his divine Disciples and Apostles in their Canonical and whol some writings profess, which all the universal and particular Synods of the holy Fathers have followed, which the Preachers and Doctors of the one holy Church full of Divine knowledge deliver to us, and all with one common concord and will clearly consent in it. And again they profess in their dealings with the Germans, to take care of this especially, not to say ought from their own private sense, but to fetch all they say from the seven Holy and Universal Synods (and so do * we as far as they were universally received) from the sense of the Holy Fathers and Interpreters of the Scripture delivered to us from God, whom the Holy and Universal Church of Jesus Christ commends and approves with unanimous consent, for these by the spirit of God speaking in their mouths, and breathing by them, as most lightsome stars illustrated the world with their teaching, signs, and wonders; their teaching and institution can never be put out or moved by any age or length of time, as being founded on the omnipotent word of God, according to that of St. Paul, that the Church of Christ is the pillar and ground of truth, against which the very gates of hell, according to Christ's promise, shall not be able to prevail. To all which it is not amiss to annex the Romanist publishers resolution (by way of † annotation on the mention of their acknowledging the seven Councils) that if the Greeks and Germans to whom they write, * followed even those seven Councils alone, the one would have no need of Schism, the other of heresie, it being abundantly explicated in those seven, what is to be thought and held in every thing and place. And then sure if the Oral Tradition of the present Roman Church have more Doctrines of Faith, than those seven Councils abundantly explicated, or if that of the Scripture and ancientest Fathers and Councils may not be permitted to be our sufficient Rule, but be required to be parted with, in exchange for the Oral, of the present Mothers, and Catechists, we shall have some company, even of Romanists, to countenance us, how deeply soever we fall under S. W.'s displeasure.

* Socolov. Præfat. A. 4. 5.

† Proœm. Censur. P. 3.

P. 6.

* See Tract of Heresie, Sect. 9, 10.

† Socolov. Annot. p. 8.

* Si vel has solas septem Synodos requirerentur, neque illis Schismate, neque illis hæresi quicquam opus esset, cum in illis septem abunde explicatum sit, quid de quaque resentiendum, quid quoquo loco habendum sit.

22. And as this was the Doctrinal judgment, so † Theodoret from Athanasius tells us the practice was in

† Hist. l. 1. c. 8.

in the great Council of Nice, they defined * from Scripture-words piously understood, and so as they † had testimony from the Fathers. Agreeably Capreolus Bishop of Carthage, which was, saith he, a Legate sent to the Great Council of Ephesus, gives an account of the proceedings of that Council against the Nestorian heresie, that it was * radio Apostolicæ lucis extincta, extinguished by a beam of Apostolical light, and he being solemnly resorted to by the Bishops of Spain (under the title of the † Bishop of the Catholick Church of Carthage, * holy, venerable and most blessed Pope, and his † holy Apostleship) * for instruction in the true faith (in such a manner, as when 'tis used to the Pope of Rome, passes for a proof of his supreme Pastourship) though, saith he, p. 42. the authority of the Catholick Church (that in the Council forementionn'd) be sufficient, yet he will add his own professions that this is the † onely and true Doctrine which the Evangelical antiquity holds and delivers; which may serve for farther evidences of the course we assert, of refuting and convincing heresie by the tradition and doctrine of the Evangelical and Apostolical antiquity.

* ἐξ ἁγίων μετ' εὐσεβείας ἐννοουμένων λέξεων.
† ἐκ τῶν πατέρων ἔχοντι μαρτυρίαν.

* Ep. ad Vital. p. 42

† Capreolum Episcopum Ecclesiæ Catholicæ Carthaginis, p. 35.
* Domine sancte, venerabilis & beatissime Papa, p. 40.
† Sancto Apostolatu vestro, p. 36.

* Proveluti genibus exoramus humiles servi tui sanctum Apostolatum vestrum ut informetis parvitatem nostram in his quod rectum habet fides Catholica. † Unam verámque doctrinam hanc esse confitemur quam Evangelica tenet ac tradit antiquitas. p. 43.

23. Add to all these, the Novell constitution of Justinian, where confirming the four first General Councils, he resolves, * their Doctrines we receive as the Divine Scriptures, and their Canons we observe as Laws, where the joynt authority of the Divine Scriptures, and Canons of those Councils entred into a Codex, are exactly our pretension, and so I suppose St. Gregorie's too, when he profes'd to receive those four Councils as the four Gospels.

* τὰ δόγματα καθάπερ τὰς θείας γραφὰς δεχόμεθα, καὶ τοὺς κανόνας ὡς νόμους φυλάττομεν. Justin. Novell. διατ. 131.

24. To all this, if mens words are intelligible, I must conclude the learned Romanists to give their suffrage also. In the first place S. W's good friend Mr. White, when 'twas usefull to confute † Mr. Daille, saith, the seventh Council confirmed all that was either in Scripture or Tradition, by binding us to those two pillars of truth (Scripture and Tradition, the two pillars; and the Tradition, that which was so ancient, as to be confirmed in the seventh Council: who would ever desire more of him?) and in his Tab. Suffrag. being to prove the truth of his pretensions against new Revelations, he makes use of the very method that we Preachers are wont to do, by the Suffrages of the Law and Prophets, and Gospels, and Epistles of the Apostles, Tab. 1. and then by the Testimonies of the Fathers, Tab. 2. Next after him I shall mention Pope Gregory XIII. in his Epistle to the King of Spain before his Bible, His libris (Scripturarum) omnia nostra Religionis & Divinitatis mysteria explicantur, in the Books of Scripture all the mysteries of Religion and Divinity are explicated; which how they can be, if they are so wonderfully ambiguous and unintelligible, I confess not to understand. Next I add Julius Rogerius Protonotarius Apostol. (Possevin, saith he, was Legate in Poland from the Pope, and Secretary to the Pope) who resolves, Traditionem nullam nullius esse ponderis, nisi nullis temporum intercapedinibus interruptam, ab Apostolorum usque temporibus, inde enim necesse esse traditionem manare, That Tradition is of no weight, unless it be uninterrupted from the very Apostles times, for that it is necessary all Tradition should flow from thence. According to which (saith Possevin) writing of the Canonical Books, Horum Traditio ad Apostolica usque tempora revocata——his method was to recall their tradition, and carry it back even to the Apostles times. This then is the true nature of Tradition, to refer primarily to the Authour or Authours, from whence it flows, and but secondarily, to any after practice, or custome, or Doctrine, for the confirming it, and so the onely method this of ours, to look up to the authours, and so bring it down to the present Church; To which purpose * Suarez distinguisheth betwixt Tradition and Custome. To this also I refer the resolution of † Abulensis, who placeth the firmness of truth in this, that the Church cannot err, meaning, as he saith, none but the Universal Church, and that without any limitation, or connotation of time or place, and so taking in all time since there was a Christian Church, as well as place also. And this, a man would think again, should be Mr. White's meaning in his Tab. Suffrag. * when calling the Church to account by what title it holds the name of Catholick, he answers for it, that it is onely from the Catholickness of the Faith, and that the Faith is said to be Catholick, because it hath had the possession of all Christianity per ætates & loca, through ages, (that must be through all ages) as well as places, concluding that the Faith, if it will be Catholick, must be of all times and places; which I should think were very impertinently insisted on by him, if what were now taught in the Church of Rome, as of Faith, by his Oral Tradition of the present age, were by that one medium secured to have been the Doctrine of all times, for then what farther need were there of evidence for the contignation and conjuncture to the Apostles, which after he with great reason requires of the new and latter Revelations, which the favourers of Papal Infallibility pretend to. After these I appeal even to Bellarmine himself in his defence of unwritten Traditions, † We call that, saith he, unwritten Doctrine, not which hath never been written, but that which hath not been written by the first Authour. From whence all that I conclude is, that as by him Tradition is set in expres opposition to Scripture, and belongs not to those things which are written there (which will anon be usefull to us on another occasion) so the writings of the Fathers, those words of dead men, in S. W's scornfull dialect, are as properly tradition, as any thing else, in his opinion.

† Dailles arts Discov. p. 225.

* De leg. l. 7. c. 4. Sect. 10.

† Defensorii par. 2. c. 32. Ecclesia quæ non potest errare non est aliqua nisi universalis, & ista vocatur proprie Ecclesia sine aliqua limitatione, quia est multitudo non connotato aliquo loco aut tempore.
* Tab. 3.

† De verbo Dei non scripto. l. 4. c. 2. § Vocatur autem——Vocatur doctrina non scripta non ea quæ nusquam scripta est, sed quæ non est scripta à primo authore.

25. To which sense I add the expres words of * Suarez, writing is not Law, but may serve for a record and probation, as we prove Traditions unwritten out of the Fathers. The same is evidently of force to holy Scripture also, which was not written by Christ the first authour of the Christian Law, but being delivered by him, by word of mouth, was afterward set down down in writing by his hearers and their Disciples, and so is at once most signally the Oral Doctrine of Christ, and Law of his Church, and Tradition Apostolical, not written by the first authour, and so tradition, though by others it were written.

* De Leg. l. 7. c. 2. Illa Scriptura non est lex, sed potest deservire in memoriam & probationem, sicut nos probamus Traditiones non scriptas ex Patribus.

26. For that this is the proper use of the word, to signifie, not that which is not written, but not written by the first authour, may be judged by Martinus Peresius, † defining it in the most exact propriety of the Romanists understanding of it, Tradition, saith he, more properly and more pertinently to our purpose, is taken for the Doctrine of the first and most ancient in the Common-wealth of the faithfull, received by word of mouth, and derived by continual succession from the Fathers to Sons, and confirmed by ancient custome, and not contained in the authentick Books of that common-wealth; and * though it be written in other Instruments or Books worthy of belief, it doth not for that lose the name of Tradition.

† De Tradit. par. 1. Tit. Quid sit propriè Traditio.

* Licèt in aliis instrumentis vel libris fide dignis scripta fuerit, non ob id traditionis nomen amittit.

27. And then certainly these written memoires intervening, must be allowed, according to their esteem, and undoubtedness of their sense (of which words written are as fully capable, as spoken) to have force to prove, or repudiate any Traditions or Customs which are vouched by the present age, and not on the other side, those writings be controll'd by the present Doctrines; As in the Municipal Laws of our Land (to which S. W. resorts in the matter of possession) If a custome be sworn by all the homage of a Manor, (can the Oral Tradition of his present Church, ascend above this proportion?) that for all their memory such hath been an usage, and esteemed a right, and that their Fathers told them, that such it had been in all their memory also, yet if any Court-roll or other Record be extant, which declares that the custome was otherwise in ancient times, (like the finding of an ancient Coin, by which Baronius reforms all Historians ancient as well as modern, in the point of Maxentius's birth, An. 306. n. 23.) that Record is a sufficient confutation of the testimony of the Homagers, and makes the custome not to be immemorial.

P. 38.

28. And this is a received truth among the Civilians, who give this account of it, Scriptura est conservativa memoriæ, writing is conservative of memory, and Scriptura semper loquitur, writing always speaks (and then, by S. W's good leave, 'tis not so mute and dead a letter) as in other things * Scriptura monumentum contractus, the writing is a monument of the contract, and † Baldus resolves that the affirmative, viz. that there is a memory of it, may well be proved by an instrument or writing; So * Cravetta propounds the very questions, how a prescription may be proved, or immemorial custome, and how the affirmative (against a prescription) that there is memory to the contrary, and answers to the latter; † The affirmative, that there is memory to the contrary, is proved by instruments from which evidence is brought of the contrary observance. And then what becomes of S. W's and the Apologists whole Scheme, if Testimony of present witnesses may be controlled by written memorials of credit, (and that Scripture or Fathers are not such, they have not yet affirmed to be their opinion, the deadness, and muteness, and ambiguity, and want of demonstrativeness, are the principal of their charges, and not that of the want of credit.)

* Grot. de jur. Bell. l. 2. c. 16. § 30.

† 2. Par. princ. tr. Præscript.

* 4. par. de Antiqu. temporib.

† Affirmativa memoriam in contrarium extare, probatur per instrumenta, ex quibus apparet de contraria observantia.

29. The plainer resolution therefore of * Driedo I desire the Reader will compare with S. W's more refined Scheme, who recounting the speech of St. Austine, of the great authority the Church had with him for the believing the Gospel, saith it was the † Universal Church (not of his present age, but) which was from the beginning of the Christian Faith, growing down according to the series of succession of Bishops, * which Church saith he, comprehends the College of the Apostles, But understanding is prescinded and abstracted, or naked, and without coherence in the faith and manners with the Churches which were in the former ages, Augustine would say, saith he, I should not acknowledge the men of this Church to be the Church of Christ, † unless the authority of the four Gospels taught me, I should not believe the Church, if it should preach to us in any other Gospel, and not teach us the Doctrines of the Apostles. I conclude this with the words of Tertullian adver. Marc. l. 1. Omnino res Christiana sancta antiquitate stat, nec ruinosa rectius reparabitur, quam si ad originem censeatur, Christianity depends on sacred antiquity, and the best redress for any corruption, is by resorting to the beginning.

* De dogm. variis & lib. Apocr. l. 4. c. 4.

† Ecclesia Catholica quæ fuit ab initio Christianæ fidei.

* Quæ sanè Ecclesia collegium plectitur Apostolorum.

† Nisi doceret me quatuor Evangeliorum authoritas.

30. It was therefore but necessary, that he that would place all authority in the Oral Tradition of the present age, should demonstrate the impossibility of its non-coherence to the Apostles times, which how happily he hath attempted to doe, we shall see hereafter.

31. Thus much, mean while, for the establishing of our tenure, that by Scripture and Apostolical Tradition, as it comes down to us in the writings of the Fathers; which there could be no need to have defended so solicitously in relation to any other sort of Controvertists (unless perhaps the Schismatical opposers of our Church) but was fit to be thus confronted to S. W's pretension, his oral and unwritten tradition not of any, but the present age of the Church, nor as that stands in conjunction with all the former ages, but as by it, the conjunction with those former is, as he conceives, demonstratively inferred, for else we have nothing to object to it.

32. I must now proceed to secure it from his exceptions; They are in effect but three. 1. That general fate of writings, their being ambiguous, uncertain, mute, dead, and that as being the words of men dead long agoe, saith S. W. 2. The Scriptures being delivered by way of direct affirmation, without attending to artificial rules of demonstrating. 3. Their not being imaginable to be written of the Controversies, which since have sprung up.

P. 17.

33. To the first I answer by these steps and degrees; 1. That the style of the sacred writers hath been generally observed to have great plainness and simplicity, especially in setting down matters of fact in the Old Testament, the history and preachings of Christ and his Apostles in the New, and in that grand part of solid substantial piety, the ingageing us in good life; and though in some parts there be no small obscurity, as in the Prophecies, and in the metrical Books, and also in the contexture of some of St. Paul's Epistles, yet all force of objection which can be drawn from hence, will be superseded, 1. By that one rule of St. Chrysostom's τὰ ἀναγκαῖα δῆλα, those things are perspicuous that are necessary, from whence we may conclude, that as next the articles of the Crede nothing is so perspicuous in the Scripture, as the directions to all sorts of Christian practice, so when those necessary articles are received into believing hearts, the rest of our talent of time and industry should be laid out on a carefull conscientious practice of all duty, and then the Fathers will assure us, that the ξυναγὶς πίστως ϗ ἔργων, this chariot with two horses in it, belief of the Crede, and practice of the Sermon on the Mount, will bring the humble constant persevering Christian most safe to his journeys end, though he never think of calling in at Purgatory by the way, and the like, never furnish himself with the Roman new Articles, which S. W. may be believed, he will hardly meet clear in Scripture. 2. By the supply, which is to be had from ancient Tradition, which hath in all points of faith been experimented to be ready and able to remove all such ambiguities, and those in the first Councils, the Conservatories of all Catholick faith, are consigned to us in words, so distinct, and so solicitously removed from all ambiguity, that the heresies which had crept in for want of this light, were generally extinguish'd. 3. By the expres's commands of those Councils, that nothing else should be taught as of faith (or the belief exacted of any Proselyte) but what was thus clearly establish'd in those Councils. For then is the ἐυπειθεια of the Gospel requiring no more of any man, than what God by his grace doth, or is ready to assist him and inable him to perform, foundeth a demonstrative proof, that his commandments are not far from us, ὑπερογκοι and βαρειαι, over-heavy, or unsupportable, but a gracious, at once, and light burthen; so the same temper of the Covenant of grace pertaining also to doctrines, and thus confirmed by the charity and tenderness of those Councils, and, in them, of the Universal Church of God, hath given us full assurance, that whatever obscurities or ambiguities be supposeable in Scripture, there is still light sufficient in them (to all that will not set up their own judgment in opposition to ancient Catholick Tradition, visible in Fathers and Councils) securely to conduct any pious charitable humble Christian to everlasting happiness. And of this a man would think Mr. White himself should not make any doubt, when he hath made it his observation of Scripture style, that 'tis * accommodated to vulgar capacities.

* Apol. p. 139.

34. Secondly, That in case there should be any considerable ambiguity in our written Traditions, whether of Sacred Scriptures, or ancient Fathers, yet unless the writings where they are set down, were on purpose framed in the most material parts, to be thus ambiguous, as the old Oracles, or to be thus obscure, as what was said to be so written as that it was not written, or unless they were written by half witted-men, that either comprehended not their own notions, or were unable to express them (none of which I hope S. W. will think fit to charge on them) there are still known rules by which ambiguous passages are interpretable; The Heathen Rhetoricians have furnished us with some, in their handling the place ἐξ ἀμφιβολίας of ambiguity and περὶ ῥητῆς καὶ διανοίας of the letter and the sense, and the Lawyers have directed us to others on their head of Antinomies, from the matter, from the effect, from the adjuncts, &c. and the sacred Criticks have given us many more, by the help of which, those that understand the languages, wherein the Scriptures are written, and bring not prejudices with them, to impose their own, instead of receiving the Writers judgment of their propositions, will not in the hypothesis find it so impossible to understand Scripture, as S. W. phansies it in his demonstration. Many things are dreaded at a distance, and deemed impossible, which by God's blessing on honest endeavours, with moderate skill, and industry, and humility, are soon discerned to be most easie and familiar; What therefore is concluded from such general suggestions of the ambiguities of all writings, of the several possible sorts of such, Critical, Philological, Historical, Sophistical, of their being left to be toss'd with our various Expositions and Criticisms, and liable to a thousand evasions, and the like, have perhaps somewhat of art in them, to amuse, and affright those vulgar capacities (to which yet at another time they are confess'd to be accommodated) but are of no solid force, when they are brought down to any particulars, there being obvious helps, either by surveighing of the context, or comparing of Scripture style and dialect, or conferring plainer places with the more difficult, which if thankfully made use of, will decide such difficulties, as are of any real importance to be decided; And I cannot but observe, that when Mr. White was willing to discover Mr. Daille's arts, this was then noted for a principal one, that he would, if we could believe him, perswade us, Nothing is to be learned or understood out of Books, but every three words will never fail to have some reason or other to make them so obscure, that no light or satisfaction can be derived out of them, Page 216.

35. But then 3. if words committed to writing are so ambiguous, so subject to be toss'd and misinterpreted, yet having on the other side, the advantage of being written by none, but either inspired, or renowned persons, and that with great care and forecast, and deliberation, what shall then be said of S. W's favourite, Oral Tradition, the illiterate, and perhaps (and not rarely) simple mother, teaching her oft times dull and aukward children, who generally mark not what is taught them, or but con them by roat, (which he calls being written in their hearts) but pretend not to understand ought of them?

36. For I demand 1. Are the Mothers and Catechists so much better managers of their depositum, or more skilfull conveyers of it, than Scriptures, and Fathers? Are they conceivable to convey the Doctrines of the Church to their children in such a manner, as, according to Mr. White's rules, shall exact belief of them? I shall instance in one particular, formerly touched on. * A Tradition, saith he, begun by some Apostles, not all, 'tis no sacrilege to leave off, and by † Christ's Doctrine he means no other but what was generally preached by the Apostles; I demand then, how can all his Mothers or Catechists be imagined to assure their children, that what they teach them, beyond the Apostles Crede, (be it any of their additionals) was preach'd by more than some, even by all the Apostles? Is it certain that every Mother now delivers it in this Universal style? or that her Mother gave her commission thus to deliver it? What if in reference to St. Peter's Chair in Rome, she shall be found to have delivered the Pope's supremacy onely as a preaching of St. Peter's? In this the Catechumenus, that hath all his Faith from this connatural way, the Mothers Oral Tradition, can be no farther obliged than the Mother delivered it, and so may either disbelieve this article, and leave off this obedience without sacrilege, or else (which S. W. must in no-wise imagine) two passages in that Apologist are not beyond all possible confute. Many such like imperfect manageries the Mothers may be subject to, according to these new Controvertist's rules, to which in our method the Scriptures and Fathers will not be lyable, for they will assure us of all our Articles, that they were preach'd by all the Apostles, and resolved on joyntly by all, before they set out to preaching. 2. Is the child's memory, though then most moſt receptive, yet being taken alone without ſtaydneſs of temper, and maturity of other faculties (a volatile brain, and a giddy heart) a ſurer Conſervatory, than the ſame memory in him, when he is come to more maturity, and ſtayedneſs, and adviſedneſs, and maſtery of paſſions, and hath the addition of judgment to memory, and the ſupply of a form of words in a written Creed, and written Goſpels, &c. and ſo alſo the Expoſitions of Fathers and Councils, all ready to aid and inſtruct him farther? Or 3. are words ſpoken, ſuch charms, that they ſhall certainly caſt out the oracular dark Spirit, and cannot be miſinterpreted?

* Apol. p. 16.
† Ibid. p. 7.

37. To this laſt querie * Mr. White hath offered ſome ſatisfaction, by telling us, that a Tradition, as he hath explained it, is a ſenſe delivered not in ſet words, but ſetled in the auditors hearts by hundreds of different expreſſions explicating the ſame meaning] But I am very far from being ſatisfied with this, 1. Becauſe the propoſitions of Faith in Scripture and Fathers have certainly had this advantage of hundreds of different expreſſions explicating the ſame meaning, and ſo are not exceeded herein by Oral Tradition, whatever can in this kind be imagined of it. 2. That it no way appears de facto, as in Scriptures and Fathers it doth, that Mothers do thus ſettle ſenſes by hundreds of different expreſſions, or indeed any more than teach the words of Bellarmine's Catechiſm (and then where are the hundred different expreſſions?) or if they do, the Mothers are now become Expounders, and their expoſitions will be lyable to all the infirmities, that our Lay-mens (which are one degree above Lay-womens) Expoſitions and Sermons; Nay 3. if all this were granted him, yet upon his grounds, this will but encreaſe the difficulty on his ſide, for why may not every of thoſe hundred different expreſſions be capable of as great variety of interpretations, as the very ſame expreſſions, or any other, written in a book? and then ſtill the more the expreſſions are, the more and not the leſs the uncertainty will be. 'Tis certain the Mothers muſt communicate their ſenſes by words, (for they are Mothers, not Angels) and then thoſe words muſt have the common fate of all words, and ſo be ſubject to all the ambiguities that S. W. objects to written Teſtimonies. * Apol. p. 81.

38. He tells us in another place, that his way is, for Mothers to flatter into their children the firſt elements of the acquiſition of beatitude, and continually goe on, nurſing them up in the maxims of piety. But firſt, this can belong to none but pious and carefully conſcientious Mothers, and all the world of Romaniſt Mothers, I fear, are not ſuch. 2. Of thoſe that be, why is it not poſſible (and then the contrary is not demonſtrable, or to be as a principle ſuppoſed, without attempt of proof) that they may ſpend that time of leiſure, which they have for ſuch offices of charity to each of their children, in impreſſing the knowledge of God and Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt, the holy Catholick Church, the judgment to come, &c. in infuſing forms of prayer, knowledge of the Sacraments, and the general branches of duty toward God and man, and themſelves, and the more obvious particular duties of daily occurrence, without ever telling them of the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, as that is much more than a Patriarchate, and as it is extended to all other Nations, to England, and India, when the child perhaps is brought up in Italy, and is as certainly part of his Dioceſe, if he be but a Primate, or Patriarch, as he would be, if he were Governour of the Univerſe, and therefore need not be told any more, than that he is to pay obedience to him, as his lawfull Eccleſiaſtical Governour, without bringing him out the two Goſpels, as Xaverius to the Indies, the one of Chriſt, the other of St. Peter, and again without telling them of Purgatory, Tranſubſtantiation, &c. or being able to give them a diſtinct diſcriminative notion of theſe articles, as the one ſignifies temporary pains commencing at the time of death, and laſting many thouſand years, and is capable of being abbreviated by indulgences, and prayers, and almes of the living, and as the other is miraculouſly more, than the real communication of the body and blood of Chriſt. Laſtly, thoſe that ſhall be ſuppoſed to doe more nearly what S. W. would have them, infuſe into their children a whole Romiſh Catechiſm, and that they may be ſure to leave out no article, pitch upon Bellarmine's ample declaration of the Chriſtian Doctrine, is it not certain that they ſhall teach them to believe the immaculate conception of our Lady (an article which Mr. White will not receive into his Faith) as firmly as the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip? And if thus it be in theſe, or other inſtances, then what becomes of the ſweet connatural way, ſo much preferable to all others, as not onely to be the principle, but the ſole principle of our Faith? Or becauſe thus it may be, though it were not, or may have been in any conſiderable part of any one age (if but through inrodes of barbarous invaders, inteſtine wars, urgency of worldly diverſions, &c.) what demonſtration is that like to be, which is ſubject to ſo many uncertainties, every day experimented to have more than poſſible truth in them?

39. The muteneſs, and deadneſs of written words, what it means, ſo as to found any appearance of objection, will not eaſily be reſolved on; Words written, when they are read with the voice, are as lively and vocal, as if they were never written (and therefore * Dr. Holden, that reſolves that believing generally comes by hearing, and is ſo by all acknowledged, doth yet put together what is told us, and what is written to us, adding his reaſon, for reading is a kind of hearing) and ſo when without voice they ſpeak, or are delivered to the eyes, they have as ready an avenue, and admiſſion to the mind, as when they enter by the ear, and to a blind man that cannot make uſe of his eyes, 'tis all one, whether his Mother or Catechiſt have read him his Lecture out of a book (the tranſcript of the writers mind) or pronounced it out of their memory, or immediately powred it out of their habit of underſtanding. The onely poſſible difference is, that what is written in a book, the Authour being dead, it cannot be farther, than it is already, explained by that Authour. This then I ſuppoſe is the ground of the objection, becauſe S. W. ſpecifies in men dead long agoe. But I conceive not the demonſtrative force of the argument, as it is thus improved; For 1. the authour, dead 1600. years ſince, hath ſo ordered it, that though he be dead, he yet ſpeaketh; 2. That Authour having then approved his authority, and that being now abundantly teſtified to us, he is as authentick a witneſs, as far as he hath declared himſelf, as if he were now living, and known to be inſpired by God, much more ſo, than the Mother, or the Catechiſt. 3. If he have written intelligibly then, in each particular place, or if what is in one place obſcure, he have elſewhere interpreted, or if our Fathers of the Church diſcerning this want, have ſupplyed it from him, ſtill he ſpeaks audibly to the intellect, though he be dead, and ſo muſt. 4. If all this envy falls upon * Anal. ch. 1. Leſſ. 3.

him

him, becauſe he is not able to hear our preſent debates, and, upon our reſort and appeal to him, interpoſe his judgment, and ſo ſpeak to them, then that will be coincident with the third objection, of the Scriptures not ſpeaking to later Controverſies, and thither I refer it, and ſo there remains no leaſt ſhew of difficulty in this firſt objection.

40. Paſs we then to the ſecond, the Scriptures being delivered by way of direct affirmation, without attending to artificial rules of demonſtrating] This I confeſs hath in it ſome of that amazingneſs, which S. W. promiſed me, whenſoever I ſhould approach this Apology for the Dialogues, whether I reſpect the coherence it hath with the other argument, or the particular matter of it; If the former, 'twould even amaze one to think, how that which is confeſs'd to be delivered by way of direct affirmation, and as he there adds accommodated to vulgar capacities, ſhould yet be 1. ſo prodigiouſly ambiguous, left to be toſs'd by our various Expoſitions and Criticiſms (All that I need reply, is, that ſure it would have been much more ſo, if it had not been delivered in this Categorical way of direct affirmation) and 2. ſo dead and ſo mute, nothing being more contrary to our ordinary notions of thoſe words, than direct affirmations. But the more truly amazing part of our preſent proſpect is, that when all Chriſtian Religion is at once demonſtrated, by being convincingly proved to be taught us by Chriſt, and when all that is delivered in the Scripture, is, by immediate connection of terms from that one proſyllogiſm, demonſtrated to have divine and ſo infallible truth in it, the very ſame that there is, in nature, of this propoſition, that God cannot lye, he ſhould yet complain of the want of artificial rules of demonſtration. If this demonſtration be not cogent or artificial enough with him, that the Scripture being the word of God, every period thereof muſt have exact truth in it, I am then amazed to think what a Patron of the Catholick Religion this is; but if what is thus once for all demonſtrated in the groſs, or bulk, muſt again in the retail be farther demonſtrated of each truth in Divinity, if every thing that Chriſt or his Apoſtles ſay, be by him required to be confirmed from other arguments of natural reaſon, and the like, then he is a Didymus indeed. He would not believe Chriſt's reſurrection, without it being demonſtrated to, and inforced upon his ſenſes; and this other, requires demonſtration for that which is onely to be received by his faith, and this is not far removed from the former, and is an equally amazing conſideration.

41. But then 2. how it doth appear that the Mothers in their Oral deliveries, have either been more skilfull, or more diligent in obſerving theſe artificial rules of demonſtrating? their ſofter method of flattering into their children, as he ſtyles it, I ſhould think were diſtant enough from this other which he is wont to call ſevere and rigorous; I hope I ſhall not be required to inſiſt longer on this objection.

42. Laſtly then for the 3d. the Scriptures not being imaginable to be written on the Controverſies which ſince have ſprung up, 1. It hath evidently no truth in it; For the hereſie of the Gnoſticks being riſen in the Apoſtles times, and a great part of moſt of the Epiſtles written on purpoſe for the refuting of that hereſie, and many other hereſies, Valentinians, and Marcionites, &c. after that, ſpringing from that root of bitterneſs, as 'tis certain they did, thoſe books muſt be very proper to thoſe Controverſies; And ſo for others after them; That one place of St. Paul, Rom. IX. 5. doth, * ſaith Proclus, Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, ſhut and wall up all paſſage for calumny from them that love contumely or ſpeaking ill of Chriſt; ſo ſaith Theophylact, † From hence is Arius confuted, St Paul proclaiming Chriſt to be God over all. And not to inſiſt on the ancient hereſies, nor on modern, as well as ancient, which have their poſitive irrefragable deciſions in Scripture, I ſhall confine my ſelf wholly to the Controverſies betwixt the Romaniſt and us; And if it were not, as I ſuppoſe it is, evident from Scripture, that ſome of our Articles, oppoſed to theirs, are the Doctrines of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as the uſe of the cup for all in the Sacrament, the not confining publick prayers to an unknown tongue, the honourableneſs of marriage for all that are not within the prohibited degrees, &c. yet the difference on our part from them, being onely this, that we admit not many of their new articles, not that they reject any of our old, though ſome of theſe particulars ſhould not be decideable from Scripture, yet the duty of Communion, and charity toward all thoſe, which are lively members of Chriſt, being irrefragably concluded from plain Texts of Scripture, and the Univerſal Councils decreeing that there ſhall be no more exacted of any to believe but the few neceſſaries, which as they are all contained in Scripture, ſo they are not doubted to be maintained by us, the reſult is, that Scripture and the firſt Councils together, do bind the Romaniſt not to ſet up their wall of ſeparation againſt us, but to imbrace charitably all, who believe what they doubt not us to believe, and ſo will decide all our Controverſies at once, and having done ſo, need not deſcend more minutely to the deciſion of each ſeveral.

* Παρεισδυσιν συκοφαντιας ἀπολειχειν τοις φιλοδοξοις, Procl. de Fide.

† Καὶ ἐντεῦθεν δὲ καταισχυνεται Ἄρειος ἀπὸ τῆς Παύλου τὴν Χριστὸν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸν ἀνακηρύττοντος.

43. Secondly, a prime controverſie between us and the Romaniſts being that about the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of the Pope, and that being by them deduced from Chriſt's donation to S. Peter, and S. W. himſelf deducing it from thence, I ſhall demand, Doth the proof of that depend upon any words of Chriſt, which are not delivered in the Goſpel? If it doth, what are they, and by what Tradition are they avouched? But 'tis certain no ſuch unwritten words in this point are pretended, but expreſly the written, Thou art Peter, and I will give thee the Keys, and Feed my Sheep, and all theſe are verbatim in the Goſpels. And then I demand, 2. Do theſe truly own the Romaniſts pretenſions, and decide the controverſie on their ſide, or do they not? If they do, then are the Goſpels written of our preſent Controverſies; if they do not, why are they then ſo eagerly preſs'd on men, and all we denyed the peace of their Church, for denying this importance of them. If, as he ſaith of the Scripture in general, ſo he believe of theſe Texts of Scripture, that they are ambiguous, uncertain, mute and dead, and they have no other poſſible head, to which to devolve this Doctrine, and cannot maintain the jus divinum of it, but by thus devolving it, and if for the clearing of this ambiguity, the writings of the ancient Church be by them deemed ſufficient, then why may not we uſe the very ſame method, and at once avow in all things to ſtand to the award of it, and be no more blameable than they, who how unjuſtly ſoever they manage it, and how imperfectly ſoever they conclude from it, are yet obliged not to blame in others, what themſelves practiſe.

44. The

44. The like may again be inferred from their founding in, and proving from the words of Scripture [the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it, and the pillar and ground of truth] their other great Article, the Infallibality of their Church, on which reverts again all which hath been said on the former head, and then how can he in earnest think, that the Scripture was not written of our Controversies?

45. But then our pretension taking in the ancient Fathers to Scriptures, unless it be also appliable to them, that they speak not to our Controversies, this, if it had what it aimed at, in respect of Scripture, must presently loose all its efficacy, or concludency against us. For 'tis certain the learned Romanist lays or pretends to lay great weight on the authority of the Fathers, for deciding all the Controversies depending between us, so that * Campian could vaunt concerning this head, Admiseris? captus es; Excluseris? nullus es, that we should be insnared and caught, if we were content to be judged by that rule of their authority, but if we would not stand to it, we were utterly lost. And then we that do not exclude them, but set them up avowedly against Oral Tradition, and from the variable, imperfect judicatures of the one, appeal to the more authentick, stable Tribunal of the other, what can we, on their grounds, be deemed to want, for the deciding of our Controversies? Thus perfectly void of all probability are his demonstrative arguments. And this may be sufficient to be added on the second head, the clearing the subject of the question from ambiguity, and fitting it for defining. * Ration. 51

SECT. III.

Oral Tradition defined, and the force of it proposed by Mr. White and S. W. Some things granted in this Scheme. One weak part pointed at, which betrays the whole demonstration. Other parts of no concernment to it. The great Conclusion denyed, and unproved. Traditions of the present age frequently false. The Jews, the Arians, the Heathens, the Mahometans, the Christian Mothers among them.

1. IT is now time to advance to the third part of our designed method, to gather the briefest definition or description of this way, arising from the force of Oral Tradition. This in the Apology is set down, by establishing these definitions, that by Tradition he means the delivery of Christ's Doctrine from hand to hand, in that part of the world which with propriety is called Christian. By Christ's Doctrine he means that which was generally preached by the Apostles, and contains all such points as are necessary to the salvation of the world, and not onely in particular to single persons, but for Government of the Church, and bringing multitudes with convenience to perfection in this life, and felicity in the next. Then, by proceeding to this General position, that All Christ taught, or the holy Ghost suggested to the Apostles of this nature, is, by a direct uninterrupted line, intirely and fully descended to the present Church, which communicates with, and acknowledges subjection to the Roman. Adding also the converse of that proposition, viz. Nothing is so descended but such truths, nor any thing held by this tenure, but what is so descended, which being cast up, amounts to this great conclusion, No errour was ever, or can be embraced by the Church in quality of a matter of Faith. This again S. W. farther abbreviates into this one definition, Oral Tradition (supposing the motives with which it was founded, and the charge with which it was recommended by the Apostles) carries in its own force, as applyed to the nature of mankind, an infallible certainty of its lineal and never to be interrupted perpetuity. P. 7.

2. In this Scheme, several things there are to which I shall in the obvious sense so far yield, as not to make any impertinent debate about them; As 1. that Tradition is the delivery of Christ's Doctrine from hand to hand in that part of the world, which with propriety is called Christian, meaning by that phrase, all that have been baptized into the Christian Faith, and have not by some destructive, wasting superaddition, forfeited their title to that dignity; for that the Greek Church, that do not own to have ever received the Faith of the Pope's Universal Pastourship from the Apostles, St Paul and St. John, which planted some of them, (and have this real prejudice against it, that St. John, which long out-lived St. Peter, and by his Apostolical power was exempted from being inferiour to any other, whether Cletus or Clemens, his Successours at Rome, cannot reasonably be thought to have subjected his Successours to them, but should rather himself, being the surviving Apostle, be his Successour in that supereminent power, if any such had been given to Peter by Christ) should for the not believing or yielding that, be acknowledged no Christians, or not Christians with propriety, but equivocally and improperly called Christians, can never appear probable, but by a convincing confirmation of the real delivery of that Doctrine to all, from all the Apostles, which if it were here meant to be pretended, is certainly as yet but pretended, to be delivered from thence. The like must be said of Christians of other denominations, which are neither Greek nor Roman, yet have by uninterrupted Tradition received the necessary Faith in every branch of it, and retain it without the Roman additions, and though not the Papal, yet the Apostolical Government also.

3. So secondly, for the notion of Christ's Doctrine, we scruple not to understand it of that, which was generally preached by the Apostles, and contains all such points as are necessary to the salvation of the world, and Government of the Church, and bringing multitudes with convenience to perfection in this life, and felicity in the next] meaning by [necessary to salvation] generally necessary, as an effective means to bring home sinners to repentance, to perswade them to a sincere reception of the Precepts of Christ, as of the one certain way to eternal salvation, without examining whether any particular man without the explicite knowledge of every single branch of that Faith, be capable of performing the condition of the Gospel, and so of salvation on the Gospel terms, God's accepting according to what a man hath, and not exacting what he hath not, and again by [perfection in this life] understanding sincerity of Evangelical obedience, styled often perfection in the Scripture, though in many respects it must be acknowledged imperfect.

4. So thirdly, that all that Christ taught, or the holy Ghost suggested, of this nature, is by a direct uninterrupted line intirely and fully descended to the present Church, which communicates with, and acknowledges subjection to the Roman] Adding, that it doth so also and equally to the Church of England in every particular, and so it is acknowledged by the Romanists to be intirely maintained by us, ſave onely that we acknowledge not one link of their pretended Government, that of the Roman ſupreme Univerſal Paſtorſhip, which yet in theſe definitions hath not in the leaſt-wiſe been proved to be any (much leſs neceſſary) truth of Chriſt's teaching.

5. Thus far then there is no more asked, than granted by us, ſave onely that of the Pope's Univerſal Paſtorſhip, and that no way inferrible from theſe premiſſes, and conſequently nothing gained from us by theſe ſo many ſteps of his fair method.

6. But then when he adds the converſe of the laſt propoſition, that nothing is ſo deſcended but ſuch truths, nor any thing held by this tenure but what is ſo deſcended, there may be ambiguity in theſe propoſitions; For the firſt may be deſigned to ſignifie that no article is to this age of the Roman Church delivered down from the ages immediately precedent, upon the account of Apoſtolical Tradition, but what is both true and neceſſary to be believed; If this be the meaning of it, then he knows 'tis denyed by us, and muſt either be convincingly proved by him, or elſe there is a very weak, ſoft, unfortified part, which will be ſure to betray all his demonſtration, and being not here attempted to be proved in the propoſal of the caſe, if it be not provided for in the laſt part of the method, the proving of his definition (which when we advance to that, we ſhall then examine, whether it be, or no) then that abundantly invalidates his whole Scheme.

7. But the propoſition is capable of another ſenſe, that nothing is deſcended to the Church by ſuch uninterrupted Tradition from the Apoſtles, but ſuch truths as they, from the holy Ghoſt, thought neceſſary; which though it have no truth in it, becauſe many things may have been conſtantly received, and never doubted of by any Church, which yet have no ſuch neceſſity, as that Chriſt lived to the age of thirty three years, and the like, yet becauſe this ſeems not to me to have any influence on our preſent controverſie, I ſhall not need to put in any exception to the propoſition, upon this ground of ſecurity, becauſe the articles, which the Romaniſt holds neceſſary, and we do not, we hold not to have this continual ſucceſſion.

8. So the latter part of the converſe, that nothing is held by this tenure but what is ſo deſcended] if the meaning be, that nothing is by the Romaniſt maintained to have deſcended from the Apoſtles, as neceſſary to be preached, and believed, but what hath thus really deſcended (as the obvious meaning is) then 'tis the main thing, which, he knows, is, in this queſtion, denyed by us, and that with great inſtance, ſpecifying many particulars, which no way appear to us to have deſcended from them, nor to have been by the Church look'd upon as neceſſary to be believed, but viſibly excluded out of the number of thoſe articles, which alone are affirmed by the univerſal Church in the firſt great Councils to be thus neceſſary.

9. Laſtly to his great Concluſion, if that ſhould mean no more than that No errour or falſe Doctrine was ever or can be received by the Univerſal Church truely ſo called, in quality of a matter of Faith, then though I have no aſſurance that it cannot, becauſe the receiving an errour by way of ſuperaddition, and defining it de fide, is not ſure to deſtroy, or infer the defectibility of a Church, as long as they retain all the true fundamental Doctrine; yet again I am no way concerned to debate that, in relation to our preſent queſtion, becauſe the receiving ſuch errours into the faith of the Roman, is not receiving them into the faith of the Univerſal Church. But if the meaning be, that no errour was ever, nor can be embraced by the Roman Church, in quality of a matter of faith; then he knows, 'tis far from being acknowledged by us. And this being probably the importance of his great concluſion, the falſeneſs of it depends, and is conſequent to the falſeneſs of that foregoing propoſition, interpreted, as I thought, and think it neceſſary that the ſenſe carry it, viz. that no article is to this age of the Roman Church delivered upon the ſcore of Apoſtolical Tradition, but what is both true and neceſſary to be believed; and ſo alſo to the falſeneſs of that other, that nothing is by the Romaniſt maintained to have deſcended from the Apoſtles, as neceſſary, but what hath thus really deſcended. And ſo the utmoſt that this rarely fair method of the Apologiſt hath yet produced, is no more than a few true propoſitions equally granted by us, and of no leaſt concernment to him againſt us, and one grand falſity, twice crept in to his definition (diſcernible enough to be ſuch, as ſoon as ambiguous expreſſions are interpreted), and the concluſion naturally following the weakeſt part, moſt falſe in our opinion, and moſt evident to be by S. W. aſſerted without any ground as yet diſcovered by him; From all which the concluſion is irrefragably inferred, that unleſs hereafter he demonſtratively prove that propoſition, which he calls the great concluſion, he is the greateſt begger of the principle, and ſo trifler in the world. The trial of that muſt be reſerved to the fourth, and laſt part of our method.

10. So in S. W.'s abbreviature, the matter of the definition [that Oral Tradition, ſuppoſing the motives and the charge with which it was founded and recommended by the Apoſtles, carries in its own force, as applyed to the nature of mankind, an infallible certainty of its lineal and never to be interrupted perpetuity.] is either moſt extremely fallacious, and captious, or elſe what is worſe than ſo, moſt manifeſtly falſe.

11. If he will have all men ſuppoſe with him, that all the Romaniſts preſent Doctrine, i. e. Oral Tradition, was taught and ſo founded and recommended by the Apoſtles, and that with weighty motives to be believed, and ſtrict precept to be kept as a depoſitum, and commended as a treaſure to all poſterity, this is then the courſeſt draught, or image of (his conſtant familiar) that moſt vulgar fallacy, the begging the Queſtion, his ſuppoſing us to grant, what he knows we muſt deny, and ſo is moſt intolerably ſophiſtical.

12. But if abſtracted from any ſuch ſuppoſition or poſtulatum, he intend to aſſert, that whatſoever is orally affirmed in that manner, or to that degree, as the Pope's Supreme Paſtorſhip is now affirmed, and delivered from Father to Son in the Roman Church, is not onely true, but alſo by this means undeniably aſcertain'd to be derived from the Apoſtles, then as this propoſition is moſt infirm, without any appearance of ſolidity in it, ſo muſt the concluſion neceſſarily be, that is inferred from it, unleſs again he can produce ſome evidence, by which what is in it ſelf, and in theſi, thus improbable, and in other inſtances frequently experimented to be falſe, ſhall in this one inſtance be aſcertain'd to have truth in it; It being no more ridiculous, what the Frier in Canus profeſs'd, to believe all that is in any printed Book, than to believe all which is by a multitude (how great ſoever) of one age orally delivered as from their Fathers and Progenitours.

13. This

13. This may be judged 1. by the example of the Jews in Christ's time, while their Oral Traditions had the greateſt force among them. Theſe, we know, were by them ſtyled תורה שבעל מה * their Law by the mouth, in oppoſition to the תורה שבכתב Law in writing. Of the commendation of this, their ſobereſt Writers are as profuſe, as Mr. White can be of his, ſtyling it תיסורות אשר המרה יסורותיכם, &c. The foundations on which ye are founded, the roots, the cuſtomes, decrees, and conſtitutions which your great ones have conſtituted, from the day which the Lord commanded, and ſo on through all Generations, like the Towre of David erected on your hill, in which are hanged a thouſand Helmets with all warlike inſtruments of the choice ones, all the ſhields of the mighty. Then for the pretended divine original and unqueſtionable conveyance of them from God and Moſes, the account is given by the ſame Maimonides. 1. That all the Precepts of the Law that were ſent down by God to Moſes, were ſent down to him together with their interpretation, God delivering by word of mouth firſt the Text, then the explication and interpretation of it, and what the authentick Text comprehended. 2. That Moſes having received both, coming to his Tent ſent for Aaron and declared to him the Text, and taught him the Interpretation; then Aaron ſtanding at his right hand, he called unto him Eleazar and Ithamar Aaron's ſons, and did the like to them; then the ſeventy in like manner, Aaron's ſons ſtanding by; and then the promiſcuous aſſembly of Iſrael, in the preſence and audience of all the former. 3. That Moſes departing, Aaron who had now heard this four times, repeated it out of his memory to all, and after him his ſons in like manner, and ſo the ſeventy alſo; and by this means every one heard both Text and Interpretation recited four times, and ſo were inabled to inſtruct one another, the Text being written in rolls or volumes, and the Interpretation or Tradition fixed in their memories. 4. That Moſes before he died, made Proclamation, that if any had forgotten any Tradition which he had received from him, he ſhould come and ask, and he would declare it to him; and then writing thirteen Copies of the Law, one for every Tribe, and one for the Levites, he died. 5. That Joſhuah being furniſh'd with theſe Oral traditionary explications, judged the people according to them. 6. That Joſhua before his death, left all theſe Traditions to the Elders of the people, and the Elders to the Prophets, and ſo they continued without any diſſention to the time of the men of the great Synagogue, Hagge, Zachary, Malachy, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zorobabel, &c. and ſo from hand to hand from Ezra to Simeon, from Simeon to Antigonus, from Antigonus to Joſes, from Joſes to Joſhua ſon of Pherak, from Joſua to Judas, from Judas to Shemajah, from Shemajah to Hillel, from Hillel to Simeon, from Simeon to Gamaleel, from Gamaleel to Simeon, from Simeon to Gamaleel, from Gamaleel to Simeon the Juſt, called Rabbenu Hakkedoſh, the Phœnix of his age, and he collected all the Oral Traditions of Moſes thus delivered down to him. In this account, if the Jews own teſtimony may be taken, what can be more exact and punctual for the ſure conveying of theſe Oral Traditions from Moſes and God himſelf? Could S. W. pretend this for all the articles of his preſent Roman Mothers, what Trophies would he ſet up? And yet after all this, we cannot disbelieve our Saviour, who aſſures us in his time, (which was certainly within the ſpace of this pretended undiſturbed ſucceſſion of Oral deliverers) that the Doctrine of God was ſoully depraved, evacuated, and deſtroyed by their Traditions, pretended to be thus lineally deduced from Moſes and God himſelf. This I have thus largely ſet down, becauſe I ſee the Apologiſt (reflecting on this argument when it was propoſed by my L. of F) hath made a ſhift to miſapprehend it, underſtanding by the Jewiſh Cabala, (in the vulgar modern notion of Cabaliſtical) the myſtical traſh of the later Jews, whatſoever, ſaith he, any of them have collected from Scripture by a threefold abuſe of the Letter. 1. By taking every letter of a word, for a word beginning with that letter. 2. By changing letters according to rules framed by themſelves. 3. Finding numbers of years, &c. by the numbers which the Letters of the word compound; And this, ſaith he, a Doctrine pretended as delivered to few, with ſtrict charge to keep it from publicity, and ſo communicate it again to a ſelect Committee of a few, wherein there is a fair opportunity of juggling and couzenage] But it is very ſtrange he ſhould not take notice of that which is ſo evident, viz. 1. That the traditions, wherein this argument is founded, are not the reſult of their literal collections, but pretended to be delivered from Father to Son orally from Moſes, as the unwritten interpretation of the written Text of the Law, and 2. that they were no jugglings of a ſecret Cabal, but univerſally received by the learneſt Jews in our Saviour's time; Inſtance in that of their νιπτῶνται, waſhing up to the wriſt before meat, Mar. VII. 2. of which ſaith the Evangeliſt, the Phariſees, and all the Jews, if they do not ſo waſh, do not eat, holding the Tradition of the Elders, and, as he adds, ἄλλα πολλά ἐστιν ἃ παρέλαβον κρατεῖν, there be many other things which they have (Traditionally) received to hold. The like again follows v. 9. &c. of ſaying Corban to Father and Mother, where our Saviour ſets down expreſly the Text firſt, the commandment of the Law, Honour thy Father——and then the Jewiſh Doctrine, derived (as they pretended) by Tradition from their Elders, that if any ſhould ſay Corban to his Father or Mother, it was no more lawfull for him to doe any thing of relief to them, than to convert to private uſe that which was conſecrated to God, according to that of Maimonides, delivered as a rule derived from Tradition, that vows have force, על דברי מצות upon matters of precept, as much as upon דברי רשות matters of will or choice. In theſe examples, 'tis clear, that thoſe Doctrines were generally taken up, publickly avowed, and conſtantly adhered to by the Jews, as derived to them from God by Moſes, by an uninterrupted Tradition, which yet were ſo far from deſcending thence, that one of them was perfectly deſtructive to the Law, which undoubtedly was derived from heaven, and the other was a mere impertinent addition, and ſo come home exactly to the utmoſt that we can be deem'd to charge upon the Romaniſt. And there is no argument that S. W. doth or can urge for the authentickneſs of the tradition for the Roman additionals, which will not be equally of force to a Jew in Chriſt's time for either of theſe Traditions, eſpecially if the Oral Tradition of the preſent age be of force to conclude for all the former, back to the Apoſtles, for that theſe were the traditions of that preſent age, our Saviour hath ſet beyond poſſibility of doubting.

14. A ſecond Inſtance may be that of the Arian hereticks, who in Conſtantius's days had a very great, and almoſt an univerſal prevalency over the Church, and whilſt they had ſo, not onely delivered (the Mothers and Catechiſts, to their children) falſe heretical Doctrine, but withall delivered it, as that which had been delivered to them, and which came down from the Apoſtles; In which

* Maimon. Pref. in Sed. Zeraim. p. 7.
Ib. p. 2.
Ib. p. 5.
Ib. p. 10.
Ib. p. 34.
P. 123, &c.
P. 126.
Yad. Nedar. c. 3. § 1.

Proceſs there were little to be objected now by us to the truth of their Doctrine, if all were neceſſarily to be believed for Catholick and Orthodox, which the multitude and ſtream of any one age univerſally profeſſed, and delivered to their children, as received from their anceſtours and ſo from the Apoſtles.

15. A third inſtance may be taken from the Univerſality of Heathens in any age, ſuppoſe that wherein St. Paul preached firſt the faith of Chriſt to them; Of theſe it is ſure, that their firſt, though not immediate Anceſtours had been the worſhippers of the true God, Japhet and Noah, and his Anceſtours before the Flood, and conſequently that their Idol worſhips were certainly of a later date (though ſome difference there may be among curious inquirers, when they began to prevail among them, and whether debauched by ſome one great Leader, or whether in a long Proceſs of time, by a gradual degeneration from piety, and an inſenſible unobſervable growth of impiety) And though this be as manifeſt and undeniably true, as the ſtory of the Bible, which aſſures us of it, yet is it as evident, that the whole Heathen world of any ſuch age (which was of far larger extent than the preſent Roman Communion, deduced their falſe ſacrilegious Worſhips from their immediate Anceſtours, and that ὡς παραπαραδόσει, as delivered from Father to Son from the beginning of all time, as ancient as the Moon, and Mountains, making uſe of this very argument, as their great Palladium, by which all their ſeveral branches of Idol-worſhip, their whole religion was at once defended, and rendred uncapable of Reformation, τὸ μὴ κινεῖν ἀκίνητα, that unmoveable things (the Religion of their Countrey from all antiquity) were not to be innovated.

16. A laſt inſtance ſhall be from the Mahometanes themſelves, I mean not in deducing their Doctrines from Mahomet (for that I ſuppoſe they truely doe, though we know they are divided among themſelves, and the different way of Hali pretends as conſtant Tradition from their Prophet, as the other) but in believing and teaching that their Mahomet was promiſed by Chriſt, and conſequently that the Doctrines which Mahomet firſt taught out of his own corrupt heart, are the Doctrines of the Paraclet, i. e. the holy Ghoſt, for as ſuch, they are delivered now from Father to Son, and have in many parts of Chriſtendom wholly extirpated the Apoſtolical Doctrine or Faith of Chriſt, where it is evident, that through the powerfull inrodes and conqueſts of the Turks, the chriſtian mothers have not onely been kept from delivering to their children the Faith which they received, but have themſelves been induced to renounce that Faith, and then by the help of Oral Tradition, become inſtruments to transfuſe the contrary into their children, and this, be it never ſo deſtructive to their childrens and their own eternal well-fare, onely to ſecure their lives, and a ſmall part of their portion in this world. Which being done by that means in this ſo much greater inſtance (renouncing and forgetting all Chriſtianity at once) may as poſſibly be done by the like tyranny, and conjuncture of earthly motives in a leſſer inſtance (receiving in this, or that falſe Doctrine) unleſs the proviſions be more competent againſt the one, than the other.

17. What ſecurity there will be offered us by S. W. to the contrary, we muſt yet expect, when we come to the view of his proofs, and to that we ſhall now haſten, having as yet onely attended him ſo far, as the eſtabliſhing of his definition, and aſſigning him the concluſion, which we ſhall expect from him to prove, and ſettle demonſtratively, that (whatever be ſaid of Jews, Arians, Heathens, Mahometanes) it is impoſſible to be imagined of the Romaniſts Oral Traditions, ſo circumſtantiated as they are, to have any fallibility in them.

SECT. IV.

A view of the great Demonſtration for the Infalliblneſs of Oral Tradition, firſt in Mr. White's, then in S. W's words. What the chief medium. Reduction of the diffuſed demonſtration to a Syllogiſm. The weaker propoſition of it unproved, taken for a principle by Mr. White, and ſo by S. W. The falſeneſs of it diſcovered in a firſt view, as the Church ſignifies the Church of Rome of the preſent age. The fallacy of notum per ignotius. His principle denyed by the Romaniſt. Certainty not of ſuch truth as may enter a demonſtration. No ſuch maxim declared. Not always held. Mr. White's confeſſion at another time. Other Romaniſts. Pope Clement's method of deciding Controverſies. Mr. White's anſwer conſidered. The method of the laſt Pope, and ſo of this preſent age. An argument borrowed from Mr. White, Appeal to the Mothers and Catechiſts, and to Mr. White's words elſewhere. A ſecond view of the propoſition. What 'tis to go on this Maxim. Bare profeſſions. A third view. Difference between delivering as an Opinion, and as a Doctrine of Faith. Mr. White's defence of Biſhop Fiſher's Doctrine of Purgatory and indulgences. The Greeks opinion of Purgatory in and after the Council of Florence. Mr. White's Maxim refuted by that Biſhop's words. The opinion of the ſecret Receptacles, among the Ancients, and Pope John 22. unreconcileable with Purgatories being of Univerſal Tradition. (Mr. White's repugnant anſwers) So Tranſubſtantiations not being of faith before the Council of Conſtance. Theodoret, Scotus, Tunſtall, Vaſquez. The Cup denyed the Laity. Circumgeſtation. The unhappineſs of S. W's Demonſtration.

1. LEt us therefore now ſolemnly view thoſe circumſtances, which promiſe, and inſure truth to every propoſition, which the Romaniſt Mothers teach their children, and of which is made up that Grand Demonſtration, the very Quinteſſence of Ruſhworth's Dialogues, in which the whole weight of the one ſelf-evident principle, Oral Tradition, the one infallible rule of faith (the Pope himſelf being by Mr. White ſolemnly diſcarded from his Infallibility, to make room for it) is ſummed up. And that we loſe no leaſt joynt of this controlling, irreſiſtible machine, I ſhall firſt ſet it down in the words of the great artificer himſelf, * the Apologiſt.

* Firſt Encounter, p. 8.

2. The

2. The proof, ſaith he, conſiſts in this, ſince 'tis confeſſed the Catholick Church goes upon this Maxim, that her Doctrine is received from Chriſt, and ſtill handed along to the preſent generation, they who cavil at this aſſertion (viz. that no errour was ever, or can be embraced by the Church in quality of a matter of Faith) ſhould aſſign ſome age, when they conceive an errour crept in, and the maintainers ſhould prove it entred not in that age, becauſe that age held nothing was to be admitted as of faith, except what was delivered to it by the former, but the objectours themſelves ſay, this ſuppoſed errour was not delivered by the former, ſince they put it to be now firſt believed, therefore the age in which they imagine this errour crept in, could not be the firſt that believed it. And leſt ſome might reply, though the preſent Roman Church ſtands now upon the propoſed Maxim, yet anciently it did not, the ſame argument may be thus reiterated. If this principle which now governs the Church, had not always done ſo, it muſt have been introduced in ſome age ſince the Apoſtles. Name therefore the age, and immediately 'tis urged, either the Church had aſſurance in that age, all ſhe held was deſcended lineally from the Apoſtles, or not. If ſo, then queſtionleſs ſhe held her Doctrine upon that Maxim, for it is the onely undoubted and ſelf evident principle; If not, then ſhe willfully belyed her ſelf, and conſpired to damn all her poſterity, voluntarily taking up this new rule of Faith, and commanding it to be accepted by all the world, as the neceſſary Doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, deſcended upon the preſent age by Univerſal Tradition from their Anceſtours, and for ſuch to be delivered to their children, and all this againſt the expreſs evidence of her own conſcience. Thus far reaches the argument.

3. Now if upon reading, and reading again, this confounding argument, and upon an undoubted underſtanding of every word, and portion of period in it, the Reader do not yet readily diſcern the immediateneſs of connexion, and ſo convincingneſs of it, but be ready to ask ſome innocent queſtion, whether the concluſion be inferred by one, or more Syllogiſms, or if by one, in what mode and figure it concludes, or if in more, which is the principal, and commanding medium, and the like, all the relief I can help him to, is to repeat it again in another (i. e. S. W's) mode, and then to hope that (as elſewhere he ſaith of the Oral repetitions of the ſame ſenſe in variety of words) this will be ſo ſure a means to plant the inward force of it in his mind, that he cannot chuſe but diſcern the demonſtrativeneſs of it. Hear then the Oracle more vocal and articulate, as he is echoed by his ὑποφήτης. Thus he delivers himſelf.

4. If it be impoſſible that all the now fathers of Families in the Catholick Church, diſpers'd in ſo many Nations, ſhould conſpire to tell this palpable lie to their children, that twenty years agoe ſuch a thing (viſible and practical, as all points of faith are) was held in that Church, if no ſuch thing had been, and that conſequently the ſame impoſſibility holds in each twenty years upwards till the Apoſtles, by the ſame reaſon, by which it holds in the laſt twenty, then it follows evidently that what was told us to have been held twenty years agoe, was held ever, in caſe the Church held nothing but upon this ground, that ſo ſhe received or had been taught by the immediately foregoing faithfull. For as long as ſhe pretends onely to this ground, the difficulty is equal in each twenty years, i. e. there is an equal impoſſibility they ſhould conſpire to this palpable lie. Now that they ever held to this ground (i. e. to the having received it from their Anceſtours) is manifeſted by as great an evidence; For ſince they now hold this ground, if at any time they had taken it up, they muſt either have counterfeited that they had received it from their Anceſtours, or no; The former relapſes into the aboveſaid impoſſibility, or rather greater, that they ſhould conſpire to tell a lie in the onely ground of their faith, and yet hold (as they did) their faith built on that ground to be truth: the latter poſition muſt diſcredit it ſelf in the very terms, which imply a perfect contradiction, for it is as much as to ſay, nothing is to be held as certainty of faith, but what hath deſcended to us from our Fore-fathers, and yet the onely rule which tells us certainly there is any thing of faith, is newly invented. And thus far the argument alſo in S. W's elucidation of it.

5. And here I ſeriouſly deſire the Reader, as he doth value his own intereſts (which he is by S. W. ſo oft aſſured, do depend upon the opening his heart to the force of this demonſtration) and upon pain, that if he comprehend it not in one of theſe draughts, he muſt, to compaſs it, be fain to ſurvey all Ruſhworth's Dialogues, to ſit down, and ponderingly revolve either, or both of theſe Schemes ſo long, till he be able to aſſign and determine, which is the Maſter-medium in this diſcourſe, which hath the chief efficacy in it, to infer the concluſion, which is agreed between us to be this [that no errour was ever or can be embraced by the Church (I muſt interpoſe, of Rome) in quality of a matter of Faith] And if then he find difficulty in the reſolution, he muſt either profeſs that he is more dull, than a Sceptick is irreſolute, or never heed this Epitomiſt of thoſe Dialogues more, which refers him thither for as ample ſatisfaction as Scepticiſm can deſire, and yet tranſcribes not ſo much from ſo rich a treaſury, as may give him the leaſt ſatisfaction.

6. When the Reader hath a little tired himſelf in a labyrinth of ſome perplexedneſs, perhaps he will be content to be directed to a clue, and it will be this one adviſe, not to penetrate too deep, when all that is to be had, flotes on the ſurface, obvious, and diſcernible at firſt ſight, in theſe two propoſitions. 1. That the Church of Rome hath one Maxim on which it goes, not to teach any thing de fide, which hath not been delivered or taught by the age immediately preceding. 2. That they which go by that Maxim, cannot poſſibly err in matter of Faith. From conjunction of which, this Syllogiſm is regularly conſtituted.

That Church which goes on this Maxim of not teaching any thing, de fide, which hath not been delivered or taught by the age immediately preceding, cannot poſſibly err in matters of Faith;

But the Church of Rome goes on this Maxim, not to teach any thing, de fide, which hath not been delivered or taught by the age immediately preceding.

Therefore that Church cannot poſſibly err in matters of faith.

Into this one Syllogiſm all the force of this commanding engine is contracted, and there being two parts of it, a ſtronger and a weaker, I ſhall not yet ſay, a true, and a falſe, but one which certainly wants more confirming than the other, it is obſervable that all the aids which are tendred, or brought in, are ſtrangely partial, come onely in favour of the ſtronger part, the weaker Phalanx having no creature to back it, no reſerve to inforce the firſt impreſſion, but lying at the mercy of the enemy, who if he ſhall have but courage enough to ſtand the firſt onſet, and deny the Minor propoſition, the unwary Syllogiſm is utterly routed, on the fortune of which depends this ſo (admired, were a poor word, unable to expreſs the leaſt part of S. W's kindneſs to it) adored, ſtupendious demonſtration.

7. This is ſo ſtrange an infirmity, and ſo little to have been expected from a ſevere diſcourſer, that I ſhall not expect to have it believed on my word; till the Readers own eyes accompany me through the Camp, either as Mr. White or as S. W. hath pitched it, and by their own diſcoveries aſcertain them of the truth of it. The weaker part I take to be the Minor, in theſe words, The Church of Rome goes on this Maxim, not to teach any thing de fide, which hath not been delivered or taught by the age immediately preceding. And in the firſt words of Mr. White's deſcription of this argument, this is taken for a thing granted. Since, ſaith he, 'tis confeſſed the Catholick Church (or, as after, his ſtyle is, the Roman Church) goes on this Maxim, that her Doctrine is received from Chriſt, and ſtill handed along to the preſent generation] Here ſure 'tis evident, that the truth of the minor is taken as confeſs'd and then I am not to have ſo mean an opinion of the demonſtratour's skill, that he will impertinently attempt to prove, what he takes for confeſs'd. And indeed herein he hath obſerved the rules of his art, he hath not added a word toward the proof of it, but on the contrary, makes uſe of that, as of a principle for the proving of every thing elſe, that can be doubted of. So it follows in the next words, They who cavil at this aſſertion [viz. that no errour was ever or can be embraced by the Church in quality of a matter of faith] ſhould aſſign ſome age when they conceive an errour crept in, and the maintainer, i. e. the Apologiſt himſelf, ſhould prove, it entred not in that age, becauſe that age held, nothing was to be admitted as of faith, except what was delivered to it by the former.] Here 'tis evident their holding this Maxim, is the onely proof of his grand concluſion, or aſſertion, and no farther proof is tendred of that; So again in theſe words, [Leſt ſome might reply, though the preſent Roman Church ſtands now upon the propoſed Maxim, yet anciently it did not,] — Here the objecter, replyer, adverſary, that is foreſeen to queſtion the ancient Churches holding this Maxim, is yet ſtill preſumed to acknowledge it without all queſtion, that the preſent Roman Church ſtands now upon this Maxim. Once more, in theſe words [The argument may be thus reiterated, If this principle which now governs the Church, had not always done ſo —] Here it is again preſumed, that this principle now governs the Church, and from thence to the end of the argument not a ſyllable toward the proving of it, but all along a taking it for granted, that the Church goes on this Maxim, as on the onely undoubted, and ſelf evident principle.

8. So in S. W's Scheme, though it be not ſo crudely affirmed to be confeſs'd, that they go on this Maxim, yet it is viſibly ſuppoſed, or taken for granted that they doe, in theſe words, [For as long as ſhe pretends onely to this ground, viz. that ſo ſhe received or had been taught by the immediately foregoing faithfull —] and For ſince they now hold this ground —] and again, It is as much as to ſay, nothing is to be held for certainty of Faith, but what hath deſcended to us from our fore-fathers —] ſtill ſuppoſing them to hold to that Maxim, to ſay (as that which they adhere to) that nothing is to be held but what thus deſcendeth.

9. Here then will be the ſpeedy end of this controverſie, if without any ſolicitous ſearch, or nicer examination of the major propoſition, we betake our ſelves wholly to the beholding of his Minor, and examine what could induce him to aſſume that as a confeſs'd or yielded principle, which when it is explained, will be found to have very little appearance of truth, certainly nothing of ſelf-evidence in it.

10. All then that is now farther incumbent on us, is by a view, or two, thus to explain, and to ſecure the Reader of the right underſtanding of the propoſition, there being ſome phraſes a little ambiguous in it, which muſt be cleared, before it will have any determinate ſenſe in it, whether true or falſe. As 1. what is meant by the Church of Rome, or, as he ſtyles it, the Catholick Church, Is it the Church of this age, or no? To this he yields me expreſs anſwer, that he means the Church of this age.

11. Here then, ere we advance any farther, it is obſervable, that he thinks it incumbent on him to prove that other ages of the Church have held this Maxim, and accordingly attempts to infer it by this medium, the preſent Churches holding it, and yet never thinks fit to tender us any the ſlighteſt ſecurity, that the preſent Church it ſelf doth hold it, when yet he cannot but gueſs, that we are more inclineable to believe it of many former, than of theſe latter, or this one preſent age of the Roman Church; and it being not a principle either of natural or Chriſtian Theology, that this age holds it, more than all or any other ages (when yet that all others held it, was not deemed ſuch a principle, and therefore he attempted to prove it) this ſure is no method of ſevere demonſtration, but a downright begging the principle, and a proving ignotum per ignotius, that which leſs needs, by that which moſt needs his arguments to ſecure the truth of it, and ſo as mean a piece of Sophiſtry, as could well have appeared in ſo venerable a dreſs.

12. For 1. that which he pretends to be confeſs'd, is of all things moſt conſtantly, and confeſs'dly denyed by us; yea and by the ſobereſt of their own Writers; for when * Caſſander makes no ſcruple to affirm that the preſent Church non parum in doctrinæ ſinceritate ab antiqua, unde orta illa eſt & derivata, diſſidet, doth not a little differ from the ancient, whence it is derived, in ſincerity of Doctrine; and again that à veteri Eccleſia deflexit, it hath deflected from the ancient Church, and particularly of the Popes that they have advanced their authority ultra fines, beyond the bounds preſcribed by Chriſt and the Church, no doubt can be made of his denying that the Church of that his age went by this Maxim; And then if this age goes by it, it muſt, (contrary to S. W's reaſoning) take it up anew. 2. If it were indeed confeſs'd by his adverſary, nay more than ſo, if it were de facto really true, yet if it be but contingently true, i. e. ſuch as might have been otherwiſe, (as it needs muſt, if it depend on others wills, as their confeſſing doth) 'tis not then neceſſary, and conſequently can be no ingredient in a demonſtration, which muſt conſiſt of none but neceſſaries; what is but contingently true, is but probable, and Mr. White hath taught him what to think of a thouſand (and that is ſomewhat above one) but probable mediums.

* Conſult. Art. 7.

13. But

13. But then thirdly, if I ſhall not take the advantage of either of theſe frailties (which yet are queſtionleſs the ruine of his whole fabrick) but leave him to repair the preſent defect by future diligence, and prove hereafter, what yet he hath not attempted to prove, I diſcern not that he is capable of receiving any the leaſt benefit by this compliance; for although I need not undertake to maintain the negative, in matter of fact (ſo undiſcernible, as it muſt needs be, what maxims their preſent Church holds at this time, when 'tis not agreed among themſelves, to whom the infallible pronouncing belongs, ſome being as earneſt for the perſon of the Pope, as Mr. White in his Tab. Suffrag. is againſt him) yet neither can he with any reaſon pretend to maintain the affirmative, unleſs either he ſet up for auguries, undertake to interpret mens minds without their words, or be able to produce ſome declaration made by his Church in this matter, which whether it be poſſible or no to be made, I need not define, when 'tis certain they have not lately ſo much as met in a Council to make it.

14. Nay fourthly, to give him over meaſure, if I may heed the reaſonings of S. W. I ſhall not want motives to reſolve the plain negative, that this is not the maxim of their Church at this day. One of his reaſonings is from their ſuppoſed holding it now, to infer their holding it ever; which if it be demonſtrative, it muſt then follow in the converſe, that if they held it not ever, they do not hold it now; But that they held it not ever, ſeems apparent to me, by that age, when not onely Liberius the Pope, but in a manner their whole Church, and the totus orbis whole world were become of the Emperour's Religion, i. e. heretical or Arian, and yet as the age foregoing that, ſo again the age following under an Orthodox Emperour and Pope, was Orthodox, which it could not be, if it proceeded by this maxim, of holding nothing as of faith, but what was delivered to them by the immediate foregoing.

15. The ſame I ſhall again prove by my wordiſh way of Teſtimonies, from the Apologiſt's own pen (when 'tis his, I hope 'twill be as important as his words) in Dailles arts Diſcov. p. 224. Every one knows, ſaith he, that ſubſequent Councils have always been ſo far from thinking it unlawfull to add unto the former, that ſuch additions are the very buſineſs and end of their aſſembling. Theſe are his expreſs words, and by him applyed to the modern points of Controverſie, and rendring an account of how little importance Mr. Dailles objection was, that they are not reſolved in former Creeds and Councils, for every one knows, ſaith he, &c. which if it hath truth in it, then ſubſequent have added to former ages, and that they cannot be imagined to doe, while they ſtand to this Maxim of believing nothing, but what they received from the former.

16 The ſame is as evident again by the frequent profeſſions, of Romaniſt Writers, not onely thoſe, that tell us diſtinctly, when ſuch or ſuch a point became a doctrine of faith, as Scotus, Ante Lateranenſe Cencilium Tranſubſtantiatio non fuit dogma fidei, Before the Lateran Council, that manner of the real preſence in the Sacrament which is called Tranſubſtantiation, was not a doctrine of Faith, but alſo thoſe many others, who when the ſayings of any of their ancients are brought againſt them, reply, that this was before the contrary truth was defined, the reſult of which is, that thoſe things which were not formerly held, were after, ſomewhat more than barely held, viz. defined.

17. And it may be remembred what anſwer Mr. White once gave to one argument in this point. The argument was this, A great controverſie being riſen between the Dominicans and the Jeſuits, it was heard before Pope Clement; that Pope in a time, wherein he was more oppoſed than uſually, had reaſon conſequently to be more cautious, than to chuſe a new way, by which truth was not wont to be found out by the Romaniſts, on like occaſions, and therefore the courſe he took may paſs in reaſon (for more than an inſtance, or ſingle example) for a proof of his opinion and judgment at leaſt what that Churches courſe was in ſuch deciſions. And yet his courſe was not that of this preſent maxim, to inquire what the age immediately foregoing ſaid of the point in Controverſie, and determining according to that, but he appointed both ſides to prove which of them followed St. Auſtine, intending according to that to give ſentence, if he had not been prevailed with to the contrary. Now when Mr. White comes to conſider this argument, his dealing is a little remarkable, his word are theſe, * In Clement the eighths action the main point is to conſider on what grounds he ſought to eſtabliſh the definition he went about to make. And, upon the immediate ſtep, we both joyntly ſtand, to wit, that it was to find out, whether parties opinion was conformable to St. Auſtin. But if I miſtake not, my adverſaries make not the ſame apprehenſion of it that I do, They ſeem to take St. Auſtin for one Doctour, peradventure a great one, peradventure the chief, but yet onely one; I apprehend him as the leading Champion of the Church in the Queſtion of grace, whence it follows, that the Doctrine of St. Auſtin was the Doctrine of all thoſe Catholick Writers, by whoſe demonſtrations and authority the Pelagians were condemned, i. e. it was the faith of the Church in that age, and conſequently which the Church continued ever after.] * Apol. p. 59.

18. Here 1. it is evident, that the onely thing, whereon the weight of the argument lay, [viz. that the Pope determined to define according not to his immediate anceſtours, but St. Auſtin's Doctrine] is wholly laid aſide by the Apologiſt, and not a word of anſwer given to it, but a diverſion made to another thing which was no part of the argument; 2. That for the ages between St. Auſtin and that Pope, there is no word ſaid, much leſs of the age immediately foregoing the age of that Pope, ſave in the laſt words [it was the faith of the Church in St. Auſtin's age, and conſequently which the Church continued ever after.] Where by a ſtrange Logick, the Churches holding it ever after, is proved by that ages holding it, in which St Auſtine lived, as if I ſhould ſay, the Arians Doctrine was the faith of the Church in Conſtantius's age, therefore it hath been ſo ever ſince, or to keep cloſe to the inſtance of St Auguſtine, that holy Father defined the cruciating of Infants in hell fire, who died without Baptiſm, and his Doctrine, if we believe Mr. White, was the Doctrine of that age, therefore it hath been the Doctrine of all ſucceeding ages; which, beſide the evident falſneſs of the Concluſion, is moreover a Regreſſus, and Circle both, in that learned Gentleman's Logick, one while proving it the faith of former ages, becauſe it is the faith of the preſent age, and now that it is the faith of the Church ever after, and ſo at preſent, becauſe it was the faith in St. Auſtine's, 1200. years agoe. 3. It may be obſerved alſo that he ſaith the Pelagians in St. Auſtin's time were condemned by the demonſtrations and authority of the Catholick Writers, whom he there mentions, and explains plains by [that is the Church in that age] which if it were true, then the definition in St. Auſtin's time was made by the authorities of that age, and that is not of the precedent age, of which the now pretended Maxim proceeds; Nay 4. he reſolves expreſly that Pope Clement had great reaſon to endeavour the deciſion of that queſtion by the authority of St. Auſtin; which was all that the argument deſired, and ſo the concluſion ſtands good, that unleſs St. Auſtine's age were the immediate foregoing age to Clement the eighth, the Maxim was not in force with that Clement, to judge by the immediate foregoing.

19. Laſtly, this argument, it ſeems, had more force in it, than the ſingle inſtance of Clement, one Pope, could give it; for, * Mr. White himſelf tells us (as on another occaſion I formerly ſhewed) that in the laſt Pope's time when that queſtion was again debated, almoſt in every Congregation the ſentence of St. Auſtin was judged to be againſt the Moliniſts,] by which one may gueſs Mr. White's own ſenſe to be, that the definition ought to have been by that ſtandard (how that will be interpreted by them that think the Pope ſoon after judged on the other ſide, I ſhall not foreſee) and yet farther, that the Pope in the tenth Congregation taxed them, Quod Scholaſticis maximè ſuis, non Scripturâ, Conciliis, Patribus uterentur, That they uſed the Schoolmen, eſpecially their own, and not the Scripture, Councils, and Fathers.) And if the School-men be they that lived in the age immediately foregoing, and if Fathers and Councils and Scriptures are ſomewhat ancienter, and if theſe did not agree in the ſame Doctrine (for if they did, they might eaſily have reformed their Proceſs at the Pope's check, and loſt nothing by it) then ſure it is not yet the Maxim of this age, or but laſt ſeven years (wherein this was done) to decide Controverſies, or judge of Doctrines by what was delivered by the ages immediately foregoing (which is S. W's principle) but by Scriptures, Fathers, and Councils, which is the poor preaching Proteſtants method of probation.

* Apol. p. 62.

20. One thing more I ſhall offer to conſideration, from Mr. White's Tabulæ ſuffragiales, where as an aſſerter of the * Churches Infallibility, founded in their proceeding according to this Maxim, he vehemently oppoſeth the † expecting of any new Articles of Faith, and as a branch of that, the * Infallibility of the Pope, the belief of which he reſolves to be † improbable, * heretical, † Archihereticall, and the * propogating the opinion, a moſt grievous ſin. From hence I ſuppoſe I may conclude, that this ſo improbable, heretical, Archihereticall, and moſt grievouſly ſinfull opinion, was by him conſidered as oppoſite to, and unreconcileable with his own Doctrine of the Churches Infallibility, founded in their proceeding by his Maxim; And ſo moſt evidently it is oppoſite, for if the Pope can infallibly define, and ſo make any new article, then ſomewhat may be defined, and ſo taught in any one age of the Church, which had not been taught in the age immediately foregoing, which is the direct contradictory to this Maxim; Which being yielded to Mr. White's arguments, 'tis yet moſt certain, that a very great and conſiderable part of the preſent Church of Rome, do as earneſtly maintain this power and Infallibility of the Pope, as Mr. White oppoſes it; How then can they be with truth affirmed, (or conſequently their preſent Church, of whom theſe are ſo great and conſiderable and flouriſhing a part) to proceed on this maxim (ſo contrary to their own reſolute opinion) of teaching nothing de fide but what the former age had taught them?

* Tab. 4. & 22.
† Tab. 1.
* Tab. 10, 11, 12, 13, 15.
† Tab. 17. 8.
* Tab. 19.
† Tab. 20.
* Tab. 21.

21. To conclude this point, I cannot, I ſuppoſe, put it to an iſſue more to the hearts deſire of the demonſtratours, than by appealing to his Oral Traditours themſelves, whether the flattering Catholick Mothers, or the Catechiſts, and of them I demand what aſſurance S. W. hath, that this is one ſolemn part of their inſtruction, and familiar Colloquy with their tender Catechumeni, that they teach them nothing but what before their Fathers, or rather Mothers had taught them; that among the firſt elements of the acquiſition of beatitude and maxims of piety, this really is one at leaſt, if not the firſt and principal, that they teach them not a propoſition, but what their Mothers taught them. If my adverſaries will not ſtand to this appeal, the practice of the preſent Mothers and Catechiſts in this matter, what can they ſay in their defenſe, that by Oral Tradition profeſs to mean that of the Mothers flattering into their children the elements of happineſs, and would have it believed, and preſume it confeſs'd, that their Church doth now in their Oral Tradition goe upon this maxim; If they will ſtand to it, let them direct us to any competent means to diſcern, 1. that any, 2. that not onely ſome, but all Mothers did ever entertain this maxim, (not contenting themſelves with that other ground of faith, the Doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles in Scripture) 3. that they have all thought it their duty thus (and not any other way) to teach and inſtill the faith into their children; 4. that they that neglect many other parts of their duty, are certain never to neglect that; I ſhall leave this profound pair of Tutor and Scholar to chew upon this a while, and diſcern how eaſie it will be for them to prove, and till that be ſome way attempted, how reaſonable it is to ſuppoſe, and expect it will be granted, that all Catholick mothers thus teach their children; and, whatever elſe they omit, are ſure not to omit this, viz. not onely to infuſe into them every branch of the Roman Catholick faith, and infuſe it intelligibly, and ſo as they cannot probably miſtake it in any branch, but withall to every branch particularly to add, and inculcate, that this they learn'd from their Mothers, and they from theirs (which ſure is more than they can know) up to the Apoſtles. It may here deſerve to be remembred, what Mr. White once thought true in his anſwer to my Lord Falkland, that not onely the Clowns, but good women (thoſe ſure are the Mothers) in Spain and Italy trouble not themſelves to ſeek the ground of their faith] and if ſo, 'tis ſhrewdly to be ſuſpected that they do not trouble their children with any account of it; And if indeed it be conſidered how very little is taught the people at all, and of that little, how much leſs than a little is any more than barely taught them, there will be little room for debate or doubt in this matter. And this may ſerve for a firſt view of the Propoſition.

P. 33.

22. If we look on it a ſecond time, it will not be amiſs to demand, what is meant by going on this Maxim] Is the meaning of it, that the Church profeſſes to goe by that maxim, or more than ſo, that it really goes on it, and never ſwerves from it? Theſe two are very diſtant in themſelves, and that difference muſt needs have a main influence on the concluſion, which is to be induced by this principle.

23. If he ſhould mean that the Church of Rome doth and always hath acted according to this principle, then he cannot imagine that this will be allowed to paſs as a principle without any attempt of proof. 'Tis certain they that charge the Church of Rome with additionals, do not believe or acknowledge that they have made no additions to the faith, but contend and ſpecifie many particulars wherein they have innovated; And to anſwer them, that they do, and have always acted according to that maxim, is to prove they have not innovated, becauſe they have not innovated, and that is, I hope, the begging of the queſtion in the deepeſt tincture. And in this ſenſe to ſay (as Mr. White doth) 'tis confeſs'd that their Church goes upon this maxim] would be the ſuggeſtion the fartheſt removed from all appearance of truth; It being viſible we do not confeſs it. It remains then, that the meaning be no more than this, that their Church profeſſes to proceed on that maxim, which though it be not ſuggeſted with truth, as appeared in our firſt view, yet if it were the moſt demonſtrative truth, it could have no more force in it, than a deceiver's profeſſion that he ſpeaks nothing but truth, which being onely his teſtimony of himſelf, and bringing no miracles to confirm it, is no advantage, but rather prejudice to him, and admoniſhes us, that they that profeſs ſo demurely to innovate nothing, do fear detecting, and endeavour to ſupply with profeſſions what is wanting in performances. And this, it ſeems, is the utmoſt importance of the propoſition, for ſo Mr. White delivers it, the maintainers ſhall prove, the errour entred not in that age, becauſe that age held nothing was to be admitted as of faith, except what was delivered to it by the former. It held] denotes it their Tenet; Their Tenet, if it be not that, by which they really act, is no more than an unſincere profeſſion, and every ſeducer in the world hath ſtore of them, which paſs for arguments with thoſe which have no better. As in our Engliſh ſtory he that could not confirm his new Revelations by miracles, endeavoured to do it by ſtrong aſſeverations, and from thence proceeded to Oaths and execrations againſt himſelf, if it were not true which he delivered; And if either he or S. W. can hope this ſhall goe for demonſtrating, [The Church of Rome profeſſes to teach nothing but received truth, therefore it is infallible] he muſt have a very mean opinion of his Reader, who if he would believe all that is profeſs'd on that one evidence, becauſe it is profeſs'd, had never needed his Ruſhworths Dialogues, to convince him to receive the Roman faith, for before the writing of thoſe, he knew there were ſuch Romaniſts, that did profeſs it.

of

24. Here then a ſecond ambiguity being explicated, he hath leave to take which part of the explication he pleaſe; If he take the former, he muſt be at a new charge to prove that their Church never miſſes to act according to that maxim, for elſe I can aſſure him it ſhall never be granted upon his importunity; If he take the latter, he hath gained nothing by it, but that their profeſſions and practice are at ſome diſtance, which is little for the reputation of them, for whom he thus pleadeth. A man would not think it poſſible, that ſo hopefull and promiſing a demonſtration ſhould ſo ſoon fall to this deſtitute ſtate, by a little cloſer inſpection; As it is, it yields us a lively inſtance, if we needed ſuch, that every thing performs not, what it profeſſes.

25. Let us proceed to a third and laſt view, and demand, what is meant by not teaching de fide what hath not been delivered or taught——] Is it to be underſtood of teaching nothing as an article of faith, which was not delivered or taught as an article of faith by the foregoing age? There is a very conſiderable difference between theſe two, delivering or teaching a thing as an opinion, and delivering or teaching the ſame as a doctrine of faith. And if by taught by the age immediately foregoing, he mean onely, taught as an opinion, then his maxim in plain terms is this, that no age of their Church defines any thing de fide, which was not before held as an opinion; And if that be it, then firſt he muſt own it as his confeſſion, that his Church teaches what it hath not been taught by the foregoing age, for it teaches a thing de fide, or neceſſary to be believed, which the foregoing age taught not as ſuch; 2. It concludes nothing to his advantage, but rather againſt him, viz. that probable opinions of their former Doctours, are converted into matters of Faith by their latter. Thus 'tis evident, that all the Mothers, that inſtruct their children out of Bellarmine's Catechiſm, aſſure them * that the Bleſſed Virgin never had any ſpot of ſin neither original nor actual, which S. W. if he continue to be Mr. White's Scholar, will not yield to have been any part of the Faith of the foregoing age. And then 'tis not a much larger ſtep for a mere falſity to be help'd to a fair varniſh, and converted into a probable opinion; And he knows this is the progreſs by which we affirm the Romiſh additionals to have advanced from groundleſs into probable opinions, and from thence into definitions.

* Chriſt. Doctr. p. 142.

26. But if by taught] he mean taught as an article of faith, then to take this for confeſs'd, and needing no proof, which is of all things moſt denyed by us, what an intolerable begging of the queſtion is it?

27. This again were ſufficient to evacuate his propoſition, which pretends to no truth but from his adverſaries largneſs, and that will not always be afforded him. But I ſhall add a little more on this head, to juſtifie the reaſonableneſs of our non-conceſſion or down-right denyal, and it ſhall be by a few inſtances; The firſt in the Doctrine of Purgatory, which is competently known to be not barely an opinion, but a Doctrine of Faith in the preſent Roman Church, meaning thereby, as it is viſible they mean, not that of the conflagration at the day of Judgment, but the purgative pains of Souls, attending their departure out of the body, wherein thoſe ſouls which ſhall one day come to heaven, are now detained. Yet of this we have evidence enough, that it hath not been thus delivered to the preſent Church by the foregoing in this quality of a Doctrine or point of Faith; Inſtead of many, take the Teſtimony of † Otho Friſingenſis, who wrote above five hundred years ſince, Eſſe apud Inferos locum Purgatorium in quo ſalvandi vel tenebris tantum afficiantur vel expiationis igne decoquantur quidam aſſerunt, That there is in the other world a Purgatory, in which they which ſhall be ſaved, are either puniſhed with darkneſs onely, or ſcorch'd with the fire of expiation, is aſſerted by ſome. Which concludes it at that time but an opinion of ſome, and not any publick Doctrine, or article of Faith. What Mr. White himſelf hath thought in this queſtion, can be no ſecret, after the publiſhing his thoughts de medio animarum ſtatu, where utterly denying any * ſuch Purgatory, as from the Schools is now vulgarly taught, and contenting himſelf with that of the † conflagration at the day of judgment, he yet vindi-

† Chron. l. 8. c. 26.

* Non itaque locum uſpiam tartareis oppletum ferculis cogitamus, quibus ab extrinſeco tortore lanienam patiantur. Dim. 1. p. 3.

† Quiſquis admittit animas purgari in die judicii per flammas conflagrationis, defendit Purgatorium in ſenſu ſanctorum. Dim. VII. p. 26.

cates himſelf to be far from departing from the faith of the ancient Church, adding alſo (how truly let others inquire) that the contrary is at this day but an opinion and not Doctrine of their Church. Which if it were true, it were a great partiality firſt, and yet withall a great ſeverity, that when they have liberty to think as they pleaſe, we Proteſtants ſhould be condemned for hereticks (if not for Schiſmaticks too) for not ſubſcribing to this or the like articles, which in the ſame manner as this, are taught in the Roman Church. One advantage of weight this point hath above ſome other, that it hath an eminent practice dependent on it, that of Indulgences, as they have been of later times uſed in their Church; and if one be not a Doctrine of Faith, 'twere ſtrange that the other, being wholly founded in it, ſhould be allowed ſo general and ſolemn a practice in their Church, (as for ſome time it had) that this authour, being by his hypotheſis kept from being * willing to yield it the practice of the Church and Univerſal, yet freely confeſſes, † paſſim exerceri, that 'tis every where exerciſed. Accordingly the Doctrine it ſelf, which he rejects, he yet owns as the vulgar opinion though not of the Church, yet of the Homines Eccleſiæ, perſons of which the Church hath conſiſted ſince the time of the Schools. The importance of this diſtinction of his may be worth obſerving; It is this, as far as I can deduce from what himſelf declares; that what they believe or acknowledge as * ſo many perſons, not as ſo many believers, or parts of the Church, belongs not to the Faith, any more than an opinion in Philoſophy or Hiſtory; but what they believe as a † Church or company of Believers, that belongs to them as to thoſe that have accepted the Doctrine of Chriſt, and conſerved it to this very day, which, ſaith he, can have no place in this opinion, which * 'tis clear that it began from the times of Gregory the Great, was not thought of in Auſtin's time, and not very famous before the age of the School, and either not propoſed or rejected by the Eaſtern Church, and therefore whatſoever ſort of perſwaſion may be pretended for it, in reſpect of the men of the Church yet it hath no pretenſion to them, † as they are a Church, i. e. as believers, i. e. as founded upon perpetual Tradition. Thus he, and from thence I ſhould hope it concluſible to others, as well as to this particular, that whatſoever is in the preſent Roman Church moſt generally believed, if it be not founded in perpetual tradition, but appear to have a later beginning, or no Univerſal reception in other parts of the Church, ſhall not paſs for a point of faith. And this will be a competent prejudice to the Oral way, which ſaith S. W. from its being held now, concludes it was ever held.

* Si dicas eſſe praxim—& tamen non permittis eſſe ſingulorum praxim, ſed Eccleſiæ & Univerſalem, tardus accedo, Dim. 27. p. 120.

† Si dicas paſſim exerceri, ſi à multis, à pleriſque, omnia fateor—Ibid.

Dim. 28.

* Tot homines & perſonæ.

† Cum Eccleſia ſit congregatio fidelium, hoc eſt credentium, hoc eſt eorum qui Chriſti doctrinam acceptaverunt, & uſque in hodiernum diem conſervaverunt. p. 126.

* Hanc autem ſententiam clarum ſit incepiſſe—Ibid.

† In eos ut Eccleſia ſunt, hoc eſt ut credentes, hoc eſt ut ſuper perpetua traditione fundati, nullum prætextum habet. Ibid.

28. But I ſhall lead the Reader to another view of this authour's ſenſe of this matter, when a year after the publiſhing the Tract de med. An. Statu, he comes, on another ingagement, to conſider this point of Purgatory. In my Lord of Faulkland's * Reply to an Anſwer of his to his Lordſhips diſcourſe of Infallibility, the words of Biſhop Fiſher were produced, that there are many things of which there was no inquiry in the Primitive Church, which yet upon doubts ariſing are now become perſpicuous by the diligence of after-times. And his inſtance being of Purgatory and Indulgences, is expreſs'd in ſuch words, as evidently ſhew (what the Lord obſerved) that he ſpeaks not of matters of bare opinion, but of points of faith, No Orthodox man, † ſaith that Biſhop, doubts whether there be a Purgatory, of which yet among the ancients there is * no mention, or exceeding rarely; it is not believed by the Greeks to this day, neither did the Latines conceive this truth but by little and little; and again, Purgatory was a good while unknown, after, partly by Revelations, partly by Scripture it came by little and little to be believed by ſome, and ſo at laſt the belief of it was generally received by the Catholick Churches. And for Indulgences, who, ſaith he, can wonder, that in the Primitive Church there was no uſe of them, which began after men had trembled a while at the torments of Purgatory. To this Mr. White's anſwer is, that he † conceives there is a great equivocation through want of care and warineſs in diſtinguiſhing (here then we are like to have an eſſay, how ambiguous the plaineſt teſtimony may be rendred, when Wits, as S. W. told us, have to deal with it) For, ſaith he, let us take the Council of Florence or Trent, in which we have the Churches ſenſe concerning both Purgatory and Indulgences, and ſee whether the holy Biſhop ſays any of the points thoſe Councils defined, are either denyed by the Greeks, or brought in by private Revelations, or new Interpretations of Scripture. For how could he be ignorant that the Greek had agreed to the Latine Church about the definition of Purgatory in the Council of Florence, or forget himſelf ſo far as not to remember a publick practice, indulgences in all the ancient Church for remiſſion of penal injunctions laid upon ſinners? Beſides he ſaith that the Latines did not receive Purgatory at once, but by little and little. Whence 'tis evident by the name Purgatory he means not onely ſo much as is eſtabliſhed in the Council, but that the manner alſo and circumſtances were introduced by revelations of private perſons, and argumentations of Divines. The like he expreſſes of Indulgences, ſaying they began after men had trembled a while at the pains of Purgatory. Whence it is plain he contented not himſelf with the preciſe ſubject of the Councils definition, or the ſenſe of the Church, but included alſo interpretations as Divines give of them. So that by ſpeaking in general terms, and not diſtinguiſhing the ſubſtance of Purgatory from the accidents and dreſſing of it, as likewiſe in Indulgences not ſeparating what the Church hath alway practiſed, from the interpretative extenſion which Divines attribute to them, he is miſtaken to ſuppoſe new articles of Faith may be brought into the Church; Neither imports it that he uſeth theſe words, No Orthodox man now doubts, for that is true of ſuch concluſions as are termed Theological, and generally received in the Schools, yet are not arrived to the pitch of making a point of Catholick belief: beſides he expreſſes himſelf that this generally extends no farther than that there is a Purgatory. Thus far are the words of his anſwer, which I have ſet down at large, that I might not maim by abbreviating them, and that the Reader may with eaſe accompany me in a diſtinct view of them.

* P. 109.

† P. 496.

* Apud priſcos nulla, vel quam rariſſima fiebat mentio, ſed Græci ad hunc uſquediem non creditur Purgatorium eſſe. Roff. cont. artic. 19. Luth.

† Apol. p. 59.

29. With his firſt propoſal then I ſhall comply ſo far, as to take the Council of Florence or Trent and diſcern what advantage theſe will help him to, toward the avoiding the force of the Biſhop's Teſtimony. For though that Biſhop dyed almoſt thirty years before the drawing up the Decree de Purgatorio- torio in the Council of Trent, and ſo can have no relation to that, yet this ſhall not cauſe any difference between us. The decree of Florence and of Trent are very conſonant in the matter of Purgatory; That of Trent, * Eſſe Purgatorium—— that there is a Purgatory, and that the ſouls there detained are helped by the ſuffrages of the faithfull, but eſpecially by the acceptable ſacrifice of the Altar. That of Florence, † that if thoſe that are truely penitent, die in the love of God, before they have by meet fruits of Repentance ſatisfied for their commiſſions and omiſſions, their ſouls after death are purged by Purgatory pains, but ſo, as that for their relief from thoſe pains the helps of faithfull men living are profitable to them, viz. the holy Sacrifices and Prayers and Alms and other works of piety, which are wont to be performed by the other faithfull, according to the precepts of the Church.

* Concil. Trid. Seſſ. XXV.

† ὅσοις τῆς Συνόδ. t. 8. p. 853.

30. Now that the Biſhop ſpake not of this thus defined by the Councils, he ſuppoſes himſelf to have proved demonſtratively by this onely argument, becauſe the Greeks had agreed to the Latine Church about this definition in the Council of Florence. But herein the Seſſions of that Council will ſufficiently inform us. In the fifteenth Seſſion we reade that four Metropolitanes conſented to this determination, μήτε ὑπάρχειν μὲν ἐν βασανιστηρίῳ καὶ εἴτε πῦρ ἐστὶν, εἴτε ζόφος καὶ θύελλα, εἴτε τι ἕτερον, ἃ διατείνεται Ibid. p. 838. μεθα, that the middle ſouls are in a place of torment, and whether it be fire, or miſt and tempeſt, or any thing elſe, they contend not. When therefore the article in the ſame Seſſion was drawn up into this form, that they which had ſinn'd and confeſs'd and were in the number of penitents, and had not performed works of ſatisfaction, ſhould goe into Purgatory fire, and being there purged ſhould be placed in the number of thoſe who behold God's eſſence immediately, the Greeks anſwer then is, that they had no power from their Emperour to anſwer any thing, but as friends privately they anſwered that they receive that which they ſaid of Purgatory, and they truely admitted that the Souls ſee the eſſence of God, and being preſs'd to receive their writing, having no mandate of the Emperour's, they received it not. So again when the Patriarch of Conſtantinople was dead, an Epiſtle of his is produced wherein of Purgatory he ſaith, ὅτε δὲ αὐτὸ ἐχώρισαν, ὅτε ἀναγκαῖον δὴ, that the diviſion or ſeparation was not on that account, neither was it neceſſary. Then the Emperour called all the Prelates of the whole Church, and in ſome the whole Oriental Synod, and the determination was concerning Purgatory and one other particular, μήδ' ὅλως εἰπεῖν περὶ αὐτῶν, that they ſhould not at all ſpeak of them, ἀγνοοῦντες ὡς ὅμως τῷ ἀληθῆ τὰ πράγματα περαίνειν, not knowing as I think, the true determination of the matter. Then the Latines reſiſted the Emperour, and told him, that 'tis impoſſible for the Church to be united, unleſs theſe two controverſies be added; But the Emperour οὐ κατεπείσθη, would not be perſwaded; Then the Latines preſs'd τὸ περὶ τῶν καθαρσίων μόνον τιθῶσιν ἐν ὅρῳ, that there ſhould be no more put in the decree but onely the mention of Purgatory. Then after a while, the occaſions of departing preſſing the Emperour, he tells them, * he hath no more to ſay, but that he can ſtay no longer. Then Cardinal Julian doeth what he can παραθύειν to mollifie the Emperour, and again, all going to his houſe ἀναγκάζουσι τὸν βασιλέα πολλὰ, We earneſtly conſtrained him, telling him the onely queſtion was that the ſouls of penitent ſinners are purged by prayers, and therefore they † pioufly entertaining the Emperour, conſtrained him to finiſh the work, but he would not. After that the Emperour called to him the proxies of the three Patriarchs, Gregory the proxy of the Patriarch of Alexandria, and Marcus Metropolitan of Epheſus, proxy both of the Patriarch of Antioch and Jeruſalem. But this produced nothing in favour of the decree, but on the contrary Marcus and Scholarius diſputed largely againſt it, as in the Synod is ſet down; and to conclude, the Greek Biſhops returned home, and told their fellows what had paſs'd, and they diſliked and would not ſtand to the agreement, ſo ſaith, Laonicus Chalcocondylas, Græci domum reverſi non amplius his quæ convenerant in Italia, ſtare voluerunt, verùm apprehendentes ſententiam diverſam, noluerunt amplius in Religionis negotio adhærere Romanis. The Greeks returning home would not ſtand to the Italian concord, but taking up a contrary opinion, would not adhere to the Romans in the buſineſs of Religion. On this the Pope ſent learned men to Conſtantinople to diſpute it; but, ſaith he, the Greeks received not the Concord, and ubi ad colloquium & diſputationem ventum eſt, Romani nihil efficere potuerunt, verùm re infectâ domum reverſi ſunt, When they came to diſcourſe and debate, the Romans could prevail nothing, but returned home without doing ought.

* Πλέον οὐδὲν λέγουσιν, ὁ καιρὸς δ' ἤγγικε, καὶ πλέον ἃ δοκεῖ μὴ μέλλειν. p. 844.

† Εὐσεβῶς ἀναγκάζουσι τὸν βασιλέα πολλὰ, τὸ ἐπὶ τοῖς ὁσίοις ἀνδράσι τὸ ἔργον ἐκτελεσθῆναι. Ibid.

l. VI. p. 407.

31. For the farther clearing of the Greeks ſenſe, I refer the Reader to their Apologetick Tract written (as now we have it annex'd to Nilus and Barlaam) but a year before the Council of Florence, and deſigned particularly, and accordingly preſented to the Latines in the Council of Baſil, to give them aſſurance of their Doctrine in this point. For Purgatory, ſay they, and temporary puniſhment by fire, ἡμεῖς ὑπὸ τῶν ἡμετέρων οὐ παρειλήφαμεν διδασκάλων, We have not received it from our Doctours, nor do we know that the Eaſtern Church is of that mind; and † again, μήτε παρά τινος——We have not received it from any of the Doctours; and we are afraid, leſt if we ſhould define this temporary punitive Purgatory, τῷ παντὶ λυμαινώμεθα τῆς ἐκκλησίας πληρώματι, We ſhould doe miſchief to the whole body of the Church; rendring their reaſon, becauſe God having pronounced that the wicked ſhall goe into everlaſting fire, and all believers ears being acquainted with this from their youth, and dreading it above all things, and guiding their words and actions accordingly, εἰ νῦν ἐν νέῳ, if they ſhall now of new come with this ſtyle of temporary fire, 'tis to be feared, that Chriſtians will believe all fire to be ſuch as this, and ſo that all ſhall have an end, as Origen thought, and by this means bring in great ſtore of fewel for the eternal fire; From which and other ill conſequences, their reſolution is expreſs, οὐδέποτε μέχρι τῆς νῦν εἰρήκαμεν τοιοῦτο οὐδὲν, οὐδ' ὅλως ἐροῦμεν, that they never till that day had ſaid any ſuch thing, nor ever would. * Again they affirm, that never any of the Doctours of their Church made any mention of this, inſiſting on St. Chryſoſtom's teſtimony to the contrary on that Text of 1 Cor. 3. and aſſerting his skill, and the aſſurance of God's Spirit in interpreting thoſe Epiſtles, againſt whatever could be pretended by the Latines from any of their Doctours. And ſo on, vindicating their aſſertion, that never any of their Doctours had mentioned any ſuch matter, and † charging on the Latines a citation of theirs out of Theodoret, which was * no where to be found in his writings.

* Edit. Hanov. p. 119.

† P. 123.

* P. 124.

† P. 147. 1.

* ἐν οὐδενὶ φαίνεται πώποτε εἰρημένος——

32. I ſhall conclude this, with the expreſs and full ſuffrage of the Greeks inhabiting at Venice, in their anſwer to the queſtions of the Cardinal of Guiſe, tranſlated and publiſh'd at Baſil by Leunclavius, where to the queſtion of their ſenſe of Purgatory, their † return is, we by no means believe that there remains any Purgatory-fire after death; and to the ſame ſenſe more at large, in the anſwer to the tenth queſtion.

† Ad Qu. 9. Nequaquam poſtmortem reſtare Purgatorium quemnam ignem credimus.

33. Here, then 1. appears the unſeaſonableneſs of Mr. White's queſtion, how the Holy Biſhop could be ignorant, that the Greeks agreed to the Latines about the definition of Purgatory in the Council of Florence? The Biſhop, I doubt not, knew the very truth which hath here been ſhewed, and judged not the Greeks to have ever admitted that Doctrine, which onely ſome few Biſhops of theirs in the Council yielded to, for the gaining advantage by an union, but others from the beginning reſiſted, and all their whole Church uniformly upon their return to their Country, diſclaimed and finally rejected. And then what ſhew or colour of truth is there in this whole anſwer, whoſe one fundamental proof hath thus failed him, and inſtead whereof, the argument is of full force againſt him, the Purgatory defined in the Council of Florence, is that which the Greek Church believed not, but uniformly rejected after the Council; and that Purgatory which the Greeks thus rejected, is it which Biſhop Fiſher ſpeaks of; therefore in his aſſertion, the Purgatory defined by the Council of Florence was never mentioned by the Ancients, or very rarely, and ſo was no matter of faith among them, neither did the Latines receive it at once (and ſo 'twas no part of the πίστις ἅπαξ παραδοθεῖσα, the faith at once delivered, Jud. 3.) but by little and little, it was a good while unknown——which was the thing induced from that Teſtimony.

34. Many other infirmities there are in the remaining parts of that anſwer; as 1. that he interprets thoſe words [No Orthodox man now doubts] of concluſions Theological and generally received in the Schools, but not arrived to the pitch of making a point of Catholick belief] whereas 'tis evident, and from his following words neceſſarily inferr'd, that the Biſhop by that phraſe means matter of faith. For 1. theſe are his words, No Orthodox man now doubts whether there be a Purgatory; not ſpeaking of the circumſtances, but the very being of a Purgatory, and that ſure is a matter of Faith with the Romaniſt. 2. He farther expreſſeth his ſenſe in theſe plain words, at laſt the belief of it was generally received by the Catholick Churches] What can more punctually expreſs a point of Catholick belief? 2. That he interprets the Indulgences here mentioned, of thoſe in the ancient Church for remiſſion of penal injunctions laid on ſinners; when by the dependence of Indulgences on Purgatory, 'tis neceſſary the Biſhop muſt mean the Indulgences by which men are freed from Purgatory-flames, and not from the cenſures here in this life, of which onely the Ancients ſpake. 3. That from the Biſhop's mention of the Latines receiving Purgatory by little and little, he concludes it evident that he means not onely ſo much as is eſtabliſhed by the Council whether of Trent or Florence] when no ſuch thing can be evidenced from that mention; but on the contrary, that the very ſubſtance of Purgatory being never or very rarely mentioned by the Ancients, ſome Texts of Scripture were yet thought applicable firſt to the conflagration at the end of the world, then, in poceſs of time, to temporary puniſhments, commencing at the end of this life, to thoſe who dyed without performance of works of ſatisfaction; and this certainly was the thing which came into belief from Revelations of private perſons, and interpretations of Scriptures, and conſequently the Purgatory defined in the Council in the words quibus detentæ, &c. and not onely the circumſtances which are not defined there. So 4. when from the Biſhop's ſaying, that Indulgences began when men had trembled a while at the pains of Purgatory] he concludes again, that it is plain he contented not himſelf with the preciſe ſubject of the Councils definition] whereas 'tis moſt evident he might and muſt mean the Doctrine of his Church in his time to be, that by Indulgences men were freed from the pains of Purgatory, and that was the Councils definition of it. And ſo ſtill it is moſt evident, that that Biſhop is not miſtaken by us, but rightly believed to ſuppoſe that new articles of the Faith may be brought into the Church.

35. And I diſcern not how this could be ſo incredible to Mr. White, who, as 'twas cited from him, affirms, in general, that ſuch * additions are the very buſineſs and end of ſuch aſſembling of Councils; and, in application to this particular, will never be able to make good (I may from his Tract de med. animæ ſta. conclude, he will never attempt to ſhew) that that very Purgatory, in which, ſaith the Council, animæ fidelium detentæ, the ſouls of believers are detained (and cannot be interpreted of the conflagration, which begins not till the day of Judgment) that βασανιζόμενον, ſtate of temporary tormenting puniſhments, relievable by the prayers, and ſacrifice, and almes, i. e. the merits of the living, againſt which he expreſly, and ſtrongly argues, p. 68. (omitting all other circumſtances and dreſſings, and taking it barely, as it was taught by the Council) was ever to be found as an article of Faith in the Primitive Church. Thus much for that one teſtimony of Biſhop Fiſher's, which is not peculiar to him; Alfonſus de Caſtro adv. har. l. 8. under the title of Indulgences, makes the ſame obſervation, and Polydor Virgil repeats Biſhop Fiſher's words verbatim, de invent. rer. l. 8. c. 1. and this, if we wanted other ſtore, alone evinces, that their Church in one age hath taught ſome things as of faith, which have not been taught as ſuch in former ages; and ſo, that it cannot be yielded to have gone on his pretended maxim, of never doing ſo.

* Apol. p. 224.

36. In accordance with this, I ſhall proceed to another inſtance; It is competently known, that many of the ancienteſt Fathers both of the Greek and Latine Church did maintain, that the Souls of juſt men departed, injoying not the viſion of God, were kept in certain hidden receptacles (whether in, or) without the body of the Heavens, enjoying eaſe and reſt from their labours, the ſight of Chriſt's humane nature, the frequent viſits of Angels, and with joy expecting the reſurrection of their bodies, and with that, the conſummation of their bliſs. Of this opinion Pope John XXII. is acknowledged to have been, and the prayer of the * Roman Church for the dead, under the ſtyle of [Qui nos præceſſerunt cum ſigno fidei, & dormiunt in ſomno pacis, Who have gone before us with the ſign of the Faith, and ſleep in the ſleep of peace] and again, Omnibus in Chriſto quieſcentibus, all that reſt in Chriſt] is an argument for it ſo convincing, that † Occam, that produceth it as an objection of the Joannites (as he calls them) and preſſeth it ſo, that it cannot be underſtood of the Souls in Purgatory under pain and affliction, whereas theſe are ſaid to ſleep in the ſleep of peace, and to be at reſt, gives it one anſwer, which wants but little of granting all that is demanded, viz. that that prayer of the Church is for the holy ſouls in heaven, that they which ſleep the ſleep of peace may reſume their bodies and come to the place and ſtate of their ultimate felicity.

* In Can. Miſſa.

† Dial par. 2. Tract. 2. c. 3.

37. Now of this opinion thus profeſs'd in the Church, ſeveral uſes might be made to our purpoſe, concerning the uninterrupted handing down of all Traditions pretended by S. W. The onely

uſe

uſe of it, which I deſign at this time, is in relation to the former Doctrine of Purgatory flames, with which that ſleep of peace is ſufficiently unreconcileable, and that belonging to the very ſame ſubject (not the Souls of Martyrs, and ſome ſuch ſpecial eminent perſons, but) juſt or holy men indefinitely, quite contrary to the Doctrine of Purgatory, which placeth thoſe very ſouls in the condition of horrible torments.

38. Of the truth of this Doctrine, my argument requires me not to ſpeak; The whole force of it, as far as I now deſign in it, ſhall be given S. W. from the pen of one of his own friends, * Pamelius, in his antidote to the ninth Paradox of Tertullian, where ſpeaking of this, as of an errour, he ſaith, it was yet no prejudice to the learning and piety of thoſe ſo illuſtrious writers, whilſt the Church had not determined any thing to be certainly believed in that article, but, ſaith he, ſince the Univerſal Council of Florence which hath made a definition in this matter, aliter ſentire non licet, it is not lawfull to think otherwiſe, than the Council hath defined. From whence ſure it will be no inſolence to conclude, that that which ſince the Council of Florence hath commenced ſuch, was no article of Faith before that Council.

* Pamel. Edit. Tertull. p. 31. G.

39. This opinion of the hidden and quiet receptacles, was by my Lord of Faulkland † ſeveral times mentioned to Mr. White, in his Reply about Infallibility, twice as a proof that ſome things were now received as Doctrines, without any ſuch continued line of Tradition, by name that of the Saints injoying the beatifical viſion before the day of judgment, and once as a viſible prejudice to Invocation of Saints departed, which the Romaniſt founds upon the ſuppoſition of their being already admitted to the Beatifical viſion; And 'tis not unworthy a ſlight reflexion, to obſerve what returns that Apologiſt hath made to theſe inferences.

† P. 59. 83. 114.

40. To the former he * anſwers expreſly, the Beatifical viſion of the Saints before the day of judgment is not yet held a matter of Faith, but onely a Theological concluſion. Not yet held (he muſt mean by the Romaniſts) a matter of faith; To which I might reply, that then it ſeems, definitions of General Councils amount not among them to the conſtituting matters of Faith, for 'tis certain the Council of Florence defined this againſt the Armenians; But I ſhall rather expect his own verdict, in another place, where he ſpeaks † again of this matter, and then, that he may, as he ſaith, utterly deſtroy the objection fetch'd from hence againſt Invocation, his words are as expreſs, that thoſe who ſay we learn by Tradition that Saints are to be prayed to, ſay likewiſe we have learned by Tradition that Saints go to heaven, i. e. are admitted to the ſight of God before the day of Judgment. Here the Reader muſt remember, even now, it was not held a matter of Faith, and yet now they have learn'd it by Tradition.

* Mr. White's Apol. for Tradit. P. 56.

See here p. 415.

† P. 103.

41. Here then I demand firſt, who they are that ſay they learn'd by Tradition theſe two Articles? The Romaniſts, I muſt ſuppoſe. And then my ſecond queſtion muſt be, whether Mr. White be ſuch, and whether he be not the very ſame Apologiſt that ſaid before, that one of theſe is not yet held a matter of Faith? The leaſt that the Reader can infer from hence, is the moſt that our cauſe demands, that all the Articles which the Romaniſts have learn'd by Tradition (yea and defined in their reputed General Councils) are not yet held matters of Faith; for I muſt not imagine that this miracle of wit ſhould thus fail in point of memory, when he thus wrote.

† P. 56.

42. The wonder is leſs, that in that other † Book publiſhed a year afore, he ſhould let fall ſome paſſages which agree not with either of theſe. For whereas in the former of theſe, he ſaith, the beatifical viſion of Saints before the day of Judgment is not yet held a matter of Faith, he there ſaith, * it is not lawfull in reſpect of the matter to free it either from utility to piety, or from neceſſity of faith; And whereas in the latter of theſe he explains the Saints going to heaven, by their admiſſion to the ſight of God, before the day of judgment, and makes both of them Tradition, he there acknowledges that * very many of the Ancients † (Irenæus, Juſtin, Tertullian, Clemens Romanus, Lactantius, Origen, Victorinus, Prudentius, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Aretas, Oecumenius, by name) did ſeriouſly deny that the Saints were in heaven, yet that none (but St. Bernard and John XXII.) ever ſpake * ſo much as doubtingly of the article of their ſeeing God——But this by the way.

† De med. Anim. ſtatu.

* Neque articulus eſt quem materiei ratione vel ab utilitate ad pietatem vel à neceſſitate fidei liberare liceat, Dim. 4. P. 13.

* Verum eſt complures hoc ſeriò negaviſſe, ſanctos in cœlis eſſe, Ib. † P. 15.

43. Other miſcarriages, I think, there are very diſcernible in this Apologiſt's anſwer to this argument againſt Invocation; as when ſuppoſing the Souls of Saints are not received into heaven, he asks, may they not nevertheleſs pray for us? when he knows that is not the queſtion, but whether we are to pray to them, which certainly depends on their coming to ſome knowledge of our prayers, and that again, on their injoying the beatifical viſion, as the Romaniſt himſelf confeſſes, and as was expreſs'd in the objection, but not at all taken notice of by that irrefutable Apologiſt; But this and the other parts of the anſwer, juſt of the ſame batch, I omit, becauſe the former is onely pertinent to our preſent matter.

* Vel dubitanter.

44. Add to theſe the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, as now it is taught, in the Roman Church, to be the converſion of the ſubſtance of the bread into the ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt, and yet is confeſs'd by the Romaniſts themſelves not to have been any Doctrine of Faith before the definition of Innocent III. in the Council of Lateran.

45. Whether the ancient Church had that apprehenſion of the meaning of the words of Chriſt, is not the queſtion (though if it were, we ſhould have no difficulty to evidence it againſt the Romaniſts by arguments of that nature, which moſt of thoſe, if not S. W. acknowledge to have force with them in other things) but onely whether it were till this late date, any article of Faith.

† In 4. diſt. 11. q. 3.

46. That it was not, is known to be the affirmation of † Scotus, as even now was touched, who is rebuked for it by * Bellarmine, though acknowledged to ſay true by Perron, as renowned and learned a Cardinal. But he is not alone in that confeſſion. All they that excuſe Theodoret, for ſaying that the Sacramental Symbols do not depart from their own nature after the conſecration, but remain in their former eſſence and ſhape and form] becauſe at that time the Church had not defined in that matter, are evidently of Scotus's mind. Thus doth the Authour of the Preface before that Father's Dialogues in the Roman Impreſſion 1547. Theodoret, ſaith he, may perhaps be worthy ſome pardon, that at that time de ea re ab Eccleſia nondum fuiſſet aliquid promulgatum, nothing was promulgate of that matter by the Church. Many the like teſtimonies of the Romaniſts, in relation to him, and

* De Euchar. l. 3. c. 23.

Οὐ μόνα τὰ ἀγνὰ τῶν μυστικῶν σύμβολα τῆς ἰδιότητος ἐξίστασθαι φύσεως μένει γὰρ ὅπερ ἦν πρὸ τῆς θέσεως καὶ ἐν εἴδει καὶ τῷ σχήματι καὶ τῇ οὐσίᾳ. Theod.

* Gelaſius, Dial. 2.

* Esse non desinit substantia vel natura panis & vini. Contr. Eutych. & Nestor. de duab. Nat. in Christ.

* Gelasius, the Reader shall find together in the most learned Bishop of Edinburgh his consideration de Eucharistia, p. 401. from Ruardus Tapperus, Harding, Fisher, all to this sense, that before the definition made by the Church (i. e. at Laterane) 'twas not repugnant to the sincerity of the Faith, either to be ignorant or to doubt of the truth of that Doctrine.

† Censor. Belg. in Indic. Expurg. de Bertr. in fine.

47. The like passages there are among those who give the more moderate censures of Bertram (and are not so precipitously bent, with Bellarmine, to give him up for an heretick) confessing that he was ignorant how the accidents could subsist without any subject, &c. † quæ subtilissimè & verissimè posterior ætas per sacras Scripturas addiderit, which the latter age hath by holy Scriptures most subtilely and most truely added. The like say many others, in their defence of Scotus's words. Let our Bishop Tunstall, and Vasquez serve for the many more that might be (and by the Bishop of Edinburgh are)

* P. 405. &c.

* enumerated on this Theme.

† Tunstal. de ver. Corp. Chr. in Euchar. p. 46.

48. The † former in these words, Ante Innocentium tertium —— Before Innocent the third, Bishop of Rome, who presided in the Council of Laterane, they that examined the business more exactly, thought it might be done after three manners, but Innocent rejected the two former, and pitch'd upon the third; though he cannot but express his opinion, that the miracles are multiplyed in Innocent's way, and ask, if it had not been better to have imposed silence on those who would be searching the manner, or to have left it (undetermined) to each mans conjecture, sicut liberum fuit ante illud Concilium, as it was free before that Council, yet concluding it his opinion that now 'tis defined, the judgment of the Church was to remain firm; by which as he expresses his submission to the Decree, and so approves himself a Romanist, and so a competent witness in this matter, so he professes 'twas free to all to believe as they pleased for the manner (wherein alone Transubstantiation is concern'd) before that Council.

* In 3. par. D. Th. Distr. 18. c. 1.

49. As for Vasquez, his expressions are very well fitted for S. W's turn, who will not believe any change to have been introduced into the faith, whose effects have not been visible in practice. For so saith this learned Schoolman it was on this point, * Audito nomine Transubstantiationis, tanta inter recentiores aliquos Scholasticos exorta fuit controversia, ut quo magis ab ea extricare conati fuerint, eo majoribus difficultatibus seipsos implicaverint, As soon as the name of Transubstantiation was heard of, there rose so great a controversie among some later Schoolmen, that the more they endeavoured to extricate, the more they involved themselves in difficulties, concluding that there is nothing to be invented, which in that way can explain the difficulty.

50. Here then, without examining the truth of this decree, or inquiring what trust is to be given to the Romanist's relations of the Acts and Canons of that Council, the matter is again clear, as before in the point of Purgatory, that what is now a matter of Faith with the Romanist, was not as such delivered down from the Apostles times, or from the age immediately precedent to the Council of Lateran.

† Nullus Presbyter sub pœna excommunicationis communicet populum sub utraque specie. Concil. Tom. VII. p. 1042. E.

51. And what shall we say of those two other points of Romish Doctrine, and practice in this Sacrament, the denying the Cup to the Laity, and the carrying the Host about the streets in pomp, to be shew'd to the people? For the former of these, was it ever thought necessary, and enacted under pain of † excommunication, till the thirteenth Session of the Council of Constance, An. Dom. 1415. and hath not that very Council that decreed it, done it with an express non obstante to Christ's institution, and the * practice of the Primitive Church? And doth not Cassander, as learned a man, and as much valued, as any of his age, confess that † all the ancient Church, both the East to that very day, and the West for above a thousand years after Christ, especially in the solemn and ordinary administration of the Sacrament, gave it in both kinds to all the faithfull? offering, if need were, innumerable witnesses of this truth. And shall we still believe it a certain Maxim, that the Romanists of this or that age proceeded by, never to deliver any thing to others, which was not delivered to them continually by succession from the Apostles?

* Licèt Christus post cœnam instituerit, & suis Discipulis administraverit sub utraque specie, tamen hoc non obstante---Ib. B.

Licèt in Primitiva Ecclesia reciperetur à fidelibus sub utraque specie, Ibid, c. † Satis compertum est, universalem Christi Ecclesiam in huncusque diem, Occidentalem verò seu Romanam mille amplius à Christo annis, in solemni præsertim & ordinaria hujus Sacramenti dispensatione, utramque panis & vini speciem omnibus Ecclesiæ Christi membris exhibuisse------Consult. Art. 22.

* Ibid. Sect. de Circumgest.

52. So likewise for the circumgestation, that learned * Romanist's judgment is express, that it seems præter veterum morem & mentem, haud ita longo tempore inducta, of no long standing in the Church, introduced beside the manner and mind of the Ancients; and although he saith but [videtur, seems] and [præter, beside] it is evident by the proof he adds, that he means it really is contrary to it] For, saith he, they, i. e. the Ancients have had this Sacrament in so much religion and veneration, that they admitted not any but the faithfull, such as they thought worthy to partake of it, either to receive or look upon it, and therefore before the consecration, the Catechumeni, Energumeni, penitents (unabsolved) and non-communicants were commanded by voice of the Deacon to depart, and the Door-keepers looked to the performance: adding from Albertus Crantzius, that Christ instituted the Sacrament for use and not for ostentation or shewing; which if he did, then surely the modern Roman practice, and Doctrine, wherein that is founded, was not, according to direction of this Maxim, received from them, that by any series of succession conveyed it from Christ; And if in a matter of practice, that may have gotten reception, which is so contrary to the mind of Christ, why may not the same be imagined in point of Faith? when, as Tertullian asks on one side, (de Cor.) Annon putas omni fideli —— Do you not think 'tis lawfull to any faithfull person to conceive and appoint what agrees to God, conduces to discipline, and the eighth Oecumenical Council professeth to observe and keep the laws delivered not onely from the Apostles and Orthodox Synods Oecumenical and Topical, but even * παρὰ τινὸς θεηγόρου πατρὸς καὶ διδασκάλου τῆς ἐκκλησίας, by any divine-speaking Father, a Doctour of the Church, so 'tis as evident on the other side, that the Doctrine of the Chiliasts, from the infusions but of one Doctour, and he none of the profoundest, Papias, took root, and spread very far, and prevailed to the leading away Justin and Irenæus, and other great, and ancient lights of the Church.

* Act X. Can 1. Concil. To. VII. par. 1. p. 977. B.

53. To

53. To these Instances I shall add the Canon of Scripture, as it is defined in the † Trent Decree, following as it is pretended, the writings of the Orthodox Fathers, but far removed from being delivered down from the Apostles by a continued uninterrupted Tradition through all ages. For the truth of which, I need not enter the contestation, being able with so much more ease, to refer him to the late exact Scholastick history of Dr. Cousins, through every age of the Church, deducing the doctrine of the Church of England in this point, in opposition to the Tridentine definition.

† Sess. IV. decr. 1.

54 Thus much for the third view of his Proposition; and in every shape of it, it hath had the commendation of some constancy (though not altogether such as was taken notice of in Alcibiades, to have the utmost beauty of each age, yet) such as is well nigh as admirable, that in whatsoever sense of it, it might be usefull to our demonstratour, in that sense it is either certainly false, or utterly unproved, and improbable, and in whatsoever sense it hath any kind of but probable truth in it, it is wholly unserviceable to the undertaker. And with these views of a rarity having abundantly satiated my curiosity, I am very well content to give over the farther pursuit, though to him that were delighted with chases, there is behind in each Scheme variety of quarry to spend many waste hours upon; Let it suffice that I have thus far attended him, and driven his admired Demonstration to its non ultra, and sufficiently shewed, how far that medium is from demonstrating, which having no attempt of proof to secure the truth of it, is as much denyed (which sure doth not signifie confess'd) as the conclusion.

CHAP. IV.

A view of his six last Grounds.

SECT. I.

His ninth Ground. His plea of Possession unavailable. We plead not our possession at present. No prescribing against Truth. S. W's confession. His censure of Intruders. His great displeasure on dating the Universal Pastorship from Phocas's time. Gregorie's testimony. Baronius's Authours. S. W's hard imposition. His weightless cavils. His contumely by ill hap falling on Christ.

1. HAving thus largely examined his first set of grounds, and therein expresly his utmost pretensions for that which he professes his best tenure, Possession attested by Tradition of his present Church, I might spare the pains of surveying his sixth Section, which is intitled The continuation of the same Grounds; For if they are but the same with those, which have been so largely refuted, there will be no need of pursuing them so soon with any fresh refutation. Yet shall I not refuse to attend him through this Stage also, though I doe it more briefly, by way of reference sometimes to what hath already been more largely insisted on.

2. His ninth Ground then [that the Catholick Church and her Champions ought in reason to stand upon Possession] hath already been weighed in the balance, and found nothing contributive to the maintenance of the Universal Pastorship in England, there being no time assignable, wherein this in their notion of it (wherein alone we are concerned) can be proved to have been in possession in this Island; as hath appeared in the answers to his four first grounds. And then sure, they that never had possession, cannot well be allowed to stand upon it; or if they are peremptorily resolved to do so, will thereby proclaim to the world, their want of all solid tenures, who are forced to make so much of this imaginary. Which seeing they are inexorably bent on, I might, one would think, be allowed as reasonably to insist on the title of right, and having at this time certain possession on our side, and little doubt (if we may judge by the first times and records) of a right also, set them united in balance with his single and that imaginary assumed possession, which being brought to prove the right, cannot well be confirmed by it, and is it self so far from approving it self, that it cannot with any reason be thought competent to infer any thing else.

3. But because I must not presume, and am not now, out of its place, to attempt the proving the right on our sides, and profess to have no kind of opinion of such a sort of bare possessions as these, possessions of mens minds (which are not subject to occupancy and prescription, as material secular possessions are) considered without, and abstracted from the reasonableness and justice of them, I shall not think fit to found any plea of mine in such tenures; I have learn'd of the eternal law of reason, what * Tertullian hath put into a definition, that truth is a majesty cui nemo præscribere potest, non spatium temporum, non patrocinia personarum, non privilegium regionum, against which none can prescribe, no space of times, no Patronage of persons, no privilege of regions; adding, that custome receiving its beginning from some ignorance or simplicity, in usum per successionem corroboratur, is by succession corroborated into use, and so comes to be defended against the truth, whereas, saith he, Christ calls himself the truth, not custome, and old custome is sometimes heresie, and much more to the same purpose.

* De Velandis Virg. c. 1. Pamel. Edit. p. 229.

4. And therefore though S. W. in his tenth ground be willing to tempt me to retort this argument from possession, by putting me in mind, * that now we are in actual possession of independency from the Pope, and so that by his strengthning the title of possession, he presumes I will apprehend that he hath pleaded for me, and ploughed my ground by his own heifer (and having put this weapon into my hand, is sorely put to it, to wrest it out again, and in doing it, hath made as full a confession,

* P. 49.

as

† P. 50. as I could wiſh, that † though in humane affairs where preſcription hath force, we uſe to call it poſſeſſion, when one hath enjoyed any thing for ſome certain time, yet in things of divine Inſtitution, againſt which no preſcription pleads, he onely can pretend poſſeſſion of any thing, who can ſtand upon it that he hath had it nearer Chriſt's time, which is the abſolute renouncing of the title of poſſeſſion, and devolving all to that other of right) yet I ſhall not be wrought on by his temptation, nor plead that for our ſelves, which I diſlike in him, how great ſoever the advantage be on our ſide; but ſetting aſide ſo feeble a tenure, as that of our bare poſſeſſion is, which every proſperous thief hath liberty to inſiſt on, and in uſurpations of Supreme rights, which are by divine natural law, cannot be made valid by any tract of time; reduce all our plea for our ſelves (though, as I ſaid, I muſt not here go out of my way to demonſtrate it) to the one claim of right, as that by the beſt and moſt authentick records ſhall be found truly pleadable, and then leave S. W. to reconcile his own antinomies, that

* P. 47. * poſſeſſion (in things of this nature) is of it ſelf a title, and yet that

† P. 50. † he who ſhall be found to have begun it later, unleſs he can evidence that he was driven out from an ancienter poſſeſſion, is not, for the preſent having ſuch a thing or power to be ſtyled a Poſſeſſour, but an Uſurper, an intruder, an invader, diſobedient, rebellious and Schiſmatical. Cenſures ſo ſevere, that his enemy would not have been forward to heap them on his Church; Let him quit it of them, who hath impertinently drawn them down upon it; For though without ſubmiſſion of the Church to the Pope's intruſions, it cannot truly be ſaid, that he hath ſo much as a preſent poſſeſſion, and therefore I have hitherto denyed him that (pooreſt) Title, yet it cannot be queſtioned but he hath aſſumed the Monarchick Authority of Supreme Univerſal Biſhop, and ſo is fallen under the ſevereſt of S. W's cenſures, in caſe he ſhall be found not to have had it from Chriſt's time, for then he hath begun it later, and is not imaginable to have been driven out from an ancienter poſſeſſion, unleſs he pretend it by inheritance from Caiaphas the Jewiſh High Prieſt at that time.

5. In this matter then, if it ſhall appear that the Pope had it not from Chriſt's time, there is no more needfull to be attempted, to bring, by this his Champion's own Suffrage, this Catalogue of heavieſt guilts upon him, beginning in Uſurper, and ending in Schiſmatical; And for the evidencing of this, what can be deemed ſufficient, if the comparing of Gregorie's, and Boniface's words and practices be not? Paſſages in ſtory ſo manifeſt, that I ſhould not think fit to reflect on them any more, were I not ſeverely rebuked for affirming this rawly. [I am not ignorant, ſaith he, that

P 50. D. H. rawly affirms, that the Pope's authority began in Phocas's time; but I hope no reader that cares much for his ſalvation, will take his word for honeſt, till he ſhew undenyable and evident matters of fact, concerning the beginning, progreſs, authours, abetters, oppoſers of that newly introduced Government of Head of the Church, the writers that time for it or againſt it, the changes it made in the face of the Eccleſiaſtical State, and the temporal alſo, with whoſe intereſt the other muſt needs be enlink'd, and what conſequence followed upon thoſe changes, together with all the circumſtances which affect viſible and extern actions; Otherwiſe, againſt the ſenſe of ſo many Nations in the Church they left, the force of Tradition, and ſo many unlikelyhoods prejudicing it, to tell us onely a crude ſtory that it was ſo, or putting us off with three or four quotations in Greek to no purpoſe, or imagining ſome chimerical poſſibilities, how it might have been done, hardly conſiſting with the nature of mankind, is an anſwer unworthy a man, much more a Doctour; and to ſay it crept in inviſibly and unobſerved, as Dreams do into mens heads, when they are aſleep, is the part of ſome dreaming dull head, who never look'd into the actions and nature of man, or compared them with the motives which ſhould work upon them.

6. Hitherto S. W. hath gone on triumphantly, in a very rare and extraordinary piece of Pageantry, which 'twill be hard to parallel in all the moſt Romance acts of Chivalry, and no title is vile enough for his adverſary, that hath brought all this wrath upon himſelf by ſaying ſomewhere (he ſays not, and I remember not, where) that the Pope's authority began in Phocas's time, i. e. in effect by referring to two plain matters of fact, which are not for S. W's intereſt to hear of. 1. That Pope Gregory in his own, and all his anceſtours name, up to St. Peter, renounced and diſclaimed the title of Univerſal Paſtour, as impious, ſacrilegious, blaſphemous, Antichriſtian and Diabolical; and yet Boniface his next Succeſſour but one, affected it, and obtained it to be beſtowed on him by Phocas the Emperour.

7. Herein it is not imaginable any more ſhould be incumbent on me, than to vouch my proofs for each part of that relation; and that is done irrefragably as to the firſt part of it, by the plain words of Gregory in many places of his own Epiſtles, which remain on the Roman Regiſter, and proclaim it his opinion that it is moſt impious and Antichriſtian, &c. for any Biſhop to be ſtyled Oecumenical or Univerſal (the teſtimonies have of late been ſeverally ſet down) and for the ſecond Boniface's affecting and obtaining it from the murtherer Phocas, it is the expreſs narration of their

* Ann. Ch. 606. 1. & 2. own Hiſtorian * Cardinal Baronius out of Anaſtaſius and Paulus Diaconus (he might have added † Platina alſo) 1. that Boniface dwelling at Conſtantinople till his Predeceſſour Gregorie's death, Phocam

† In vit. Bonif. III. ſibi demeruit in ejus amicitiam inſinuans, inſinuated himſelf into Phocas's friendſhip and got his favour. 2. That hujus rei cauſa factum eſt——for this cauſe it came to paſs, that Phocas writing to him though hated of Cyriacus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, profeſs'd that onely the Biſhop of Rome was to be called Oecumenical or Univerſal Biſhop, adding that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople could not, but Boniface himſelf obtained it of him. Here is undenyable teſtimony for the truth of the affirmation in both parts; and indeed, if there be truth in the former part of Gregorie's renouncing and diſclaiming that title (of which his own words are ſo far from ambiguous, that the Wits muſt turn Monopoliſts, and deprive all other men of their wits, e'er they can wreſt that evidence from them) it matters not whether Phocas's giving it to Boniface were true or no, becauſe the Title of Univerſal Paſtour being now aſſumed, which was diſclaimed by Gregory, 'tis neceſſary there ſhould be ſome beginning of that Title between Gregory and us, and then it matters not, whether it were in Boniface it began, or any other.

8. This then being ſufficiently atteſted, and ſo demonſtrated by that onely medium, which matters of fact can be demonſtrated by, I know not what will be deemed a mature, concocted, if this be ſtill a crude or raw affirmation; Is there any thing can ſecure us of a matter of fact but competency of teſtimonies? and what can be competent, if theſe are not? Here then is an eſſay of the real ſe-

verity

verity of this demonſtratour, that, when a matter of fact is thus teſtified, and nothing offered to be produced from any diſſentient, or contrary teſtimony, doth yet conjure all, that care much for their ſalvation, not to take this word for honeſt, i. e. to diſbelieve and reject all teſtimony, untill many things more be done, [undeniable and evident matters of fact ſhewn concerning the beginning, progreſs, authours, abetters, oppoſers, writers of that time for it or againſt it, changes in the face of the State Eccleſiaſtical and temporal, together with no leſs than all the circumſtances, &c.] which what it is, but to propoſe a moſt impertinent, uſeleſs, long, if not endleſs task (when the matter is ſo clear already, that more diligence would but help to obſcure it, or elſe it were more than poſſible to give expreſs anſwers to moſt, if not all the particulars of his demand) and this, in ſtead of anſwering our argument, as the penance of that great crime of producing any thing contrary to S. W's intereſts, or but proving a plain matter of fact by undenyable teſtimonies?

9. On the back of this, 'tis ſtrange to ſee, how many amuſing Chimæra's or ſeeming objections are thought neceſſary to be heaped up, 1. The oppoſite ſenſe of ſo many Nations in the (hurch we left] whereas 1. we have not been proved to have left any Church, but onely to have been caſt out by them, 2. No one Nation of their Communion hath, or ever pretended any ſenſation contrary to this of Gregory's diſclaiming, and Boniface's affecting and aſſuming the title of Univerſal Biſhop; and therefore 3. not many, which yet is ſomewhat leſs than ſo many.

10. Secondly the oppoſite force of Tradition] when 1. no kind of Tradition either of the former, or even preſent age, written, or Oral, hath ever ſuggeſted any thing contrary to this paſſage of ſtory, but even their own records and authentick Hiſtoriographers atteſted it; 2. when Tradition Oral of this preſent age, which is S. W's Oracle, cannot with any reaſon be oppoſed to ancient hiſtory, or deſerve to be heeded without it, in a matter of their, not our cognizance; Their own * Baronius having very reaſonably reſolved, Quod à recentiore de rebus antiquis ſine alicujus vetuſtioris authoritate profertur, contemnitur, What is ſaid by a modern concerning ancient affairs, without the authority of any more ancient, is contemned.

* Tom. 1. Ann Chr. 1. n. 12.

11. Thirdly, ſo many unlikelihoods prejudicing it] when 1. as a thouſand probable arguments (in Mr. White's balance) have not the leaſt weight in them, ſo improbabilities be they never ſo many, muſt weigh as little; 2. when there is not ſo much as one improbability mentioned or ſuggeſted to be in this relation; nor 3. is the nature of the relation ſuch, as that it ſhould be capable of more unlikelihoods, than there are in this one propoſition, that ſome mens practices are directly contrary to others, that ſome men are juſt, pious, and content with that portion of power that God hath given them, and others invaſive, ambitious, and inclinable to inlarge their Borders.

12. Fourthly, the contemptuous mention of three or four quotations in Greek to no purpoſe] when 1. the quotations that are vulgarly produced in this matter, are moſt exact to the purpoſe, to which they are directed, the concluding this matter of fact irrefragably; 2. none of thoſe quotations are in Greek, but in Latine from Gregory's own Epiſtles, and Baronius and his Latine Authours, Anaſtaſius, Paulus Diaconus and Platina; 3. The Teſtimonies in this matter, are many more than three or four; and 4. three or four authentick Teſtimonies, without any one competent authority offered or pretended to the contrary, are, according to all Laws of God and man, ſufficient to eſtabliſh the truth of a narration.

13. Fifthly, our imagining ſome Chimerical poſſibilities how it might have been done] when 1. the ſubject of our preſent debate, is inferred by poſſitive teſtimonies; and 2. thoſe teſtimonies, narrations of things actually done, and 3. all thoſe very conſonant, and agreeable one to the other, and ſo no way chimerical, and withall very intelligible to him, that is moſt unwilling to underſtand them, i. e. to S. W. who certainly would take all this pains to guard his Reader from believing a chimæra, which he knew he could not underſtand.

14. Sixthly, the being hardly conſiſtent with the nature of mankind] when 1. for one man to aſſume what his Predeceſſours had not aſſumed, nay what himſelf had formerly renounced, (which is much more than is here pretended to have been done) is a matter of frequent practice, every day experimented among men; and 2 the contrary principles of good and evil, juſtice and injuſtice (to which theſe practices are conſequent) are not prodigies in humane depraved reaſon, or corrupt nature; and 3. the ſuppoſing Boniface onely to have affected, and the Greek Emperour to have afforded him this title, without the Churches univerſal acknowledgement of it, is alone able to ſalve all the contrary appearances, which S. W. is willing to ſuggeſt, ſuch as the no diſcernible changes in the Eccleſiaſtical and temporal ſtate, and the conſequents of them.

15. Laſtly, he objects our ſaying it crept in inviſibly and unobſerved, as dreams do into mens heads when they are aſleep, and pronounces with great aſperity, that to ſay this, is the part of ſome dreaming dull head] as before the pretended crude affirmation was unworthy of a man much more of a Doctour; when 1. there is no ſuch thing affirmed by us, in this matter of the title of Univerſal Paſtour, we are ſo far from thinking it crept in inviſibly, that we ſpecifie the very age wherein, and the perſon by whom it entred, and who was the firſt that aſſumed it; and 2. 'tis very regular and rational for errours to creep into the Church, as dreams into mens heads, even waking dreams, not when they themſelves, but when their Paſtours ſleep, or are negligent; and therefore 3. 'tis no part of either dullneſs or dreaming, to think or affirm, that thus they many times do, Chriſt himſelf having ſuggeſted to us this very obſervation, that in the field, the Church, where the wheat was ſown, the enemy came in by night while the Husband-man ſlept, and ſowed his tares (and from the authority of that very Parable it is, that at any time we affirm that errours may have crept into the Church unobſerved) on which to affix ſo ſour a cenſure, will hardly be excuſed from the groſſeſt blaſphemy, but by ſaying that he meant the ſtone againſt his adverſary, which without his foreſeeing or deſigning, fell on Chriſt. And I pray God this miſadventure may teach him more warineſs or more meekneſs, either to take his ſolemn leave of all contumilies, or to be ſure they be not let fly at truths, for thoſe will either directly or interpretatively reflect on him who is truth it ſelf.

16. And ſo much for his ninth ground, the conſidering of which, hath taken in the moſt part of what he hath ſaid on the tenth ground alſo, which therefore will now be diſpatch'd more ſpeedily.

SECT. II.

His tenth Ground, how infirmly proved. In the queſtion whether we are guilty of Schiſm, we evidently Defendants. In the like of them, they. They Defendant muſt evidence his own innocency. The method of that by anſwering objections. Expounding by wit. Oral Tradition an authentick Interpreter of Scripture.

1. HIS tenth ground then, that [in our Controverſies about Religion, reaſon requires that the Romaniſt ſhould ſuſtain the part of the Defendent, the Proteſtants of the Opponent] is, it ſeems, no otherwiſe proved, than as we have already competently refuted it, from their Obligation to ſtand upon the title of poſſeſſion, as a ground beyond all arguments, untill it be convinced to be malæ fidei] But for this proof, as far as the Supreme Paſtourſhip is concerned in it. 1. We have largely ſhewn, that in the notion, wherein S. W. maintains it from Chriſt's donation to St. Peter, it hath not ſo much as the feebleſt plea of poſſeſſion in this Nation, nor ever appears to have had. 2. If it had, we doubt not to prove it a poſſeſſion malæ fidei, by the equality of power given by Chriſt to the Apoſtles, and the no ſupremacy of any member in that College, and by the unreaſonableneſs that thoſe other Apoſtles, which ſurvived St. Peter, ſhould be ſubjected to his ſucceſſours, Biſhops of Rome, which they yet muſt have been, if the Univerſal Paſtourſhip were derived to them by tenure of that ſucceſſion; and by the many ages, before the power or title of Univerſal Paſtour was aſſumed, and wherein it was diſclaimed as Antichriſtian, which muſt neceſſarily ſuperſede the uninterrupted ſucceſſion of it from the Apoſtles. 3. For his proof of their poſſeſſion (which again he profeſſes to own as his onely ground of all their belief) delivery from Father to Son, explicating the places of the written word] it hath been largely manifeſted from the vanity of that one medium, their holding to their pretended Maxim, that it hath no force to prove any thing.

2. And then, the ground of poſſeſſion being ſhaken, on which alone the concluſion is built, that we muſt ſuſtain the part of Opponents, and they of Defendents,] We are freed from that pretended obligation, and the reſult is, that the ſtate and nature of the queſtions diſputable between us, is it that muſt aſſign us our ſeveral offices; and the queſtions being of divers ſorts, our parts cannot be conſtantly the ſame. If the queſtion be about our Schiſm [Whether to live obediently under the Primate and Biſhops of England, our lawfull Superiours, conſerving alſo fraternal charity with the whole Church of God, that particularly which lives in communion with the Biſhop of Rome (from which we are inexorably caſt out by them, or elſe ſhould have retained external communion with them) be the great and damning ſin of Schiſm] herein 'tis impoſſible we ſhould be any other than Defendents, or they than Opponents, if for thus doing they accuſe us of Schiſm (for then ſure they are bound to prove, or make it good) and we undertake to anſwer all that they can bring againſt us. But if the queſtion be [Whether Mr. S. born and baptized, and brought up under the ſame obedience with his brethren of the Church of England twenty years ſince, be guilty of Schiſm in caſting off that obedience, and betaking himſelf wholly to the Biſhop of Rome, as to the Univerſal Paſtour appointed by God] I then humbly conceive the office of a Defendant belongs to him, and of an Opponent to us.

3. Mean while, though we ſhall not refuſe to debate this ſecond queſtion, and therein to afford them, if there be any, the advantages of Defendents, yet 'tis manifeſt the Tract of Schiſm, which I wrote, and hath proved the μῆλον ἔριδος, apple of debate, was deſigned on the former account, as the Title proclaims, in Defence of the Church of England from that accuſation; and then, 'tis neceſſary, till the State and quality of the debate be changed, that the ſecuring of that Tract againſt all exceptions or ſuggeſtions of the Romaniſt, be acknowledged the part of the Defendent ſtill, and he that will prove us Schiſmaticks, muſt be the plaintiff, accuſer and opponent; and ſo ſtill my skill in the art of diſputing, which on this ſcore is ſolemnly arraigned, would not be blemiſhed, ſhould I inſiſt (which I remember not that at any time I yet have done) on my right to be the defendent, in this matter of the Schiſm charged on us; And if he have no other pretenſe but this, for his no manner of Teſtimonies from Antiquity for his pretenſions, the Reader will ſoon diſcern, that he hath it under S. W's own hand, that he doth not (as he adds) prove things in his Schiſm diſarm'd (and as little in his Schiſm Diſpatch'd) and conſequently that there is no heed to be given to that, which is without any tender of proof ſo magiſterially affirmed by him.

4. But for all this I ſee 'tis decreed, that no leſs than three abſurdities I muſt ſtand guilty of in this matter; The firſt, that I put my ſelf upon the ſide of the Defendent, whereas I pretend to evidence, i. e. to prove] But to that I anſwer, that to evidence ones innocence by anſwering all the charges produced againſt him, is to defend, and that was my part at that time. The ſecond, that I imagine that the ſolving an argument is an evidence to the contrary.] To that I anſwer, that I do not imagine it, but believe, that when one argument is ſolved, I am bound to proceed to the next that is produced, and not to think my ſelf ſafe, as long as any argument produced ſtands in force againſt me; But when I have ſolved all ſuch, I may be allowed to think, I have defended my Client, which is not to be condemned without cauſe; and that was all I pretended to attempt in the Tract of Schiſm, to defend the Church of England in point of Schiſm from the Romaniſts exceptions, and ſo far onely to evidence our innocence, as to ſhew that none of the charges brought againſt us, could endure the teſt, or appear to have any ſolidity in them. The third, that I ſuppoſe they build their faith upon places of written words as explicable by wit not by Tradition and the practice of their Church, whereas they onely own the delivery from Father to Son as the ground of all their belief, and make this the onely rule by which to explicate Scripture.] To which I anſwer, that indeed I thought it reaſonable for all Chriſtians to interpret Scripture by practice and Tradition Apoſtolical, convey'd and made known to us by thoſe who lived in, or next their times, and ſo might moſt probably diſcern the truth themſelves, and had no temptation to be willing to deceive us; As for Explications of Scripture by wit, if that ſignifie ſignifie any other, than by ſober, Rational rules of expounding obſcurer by plainer places, or underſtanding plain words according to the obvious meaning of them, and conſent with other places of Scripture, and ancient practice, I diſclaim having any thing to doe with it as much as he, having been told by S. W. what miracles wit can doe, not in making hard places plain, but in diſguiſing plain unto unintelligible. But for the preſent practice, or Tradition Oral, or delivery from Father (or rather Mother) to Son, that this ſhould be the onely Interpreter of Scripture, or that the Parents do at all take upon them to interpret Scripture to their children, or if they did, that their interpretation ſhould in any reaſon be deemed authentical, any farther than they can approve themſelves by the Tradition and practice of the Primitive Church, and the other forementioned rules of ſober interpretation, I profeſs to admire the confidence of S. W. that he ſhould crudely own aſſerting it, and give no manner of proof of it here, having demonſtrated it ſo infirmly, when ex profeſſo he handled that matter of Tradition Oral.

5. What elſe is added on occaſion of this ground, was taken in whilſt we examined the ninth, and muſt here be omitted, and then this is all that needs to be returned to his tenth ground.

SECT. III.

His eleventh Ground. Fact all one with poſſeſſion, yet granted not to conclude a right. Regal power concludes againſt S. W*'s poſſeſſion. Papal excommunication of us, onely non-communion. That lawfull in another Dioceſe. The Romaniſt's partiality. No poſſeſſion anciently pretended to. His three proofs of his eleventh Ground defeated, and retorted. Kings cannot exempt from their own authority.* Suarez his reſolution of a Jeſuite made Pope. Popes capable of ambition as well as Kings.

1. HIS eleventh Ground [that Hiſtorical proofs which manifeſt onely fact, do not neceſſarily conclude a right] muſt be ſome news to be delivered, as here it is, in continuation of his former Grounds, by S. W. who hath appeared ſuch an advocate of the tenure and title of poſſeſſion abſtracted from that of right, and who ſet it for his fifth Ground, that no poſſeſſion ought to be diſturbed without ſufficient motives and reaſons, and conſequently is it ſelf a title, till thoſe reaſons invalidate it and ſhew it null] and aſſumed to prove this * then by nature, by morals, by politicks. And yet now, when he apprehends it poſſible that we may reap fruit by this title, the caſe is quite altered; and fact, which in this matter is directly equivalent with that poſſeſſion, be it never ſo manifeſtly proved, cannot conclude a right. * P. 38.

2. That fact onely] and poſſeſſion onely] are equivalent in our preſent diſputes, will eaſily be diſcerned, if we but conſider the matter wherein he pretends their title of poſſeſſion, and wherein I have urged Hiſtorical proofs declarative of ancient Fact, or Practice. The main thing wherein he pretends the title of poſſeſſion, is that of the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip; and the Fact which he ſpecifies to be manifeſted by my Hiſtorical proofs, is that of the Princes erecting and tranſlating of Patriarchates, a thing ſo directly unreconcileable with the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, that as the right of one muſt needs evacuate and deſtroy the right of the other, ſo the practice of the one, as far as it extends, muſt needs prejudge the poſſeſſion of the other. P. 52.

3. For example, If it be queſtioned, whether in the Roman Empire at any fix'd time, be it the reign of Valentinian or Juſtinian, the Pope were poſſeſſed of the Supreme Paſtourſhip, as conferred by Chriſt on St. Peter: The meaning of that queſtion, if it be any thing beyond the Pope's own dream or fancy, muſt be [whether the Empire were at that time ſubjected to that authority, as by right veſted in the Pope by Chriſt, i. e. whether the Emperours and their Subjects at thoſe times acknowledged the divine right of his Univerſal Paſtourſhip, and ſo own'd or ſubmitted to it] And that being the queſtion, it follows neceſſarily, that if thoſe things which are eſſential branches of that ſuppoſed power, were not own'd or acknowledged in that Empire, but the contrary powers profeſs'dly practiſed by the Emperour, (ſuch is the erecting or tranſlating of Patriarchates, and the like) then the Pope was not at that time poſſeſs'd of that power; which is the Negative of the Queſtion.

4. The ſame may be exemplified in this Kingdom, where the principal title that S. W. pretends for our obedience to the Roman See, is the poſſeſſion, which the Univerſal Paſtourſhip had, in his opinion, among us, before King Henry's days, and the Extinguiſhing Act, and from this ſuppoſed poſſeſſion he concludes a Right. If then by Hiſtorical proofs which manifeſt onely Fact, or practice in this Kingdom, it appear from time to time, in thoſe ages wherein that poſſeſſion is pretended, that there was no ſuch poſſeſſion, but that our Kings made Laws in Eccleſiaſtical matters, forbad Appeals to the Roman Tribunal, and entrance to Legates, erected or tranſlated Epiſcopal Sees, gave immunities and exemptions to whom they pleaſed, called aſſemblies, gave * frequent inhibitions and reſtraints of Papal Excommunications, ſo that an † excommunication made and certified by the Pope, was of no force to diſable any man in England; and this, before any Statute made againſt foreign Juriſdiction (which concludes the Pope's Excommunication of the meaneſt Subject of England to be no excluſion of him from the communion of the Catholick Church, but onely a declaration that he will not joyn in communion with him, and ſo no act of Supremacy, or any more than a non-communion, ſuch as Paul V. his interdict of Venice, was by the Prelates and Eccleſiaſticks eſteemed to be, and ſuch as * ancient Canons allow of, a communion within ones own Dioceſe, and not elſewhere) If, I ſay, theſe and many the like pregnant Facts and frequent uſages be produced from authentick Hiſtories, this certainly is a competent prejudice to poſſeſſion; And whatſoever can be pretended againſt ſuch facts inferring a Right, will be of equal force againſt poſſeſſions concluding a right alſo; And for S. W. to make it one of his grounds, that poſſeſſion alone infers a title, and another, that Facts manifeſted by Hiſtorical proofs will not infer it, what is it but to make uſe of the Ladder to advance himſelf, and then draw it up, or break it in peices, that no other may aſcend after him? or to tranſcribe that more honourable, but yet parallel example of Conſtantine, doing the like in his flight or defection from his perſecuted Mother in Britany to Rome, which the other did when he fled from

* Cooks Rep. Cawdryes caſe, fol. 23. a. b.

† See Cook Ibid. fol. 26. a. and 27. a. b. and Hoveden. fol. 284. b. 23. and Mat. Paris p. 103. 43. and others cited by Sir Roger Twiſden, p. 65, 66. 67.

* Ὀφείλειν τὰς πόλεις τῇ κοινωνίᾳ τῆς ἰδίας ἐκκλησίας ἀρχειδς. Cod. Can. Eccl. Afric. c. 76. & Ibid. c. 80. ἀπὸ τῆς τοιαύτης κοινωνίας χωρίζουσθω τῆς ἰδίας κοινωνίας ἀρχειδῆ μόνη. Vid. Syneſii Epiſt. 58. Edit. Turneb. p. 35.

† Baron. Ann. 306. n. 9. from Rome to his Father in Britany, † firſt uſing, and then killing all the Poſt-horſes by the way, that ſo he might not be overtaken?

5. This is a partiality, that nothing but immoderate purſuit of intereſts could tempt him to; and yet this is not all; for ſuppoſing (though not granting) the utmoſt he would have ſuppoſed, the poſſeſſion to have been in force immediately before the Reformation, we are yet ready to ſhew, that more anciently there was neither poſſeſſion, nor opinion of Right pleadable for this Univerſal Paſtourſhip, when yet for the ſovereign power of Princes in their own Dominions, in all, and ſo in Eccleſiaſtical affairs, we are as ready to evidence (and hope that we have in the former Treatiſes, and ſome Chapters of this, already performed it) not onely by Hiſtorical proofs, which are but evidences of the Fact, but by the Laws both of God and man, which are aſſurances of right alſo, that thus they ought to be, and thus they are ſettled in this Kingdom.

6. And then for his three proofs of this his eleventh ground, 1. that the teſtimonies expreſſing onely the fact, conclude onely the fact, 2. becauſe matters of fact which concern executions of any buſineſs, may be performed by him that hath no proper right, but borrows it from the delegation of others, as in Viceroys, 3. becauſe in the proceſs of 1500. or 1600. years it cannot be imagined, but there ſhould be ſome matters of fact either out of ambition, intereſt, ignorance or tyranny, againſt the moſt inviolable right in the world, nay ſometime out of too much zeal.] Firſt they are all, and each of very ſmall importance and force againſt us; for 1. our teſtimonies from Canons of Univerſal Councils, and from our Laws, conclude right, as well as our Hiſtorical proofs evidence fact; 2. our Kings acted by inherent right, and not as delegates from the Pope, as by our Laws alſo appears; and then 3. there is no place for unſeaſonable ſuſpicions of ambition, tyranny, &c. on the Princes, nor pretence of any kind of inviolable right, on the Pope's ſide; And ſecondly it were moſt eaſie to retort every of theſe arguments againſt S. W's grand Tenure, Poſſeſſion.

1. For 1. Beſide that their poſſeſſion is far from being proved, the offers of proof, if there were any, and th e valid, would yet, in the words of his firſt argument conclude no more than they expreſs, and expreſſing onely poſſeſſion, would conclude onely poſſeſſion, and no way infer the right of the Papacy.

8. Secondly, the acts of power at any time exerciſed in this Kingdom by the Pope, and not oppoſed by our Princes, might be, and actually were by their conceſſion onely, and that is thus far equivalent to delegation from them, that it ſuppoſes the Original right to be in the Princes, not in the Popes; and then the powers which the Princes gave, they might moſt certainly recall, and if they did not, yet ſtill their Succeſſours might, which were not obliged by their conceſſions; It being a rule in Government, that Sovereigns who may grant exemptions to ſome from the power of inferiour Magiſtrates, cannot exempt any from their own authority, which is ſupreme, they cannot abdicate that right; for no privileges granted or permitted to Subjects, can make them ceaſe to be Subjects within the dominions of that Prince; The Pontificians tell us, that the Pope (who ſay they, can diſpenſe with Laws of God, and ſo hath a good proportion of omnipotence) though he may exempt any one in ſpirituals from the juriſdiction of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, cannot exempt any from his own authority, but he muſt thereby ceaſe to be Pope, as to that perſon; In conſequence to which 'tis * Zuarez reſolution, that a Jeſuite profeſſed, who vows to obey the General of his Order, and to continue that obedience, though he be made a Biſhop; is not by that vow obliged, when he is advanced to the Papacy, though if he be but a Cardinal, he is.

* De Relig. tr. 10 de Rel. Societ. Jeſu in particulari, l. 6. c. 9.

9. Thirdly, in the ſpace of ſo many years it cannot be ſtrange, if ſome Popes were ambitious to inlarge their power, and pretended divine right for Univerſal Paſtourſhip, and by ſecular policies founded in manifeſt intereſt (and ſo, either through force, or circumvention and artifice) advanced themſelves to ſome degree of poſſeſſion of that greatneſs, which they ſo paſſionately affected, and ſo diligently purſued.

10. And to this alſo the ignorance of ſome, and as S. W. ſaith, the too much (i. e. the blind or miſtaken) zeal and piety of others, may have brought in their liberal contributions.

11. And then, that all the Pope's actions have been byaſſed by none of theſe, but governed by pure reaſon, as it is certainly denyed by us, ſo will it be very hard to prove by S. W's rules, who acknowledges it cannot be done, unleſs it be manifeſted that he had right, which as it is the principal thing in queſtion, and therefore is far from being granted, without proof, ſo if it could be otherwiſe proved, S. W. is much in the right, that it were very needleſs to ſtand alledging thoſe teſtimonies, which expreſs onely fact, and more needleſs ſure to inſiſt on an unproved poßeſſion.

12. When therefore he concludes that it is frivolous to bring hiſtorical proofs of fact upon the ſtage, in a diſpute about right, ſince taken alone they make a dum ſhew, and can act no part in that controverſie, for the very alledging that ſome of theſe faults might intervene, diſables ſuch premiſſes from inferring a right [I wiſh inſtead of the word [fact] he would inſert [poſſeſſion] and then judge from his own reaſonings here, what feeble foundations thoſe were which he formerly laid in a bare ſuppoſed (but unproved) poſſeſſion. And that is all that is needfull to return to his eleventh Ground.

SECT.

SECT. IV.

His twelfth Ground. Two immoderate ſuppoſals, or beggings of the queſtion. A third built on them. Acceptation ſometimes an Act of Supreme power. The Church-Laws] an ambiguous phraſe. Laws of General Councils not obligatory, till accepted. Acceptation no act of obedience. Imperial Edicts. Supremacy differs from infallibility. Ancient Canons reſtored. Card. Cuſanus, and Pope Innocentius III. for preferring thoſe Canons. Our practice according. A confeſſion of Catholick Governours now, much to S. W*'s prejudice. What makes an Univerſal Paſtour? Dr.* Holden*'s anſwer.* Gerſon*'s,* Cuſanus*'s. True Supremacy not transferr'd to any. The Negative performed by us. The Affirmative not yet performed by the* Romaniſt. No Schiſm in aſſerting the King's Supremacy. Hart*'s confeſſion.* Henry the II. and Lewis XII. of France, to the Pope.

1. HIS twelfth Ground [that the Acceptation of the ſecular powers, and their command to the people, are neceſſary to the due and fitting execution of the Churches Laws, whence follows, not that the Princes made thoſe Laws by their own authority, but that they obeyed and executed what the Church had ordered] is made up of four propoſitions, the two firſt taken for granted, and ſo not endeavoured to be proved, the third founded in the ſuppoſal of the two former, the fourth an expedient deſigned for the ſuperſeding the force of one ſort of our proofs, thoſe from the examples of our Princes making Laws in Religion, but this of no appearance of force, ſave what is founded in the two unproved ſuppoſals.

2. The ſuppoſals are ſomewhat immoderate, 1. that all the commands of the ſecular power in Eccleſiaſtical matters, are but effects of their acceptation of the Churches Laws, and 2. that they are onely in order to the execution of them; The third which is founded in ſuppoſal of theſe two, and hath not ſo much as a poſſible ideal being abſtracted from that ſuppoſal, is, that ſuppoſing the Church to be the onely Law-giver, and that 'tis the Prince's part onely to accept their Laws, and by civil ſanction to command the execution of them, this acceptation and command of the ſecular powers are very convenient and neceſſary to the bene eſſe, the due and fitting execution of the Churches Laws. All which if yielded by us, the Corollary would indeed be natural enough. that the Princes Laws in Eccleſiaſtical matters cannot be concluded by us to be of their own authority, but on the contrary, of obedience and ſubordination to the Church.

3. But 'tis very ſtrange 1. that that ſhould be taken for a ground, which is by neceſſary interpretation the matter of the whole queſtion, 2. that this which is ſo much queſtioned, and ſo conſtantly denyed by us, and the contrary proved by all thoſe arguments, by which either we diſprove the Pope's right to Supremacy in our Kingdom, or eſtabliſh the King's Supreme authority, and the inſeparableneſs of that from the Crown, and that chiefly in the chiefeſt and moſt important things (ſuch certainly are matters of Religion) and more eſpecially by the Laws which our Kings always made in Church matters, by their own ſupreme power, not receiving them from the Pope, but oft making them in oppoſition to him; ſhould be thought fit to be impoſed on the Reader, without the leaſt offer of proof for it, which what is it, but the old ſovereign never-failing Sophiſm, τὸ ἐν ἀρχῇ, preſuming the truth of that which is moſt denyed, and tendering arguments for that onely, which is of no importance for him, or againſt us?

4. For the firſt 'tis evident, that the queſtion or matter of preſent debate between us is, whether or no in our Kingdom the Supreme Eccleſiaſtick power belong to the Pope] the Romaniſt affirming, and we denying, and placing it in the King; now inſtead of proving their affirmative, all that is here done, is, to ſuppoſe that the ſecular power accepts (and that, in the concluſion, is interpreted obeying the Church) and executes their orders, which when 'tis no more than ſo, is certainly to obey them. This therefore is begging the queſtion.

5. And for the ſecond, 'tis as manifeſt, that all that his explication or confirmation of his twelfth ground is applyed to, is the uſefulneſs, or moral neceſſity of thoſe ſecular executive commands to the backing the Churches Laws, which is the third propoſition, and would be denyed by none, were it firſt proved that the ſecular Laws are thus executive and no more; but that being denyed by us, and not offered to be proved by them, it matters little what uſe there would be of that which is not, in caſe ſomething elſe were, which hath no being, but in S. W's teeming fancy.

6. Another fallacy there is in the ambiguity of the word [acceptation] which is expreſly uſed by S. W. for an act of obedience in the accepter, for ſo, from the acceptation of the ſecular powers, he makes his concluſion, that they obeyed what the Church had ordered, And ſo for execution alſo: Whereas Acceptation is ſometimes an act of ſupreme power, as in Parliament, when Statutes are by his Subjects offered to the King to be inacted by him, and the liberty by our Laws veſted in him, of either rejecting, or accepting them, Acceptation is in this caſe inacting, or making Laws, and an exerciſe of the Supreme power. So in Convocations of the Clergy or National Councils, the Biſhops and Clergy prepare Canons, and preſent them to the King, and he either diſlikes and rejects them, or approves and accepts, and ſo ſets his Signature upon them, and inacting, commands the execution of them; and in both theſe caſes, the acceptation, and execution are not tokens of obedience, but acts and exerciſes of ſupreme authority. And thus unqueſtionably it is, as oft as the accepter hath power not to accept, for in that caſe it is evident, he is no Subject, or under obligation of obedience, as all Subjects are.

7. Here then is the utmoſt of the demonſtrativeneſs and ſelf-evident virtue of his twelfth ground. It is founded in the ſuppoſal of two things, which (being ſet down in ambiguous dialect) as they appear to be underſtood by him, are the principal queſtions between us, and never attempted to be proved by him; and as they fairly and properly ſignifie, ſo they are the confirming the very thing for which we contend, the veſting the ſupreme power in our Kings, without whoſe acceptation no Laws of the Church (be it Pope or Council, as appears by * comparing the ſecond Council of Nice with the Council of Frankfort) have any force to oblige the Subjects of Chriſtian Kings, and whoſe accepting is an act of Legiſlative power, i. e. of Supremacy in the accepters.

* See Tr. of Hereſie, Sect. 10. n. 9. &c.

8. It is here farther obſervable, that that which this twelfth ground proceeds upon, is the Churches Laws, and what the Church hath ordered] And that again is an ambiguous phraſe; for it may ſignifie 1. the Laws of the univerſal Church in Oecumenical Councils truly ſo called, or 2. the Laws of the Biſhop and Church or Conſiſtory of Rome, or 3. the Laws of ſome larger Council, aſſuming to be, when it is not, Oecumenical, or 4. the Laws of our own National Councils. To all theſe notions the words lye common and undiſtinguiſhed, and it will be uncertain, what the importance of his Ground is, till they be better diſtinguiſhed.

9. If the Laws ſpoken of, be the Laws of the Univerſal Church, inacted in any Council truly Oecumenical (which receives the validity and force of ſuch, by being univerſally accepted) then the Acceptation of thoſe Laws in any Nation by the ſupreme power there, is neceſſary to the validity of thoſe Laws in that Nation, and not onely to the due execution of them. But this hinders not the Princes of thoſe Nations to be Supreme in all cauſes in their own Dominions, any more than it doth the Pope to have the Supreme power in his own Territories, that his accepting the Laws of the General Council, is neceſſary to the validity of thoſe Laws in his Dominions; It rather proves the contrary, that they are Supreme, becauſe their acceptation is neceſſary, and till they have accepted, they are not obliged.

10. So likewiſe in Councils not truly Oecumenical, none can be obliged, but thoſe that accept them, and they which doe that, doe it freely, and as having power over their own wills, and ſo might doe the contrary, and that is no act of obedience in them.

11. And then much more, when the yet leſſer authority, the Council of the Pope and his Cardinals have given any Laws to our Kingdom, and our Kings have accepted them, and commanded execution of them, this they have done freely, and without any opinion of obligation thus to doe; and ſometimes when they liked not, rejected them; and from their acceptation it was, that all their force as of Laws was derived, which conſequently they wanted, when they were not accepted. (And, by the way, it is obſervable, that the ancient Emperours did ſometime uſe to put into Edicts ſome Canons of Councils, but not the decrees of Popes, (S. W. may exerciſe himſelf, if he pleaſe, in finding any) and in the ſpurious Epiſtles of the ancient Popes (I ſuppoſe it now granted there are ſuch) many things are impoſed, as their decrees, which were indeed the Edicts of the firſt Chriſtian Emperours.)

12. And in the very ſame manner it holds of our National Councils, who pretend not to make Canons, but to prepare them, and offer them to the King, and by his acceptance and confirmation, or by his rejection, they either receive, or loſe all their force and validity, and are not ſo much as in Conſcience obligatory, till he hath thus eſtabliſh'd them.

13. Herein 'tis poſſible the King may make an ill choice, confirm and inact thoſe Canons which were fitter to be rejected; But 1. that is no prejudice to his Supremacy, to which we pretend, but onely to his Infallibility, to which we pretend not, and to which for the Pope himſelf to pretend * Mr. White aſſures us is Archiheretical. 2. To ſecure our ſelves from ſuch errours, our Anceſtours in Henry VIII. his days proceeded by thoſe rules, that the ſobereſt Romaniſts themſelves judged fit to preſcribe, viz. by reſtoring the Canons of the Ancient Church, to the preſcribing of which the Popes are bound by Oath, and by not permitting the Pontifician and later decrees and dictates of the Weſtern Councils to extrude them. Of which decrees ſaith Cardinal † Cuſanus, Quando obviant Canonibus, potius Canonibus obediendum eſt, When they go againſt the Canons (of the ancient Church) the Canons muſt rather be obeyed, proceeding largely to make proof of it. And * Innocentius III. that whenſoever in the Acts of Councils a diſcordant opinion is found, Illius Concilii magis teneatur ſententia, cujus aut antiquior aut potior extat authoritas, That Councils opinion is to be held, whoſe authority is more ancient or more preferrable. According to which that they then proceeded, appears in the Neceſſary Doctrine and Erudition, in the Chapter of Orders.

* Tab. Suff.

† De Concord. Cathol. l. 2. c. 20.

* Diſtinct. 50. c. 28.

14. In the cloſe of his explication of this his twelfth Ground, he tells us, that Teſtimonies of ſuch Execution and Laws, cannot prejudice the Pope's right, ſince Catholick Governours doe the ſelf ſame at preſent (as far as concerns this point) which was done then,] Theſe words I think worthy reflecting on a while, as being ſo far from helping to demonſtrate what he deſires, that they are a ſore prejudice, and argument of the contrary. For if it ſhall appear that thoſe things which S. W. imputes to the Princes accepting and executing the Churches Laws, are at this preſent done by Catholick Governours, and no delegation appear, or be producible, whereby they derive this power from the Pope or the Church, this, I ſay, is ſuch a prejudice to the Pope's univerſal Paſtourſhip being acknowledged at this day, as S. W. will not readily rid himſelf of, or reconcile with his Phænomena.

15. For the evidencing of which, I ſhall take leave to ask the Romaniſt this queſtion, wherein the priority, preeminence and dignity of the Biſhop of Rome doth conſiſt, and that which makes him an Univerſal Paſtour? and I deſire ſuch an anſwer, as the Romaniſt, that gives it, hath confidence ſhall have the univerſal approbation of other Romaniſts, particularly thoſe that think him inferiour to General Councils, and that are not noted to be enemies to Monarchy.

16. This I think hath not yet been done, though a clear explication of it, would be moſt neceſſary to the manifeſting truth in this point of Schiſm, which is founded in the queſtion of Supremacy.

17. * Dr Holden with much moderation and judgment acknowledgeth, that it is not ſo eaſie to determine what are the ſpecial and peculiar acts of this ſuperiority conſtituted by divine Law, having † before ſaid, that thoſe acts, which Divines do ordinarily reckon as the ſpecial and proper acts of the Biſhop of Rome, are not immediately and expreſly annex'd jure divino to that See, which he acknowledges to be performed by others, yea to be omitted, and to be oppugned, and inſtances in the calling of General Councils, appeal in greater cauſes, &c. All theſe, ſaith he, we have ſeen examined, limitted, and rejected ſometimes, by particular Churches, and civil Commonwealths; and yet this derogates nothing from the right of the Apoſtolical See] From this free conceſſion we are ſurely allowed to conclude, that that theſe particulars, which have been thus rejected, are indeed no rights of the Papacy; imprimis, the calling of General Councils; let S. W. remember that. Meanwhile what the Right of that Apoſtolick See is, or how many Sacra Individua there be, the denying or rejecting, or limitting of which would derogate from the Right thereof, he tells us not.

* De Reſol. Fid. l. 2. c. 3. p. 297. Quinam ſint eadem (i. e. divina) lege conſtituti ſpeciales & peculiares hujus ſuperioritatis actus non adeo facile eſt decernere.

† Ibid p. 293, 294.

18. Gerſon puts the queſtion, whether there be any power in the Pope, * that is of force to any thing, to which no other Eccleſiaſtick power hath force; and reſolves, that the Church may transfer all ſuch power to one whom they ſhall deſign.

19. † Cuſanus yet more particularly, doubts not to ſay, that if (by poſſible ſuppoſition) The Archbiſhop of Triers ſhould by the Church convened, be choſen for their Preſident and Head, * he ſhould be properly the ſucceſſour of Peter in that preeminence, more than the Biſhop of Rome; whereas we know that the ſpecial acts of true Supremacy are not uneaſie to be numbred, and of the ſupreme power it ſelf, 'tis univerſally reſolved, that it cannot be transferred by Subjects to any other.

20. The Sons of the Church of England have oft ſhewed, and ſpecified what the power of the Biſhop of Rome did not extend to, in the judgment and practice of the Engliſh Nation through all memory (ſee the worthy Sir Rog. Twiſden, Ch. V. p. 104. &c. particularly Sect. 17. p. 108, 109, 110. and the Right Reverend the Lord Biſhop of Derry, c. IV. and VII. where he makes it appear, that Germany and France have done all the ſame acts that Henry VIII. did, in limitting and inhibiting Papal attempts) And there being but two ways poſſible, the Negative and the Affirmative; the former, what the power of the Pope is not, we have ſhewed already. It is therefore incumbent on the Romaniſt to undertake the Affirmative, and ſhew wherein it conſiſts, or elſe 'tis vain to pretend, as here S. W. doth, in general, that Catholick Governours may doe what we ſee, and he ſaith they do without prejudicing the Pope's rights.

21. Where there is true Supreme power, it is much more hard to ſay negatively, theſe are not acts and prerogatives of it, than to ſet down poſitively the moſt eſſential and neceſſary. We have ſhewed that which is hardeſt; but inſtead of doing that, which if there were any truth in it, were the moſt eaſie, the Romaniſt contents himſelf with confident General claims, that it is well known that the Supremacy of the Pope was acknowledged in England before Henry VIII. And under theſe generalities all deceit lyes in ambuſh, which would ſoon diſcover it ſelf, if they would but ſet down, what the rights are, which are peculiar to the Supreme Paſtourſhip, for then it would be diſcernible, whether Catholick Governours aſſume them or no, and ſo whether Henry VIII. were a Catholick, or ceaſed to be ſuch by aſſuming them.

20. Meanwhile 'tis certain, that the aſſerting the Supremacy of the Prince, was in all times in all Nations allowed of, as a defence of their juſt right, and no Schiſm deemed chargeable on Princes on that account; When the Convocation Ann. 1530. expreſly declared and recognized the Supreme authority of the King, ſtill communion was held with the Church of Rome, and Archbiſhop Cranmer Ann. 1533. received Bulls and his Pall from Rome. But when in Feb. 1533. a Law was made that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (not as Legate, but as Primate) might grant diſpenſations and exerciſe the higheſt Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction within his Province (which yet certainly he might doe, by Commiſſion from him that had ſupreme authority) without reſort to the Biſhop of Rome, then ſoon after iſſued out Excommunication againſt the King, and interdict againſt the Kingdom; ſo Sanders tells us, The forbidding of ſuits and appeals to Rome, and placing that power in the Archbiſhop, which had been attributed to the Pope, this was the beginning of Schiſm. And yet this is no more, than what is neceſſarily conſequent to the King's Supremacy, which therefore being rightly underſtood makes an end of this Controverſie. And ſo it really did with Mr. Hart, who † having read Alexander Nowell's anſwer to Dorman about this matter, he returned anſwer, that he had miſtaken our Doctrine in this point, and that if we gave the Prince no greater authority than Mr. Nowell doth, he did agree with us it being no more than what * St. Auguſtine did, that Kings ſerve God in this as Kings, if in their own Realms they command good things and forbid evil, not onely concerning the civil ſtate of men, but the Religion of God alſo; This they cannot doe, if the Supremacy be not veſted in them, if what they doe of this kind, they doe by accepting, and executing and obeying the Orders of another, for that is not to act as Kings, but as Subjects rather. What therefore the Catholick Governours doe as Kings in their own Dominions, that ſure they derive not from the Pope, but God, and their own Kingly Office. And till it be reſolved on the Romaniſts ſide, what the things are, which they may not doe, by this right, as our Laws and Hiſtories ſhew what they may, there will be no end of diſpute, and as little benefit expectable from it in this matter. With this at preſent we content our ſelves, that Henry VIII. did in effect but the ſame things, that other Catholick Princes are confeſs'd to have done; Let S. W. ſhew their Commiſſion from the univerſal Paſtour to doe them, as his Miniſters; But that ſure will not be pretended in thoſe acts, which have been againſt, and in defiance, and for the retrenching the power of the Popes, as thoſe are, wherein we have formerly inſtanced, and more particularly that of Henry II. threatning Pope Alexander III. and his Succeſſours, that if he will not doe him juſtice in the buſineſs of Thomas [of] Becket, † neither he nor his Barons nor Clergy will any longer perform obedience to him. And ſo that of Lewis XII. of France, who had the advice of the * Council of Tours, that in the caſe propoſed it was lawfull to withdraw obedience from the Pope. And ſo much for his fancy of the ſecular powers acceptation, and his twelfth Ground.

* De poteſt. Eccl. Conſid. 11. qua poſſit in aliquid quod nulla altera poteſtas Eccleſiaſtica poteſt.

† De Concord. Cath. l. 2. c. ult.

* Ille proprie plus ſucceſſor ſancti Petri in Principatu foret, quam Romanus Præſul.

† Confer. bet. Reynold and Hart. p. 859.

* Contr. Creſcon. l. 3. c. 15.

† Matt. Paris An. 1168. neque ego neque Barones mei neque Clerus meus aliquam eis ulterius ſervabimus obedientiam. And again An. 1169.

* Concil. Turon. in Maſſæi Chronic. An. 1510.

SECT. V.

His thirteenth Ground. Conceſſions of the Church] ambiguous. The Pope's acknowledged ſubjection. No teſtimony of the Pope's conferring on Princes the powers which they execute.

1. THE thirteenth Ground [that it is granted by Catholicks that Kings may exerciſe ſome Eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction by the conceſſion of the Church, and yet not prejudice thereby the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip] is of the ſame piece with the former; from a bare poſſibility that the power, and and acts of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction in Princes ſhould have been granted to them by the Church, to whiſper the unconcludency of thoſe manifeſt teſtimonies, which relate the Princes exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical power.

2. But here is a double ambiguity in the phraſe [Conceſſion of the Church] for as by the Church may be meant either the Univerſal Church, or the Pope their ſuppoſed head of the Church, ſo by [Conceſſion] may be meant either granting and conferring a power originally veſted in him that grants it, and onely from him derived to the other; or elſe the acknowledging it to be his proper due, that claims it, and willingly allowing it, and pretending nothing againſt it.

3. If now in the firſt place we ſhould underſtand it of the Univerſal Church acknowledging Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction to be due to Princes, this is certainly a competent evidence, that thus 'tis due, and ſo muſt be a prejudice to the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip.

4. Secondly, if the Pope himſelf ſhall thus acknowledge, as I ſuppoſe Pope Gregory doth, when he tells Mauritius, Ego juſſioni tuæ ſubjectus, eandem legem per diverſas terrarum partes tranſmitti feci, that he is ſubject to his command, and as ſuch, cauſes his Law to be promulgated, and in the other forecited paſſages referred to by Wenceſlaus's Edict, (ſee ch. 2. Sect. 4. n. 17.) then certainly that is an acknowledgment as prejudicial to the Papal Supremacy, as ſubjection is unreconcileable with ſovereignty.

5. Thirdly, if in the notion of conceſſion for conferring or deriving by grant a power to another; it ſhould appear (as it doth not) that the Univerſal Church hath granted exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction to Princes; yet even that would be prejudicial to the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, for in that caſe if the Church or Council did no more than they had power to doe, the Church (and that is not the Pope) muſt have that power, or elſe it could not confer it on the Princes, and if it have it, it is above the Pope, and that is unreconcileable with the Pope's Supremacy or Paſtourſhip over all. When therefore in the confirmation of this ground, he adds that the Teſtimonies by me alledged from the Church in her Councils granting juriſdiction to the ſecular power, is a ſtrong prejudice againſt their ſelf and proper right] he is very far from demonſtrating or even probable-ſpeaking; for if by granting, he meant acknowledging the Juriſdiction in the ſecular power, then (as hath been ſaid) 'tis as convincing a proof of it, as the teſtimony of the Church is of any right, or truth; and ſure that cannot be converted to a prejudice againſt it; but if it ſhould be (which it no where appears to be) a conferring of it, then ſtill it appears that 'tis not conferred on them by the Pope, and conſequently that 'tis not originally veſted in him, and then he is not the Univerſal Paſtour.

6. Laſtly, if (which is the onely thing for S. W's turn) it ſhall de ſuggeſted, that what power Kings have, they have by conceſſion from the Pope, and ſo it ſhould be thought incumbent on me to ſhew that the powers they have, are not thus conferred on, or derived to them, then, as I ſhall not want a competent ſtore of arguments to teſtifie it to be no borrowed but original right, ſo it muſt much more be incumbent on the demonſtratour or layer of grounds, to ſhew any record of the Pope's conferring this power; otherwiſe as no derivative power is a power, unleſs it be held by ſome commiſſion or way of conveyance from him, whoſe it was originally, ſo bare ſuggeſtion of a naked poſſibility is very much inferiour to a Probability, when yet a thouſand probabilities will not amount to the thouſandth part of one demonſtration.

7. But I cannot believe that S. W. who profeſſes to be Mr. White's Diſciple, will own this of the Pope's conferring this Juriſdiction on Princes] to be his meaning, when he ſaith the conceſſion of the Church] and then as I have no reaſon farther to diſprove that, ſo he hath ſecured himſelf from gaining much by his thirteenth Ground.

SECT. VI.

His fourteenth Ground. The no probability of it. The Schiſm at Corinth, deſcribed by Clemens, very unlike that which S. W. cenſures in us to be the onely way of Schiſm poſſible. Clement's interpoſition not as Univerſal Paſtour. The Romaniſts way of Schiſm. Petitio Principii. Schiſm and Charity may enter at the ſame door. Our confeſſion no guilt. The fear of a Premunire, no cauſe of the Biſhops ſubſcription. Cardinal Wolſey's Legatine power contrary to Statute. The Clergies Petition, and the Title of it. The Univerſities debate, and definition. The firſt mover in Henry VIII his action, the Pope's unlawfull diſpenſation. The Pope foremoſt in the Sacrilege. King Henry's repentance falſely pretended. The truth of the Hiſtory.

1. WE are now come to S. W's exit, or laſt Ground, that in caſe a Schiſm ſhould invade a whole Country, it could not be expected to have happened otherwiſe than D. H. (of Schiſm c.) hath deſcribed] ſtill at the ſame rate of demonſtrating, as he hath afforded us all this while; Firſt, the thing that he ſaith, hath no degree of but probability in it, 2. if it were not onely probable, but true, it would no way prejudice our, or aid his pretenſions.

2. That it is void of all probability of truth, appears by this eaſie intelligible relation, which hath more than once had Hiſtorical truth in it.

3. In the Church of Corinth (as under that title are comprehended the Saints of all Achaia, and ſo) that whole National Church, it is ſomewhat more than poſſible, that a Schiſm ſhould ariſe, and that this ſhould be the method (beginning and progreſs) of it; 1. That ſome of the Church ſhould differ in ſome Doctrines and more rites, and pretend ſeverally to be taught by their ſeverally admired teachers, or by the word of God diverſly interpreted by them; Hereupon each, confident in his own way, ſhould ſeparate, and abſtain from communion the one of the other; At length the wind or vapour in the bowels of the earth, being violently compreſs'd, ſhould violently reſiſt and ſhake the whole body, the Schiſm improve into a ſedition, μιαρὸν σχίσμα, an accurſed deteſtable ſedition, * ὧν ὀλίγα μέτωπα θρασυτὴς καὶ αὐθαδείᾳ ἐξήναψαν, which a few giddy and bold perſons accended, † οἱ ἄνηβοι, οἱ νεοὶ, ignoble, mean young men, whoſe very perſons were ſo infamous, that they might reaſonably have deterred and averted averted all followers (* καταπαῦσαι τινὰς ὑμᾶς διέστειλαν) In this ſedition of ambitious, malicious, reaſonleſs, reſtleſs men, all that were † in honour and dignity in the Church, eſpecially the Biſhops, caſt out of their ſeats, * although they had been conſecrated to their Office either by the Apoſtles, or (mediately from them) by eminent perſons, and had without any blame officiated and attended on the flock of Chriſt; Then that this tempeſt that began in the Church, ſhould extend it ſelf to the State, and ſo the ζῆλος, καὶ ἔρις, καὶ στάσις, zeal, ſtrife, ſedition, be improved and inlarged into † ἀναστασία καὶ πόλεμος, πόλεμος καὶ αἰχμαλωσία, tumultuous confuſion and perſecution, war and captivity, and this in oppoſition to all obedience due from them ὑγουμένοις, to their rulers of civil Magiſtrates, ſuch as were not onely Chriſtians, but zealous upholders of the faith, and all good order in the Church.

* Clem. Rom. Ep. ad Cor. 1. p. 2.
† P. 4.

* P. 16.

† P. 4. & 16: Ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐντίμους καὶ τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους.

* Καταστασιάζεσθαι ὑπ' ἐκείνων (i. e. Ἀποστόλων) ἢ μετ' ἐξὸν ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, καὶ λειτουργήσαντας ἀμέμπτως τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τούτους ἀπβάλλεσθαι τῆς λειτουργίας. Ib. p. 59. And τοὺς ἀμέμπτως καὶ ὁσίως προσενεγκόντας δῶρα τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἀποβάλλεσθαι. Ib. And κἀλῶς πολιτευομένους ὁρῶν τῆς ἀμέμπτου αὐτοῖς τετιμημένης λειτουργίας μετεσχήκοτας. Ib. † P. 4.

3. That all this was more than a bare unexpectable poſſibility, even a real and notable Hiſtory, I refer him to the moſt pious and charitable Epiſtle of the Roman Church and Biſhop Clemens, St. Peter's Deacon and Succeſſour, who as he ſent not out his Emiſſaries to blow up theſe coals, which he ſaw kindled among them, but uſed the moſt powerfull ſuaſories to extinguiſh them, ſo neither he, nor that Church interpoſed their authority, as any Univerſal Paſtour, or ruling Mother, (though a Roman Advocate, Fevardentius, would fain collect ſomewhat toward it, from Ireneus, ſaying, that he wrote ἱκανωτάτην γραφὴν, a moſt ſufficient or powerfull writing, no more, than (as hath formerly been ſhewed) the ſame * Irenæus ſaith of the Epiſtle of Policarpe, the Biſhop of Smyrna, to the Philippians, who were no way under his authority) but as a Siſter-Church, Chriſtianly and charitatively † debated it with them.

* Hinc obſerva Romanam Eccleſiam etiam ab initio authoritatem ſuam interpoſuiſſe in moderandis quoque Græcorum Eccleſiis, in Ireñ. p. 240.

† P. 234. B.

4. Here then is an image of a Schiſm, wherein a whole Church, or Chriſtian Countrey was ingaged, and yet quite contrary to S. W's expectation, neither the ſecular Magiſtrate (the Chriſtian ὑγούμενοι) were for it, nor the Biſhops, nor Clergy, nor Univerſities, but all in vain oppoſe, and are overborn by the Paroxyſm, unable to give any ſtop to its proceeding, or to hinder its univerſal invaſion.

5. And Copies (too much to the life) 'twere poſſible to produce in other Countries, where this very Tragedy hath been acted over again in the very ſame manner, and yet neither the Roman Church nor Biſhop have ſhewed altogether ſo much zeal to the quenching them, as that Virgin charity of theirs yielded thoſe which were very far removed from them.

6. This may ſerve an indifferent Reader to judge of the truth of this laſt profound ground of his. For if a Schiſm may and have entered and over-run a Kingdom, by inferiours riſing up againſt their Superiours both in Church and State, and caſting their moſt pious Biſhops out of their Church, and have been by the Biſhop and Church of Rome it ſelf judged to be a moſt deteſtable Schiſm, though they never ſent out any declarations againſt Rome; then with what truth could S. W. ſet it for a ground, that in caſe Schiſm ſhould invade a whole Countrey, it could not be expected to happen otherwiſe, than by the King and Biſhops and Univerſities being formoſt in it.

7. I could mention other ways, particularly that, by which the Church of Rome hath divided from the Greek Church, and from the Church of England, damnando & à communione arcendo, by denying them communion and ſalvation, which they know, we are not, cannot be guilty of toward them.

8. Meanwhile that any Schiſm in a Countrey (of that ſort, of which we are accuſed by the Romaniſts, a diviſion of inferiours from ſuperiours) can ever poſſibly happen after this manner, by the King and Biſhops being foremoſt in it, if it be believed, it is and muſt be founded in a ſuppoſition that there is ſome other ſuperiour both to King and Biſhops; and that he knows, is again the begging the queſtion, a fallacy that he is perpetually aſhamed of, and deſirous to avert, but will never, it ſeems, ceaſe to be guilty of, even whilſt he is about that work which is moſt extremely unreconcileable with it, the laying of Grounds.

9. But then, 2. on ſuppoſition there were ſome appearance, poſſibility, nay probability of truth in his ſage obſervation, that this were the onely expectable way for Schiſm to enter into a whole Church, what could he gain by it? May not truth and peace enter at the very ſame door? and by the very ſame manner of progreſs, as hereſie and Schiſm doth? Certainly it may. If true Apoſtles, ſober and pious Governours in Church and State, bring in verity and unity, may not falſe Apoſtles, deceitfull Workers, heretical Princes and Biſhops (witneſs Conſtantius and Valens, and their Arian Biſhops of old, to omit modern examples) introduce falſhood and diviſion? Was not the Jewiſh Church, that was led into Idolatry by their Apoſtate Princes, reformed by good Joſiah, and the like? And then what prejudice can it be to us, or gain to S. W. that he is forced to confeſs, that what was done in this Nation, was done by the united ſuffrage of lawfull power and learning, the joynt conſent of King and Biſhops and Univerſities? What Bulruſh may not become a Spear, what wooden Knife may not be whet at the Philiſtins Grindſtone into Goliah's Sword, if by S. W's omnipotent faculty, this ſo much leſs then nothing can be hightened into a Demonſtration?

10. From this Ground then thus fortunately produced and managed, S. W. muſt be allowed to raiſe his advantages, and ſo to annex his conſequences, which are no other but theſe, 1. That my narrative diſcourſe hath nothing in it to bewonder them (and if I can ſeriouſly profeſs, that I made it not, on any deſign to be thought a dancer on the ropes, or wonder-worker, I hope that Corollary hath wrought no miraculous advantages for him) 2. That my narration is as plain and particular a confeſſion of the fact, as any penitent malefactor can make, when he is to ſuffer] And truly I, that meant not to lye, though 'twere in intuition of the greateſt advantages, and wanted not ſuch aids to ſupport my cauſe, reſolved to ſpeak as true in ſetting the caſe, as if it had been on the Scaffold, or on my death-bed, but in doing ſo, made no confeſſion, as I thought, of any evil deed; And to call us malefactours, and penitents, and ſuggeſt that avowing what we have done with a good conſcience, is the confeſſion of a guilt; and not ſo much as attempt to ſhew, where the guilt lies, is again S. W's ſevere method, which would be a rarity in another ill Diſputant, but is as familiar to S W. as laying of Grounds or demonſtrating.

11. But ſaith he, the Doctour diſgraces his narration by confeſſion, p. 136. that the Clergy were inclined to ſubſcribe by the fear of a præmunire.] I anſwer, S. W. ſeems to want ſome advantages, elſe he would not probably have ſought them by miſinterpreting my words. I mentioned the Clergie's having incurred a præmunire, but I ſaid not in the page cited, nor any where elſe, that they were inclined to ſubſcribe for fear of it. A change of ſenſe ordinarily follows a change of an adverſarie's words, ſo it doth here. The words in that page of Schiſm are, [though the firſt act of the Clergy in this were ſo induced, that 'tis eaſie to believe that nothing but the apprehenſion of dangers that hung over them (by a præmunire incurred by them) could probably have inclined them to it, and therefore I ſhall not pretend that it was an act of their firſt will and choice, but that which the neceſſity of affairs recommended to them, yet the matter of right being on that occaſion taken into their more ſerious debate in a Synodical way, and at laſt, a fit and commodious expreſſion uniformly pitched on by joynt conſent of both Houſes of Convocation, there is no reaſon to doubt but that they did believe what they did profeſs, the fear being the occaſion of their debates, but the reaſons and arguments offered in debate, the cauſes (as in charity we are to judge) of their deciſion.

12. Here 'tis viſible, that all that I ſay toward S. W's purpoſe is, that the fear of the premunire inclined them to the firſt act, i. e. to taking this matter into ſerious debate, which is again expreſs'd by the fear being occaſion of their debates, which is very diſtant from inclining them to conſent, (as S. W. ſuggeſts that I ſay;) for to that I there ſuppoſe them induced by the reaſons and arguments offered in debate. If therefore he ſhall ſtill think that he hath duely cited my words or ſenſe, and that I my ſelf diſgraced my narration, I muſt in both theſe equally diſſent from him: The grounds of my diſſent in the former, have already appeared in recitation and comparing of the words by me uſed, and by him impoſed on me. And for the later, it ſtands thus;

13. The Statute of the ſixteenth of Richard II. (ſet down at large by my * Lord of Cherbury in the Atturny's charge againſt Cardinal Wolſey) appoints, that if any purchaſe or purſue in the Court of Rome any Tranſlations, Proceſſes, &c. and they which bring or receive them, or make notification or execution of them, ſhall be put out of the King's protection, and their lands, &c. forfeit to the King, and they attached in their bodies, or proceſs made againſt them by Writ of Præmunire facies. Of which Statute the ground is ſet down, that the Crown of England hath been free at all times, and in no earthly ſubjection, but immediately ſubject to God in all things touching the Legality of the ſame Crown and to none other, particularly not to the Pope.

* P. 262.

14. Now it appearing that the † Cardinal acting as Legatus a latere, had obtained and exerciſed Bulls quite contrary to this Statute, and exerciſed Juriſdiction Legatine to the deprivation of the King's power—— and ſo that he was fallen into the præmunire, and the Law proceeded upon him accordingly, It was alſo * found by debate of the King's Council, and reſolved againſt the Clergy, that they were concluded under the ſame crime, and penalty, by ſupporting the power Legatine of the Cardinal: And this danger of theirs ſuggeſted the preſenting of a petition for the King's pardon, and the title of the King in the Petition coming under conſideration, they at laſt reſolved, all conſenting (Biſhop Fiſher being one of them) to give him the title of Eccleſiæ & Cleri Anglicani Protector & Summum Caput, (quantum per Chriſti legem licet;) and thus they preſented their Petition. All which amounts to no more than this, that they which had done quite contrary to the Laws, and incurred a viſible, conſiderable imminent danger by it, were awaked, by the near approach of their danger, to conſider their crime, and on ſight and acknowledgement thereof, to return to their obedience; for which they found a concurrence of all the moſt juſt reaſons, when they conſidered them, but were firſt inclined to conſider them, by the danger their crime had brought upon them.

† Ibid. p. 263.

* Ibid. p. 320.

15. And this I take to be the very frequent method not of averting ſinners from God, but of bringing them back to repentance, when, the ax being layd to the root of the tree, dangers approaching, a Baptiſt adviſes them to fly from the wrath to come, or an Apoſtle, to awake and ariſe from the dead; and they being thus rouſed by outward judgments, bethink themſelves, and return to a right mind, and have all the reaſons in the world to doe ſo; though, till the danger had thus awaked and qualified them, they were not ſo happy as to admit thoſe conſiderations. This I think may ſerve to reſcue my narration of the fear of a Præmunire from bringing any diſgrace upon it ſelf.

16. What he next adds, is of the ſame ſtamp, that the queſtion about the Pope's right in England being debated in the Univerſities, I ſay onely, p. 135. that it was generally defined in the Negative, i. e. ſaith he, when the King's party prevailed.] And I wonder what I could need to ſay more, but that it was generally defined in the Negative, and ſo returned teſtified under their hands and ſeals, An evidence of their univerſal, deliberate, voluntary conſent to it. And for him to adde, that it was when the King's party prevailed, is as if he told us, the King's party prevailed, when the King's party prevailed, or that it not appearing ſo plainly before that debate, which way the Univerſities inclined, upon debate it was found that the prevailing ſuffrage, ſuch as concluded the General conſent of the Univerſities, was for the King, againſt the Pope, which indeed was all that I intended to infer thence.

17. But ſaith he, I omit that the King's luſt firſt moved him to think of Schiſmatizing, and his final repentance of that Act, which ſhew that the firſt Spring which moved the whole Engine was not purity of conſcience, but the impureſt and baſeſt of paſſions.] I anſwer, I omitted them, becauſe I could not with juſtice or charity ſet them down, and I had much rather comply with both theſe exactly, than offend againſt both, or either of theſe, on what other intereſts ſoever.

18. It cannot, with either of them, be ſaid, that his luſt firſt moved him to think of Schiſmatizing, when firſt, he never Sciſmatized, but acted as his Predeceſſours had done, by ſtrength of thoſe Laws, which declare the Crown of England to be free from all ſubjection to the Pope, immediately ſubject to God; on which the Pope excommunicated him, and brake that peace and union which a Spiritual Paſtour ought moſt zealouſly and ſolicitouſly to have conſerved.

19. Secondly, the firſt viſible mover of the Engine was, the Pope's diſpenſing with the Law of God, in allowing him to marry his Brother's wife, which one thing, moſt unjuſtifiable in the Spiritual Paſtour, Paſtour, was the Origine of all the ſubſequent train of inconveniences, that involved his affairs in England; which yet might in ſome degree have been redeemed, if he would have diſcerned his errour, and have reſcinded his unlawfull diſpenſation, which the chief Univerſities of that part of Chriſtendom which was then in communion with the Pope, declared it his duty to have done. Or if any thing on the King's part intervened, and contributed, why ſhould not charity judge (at that time, when the King was in as great and univerſal honour among all, as any Prince in Chriſtendom) that what S. W. will call luſt, was truly a deſire of an Heir male to inherit his Kingdoms? And if this deſire will co-operate with the conſcience of the unlawfulneſs of the marriage, to ſolicit the divorce, why ſhould not the Spiritual man have conſidered the neceſſity of the one, reflecting alſo on the reaſonableneſs of the other motive?

20. A man would have thought, that in a charge of no great partiality to Henry VIII. the Sacrilege, which was viſible, and the covetouſneſs, which might tempt inviſibly, as well as the luſt, might have been as fit to have been added to S. W's indictment brought in againſt that King. But, as he ſaith without cauſe, that I omit the one; I may juſtly obſerve, that he omits the other, and give ſome gueſs at the reaſon of it; Becauſe in this Scene alſo the Pope was the firſt Actour, and he that gave the example and incouragement, and ſo more than the temptation to all that followed, by conſenting to the Cardinal's requeſt for ſuppreſſing and ruining * of divers Religious Houſes, which the piety of former Princes had erected. In which matter it is not to be forgotten what the Romaniſts themſelves, the thirty ſecular Prieſts in their † addreſs to Pope Clement the VIII. Ann. Dom. 1600. from Widbich, expreſly tell him. Horrenda Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ calamitas jam indè à diebus Clem. VIII. incepta eſt, à quo Cardinalis Wolſæus (vir prudèns ſecundum, ſed tanto loco, & celſitudinis gradu indigniſſimus) acceptâ poteſtate ad quæque pro ſuo arbitrio agenda in regno noſtro, quid non eſt auſus? Ipſe primus omnium diruit non pauca monaſteria, & ſub Apoſtolicæ authoritatis ſpecie impunè deſæviens in noſtram Eccleſiam, anſam & exemplum præbuit Henrico Regi paulò poſt totam Dominicam vineam exterminandi. &c.

* Ld Cherb. Hiſt. Hen. VIII. p. 157, 158.

† Declarat. motuum. p. 87.

21. As for the King's final repentance of that Act, (if he mean any thing, he muſt mean the Extinguiſhing Act, for to mean Schiſm, is again to beg the Principle;) I wonder on what ground of Hiſtory he can think to affirm it, or what he can hope to gain by it, if there were any truth in it.

22. His ground of Story I may gueſs at, becauſe the Catholick Gentleman having the like paſſage, that to his dying day he deſired to be reconciled, and that it was but the coming two daies ſhort of a Poſt to Rome, which hindered that the reconcilement was not actually made:] he cites it from my Lord of Cherbury, fol. 361. To this I † formerly gave anſwer, ſuch as ſufficed, but had not then my Lord of Cherbury's Book by me to conſult, which having now reviewed, I find in that page, that in the year 1533. (which is 14. years before his death) the Pope's ſentence againſt the King being openly ſet up at Dunkirk, the King, to prevent inconveniencies, reſolved, 1. to inform his Subjects of his Appeal to the Council General, 2. of the unlawfulneſs of the Dowager's Appeal to Rome, 3. to command it to be taught that the General Council is above the Pope——and then deſired the Biſhop of Paris to certifie Francis, that if the Pope would ſuperſede from the executing his ſentence, until he had indifferent Judges who might hear the buſineſs, he would alſo ſuperſede of what he was deliberated to doe, in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman See, giving alſo the Biſhop power to negotiate at Rome, aſſuring him that he had intire confidence in his diſcretion and ſufficiency, and would confirm as much as ſhould by him be accorded on his part; Hereupon the Biſhop poſted to Rome, came to terms of accord, and a day was fix'd, and a Currier ſent for receiving from our King a Confirmation hereof within a ſet time; but the Currier not returning till two daies after that time was expired, the ſentence was præcipitated, and the cenſures fulminated, and then the Currier arrived with ample Commiſſion and authority from the King to conclude and confirm all that the Biſhop had agreed in his name. But what was that agreement? Why, that the King was content to accept the judgment of that Court, upon condition that the ſuſpected and Imperial Cardinals ſhould not intervene, and that indifferent perſons ſhould be ſent to Cambray to be informed of the merits of the cauſe, giving authority for his Proctours to appear in that Court. And if this be repentance of that Act, and being 14. years before his death, final repentance, S. W. ſhall be credited ſtill in relating matters of fact; but withall, the Pope that would firſt præcipitate, and then upon an approved or approvable repentance, not reſcind it, muſt lye under the cenſure not onely of Mr. White for a very fallible Judge, even when he hath proceeded by the votes of his Conſiſtory, but of all other men, for a very unkind Father, that came not to call or receive ſinners to repentance, or penitents to peace. And that is all I ſhall need to add to what hath before been largely replyed to the Catholick Gentleman (on this head of King Henry's final repentance) where hath appeared, what moderate gains he was to be content to reap from that ſuggeſtion, if ſuppoſed to have perfect truth in it, which now it hath failed of alſo.

* Reply to Cath. Gent. p. 116.

CHAP. V.

A Rejoynder to S. W*'s Exceptions to my former Replies, and inforcements of his own, in his First Part.*

SECT. I.

S. W*'s Reflexion on his fourteen Grounds. The whole matter devolved to this test, the truth or falsehood of these grounds; A Recapitulation of the returns made to them, and a brief view of the state of our Controversie. The method of the remaining Strictures, and the motives to it.*

1. HAving laid down these his (no less than) fourteen Grounds, and thereby, as he thinks, given his Reader a competent number of prejudices to our cause, and instilled seeds of pregnant kindness to his, he yet contents not himself, without assuring him again at parting, that these Grounds will themselves lay open the whole case clearly to the ordinary Readers, and inform the more prudent ones, that nothing is or can be said by D. H. of a force and clearness comparable to that of their possession, and that of Oral Tradition, which they ever claimed for their tenour, from which also we disclaimed, when we reformed in this point of the Pope's Supremacy, so that little more remains to be performed by S. W. but to manifest the Doctour's shallow weaknesses and trivial impertinencies—]

2. With this resolution of his I shall not refuse so far to comply, as to acknowledge, that if his Grounds had approved themselves as they promised, demonstrative, the consequence would have been, as he pretends, and all farther Replies or Discoveries have proved superfluous; For if Possession and Oral Tradition be such irrefragable tenures, and both of them be proved or granted to be on the Romanist's side, our denying the Pope's Supremacy, and so the Extinguishing Act, must needs be acknowledged, in Clement's style, not onely φάσμα, but πάσις and πόλεμος, more than Schism, even sedition and rebellion it self, the casting our Sovereign, the Pope, out of his Dominions.

3. To this therefore, as to the grand issue, I acknowledge the matter to be duely brought by S. W. and consequently am obliged to stand to the triall on these terms of the question thus stated; And if they can so manage their argument fetch'd from Oral Tradition, as thereby to demonstrate the Pope's continual possession in the supreme universal Pastourship by succession from St. Peter, and so derivation from Christ, I am humble enough to confess, and impartial enough to pronounce, that our cause is finally lost; But if in this pretended Demonstration S. W. hath miscarried, and failed to perform in the least degree, what in the highest he promised, and if in this my Reply to his fourteen Grounds (wherein the very quintessence of his cause is by his own confession comprised, and by his own Limbek extracted) it hath competently appeared that he hath thus miscarried, the united force of both his admired mediums, Possession and Tradition Reversed, amounting to little more, than their present Churches assuming, without proof it is so, and S. W's assuming (on no other proof, but their so teaching) that it must be so, and cannot possibly be otherwise; If over and above, it have in passing, been cleared in the first times, that the pretended universal Pastourship was not so much as pretended to by any Pope, nor by any the first General Councils allowed, nay denyed, and so, under characters of the greatest detestation, disowned personally, by Popes, both for themselves and all others; If yet farther it hath been competently testified that their possession in England was never admitted under that title, which alone S. W's Doctrine and interest exacts, but at the utmost, on such claims, as the Kings of England might as well exclude as admit; And if, after all this, it were still the Pope that first cast off the King by his severe censures, and precipitated, inexorable Bull, and so made it impossible, that the King should be guilty of this sin of breaking communion, or separation; (to all which I shall be allowed to hope, that the Testimonies are pregnant, and though from necessity of the matter, wordish in S. W's style, yet withall neither dead nor mute) There will then be little colour of pretence for the charge of Schism against us, and not much more for the appendant, but slighter suggestion, that either King Henrie's lust (as S. W. hath it) or his sacrilege and covetousness (as others more colourably) began our Reformation; since the Pope, that dispensed with him to marry his Brother's wife (against the expres command of God, * repeated to the Jews, but first given to all the sons of Adam and Noah) and with Cardinal Wolsey, to pull down the lesser Monasteries, was first, if not principally (and so more) chargeable with it. And if our God of pureſt eyes, who hateth and punisheth all these sins, hath also by his over-ruling hand, made use of them to chastise the provocations of the Church, and to introduce that more pure unmix'd profession of truth, which had long been incumbred, and defaced under some rubbish, we may adore his justice, and wisedom, and goodness also, and not allow our selves to divert from so necessary a duty, and take up eternal complaints and disputes instead of it.

* Lev. XVIII. 16.

4. It is certain, the practice of all known duties, and the ministring to the Church of God in those things, wherein the inward beauty of Religion consists, particularly the φιλοτιμεῖσθαι and φιλεῖν, as the Apostle styles it, emulation and ambition, and eager constant pursuing of an universal peace and charity among Christians, is a much more decent imployment for the greatest wits, or most dignified Prelates, than an insatiate contention for power, or grandeur; and our Saviour's example and Doctrine have establish'd it beyond objection, that he that will be the first of all, must not onely in an affected title, but in reality, be the servant of all.

5. Meanwhile

5. Meanwhile on these premisses, more largely deduced in these foregoing debates, and now thus briefly recapitulated, I shall not ask his leave to conclude and assume, that the Defense of our Church in point of Schism (which was the Original ingagement) remains wholly unmoved and undisturbed by his renewed attempts; and having so far acquitted our selves, as to all that our persecuted Mother is concerned in, I shall profess to have so little solicitude for my self, or respect to S. W's slanders and contumelies, and captious returns; which he here calls manifestations of my shallow weaknesses, and trivial impertinences, but in his Index hath set out in the louder styles of Absurdities, Abuses, Blasphemies, Cavils, Contradictions, False-dealings, Ignorances, Omissions of necessary duty, Bringing Testimonies for, that are against, &c. (all which summed up by him are but so many hundreds of Essayes of his Chymical faculty in extracting streams, if not Oceans our of Pumice stones) as not to account it my interest to lavish and mispend my own and the Reader's hours and patience, in surveighing all his subtilties of this kind.

6. It is to be expected, that they that are not able to support their cause, will adorn it, as well as they can, if it be but with the names, or pictures of their pretended Captives, and having avowed their obligation to defame their adversary, proceed to do it as dexterously and undiscernibly, and to that end as confidently and triumphantly, as they are able; and herein I acknowledge S. W. hath acquitted himself to be a great Master of his Art, having on the one first part of my Replies to the Cath. Gent. and the Disarmer (beyond which he hath not proceeded) represented such an Army of conquer'd, a Catalogue of scattered forces, that to vindicate them from his aspersions, and misrepresentations, and shew him or others, that it was but his dream, wherein they were routed, and from whence their supposed names and misfortunes were transcribed and ingrossed in his Inventory, would require many more sheets, than he hath spent in his Dispatcher (which being added to the large but necessary examination of his grounds, would advance to an enormous bulk) the discovering of frauds and injustices being a work of much more time, than the contriving them, unless the injured person satisfie himself with that part of the Gospel method, of ὡι ἀνλικτῶν, leaving his innocence to be approved to God and man by its own lustre, and referring it to every mans eyes whether S. W. be as terrible, or the Doctour as deformed, as he is painted.

7. In this I shall have the less reason to be solicitous, having in the first Chapter given (on purpose to gain liberty to spare the like afterward) a competent number of ἀξιώσεις, what trust or heed is due to this Accuser; nor indeed can I imagine that 'tis expected by any, that I should still give the Reader and my self the same exercise, or vary it so impertinently, as to pursue or trace his steps through all his several following Sections, either in things which are now by degrees so far removed, as to be wholly extrinsecal to the main question, or which belonging to it, own their certain dependence on the Grounds, which we have thus largely and particularly refuted, or which are sufficiently cleared already in the former answers, for that were actum agere, to recite what hath already been said, and 'tis more for the Reader's ease as well as mine, that he review or remember what he hath formerly read, than that he be sated with repetitions.

8. I shall now more cursorily surveigh some part at least of the remainder of his Reply, not giving it that measure of consideration, which his Grounds have been allowed; And should I attend him but to the end of his first part, I should therein imitate him, who hath satisfied himself with the first of the three parts of mine, leaving the far greater untouch'd. But if leisure from more important business permit, I may probably enough, whilest these sheets seek their passage into the light, proceed to that which follows also, so far as to tire both my self, and the Reader, if it be but to give him a fuller view of S. W's dealings (scarce to be parallel'd by any other) some more of the lineaments of a new-fashion'd Controvertist; which being done, I shall willingly, if there be ought behinde, leave it to doe its utmost, being secure that they which are willing not to be deceived, will compare, before they judge, and not think the worse of David, that Goliah revileth him, nor of this cause, that there is a Chancery-bill, a bedroll of boasts or cavils brought in against it, never an one of which, to him that hath leasure and candour to compare and examine, will be found to have the least solidity in it.

SECT. II.

Answer to his seventh Section. Admiration and Prodigy relative. S. W*'s guesses not creditable against our knowledge. Our denying a Fact is not our pleading the reasonableness of it: Not inflicting Censures differs much from joyning with Schismaticks.* S. W*'s interpretation of not pressing false Fundamentals. His averting our charity to their Church. What danger if our charity erred? An account of our belief that the Church of* Rome is a true Church. The Nags-head Bishops. With what truth Fable is now revived. Mission from Rome in what sense.

1. IN his seventh Section the mistakes affix'd on me in reply to his Introduction, will not move any man that shall compare Deuter. ch. 11. Sect. 1. with these suggestions.

2. For example, it being the part of a wise man, nil admirari, to admire nothing, and new and strange and prodigious effects being the onely things for which admiration, which hath gone for an excess of minde, is allowable or excusable, and yet S. W. owning some admiration to have been bred in him, I know not that I could misinterpret him, when I conceived some great unheard-of news and prodigy to be the one proper object of such acknowledged admiration.

3. As for the account of our writing books by pairs (he may now remember Sir Roger Twisden, and Dr. Ferne, and say by Messes) on the subject of Schism, I must be allowed to give the reasons with more certain judgement than any else, but the Bishop of Derry, and those others, and the searcher of hearts; And therefore if he will still satisfie himself with his own auguries, and set up his fancie for an infallible testifier, against other mens inerrable sensations of a fact within their own cognisance,

I shall leave him and his Reader to try it out, and not endeavour to make this impertinent breach betwixt us wider by debating.

3. So when I take notice of his mention of our pleading the reasonableness of our Schism, as a Δεῖξις, what trust is due to him in his affirmations? He will persuade me that I interpret his words, as if he meant, that I confess'd it Schism.] But it is evident to any Reader, that reflects on my words (Answ. to Sch. Dis. Ch. 2. Sect. 2. n. 1.) that I do not so interpret his words, but onely assume, that he saith (which are his express words) that we plead the reasonablness of our Schism, and answer, that I grant all Schism uncapable of all plea of reasonableness, and maintain our innocence by denying the fact, and not by defending the justice of it. And therefore, although herein he either is, or desires others should be, deceived (for my exception is still the same that it was, that we deny the fact, have not divided, or brake from any Government, that we were under, and then how can I be supposed to plead the reasonableness of that fact, which he calls our Schism, if I think we never committed that fact? and if we had, I confess we could not produce any justifiable reason for it) yet the farther discussing this, were but the repeating what hath been so oft said, that we plead not (as he oft, and fain would have us) the causes of our division (but deny that we ever divided) and that all the breach or partition that is made, proceeds from their sentences of Excommunication, as inexorable, as unjust.

4. So in his Reply concerning the aim and end of the Churches censures, 'tis so visible I spake not of our not keeping our selves separate from Schismaticks, on one side, nor of the punishments subsequent to Excommunication, on the other side, but of that peculiarly, whereof he spake before, viz. the whether inflicting or threatning them with the Spiritual rod of Excommunication (which were little less than fury toward a Schism armed with might, and so, far from Christian, or charitative, or prudent) that it is not imaginable he can expect farther answer to his suggestions, than is already largely afforded him.

5. His next piece [of their not pressing us to believe false fundamentals] as it is now interpreted by him, must signifie a special rarity, viz. his telling me, that they doe not press us to believe false fundamentals, meaning by fundamentals, as he saith such points as we account fundamentals] which being easily spelled, and put together, amounts to this, that they doe not press us to believe such false points, as we accounted fundamentals,] On which I acknowledge my discourse too short to make any rational reflexions, I am no Oedipus for such riddles, but acknowledge, that because I was so charitable as to think he spake words that would bear some sense, I affix'd not this interpretation on them, and so it is but a faint sparkling of S. W's more radiant esprite, to demand now, whether it were wrong to us to affirm that we would not speak a contradiction] No, but it was, it seems, superabundant charity in me to presume he would not.

6. Meanwhile 'tis possible one passage in this discourse of the truth of their Church, p. 63. may breed some scruple, how I can acknowledge the Church of Rome a true Church, when I deny their Infallibility, which he here, as elsewhere, affirms to be the Fundamental of Fundamentals, upon which as her sole certain ground she builds all her Faith. Upon which his argument thus proceeds, If the sole authority on which she builds all her faith, to wit, her infallible authority, be a ruinous falshood, she can have no true faith of any Article, and consequently can have no faith at all, nor be a true Church, since a Church cannot survive the destruction of faith, whence he concludes, that our ambition to honour our Nags-head Bishops with the shadow of a mission from their Church, makes us kindly speak nonsense to doe Rome a seeming courtesie for our own interest.]

7. To all this therefore I must pay some attendance, and first, to reflect a while on his plain affirmation, that their Infallibility is their Fundamental of Fundamentals, their sole certain ground on which she builds all her faith.] I may here have leave with some astonishment to demand, if God's veracity, his word and certain truth of his affirmations, be not at least some part of their Faith, if not the foundation of it? and if they believe that onely upon their own infallibility, and not their infallibility on that? 2. Whether she may not equally build on this foundation all things in the world, which she can or shall ever believe, as she builds those articles which she now professeth? But this theme is too large for a παίγνιον, and hath, in an intire tract, been long since cnnsidered.

8. Secondly then, for our destroying their Faith and Church by denying their Infallibility, I shall return answer, such as I hope will justifie the reason of our charity toward them, though they should all be such passionate, avowed, imperswasible, and even Platonick lovers of hatred and strife, as S. W. affects to be esteemed, most vehemently renouncing their thinking of our Church under that notion, when they pray for the peace of the Catholick Church p. 78 and giving his reason why we should not have charity, or conthanks to the humble members of the Papacy for such prayers, and so here solicitously providing, and proposing arguments to aver our charitable acknowledgement, that their Church is a true Church.

9. And, 1. I might demand, what injury it would be to their Church, or criminous errour in us, if a few poor persecuted Christians, being railed at for hereticks, and cast out of their Church, did so far deceive themselves by their earnest desire to live peaceably with all man, and to repay good for evil, as without grounds demonstrable, or duely approveable, to hope or believe better of them than they deserve, or than they are willing we should persuade our selves, or others, that they deserve? Or how were it reconcileable with humility in them, to reject these no poisonous effluxions of this, easie, well-meant, (though 'twere irrational) charity?

10. But then, 2. we doubt not of the solidity of our grounds, whereby we conclude the Church of Rome a true Church, as having received and retained the Articles of the Apostle's Crede, the one onely true faith, once, or at once, delivered. And if they do also believe the Infallibility of the present Roman Church, which we account an errour, yet will not that (or their many other additional errours) be sufficient of it self to destroy the foundation supposed to be believed by them, any more than telling many falsities is unreconcileable with telling any truth.

11. As for his argument, founded in the supposal that she builds all her faith on her own Infallible authority, my charity still bids me hope that she doth not, but upon the Doctrine of Christ, and therefore therefore that the Church, in this argument, is an ambiguous word, distinguishable into the Ancient, Primitive, Apostolical Church truely Universal, and the present modern Roman Church falsely styling it self Universal; and then, as I doubt not but the former of these was infallible in testifying their own sensations, and so in delivering down both the Canon of the Scripture, and Articles of the Crede; so I charitably persuade my self, that the present Roman Church believes both these upon that Testimony of theirs, and then that, as including the Apostles, and Christ, and so God himself, is their Fundamental of Fundamentals, their sole certain Ground.

12. As for their present Church, as far as it teaches no more than it received from them, so far it proceeds infallibly also, but hath not it self that amulet or charm of Infallibility, that although it should believe, and teach, as received from them, what really they never delivered, it should yet be unerrable in thus believing or affirming.

13. And this (if there be any kind of truth in such as do not pretend to be infallible in all things) is the true ground of our believing them still a true (yet not an infallible) Church, though how soon they will make use of their pretended infallibility to destroy some articles of the Faith, as they have done to introduce those that are no articles, I undertake not to divine, yet conceive that the divolving the whole ground of faith to the Oral Tradition of each present age, and defining for Articles, whatsoever the present Mothers shall teach their children, is as ready a way toward it, as the Devil could civilly suggest, or instill into them; But the no great reverence I owe to S. W's affirmations leaves still place for my charity, to believe that there be but few Romanists as yet, that have entred into this temptation. And untill it be formed into an article, and these possible noxious consequences be actually and practically derived from it, I shall still hope that the taking up all true fundamental articles, on what grounds soever, though from a book casually found among Heathens, much more from Romish Mothers (though they neither are, nor are deemed infallible) may, with the superstructing of good life, bring safe to Heaven him who hath no other means to direct him thither.

14. For I shall demand, in case a Christian Priest, or but a Lay person, should goe to the Indies, and there promulgate the true Doctrine, or (to satisfie S. W.) the whole Roman Doctrine of the Tridentine Articles, telling them withall, that God came to him in a Vision, and revealed this Doctrine, and with it gave him this command, to preach it to those Auditours, and in case those Indians believe all that he saith, his Vision, and his Doctrine too, his Vision, which I with S. W. suppose to be a Falsitie, and his Doctrine, which S. W. grants with my supposition to be a truth; shall not, I say, those Indians, that thus believe all Catholick truth, be acknowledged to have a true Faith; and if by that Priest they were baptized into this Catholick Faith, be thus far accounted Christians, in a state of salvation, if without ever discovering the falseness of the pretended Vision, they die in that Faith? I shall not think S. W. so severe to these new Proselytes, as to doubt of their Faith or Salvability. And I shall have the same charity to him and his Church, if, as sincerely as the supposed Indians, they believe all Catholick truth, and, as blamelesly as those Indians, continue to believe some untruths. So much may suffice for this objection.

15. To his mention of the Nags-head Bishops I have nothing to return, but that it seems these are times, wherein the most refuse trash, the most scandalously reprobate ware may hope to be put off to some Customers, else this which was long since driven to its den, and discovered to be palpable forgery by testimony of undenyable records, would not adventure the shame of coming upon the Stage again, as both here by S. W. and by another Libeller I hear it hath; If Mr. Mason hath not already done it for him; or if he do in earnest attribute ought to the one auxiliary, newly brought in, the pretended Confession of the Bishop of Durham in the late Parliament, he will soon see (if not before, this can tell him so) from evidences undenyable, what sort of wares those are, which now a days the Romanist serves out to his Customers.

16. Meanwhile S. W. hath not very reconcileably joyned the mention of the Nags-head Bishops, and so much as a shadow of mission from Rome; for I always understood the Fable of the Nags-head to have pretended, that those which had never been any kind of (and so not Romish) Bishops made one another Bishops at that merry meeting. And then they had as fair a pretension (and so shadow) of mission from Constantinople, as from Rome, the same that the Sebaptistæ, i. e. none at all from any, but themselves.

17. Lastly, I have not been acquainted with those men, whose ambition it hath been to honour our Bishops with mission from Rome, any farther, than by affirming this known truth, that those who consecrated our Bishops, as in King Henrie's, so in Queen Elizabeth's time, had, till they were Excommunicate, held communion with Rome, receiving Ordination from the Bishops their Predecessors under the Primate of this Nation, who by a Chain of Succession received it also either from the British Bishops, who own'd no dependence on Rome, or from Augustine the Monk, who was ordained by the Bishop of Arles in France, but being sent hither by the Pope, paid a special respect unto him, but (as was formerly insisted on) appears not ever to have exacted acknowledgement, or performed obedience to his Universal Pastourship. And whether our (whom he libellously styles Nags-head) Bishops had their mission uninterrupted from the British, or French, or Romish Bishops, it matters little to us, who doubt not but each of these had it by continued succession from the Apostles, who planted the Faith, and imposed hands on their first fruits in every of these Regions. And so as we have no interests to serve (whatever he is resolved to fansie) by pretending mission from Rome, so we need not nonsense, and it now appears we have not let fall any, in our courtesie (more than seeming) to their Church. And another S. W. could hardly have contrived so many misadventures into so little compass.

18. His farther inlargements concerning Copes, Surplices and Organs, had their satisfactory answers formerly, and have now no new addition of armature, or propriety to our present debates, and so I shall leave them to him that pleases to consider them, as I do also his addition of their Churches possession of their belief of the Infallibility, which hath largely been spoken to already.

SECT.

SECT. III.

Answer to his VIII Section. His notion of good and bad. Rendring causes of Schism differs from proving we have not separated. The pretence of an external confess'd Government. The Romanists Schism. S. W's argument to prove it impossible, considered. Aristocracy, a Government, as well as Monarchy. The Government of the Church by Primates. Schism from Fraternal Union also. Injustice of their censures. All [Ifs] are not ridiculous. Two sins may be equal. His insertion of [not] Irenæus's ἀνάπαυσιν. Cautious expressions. The title of Catholicks no argument. St Augustine's testimony no proof of it. A Tract of heresie several from that of Schism. His ninth Grammatical Section passed over lightly.

1. IN his eighth Section, though I cannot admire the Rule of his great Masters of morality, that nothing is in it self good or bad, but as it conduces to, or averts from the attaining one's last end ('tis sufficient to me, that some things being in their own nature good, and agreeable to those Souls which God hath appointed to have the Government of our actions, and the contrary to these in their own nature evil, as breaches of his eternal Law, God hath most graciously decreed to reward, with eternal bliss those actions of ours, which are so consonant to our natures, and eternally to punish our violations of those his most equal Laws, our casting off from us his ζυγὸς χρηστὸς, his gracious as well as easie Yoke) yet have I no reason to go out of my way to examine it, or any other part of his procedure, whereby he infers no more than what he knows I first affirmed to him, that there is no just cause pretensible for Schismatizing, or separating from any our lawfull Governours.

2. As for his examination of my inference, that because Schism can have no just causes, therefore in treatting a Controversie of Schism, I ought not to heed or produce causes] he hath on that head nothing to purpose, but a piteous thin Sophism, that if I doe an external act, which hath the shew of Schism, and yet will defend my self to be no Schismatick, I must give account why I doe that action, and shew that that action is not truly Schism] To which I answer, as formerly, that it is one thing to render causes of Schism or separating from a Government, another to shew and prove that we have not separated. This latter therefore is the onely thing incumbent on us, and that we undertake, and to that end, he knows, the Tract of Schism was avowed to be written; but the former was none of our interests, who have no act in this matter to give account of, being meerly passive, (we leave it to Mr. S. and his Complices, which have forsaken their persecuted Mother, cast off their Governours, under whom they were actually (I must suppose duely) placed) and therefore let S. W. never so long persuade, and think he demonstrates the necessity, he must excuse us, that we do not acknowledge that necessity, or consequently attempt to propose any such reasons; For how can we be required to render our reasons of dividing, when he knows we contest that we never divided? Would not this more than imply a contradiction? And then, that the contrary should be charged on us (so p. 72. it is) as a pure contradiction, is certainly the greatest and most unreconcileable contradiction in the world, and so fit for none but S. W's omnipotent faculty to assume to maintain against me.

* P. 73. 3. As for his * state of the question of an external confess'd Government at that time (of Henry VIII.) he hath already heard sufficiently, viz. that the Universal Pastourship, as derived from Christ, was not then confess'd in our Kingdom; and so, that he will gain as little by his pretended external possession (unless the Pope possesses all, that he and his Factors shall affirm he possesses) as that which he calls my cunning forged false state of the question, which spake of Supreme Legal power here, i. e. such as our Laws acknowledged to be in force, or if he please, in possession among us.

† P. 73. 4. Of the same batch it is, which follows, that he will still affirm, that † actually we were under
* P. 74. the Church of Rome at that time, demanding, * whether I can doubt, whether there was an extern apparent
† P. 74. and acknowledged authority——and † supposing that I will acknowledge it, and that * if they usurp'd,
* P. 75. it was not lately, but a thousand years agoe] With what reason of his confidence, he or the Reader may † Ib. now judge from what hath formerly been said of their falsely supposed possession, on which as his † onely proof he professes to build all their right, and which failing, 'tis necessary their right must fail also, without farther disputing whether bare possession, not founded in right, could found, or conclude a right in the Possessours.

5. For the Schismaticalness of their Church, he would perswade himself, that we accuse them weakly and faintly, and that the light of nature and common language of mankind checks us in it, by telling us that the whole is not said to be broken from a part, but a part from the whole] But this, I may say, is a most weak supposition, and as faint a proof, on his part; For as of the English Revolters, we make no question, but they have schismatized from that part of the Universal Church, of which they were baptized and initiated to be members (and that is not the breaking of the whole from a part, for sure Mr. S. or any other English Revolter is not the whole Church) so for the Bishops of Rome, we as little doubt of their breach of charity and Christian communion (and that is Schism also) in casting out their so many fellow members, whole Churches of all quarters; And that again is a breaking not of the whole, but of one part from other parts, and those much more diffused, and of greater circuit, than is the Church of the Dividers.

6. To save them from this guilt, his acumen is extraordinary, for thus he argues, that in this supposed case, they can never be shewn Schismatical against Government or unity in the Church, if no such unity can be found, as it cannot, saith he, in that mould the Doctour hath cast Christianity, by making each Church αὐτοκέφαλον, independent or self-governed, since there can be no division made, where the things are already many.] To this, as the prime considerable of this Section I shall accommodate some answer, 1. that by the purport of the argument we have reason to conclude, that if it were possible they should be Schismaticks, it could not be questioned but they are such; and then, they that have done as much as is possible for them to be guilty of that dangerous sin, it is but time that they should look about them, examine and throughly consider their state. 2. That 'tis too strange an assumption to be proposed without tender of all proof, that there can be no unity in the Church, if each Church be αὐτοκέφαλον. He cannot but know that an Aristocracy is a Government, and a Common-wealth an one body (though the persons, wherein the Government is, are many) as well as a Monarchy, where it is placed in one single person. And so certainly the whole Church represented in a General Council by the Bishops of each particular Church, or governed by so many Primates out of a Council, is one body, as fitly and properly so called, and as exactly and firmly compacted, as if all their power were contracted in five Patriarchs, or those again molten into one Successour of St. Peter. When the great dispute was betwixt Rome and Constantinople, Balsamon recites the opinion of some, that the Headship over the Church was in all the five Patriarchs, * διὰ τὸ ἐπέχειν τὲς πέντε Παπειάρχας τόπον τῆς μιᾶς κεφαλῆς τὸ σώματος, δηλαδὴ τῶν ἁγίων ἐκκλησιῶν τῦ Θεῦ, because the five Patriarchs supply the place of the one head of the body, to wit of the holy Churches of God. And had they, that spake thus of the five Patriarchs, inlarged it to all the Primates, they had spoken agreeably to the Canons of all the General Councils, who subject all the Bishops in every Province to their Primate, and divide the whole Church into so many διοικήσεις or administrations, as there are Primates; And this would be a solving of the grand objection of Bellarmine and others, in behalf of the Pope, and against the placing the Supremacy in General Councils [that in the Intervals of such Councils the Supremacy should rest no where, if it did not in the Bishop of Rome] for then it is clear, it might rest in the Primates, and, if need required, be exercised by them, without any more numerous convention, and by each of these severally the so many διοικήσεις be governed, of which the whole body is made up. What judgment S. W. will pass on this, I am not much concerned to be solicitous, but refer it to more indifferent judges, if this be not an expedient of some value toward the ending this Controversie; I am sure it is of full force to evacuate all force of his argument, and then there being this way, wherein unity is found, it may sure be shewn that the Romanist is Schismatical from this Unity.

an

* Medit. & Resp. l. 7. in Jure Græco Rom. 4. t. p. 449.

7. Nay thirdly, 'tis so evident, that those things that are in one respect many, may be united in some common respect (as they that have not union of external Government, may yet have fraternal communion and mutual concord one with the other) that 'tis still manifest, that Churches wholly independent, and not subordinate one to the other, may yet communicate one with the other, and ought to have preparedness of charity to doe so; and if so, they may, by breach of that communion, divide also, and then if Mr. S. have no better security than this, to keep him from being concluded a Schismatick, 'tis time for him to consider whether it be not more eligible to return, and be persecuted, than to continue where he is, in the state of defiance and bitterness to his old Mother.

8. He is very confident of having defended the Romish Church in their remorseless Censures, because this he thinks hath been the constant practice of God's Church, to excommunicate all those who renounced either the Government, or any other part of faith received from their forefathers] But 1. he considers not, that we renounced no Government, that we were not really under (onely the Pope was very willing to challenge, and industrious to get Dominion over us) and 2. that the errours of our forefathers may be renounced, without offending against any Church, or provoking their censures; and 3. that what he calls the Faith, he must prove to be such, or else it may be allowed to pass with us, who undertake to shew it was not part of that Faith which was once delivered to the Saints, under the title not of the Faith of our first, but Errours or Additionals of our immediate forefathers.

9. As for the [Ifs] that he is so fastidiously displeased with, he hath, I doubt not, judgment enough, to discern that all the severals so introduced, are things that we assume to have actually proved, and that the arguments for them are evidently deduced from the Canons that are there mentioned p. 20. and other proofs that were not again to be repeated, having elsewhere been so largely deduced. And if every hypothetical Syllogism, the minor whereof is proved to be actually true, or if not so, yet offered to be proved by Testimonies of weight, to which no least reply is made, can be parallel'd with nothing but (the proverbial expression of impossibilities) the falling of the Skie, and if S. W. can no otherwise attempt Answer to such evidences, than by recourse to a meagre proverb, as far removed from the purpose, as the Skie from the Larks, I may be allowed to admire his faculties, but not solicitously attend him in the exercise of them.

10. In this place he will needs perswade himself or others, that I was willing to * palliate Schism by pretence of some greater sin] when yet 1. he knows that I profess no cause can justifie or palliate the sin of Schism; and therefore 2. that I undertake but one thing, viz. to shew that we are not guilty of any fact which can with any reason be called Schism. 3. He might know, that no pretence of greater sin, can evade or palliate a sin; I must not commit any one sin, to avoid another: And 4. another man would think it a competent evidence, that I did not seek to palliate Schism, when I set it out in a phrase more comprehensive than that which I was to interpret. But he that is to subsist by his skill in cavilling, must be excused, if he never give over the exercise of it, and presume he hath carryed all before him, by saying, 'tis false, and moral science assures him that no two kinds of vices are equal, when yet he neither tenders us any grounds of his affirmation or that assurance, nor considers that when God saith, Rebellion is as the sin of Witchcraft, the result is, that those two sins are equal in God's sight, who is the more competent Judge of it, than S. W. or his Moral (ἀδιαφόρυ γνῶσις) Science falsely so called. How it stands with the obvious interpretation of [scarce any (in the singular, i. e. any one) is so great] to affirm that not onely some one, but also some few be greater, I am not subtile enough to discern, nor yet concern'd enough to debate with this great Master.

* P. 78.

11. His mistake of my words, from which he concludes me to tell him, that my authorities did not induce that there was none greater] is very strange, when my words are expresly the contrary, that my authorities did induce there was none greater. My words are these, I assumed not to affirm more than my authorities did induce, that there was none greater] i. e. my authorities did induce that there was none greater, and I assumed to affirm no more than that. What can be more perspicuous on one side, or misrepresented on the other, what more intolerable in an Authour than to insert a [not] in a quotation? 'Twere well if his haste, which my charity before mentioned, as the excuse of his misadventures, could here be pleaded for him.

12. His one pertinent Reply to what was said of the Testimony from Irenæus, is, that unless I had the testimony out of Irenæus in Greek, my evasion (of ἀδωάτον being oft no more than hard and difficult) is nothing. To which I answer, that Irenæus having written in Greek, and ἀδωάτον in Greek oft signifying no more than very difficult, I could not infallibly conclude any more to be meant by the Latine of his Greek, nulla fieri potest, than that it was hard or difficult, and this is as evident from his Latine Interpreter, as it could be from his Greek Text, if we were Masters of it, and found in it the expres's words ἀδιώατον γενέσθαι. And whereas the style [It is very hard, if not impossible] he would conclude consistent with this sense [it is doubtfull] I answer that this is but a glos's of his; I may abstain from affirming a thing to be absolutely impossible, though I think there be no place of doubting, whether it be true or no. And how could I be thought to design to leave room for the reasonableness of any Schism, who had expresly affirmed that no cause or motive, i. e. reason of Schism was pleadable?

13. He cites from my words p. 24. l. 11. that my expressions were cautious] where my meaning was evident, as my words, that the cautious interpreting of nulla fieri potest, by 'twas in their opinion very hard, if not impossible] seemed to me the best. But that concludes not my expressions chary in condemning all Schism, but my care exact, not to misinterpret my Authour.

14. Next his discourse of the Roman Church being called Catholick, is somewhat extraordinary; Custome, saith he, which makes words proper, forces their very enemies to call them Catholicks; thence he concludes they are universally called such, and then, saith he, according to St. Austin no Church can be universally called such, which is not truly such.] To this I answer, 1. that his argument will equally hold for the Gnosticks that they were the most truely and profoundly knowing men, they calling themselves so, and their enemies the Fathers of the Church, confuting them under that title; whereas this universal custome could not prevail against St. Paul's words, that their γνῶσις was ψευδώνυμος, Science falsely so intitled. So likewise would it hold for the Cathari, who were so styled by themselves, and by their enemies, and yet shewed to be impure, i. e. Schismatical, by those that called them, as they called themselves, by that title of purity. Thus the Authour of Schism Dispatch'd is both by himself, and by me, and all others called S. W. and yet neither he, nor I, nor any man are yet perswaded, that the Authour is any otherwise than ψευδώνυμος so called. It seems, a small argument will serve his turn, when his interest combines with it, that he can conclude from the Pursivants asking for a Catholick house, and every one shewing him a Romanist's, that therefore the Romanist is properly called Catholick.] That custome is norma loquendi, so far as that I shall not offend, if I speak cum vulgo, and that I shall know the meaning of words abusively applyed, and so understand, that he that is called a Catholick is a Romanist, i. e. one who thinks himself truely a Catholick, I had been taught; and so that he that was called Gnostick, was an heretick, that assumed the title of profound knowledge; but that that rule was so far to be extended, that the Romanist that was so styled, should be also the real interpretation of that name, i. e. an universal, any more than that Pope Leo should be a Lyon indeed, or Pope Clement a mercifull man, when he sent out his Bull of great severity, neither S. W. nor yet St. Austin have yet taught me.

15. For in the second place, that Father certainly never defined, that no Church can be universally called such, which is not truely such. If none were universally so called in his time, but the true, that is all that he can be imagined to affirm; and that concludes not, but in other times hereticks might assume the most honourable name, and by others be known, and so called by it, without ever deeming that it truely belonged to them. And if our calling them by a title which demonstrates their assuming to themselves more than belongs to them, shall be an argument of force that it doth really belong to them, what they assume, my Logick I confess hath failed me; The plain truth is, in St. Augustine's days the good and Orthodox Christians were called Catholici, and Hereticks and Schismaticks known by the names of their Leaders, Novatians, Donatists, &c. but that hinders not the altering of the Scene, as the Devil we know is not always obliged to appear in his own colours, he can transform himself, as far as a title goes, into an angel of light, and then reatus impii est pium nomen, the pious name is the guilt of the impious] (which is a known Maxim) would not very properly be interpreted, to this sense, that the title of Catholicks is a certain proof, that the Romanists are the onely Orthodox Christians.

16. That I treated of Schism abstracted from heresie, he will needs censure, as a laying wrong grounds.] But I answer, that I loved not to speak of two things at once, and therefore reserved heresie to be spoken of by it self, and have accordingly since the publishing that of Schism, given him, if he have vouchsafed to look on it, a Tract of Heresie also, and vindicated the Church of England from the one, as well as the other guilt.

17. His ninth Section of his Grammatical niceties and my ten several mistakes (his so many calumnies) shall sing to themselves, and entertain with their melody their own Muses, I will trust the most partial Reader to determine, whether I am guilty of but one of that catalogue of mistakes. All that I need say to the whole Section, is, 1. that whereas my Disarmer, a profes's'd admirer of the Authour and Apologist for Rushworth's Dialogues, thought fit to accuse the Doctour for saying that the passive νίζομαι was of the nature of the Hebrew Hithpael, and that this is observable in other passives for want of conjugations in Greek, which the Hebrews have, and professes to see no reason, Sch. Dis. p. 8. why the Doctour should complain for want of Conjugations in the Greek Language, there being more there than in Hebrew; and now again resumes this, and raises great storms upon it; the Authour of those Dialogues, his other-self, makes the self same general (which comprehends and includes the particular) observation, * that the Greek wants those sense-varying Conjugations by which the Oriental Languages expres's themselves. From him therefore I hope he will receive so obvious an observation, though when it came from me, it was ridiculous, the difference being onely this, that that Authour made use of it as an argument to conclude the New-Testament language uncertain, and unintelligible, which with him is good Catholick Doctrine, but I used it to infer that dangerous conclusion, that Schism is a voluntary separating or dividing ones self from the Church of God.

* Second Dial. Sect. 10.

18. Secondly, that I hope I was not to blame to expect that the Printer's errours should be noted in the Publisher's Errata; and thirdly, that I have look'd on Schism Disarm'd p. 279. and find no such thing proved there, which here p. 90. he saith is there manifested plainly; Fourthly, that the King and Bishops of England renouncing the Pope's Universal Pastourship, differ widely from a boy calling his mother whore, and denying himself to be the son of his Father; and fifthly, that they that declared the King's Supremacy in all causes, and so cast out the Papacy, as that signifies the Universal

Pastourship

Pastourship descended to the Bishop of Rome from Christ, were not esteemed Schismaticks by the Pope himself, as hath formerly appeared, and so remained Catholicks in the Romanist's own judgment, and must not now at this distance be condemned upon no other account, but that they have rejected Oral Tradition, which yet, as hath also appeared, they are not proved to have rejected; And this is all I shall return to his ninth Section.

SECT. IV.

His tenth Section answered. His contradictory answers about speaking contradictions. Authority reconcileable with fallibility. Peter's Primacy no proof of his Universal Pastourship. This includes falling * at once into one kind of sin. The major part of a Roman Council peccable, or fallible. The infallibility of Apostles no way argumentative for the like of the present Church. The many charges of weakness shew'd to be so many slanders. *

1. HIS tenth Section begins with a continued confident decree, which cannot be resisted, that I must be a pleader for such a weak Conscience as makes a man think he ought not to communicate with the Church, though the truth be on the Churches side. And when to his former suggesting of this, I had confronted my express words to the contrary, that such an one is in many respects criminous, and particularly in this, that he communicates not—— His reply is, that he did not forbid me to speak contradictions. * A little while since, when it served his turn, he could ask whether it were any wrong to them to affirm that Doctour H. and his friends will not speak contradictions] and here the onely Reply to plain words is, that he will not forbid me to speak contradictions, which is in effect to give me leave to give him the lye in his former affirmation. * P. 62.

2. But I shall not make use of his liberality, which his resolvedness to say somewhat, hath extorted from him, but view the Grounds of his conclusion, that I have contradicted my self, my four (as he fancies) contributions to his Windmill; Of which all that I need say is, that the three first are pure negatives, 1. That I alledge nothing that will not serve others, give no distinctive sign of the goodness of mine above others, 2. that I pretend no rigorous evidence for our disobedience, 3. that I leave no grounds rationally to convince a man in errour (to all which I answer, that I was not obliged to doe any thing toward any of these at that time, i. e. to handle impertinently what no way belonged to me to consider, and the same account serves for my omission of answering his two pages, charged on me p. 95.) and the fourth cited from Chap. 4 Par. 9. (when there is no such place in my book) is, my position of the errour in some cases on the Churches side] which how it shall found my pleading for those that refuse to communicate with the Church, when the Church is in the right, is a secret as yet unrevealed, it being visible enough, that they may bring full testimony of some truths, and so deserve therein to be believed, who are found to fail in others, and so deserve it not.

3. Accordingly the authority we allow our present Church in affirming any thing of faith, is that which it borrows from the grounds of her affirming, and may, one would think, be competible with fallibility, when the Pope himself hath the Authority of Supreme Pastour still allowed him by S. W. after that Mr. White hath wholly devested him of his Infallibility.

4. What follows of the Infallibility of the Apostles, and of the Church in testifying what the Apostles from Christ had delivered to them, I refer to be compared with what was said in my Answer to Schism Disarm. n. 7. and 12 of that Sect. 3. and shall onely note that among the Apostolical Doctrines * he mentions Peter's being chief of the Apostles, and the Pope his Successour, which being contradicted by other Romanists, as hath been shewed, is yet, if it were granted, so far short of the pretended Universal Postourship derived from Christ, (on which his whole cause depends, as appeared in his grounds) that it might, in a limited sense of Primacy, so as to found at Rome the chief Patriarchate, be acknowledged by us, and so all the rest that he hath there taken the pains to deduce about universal delivery or Oral Tradition (understanding it of that of the Primitive Church) without his reaping the least advantage to his cause by it. * P. 98.

5. For as to the † first pretended weakness, I answer, that the Church, which in some things (sufficiently attested to come from Christ) is certain of their truth and her faith, may on that ground justly oblige others to belief, though she be not, nor pretend to be infallible in all other things. And therefore there is a wide difference betwixt infallibility in teaching attested truths, and absolute or Universal Infallibility, for that extends to those things that are not thus attested. † P. 98.

6. In his second charge of weakness, he requires me to manifest that all men may fall at once into any one self same kind of sin, And till I can doe so, I must still be chid for not apprehending any but Saints and Angels and God to be impeccable] But 1. I discern not that necessity to be incumbent on me; Those are peccable, or subject, lyable to sin (which is all I said) that do not fall at once into one self-same kind of sin. 2. My advantage depending not on the proving this kind of peccability to belong to all men at once, but onely to the Church, in the Romanists notion of it, i. e. to the present Church of Rome, however assembled or represented for the teaching or delivering any Doctrine, as a Doctrine of Faith, 'tis most evident, that as great a number of men, as they amount to, have fallen at once into one self-same kind of sin; I instance in the Idol-worship of the Heathens, into which there is no question, more nations and numbers of men, than those which constitute the Roman Communion, have in many the same ages been ingulfed. But then 3. neither was it my concernment to evidence that all that make up the Roman Communion of any age, should thus be peccable; 'twas to my pretensions sufficient, that so great a part of an assembly of such, as might define an errour conciliarly, i. e. the major part of a Roman Council, be it that of Trent, or any other, might consent in commanding a vice, be it the worshipping Images, or the like. And none of his offers of demonstration can have any appearance of force against this kind of universal peccability. For to this there wants not such an universal conspiration, as he talks of, in all men to cut their own throats to morrow. 'Tis sufficient, if a few being themselves in an errour practical, use means, which prevail, to seduce, within the space of the sitting of a Council, a major part of those that are present, to consent to the inacting of a Law for it. Or 'tis sufficient, if a false Doctine in any thing practical, do by degrees get such an head, that it defie, and discredit all Opposers. And so in like manner for fallibility, it is not needfull to our pretensions, that all and every member of the Church of God should conspire so to mistake or delude, as to tell any damnable and palpable lye, (though as great a number of men, and far greater than those which make up the Roman Communion, may certainly thus mistake, witness the Mahomedanes in believing that their Mahomet was the Paraclete promised by Christ) 'Tis sufficient, if either that which is true, but no part of the Faith once delivered, or that which hath not so much as truth in it, should by several steps and stages of progress get ground, and at length prevail with a prevailing part of them which met at the Council of Trent, &c. for then that which was never delivered by the Apostles as de fide, shall be advanced to that presumption, and by that means propagate it self to all that acknowledge that Council. And in this case, that they which thus define a new article de fide, or they that teach it their children as 'tis defined, shall profess that it is true, and that it was taught them by their ancestours, perhaps that 'twas delivered down from the Apostles themselves, is no miracle of miracles, no stupendious prodigy, parallel, as S. W. suggests, to natures failing in the propagation of an intire species, but that which is ordinarily and regularly consequent to those few mens having received, and its being their interest to propagate that Doctrine, which by their diligence proves so successfull in gaining Proselytes, and suffrages to its commencing an article. This answers all that he charges under the style of Third and Fourth weakness also.

7. To his fifth charged weakness, the answer is unquestionable, that I that speak of separating from an erroneous or but fallible Church, adding that onely Saints and Angels and God have the privilege of impeccable and infallible, could have no respect to the Church of the Apostles times, who were so far distant from mine, that I could not with any shew of reason speak of them. And though if he asked of men doing their offices on earth, I could not but pertinently answer of Saints in heaven, yet when the question was of mens own separating from any Church on earth, and he instanced in the Church of the Apostles, I might fitly say, as I did, that they are, and, at the time whereof I spoke, were in heaven, and therefore I could not be thought to speak of them. To this I add, that when two answers were given, his objection to the first took no notice of the second, which satisfied (as it was designed to do) what is now objected to the first.

8. And when in his sixth he objects to that second answer, that it grants his instance to be true, my reply is, that it is contrary to no words of mine, nor interest of ours, that it should be so far true as I granted, viz. that they the Apostles should be infallible by virtue of Christ's promise, and Spirit, in the founding of a Church, and delivering all his truth to it; For how can that come home, or be appliable to the pretended Infallibility of their present Church, any farther than that really accords with the Doctrine of the Apostles; and so far we acknowledge it infallible. And therefore if this be all, that the Romanist, as he saith, demands or professes, that some men on earth, i. e. that once were there (meaning the Apostles of Christ, of whom onely we there speak) may be infallible in some things, to wit, in things necessary for the salvation of mankind, we shall certainly agree, and I should hope never fall out again, if he would be consistent to himself, which he cannot be, when he will assert the same Infallibility to belong to his present Church, for sure that is not the proper interpretation of the word [Apostles.]

9. This gives answer to his three next accusations of weakness, 7, 8. and 9th, yea and to his 10th also, if it be remembred that some of those things which he pretends his Church infallibly to teach, as the Pope's Universal Pastourship, &c. are no more branches of the Faith truely so called, delivered from the Apostles, than is the squaring of a circle, or whatsoever else he shall please playsomely to instance in, and in such it is (and not in the matter of competition betwixt the Goose-Pye and Shoulder of Mutton) that I question their Churches Infallibility.

10. And then if it were granted, as in his 11th he demands, that their Depository or Church cannot mistake in delivering needfull points (as I affirm not that they do, and though I cannot define of their powers, yet I cannot but think it a strange though never so just a degree of Desertion, and withdrawing of abused and long provoked Grace, if ever they should come to err in those few, which they have under all their corruptions thus long continued to believe) yet it would still remain that they might err in delivering those for needfull, which are not, and that is all that we ever affirm of their Fallibility.

11. This therefore is answer to his twelfth charge also, which will not permit me to hold what profess'dly I do, because he is of the same mind with me. My weakness, if we will believe him, is, that I unawares recur to their Rule of Faith.] But 1. Can there be any truth in that? do I recur to their Fundamental of Fundamentals, their profess'd sole Rule, Oral Tradition, and Infallibility of their present Church? Is there no difference between the Church of Rome of this age, and the Universal Primitive, which had the advantage of seeing and knowing, and infallibly testifying what was done by the Apostles in their presence, being αὐτόπται and ὑπηρέται, which St. Luke c. 1. 2. mentions as a considerable circumstance in testifiers, to give infallible authority to their testimonies. 2. With what colour of reason doth he suggest that what I doe, I doe unawares? when he dislikes what I doe, and thinks, or is pleased to style it falsifying, then, to be sure, it is my wilfull, and deliberate action; But if I say that, from which he doth not (because he cannot with safety to his own dear Phænomena) dissent, then forsooth I must have said it unawares and never mean to stand to it] I shall stand to it, as far as my reason ingages me, but not so far as S. W's groundless application would extend it. I shall stand to it as far as the whole Church shall joyntly testifie their own sensations, that they heard or saw this, or that; so the Primitive Church heard what the Apostles taught, and saw the Epistles subscribed by their hands, and received by messengers of indubitable faith from them; And thus their Testimonies safely conveyed to us, are now our Grounds of faith; But I shall not stand to it so, as to believe all those things to have come down from the Apostles (particularly the Doctrine of the Universal Pastourship) which S. W. tells us did come down, and hath no reason of his affirmation, but the knack, or ψευδάγυμος demonstration of Rushworth's Dialogues, which few

few of his own party, by his own confession, beside himself, apprehend to have any the least weight in it, and which hath already been considered, and allowed its utmost force, and been found to build on that as confess'd, which is most denyed by us, and in every view of it, found to be nothing worth. Which I refer him to review in its proper place. And to his present question, Why if the Tradition of the Primitive Church be infallible, the succeeding Church should not injoy the same privilege] the Answer at present is sufficient, that the succeeding Church is Infallible also in testifying their own sensations (which was all that was affirmed of the Primitive) that so the second age infallibly testified the Canon of Scripture to have been delivered them by the former, as delivered them by the Apostles, and so also the Fundamentals of Faith contained in the Creed. But to bring in all the Roman Additionals under this parity of Reason, requires, as Vincentius tells us, (not onely the present testimony of some part of the Church, fortified by some pretended maxim, which hath also been proved to have no force with them, but) the consentient testifications of the whole Church in all and every age, which when S. W. shall pretend to, he shall have more regard from us, than as yet his abortive demonstration, which concludes of all ages from one, i. e. of an universal from a particular, can expect from us.

12. The 13th imputed weakness is no other but my affirming what he himself affirms, For when I said the Church is not considered as a Society of Believers endowed with an inerrable privilege, but as a number of witnesses——it was none of my concernments to have it imagined, that they did not first believe themselves e'er they conspired to deliver it to their Children for true; All that I had to interpose was but onely this, that the truth of the points is not founded on their (infallible) judgments, but depends solely on the Doctrine of Christ, testified by those that could not but know, that it came from him. Which when he acknowledges to be most certainly true, 'tis strange it should be a weakness in me to say it, believing it also on his very grounds here mentioned (though not on his elsewhere adored Fundamental and onely Ground of faith, the Oral Tradition of the present Church) that points of faith are truths revealed by God, not productions of mens heads] which sure he learn'd from some of our wordish Testimonies, Faith cometh by hearing, and the like.

13. What he adds to my neither saying I nor no to the question of the Protestants being infallible in witnessing that twenty years agoe there were Bishops in England] and his tragical exclamations and ovations consequent, is most perfectly the Image of the old S. W. For my expres words in that 14. Par. by him cited, are [that they do or probably can mistake in a thing of that nature visible before their eyes, I believe not.] Which what is it but my affirmation, that I believe them infallible in such matters; all that is meant by Infallibility in testifying, being this, that there can be no probable reason to doubt of the truth of his testification, and not that there is any natural impossibility that he should mistake, for thus we know deceptions even of sight are possible; And he that cannot be supposed fallible in a thing of his own sight, and therefore is a competent witness in that, may yet be more than fallible in other things; which as it was the onely reason of the answer given him in that 14 Par. so it shew'd sufficiently the no advantage he gain'd to his cause, by this kind of Infallibility. And so much for the multiplyed slanders, in which are founded the concluding boasts and triumphs of his 10th Section.

SECT. V.

Answer to his eleventh Section. Power without Infallibility. Captious exceptions. Distinguishing without torturing. A Church sufficiently assisted, nay actually in the truth, nay infallibly ascertain'd of that truth, yet in additionals fallible. Naturally fallible. S. W's inferences how causeless. The Church is not supernaturally infallible. Yet the failing not in the supernatural principle. A fallible Christian Church more certain of her Faith, than Jews, &c. Difference between Faith, cui non subest dubium, & cui potest subesse falsum. Assent, and that not passionate, without belief of infallibility. Believing so far as not to disbelieve. S. W's mistaken triumphs. The Churches infallibility in some things. Her fallibility in others, competible with making decisions. Of inferiours acquiescing onely.

1. HIS 11th Section proceeds to a large review of the discourse concerning Mr. Knot's concession, which being a mere digression both of the Cath. Gentl. and the Disarmer at the first (as appeared Reply Ch. 11. Sect. 3. n. 4, 5.) it must now be much more such, it being visible, that how pertinent soever it is to the Controversie of Schism, to consider the pretended Infallibility of their Church, yet 1. I had before that of Schism written a large Treatise of dispute with Mr. Holland upon that subject of Infallibility, which I was not therefore to repeat again; 2. with that part of my discourse which onely considered Mr. Knot's concession, that it was lawfull to separate or continue in separation from the Church of Christ, in case we could not without lying be permitted to communicate with it] 'tis as evident this hath no immediate connexion, and so must be look'd on as a digression.

2. This might pass for full answer to the whole Section, being a competent reason, why I should no longer insist on that which was at first a mere digression. However 'tis answer to what he saith in return to my (as he calls them) 2. first Trifles.

3. To the third I answer, that a Church which is fallible, may upon prevailing reasons verily believe that to be true, which yet she knows not by any of her own sensations; and giving her children those reasons, which induce her belief, may reasonably also oblige them to believe in like manner; at least not so to disbelieve, as to teach the contrary to what she so reasonably believes. But still this believing somewhat on reasonable motives, is neither knowing this, not believing her self infallible in all other things; Much more was said on this head, in that Section of the Reply, n. 13. to 20. to which I refer the Reader.

4. As for the 4th I slipt not the point, nor leapt from believing to obeying, but thought fit to illustrate à pari, that a Church might teach, and require believe, as well as a Lawgiver command, and expect obedience, without being either of them infallible. The case I still think to be the same; for as on the one side the fallible teacher may propose errours, so the fallible Lawgiver may command sins, and the danger is as great to the Subjects in practising one, as believing the other, and God hath not placed us out of the reach of either of these temptations, nor is it necessary he should, as long as he leaves us rules, Scripture and Tradition, and reason, to try the one by, as his own commands and prohibitions, to examine the other. And then, where is the affected insincerity, that S. W. so loudly objects in this place? Besides, the Church having an authority to make Laws, as well as teach Doctrines, to set forth Canons, as Articles, what crime was it, in stating the Churches power, to advert to each of these? this I there did, to the one n. 16. to the other n. 17, 18, 19. Certainly S. W's cause is a severe Mistress, if it require him to make up whole Volumes of such captious exceptions, as these.

5. Next, the distinguishing of ambiguous words, and bringing his proposition in open light, is to him the same cruelty, as cutting off his eyelids, and setting him just against the Sun; he expresses his impatience of it (and what is that but an hatred of the light, and he knows the Original of that) by his complaint of being * drawn and quartered with unheard-of tortures.] But the more he complains, the more reason there is to use him to this kind of exercise, that by general ambiguous affirmations he may neither deceive others, nor himself.

* P. 109.

6. After this, he proceeds to the arraigning of these words of mine, Reply p. 15. that a particular Church that is in the right in all matters of Faith, and hath before it Scripture and Tradition, and skill in all those knowledges which are usefull to fetch out the true meaning of the Scriptures, and ability to inquire into the ancient path, and compare her self with all other considerables parts of the Universal Church, and then is diligent and faithfull to make use of all these succours, and in uprightness of heart seeks the truth and applies it self to God in humble ardent continual prayer for his guidance to lead into all truth, This Church is yet fallible, may affirm and teach false, i. e. this is naturally possible that it may, but it is not strongly probable that it will, as long as it is thus assisted and disposed to make use of these assistances and means of true defining.] These are my words at length, which he means to paradigmatize, and therefore † calls for all my friends special attention. And I do so too, and his friends also shall be allowed room at the audience.

† P. 110.

7. And that neither may be misguided by him, I must require them to remember 1. that the Church whereof I there speak, is expressely a particular Church; 2. that that particular Church is supposed to be in the right in all matters of Faith; I shall now add, that it may have had those infallibly testified by those that had them from the Apostles, and so is thus far infallibly in the right, as long as she adheres to that which she hath thus received. 3. that though 'tis possible she may, as other particular Churches have, fall from the true infallible faith, yet I spake not of that, but of her fallibility in other decisions, which were not de fide. 4. that by naturally fallible] I meant that effect of humane frailty incident to our corrupt and infirm nature, which, when it is afforded sufficient, but not irresistible grace, is for all that grace, and the most diligent use of means, subject still, and lyable to surprizes, and other effects of infirmity. But then 5. these surprises are not strongly probable, as long as it is thus assisted, and disposed to make use of assistances. And therefore lastly, when at any time such a particular Church thus provided and assisted, falls into any errour of Doctrine though not of faith (I exemplify in the Church of Rome defining things which the Apostles never defined, temporary pains of souls now in Purgatory, benefit of Indulgences to those that are now in those temporary pains, &c.) it is by not adhering to these Rules, which she hath before her, Scripture and Apostolical Tradition; and if she doth not make right use of them, this certainly is either a crime, or a failing, a crime, if she wilfully, or through prevailing passion betray those succours which God or reason offers, a failing, if through surprize onely she be insnared, and drawn into that errour, verily thinking it a truth; The former is a mortal sin, the latter pardonable by the ἐπιείκεια of the Gospel; But still both of them certain evidences of more than fallibility in her that thus falls.

8. This clear explication of the case proposed, will be sure to supersede all S. W's crafts, and silence his out-cries in this matter, and rebound the absurd affirmations on the accuser. For 1. how can it follow hence (what he is resolved to conclude) that it is still equally probable that it does err? Could any thing be more cautiously prevented, than my words prevented this, when I onely said, it is naturally possible that it may, but not strongly probable that it will err.

9. Secondly, can it follow from thence, what he again infers, that the faith of that Church and all that adhere to it, hang in equal scales whether it be true or no] when for all matters of faith my supposition then was, that it was in the truth, and my addition now is (very reconcileable with that) that it may have had these so infallibly testified, that in teaching these it shall be infallible, though not in every thing else, which is no part of the faith. Is the faith of that Church which is in the truth in all matters of faith (without adding that it is also infallibly ascertain'd of that truth) in equal scales whether it be true or no?

10. Thirdly, can I be blamed for saying no more than that it is naturally fallible? Certainly the fallibility that is in this case, flows from the principle of natural weakness or corruption. And if he will now ask, as he doth, Whether it be or be not supernaturally impossible she should err? I answer it is not supernaturally impossible, i. e. the gracious supernatural assistance which is afforded, doth not irresistibly raise that particular Church above possibility of failing in any point. The grace may be neglected, and not made use of at all, and then it will fail criminously; or it may not be made use of with such perfect persevering diligence, as to exclude all effects of surprise and frailty, and then again it fails, though not so criminously, but according to our humane measures of and so still he sees a just reason, why after, reckoning up supernatural means of confirming her against erring, I yet concluded, that she is naturally fallible, because still it is from the failing in nature, and not from any defect in the supernatural principle, that she at any time fails. Such important solid grounds as these, and no other S. W. constantly hath for all his most contumelious ovations.

Aſt opere in longo fas eſt obrepere ſomnum.

11. Apply

11. Apply what hath here been ſaid, to his next Paragraph about the Churches knowledge whether it err or not, and you have prevented all that can crave anſwer on that ſubject. For how can the defining a particular Church fallible in ſuperſtructures, though therein it ſo define, as not to doubt of the truth of her definings, (when withall at the ſame time it is ſuppoſed true, yea infallibly aſcertain'd and rooted in all the branches of the Faith) be the making the Church no certainer of her faith, than Jews, Turks and Heathens are of theirs? Is all that the Jews, &c. believe, ſuperſtructures, or are they infallibly aſcertain'd of their Fundamentals? The like holds of all the paſſionate Opinionatours, Hereticks, &c.

12. Laſtly, for his profound queſtion, why if there may ſubeſſe falſum, may there not ſubeſſe dubium, or why ſhould they not be bound to doubt of it?] I anſwer that whereever there may ſubeſſe falſum, there may ſubeſſe dubium, but it doth not follow, that what may be, is, or ought to be; I ſuppoſed the Church, of which I ſpeak, not to doubt of the truth of a point, which ſhe defined, and therefore that ſhe rationally defined it; And then of that Church that was ſuppoſed not to doubt, at the ſame time to ſuggeſt that ſhe may doubt, is to no more purpoſe, than to ſuggeſt that ſhe may doe that which ſhe doeth not; And to think her obliged to doubt, when by a concurrence of motives and reaſons ſhe is morally obliged not to doubt, is to ſuggeſt contradictions. And this is ſtill all that S. W's prime, hopefulleſt arts arrive to.

13. By the way, how doth it appear that falſehood in things wherein the faith is concerned (of which onely I ſpeak in that place) is Falſehood in things concerning eternity? Can no man, that differs from the Church of Rome (and ſo muſt by the Romaniſt be thought to believe Falſehoods) concerning Purgatory, &c. (wherein ſure the Romaniſts faith is concerned) be ſaved? Let Mr. White's book of the ſtate of ſouls be adviſed with in this point. Meanwhile that it is paſſion that makes a Church, that hath not infallibility in all things, give aſſent in any thing, is one of the grand maxims of S. W's Ruſhworthian Divinity, which the Reader that hath full leiſure, may combate with, if he pleaſe, but I have many greater ingagements before me, though for ought I yet ſee, all Homogeneous.

14. Such is his next diſcourſe, which will needs have me totally deſtroy belief, becauſe in ſome ſorts of things I think it reaſonable, that a conſent be by private men given to the Church in that which is propoſed as moſt probable] This is the paſſage he cites, and upon it asks, Are they bound to believe the Church, when they have probability to the contrary? I anſwer, I ſpake of probability on the Churches ſide, not on the contrary, and ſo have no obligation to go farther out of my way, to conſider his unſeaſonable queſtions; Yet I told him of a thing called a bare yielding to the judgement of ſuperiours; and that may take place in his propoſed caſe, and exemplifie yielding without a perſwaſion of infallibility. P. 113.

15. Next, his faculties improve upon his hands by uſing, for * he hath ſprung a piece of Atheiſm in the Shell, and from my ſpeaking of a weak ſort of belief in ſome weak perſons, unable to ſearch the Churches probable grounds (and that for ſome additional Doctrines onely, as the whole diſcourſe manifeſted) and from my defining that (not all their faith ſimply) to be a believing ſo far as not to disbelieve, he muſters up a bedroll of abſurdities. The firſt will give you a perfect judgement of all the reſt, being exactly homogeneous, If, ſaith he, the meaſure of that belief to which the Church can oblige the ruder ſort, be onely to believe ſo far as not to disbelieve, then in reality ſhe can oblige them to believe nothing at all] But who ever imagined this the meaſure of that belief indefinitely (for that is in effect of all that belief, to which the Church can oblige them) to believe onely ſo far? How came the [onely] into that period? or how [the meaſure of that belief to which the Church can oblige] 'Tis viſible, out of S. W's creative Optick, and then let him anſwer for the ill conſequences. I have oft aſſured him of my acknowledgement, that the Church hath infallible grounds for all matters of Faith, in thoſe therefore ſhe may reaſonably oblige to more than not disbelieving; But of thoſe I was not bound to (nor did I) ſpeak in that place. Who could have thought that S. W's whole Army of hopefull triumphs, ready to be counted by the poll, would ever have vaniſh'd out of his hands ſo ſuddenly? * P. 114.

16. His deſcant on the two * propoſitions, bears proportion with the former miſunderſtandings, and by the premiſed explication is competently ſeen through. An obligation to an infallible aſſent is or ought to be relative to ſome kind of infallible authority; Such there hath been, and is in the Church, of two ſorts, one founded in Chriſt's promiſed ſpecial preſence and aſſiſtence to the Apoſtles, who thereby became infallible in preaching the faith, the other founded in a ſufficient teſtification of the Apoſtles Doctrine in all neceſſary things, whether by their writings which Univerſal Tradition hath conveyed to us infallibly, or by word of mouth as univerſally atteſted by the Churches of their Plantations to be received from them; And in theſe alſo both the univerſal, and every particular Church, that adheres to, and forſakes no part of their depoſitum, is infallibly aſſured, and may infallibly teach, and require an infallible belief or conſent, i. e. in all the matters of Apoſtolical Faith, the Articles of the Crede, preach'd to all (and exacting belief from all) by the Apoſtles, into which conſequently all are baptized. But for many other leſſer things, the ſame particular Church which is infallible in theſe, may not onely be fallible, but ſometimes actually err, and yet retain an authority to make definitions, form Articles for her ſubjects (the fewer ſhe makes, I ſuppoſe, the better) and require an acquieſcence at leaſt from all to ſuch her determinations. * P. 115.

17. In this ſort of leſſer things wherein the Church is fallible, and yet according to her beſt and ſobereſt judgement makes deciſions, how vain and ungrounded is S. W's ſuppoſition? 1. That the ſubject is certain that that is falſe, which his fallible Church propoſes to him, 2. that it is a point of faith which concerns ſalvation not to err in (what two ſuppoſitions could bave been more contrary to the caſe ſet, and which alone was ſpoken of in that place?) And how far from truth his ſuggeſtion, that a ſpeculative point cannot be decided authoritatively, if the inferiour be bound to acquieſce onely? Is there no obedience in ſubmitting, and not diſquieting the peace of the Church, when I cannot aſſent? What if the next Council of Romaniſts ſhould define the Pope Infallible in his definitions, might not Mr. White call back his Tabulæ ſuffragiales, and never divulge again that that were an Archiheretical Doctrine, and live quietly in the Roman Communion? Or may he not now live in obedience to that Church, without believing a Purgatory of preſent Temporary flames? And if what I add of an abſolute infallible belief to none but at abſolutely infallible Church] be the granting, as he ſaith, the very point, affirming as much, much, as my adversary can reasonably demand, I wonder what reason he hath to complain; The fewer truths I find come from him, the less forward I shall be to deny him my concurrence in any thing where I may safely afford it him, desiring to have as much peace as is possible with every man, and not as many contentions.

19. His rarity of the whole and half apple shews his faculty in making of Contumelious parallels, and that it seems, must serve his turn, instead of speaking or attending to plain truth. And thus much for his 11th Section.

SECT. VI.

Strictures on his twelfth Section. Faith imputed to impurity of passion. No faith, but knowledge with S. W. His dignifying their present Church. Of the supposed impossibility for Parents to conspire to lead their children in errour. Some Fathers proceed by the Collier's faith. Mr. White's Confession. Communion in errour without conspiracy. Belief of a Churches infallibility a principle of general errour. Many ways of introducing errours into a Church. No demonstrativeness of Mr. White's new way, The present Church assured of some things, very fallible in others. The no ground of his thirteenth Section. Infallible belief of matters of fact concurrently testified. Concurrence of testimonies of fallible men, an infallible reason of belief. S. W's misrepresentations.

1. HIS twelfth Section with the rare Sermon at the end of it (a special essay of S. W's faculty that way) is all either repetition of grounds of their Churches inerrability (already refuted when formerly laid) or of consequences (which cannot rise above the height of their fountain, the pitch of the grounds) or mere declamation and contumely, (which must not be incouraged so much, as to have the least regard, or return made to it.)

2. Some things onely I shall briefly note in his process, and leave the Reader to consider of them, As 1. that all assent which hath not its original from evidence (this, I take it, must include Faith, which is of things inevident) * Springs from impurity of passion, i. e. of vice.

* P. 118.

3. So again that God either hath left no power to oblige to assent, or if he have, it must be founded in evidence] The necessary importance of which I suppose to be, that I cannot by God himself be obliged to assent to any thing, but what is proved to me by demonstration, nor to believe but what I know; which immediately concludes, that there is no Law of Faith, but onely necessity of knowledge.

4. Thirdly, that the present Roman Church (of that he must speak) hath no other motive to oblige any heathen to assent to her Doctrine, as far as concerns its having been taught by Christ and his Apostles, but the proposal of her own authority, millions and millions of Fathers in the (present Roman) Catholick Church conspiring to witness those points of Doctrine were received from their Ancestours as from their, and so ascending upward, as from Christ.] Which as it gives the same authority to their present Churches presumptions, as to the universal Testification of the first and purest times of those that were αὐτόπται and ὑπηρέται of the Apostles, so it equals the evidence of every article, that either this, or any one former age hath taken for Tradition, with the eternal divinity of Christ, the divine authority of the Scripture, or any thing which is attested to us most infallibly.

5. Fourthly, that 'tis impossible that these Fathers (of families, Mr. White's connatural way was wont to reade Mothers) would conspire in any age to attest a notorious untruth, pernicious to their own and childrens eternal bliss.] When 1. understanding it, as we do, of additionals onely, every such untruth is not pernicious to their seduced childrens eternal bliss. 2. 'Tis more than possible for the far greatest number of Parents to go themselves, and lead their children in the broad way whether of pleasure, or profit, that leadeth unto ruine; and S. W. hath not so numbred his Fathers by the poll, as to be able to affirm any more of any questioned Doctrine of any age, than that it hath been thus taught by the far greatest number of Parents. 3. 'Tis more than possible also, that untruths may by some cunning seducers be so disguised, or by authority plausibly and definitively proposed, as not to be notorious to many. 4. What is but possible, and so is every thing that implies not a contradiction, as it is evident this doth not, it not impossible.

6. Fifthly, that 'tis impossible those so many Fathers could either err or mistake in things so visible, or contrive a conspiracy to embrace any one errour, considering the several Countries in which they lived dispers'd, and consequently their several natures, obligations, interests, and other manifoldly varying circumstances.] Whereas 1. every point of Doctrine is not a thing visible to the multitude of Fathers of Families, who perhaps never hear or know what belongs to some Doctrines, which the Church holds, but are * oft allowed by Mr. White to proceed by the Collier's principle, believe as the Church believes, though they know not what it is, or as his style is, believe a knowing person in that wherein our selves are ignorant (a maxim saith he, that governs all our life publick and private) 2. there is no impossibility for such great multitudes to err or mistake, when (whatever their Church is) not one of these Fathers mentioned is by them believed to be infallible; and then 3. there is no need of their contriving a conspiracy to embrace an errour, their few Doctours may be either seduced, or overawed, or bribed by persons in greatest power to embrace an errour, (as was visible when the Emperour was Arian, and in many other instances) and then they will uniformly deliver it to all that believe them, and understand it, and they that understand it not, will believe with the Collier, and they that believe not will be either silent, or inconsiderable, and soon put to silence, and an anathema, or a fagot will be sufficient to make any Doctrine General. 4. The variety of Countries, natures, interests, &c. can never produce an impossibility, or render it more than improbable; and a thousand probabilities are nothing, saith Mr. White, and as little the same number of improbabilities, and never were they less in any case than in this, where the one motive being common to all that live within the Roman Communion, viz. a belief of their Churches Infallibility, whatsoever is proposed by the Governours of that Church, may universally be received, by all their subjects, how distantly soever dispersed, diſperſed, or natured, or intereſted, nay muſt, by neceſſity of immediate connexion, when once they have imbibed the principle, reſolved that their Church is infallible, for then ſure ſhe which can err in nothing, cannot err in this.

* Apol. p. 234. 71. 114.

7. Sixthly, that 'tis impoſſible that if they would and could atteſt and introduce an errour, it ſhould not be moſt viſible and palpable to the whole world; whereas 1. the far greateſt part of the whole world, as that ſignifies the Fathers or Mothers of Families, do not in a whole age conſider ſome Doctrines of their Church, or conſequently, are capable of comparing the old ſtock with a Roman Additional. 2. If they diſcern it, they may either out of love of novelties, like the change, and upon tender'd advantages, like it better, or upon fear accept, and not expreſs diſlikes, or, upon perſwaſion of her infallibility, never queſtion what is entred into a Canon at Florence, or at Trent, and then what matters it for viſibility and palpableneſs to the whole world?

8. Theſe laſt three propoſitions of his intituled his, treble twiſted Impoſſibility, are the reſult of his admired Dialogues, and the Apology for Tradition, and as many failures as there are in them (there are many more than I have now mention'd) ſo many evidences there ſtand upon record, that the New-Albian way of Oral Tradition, on which all the Diſpatcher's fortunes depend, fails of its demonſtrative evidence; and then according to the rule in the front of this Section, all aſſent that is given to it, muſt ſpring from impurity of paſſion, i. e. from vice, and conſequently he will conclude, that God himſelf cannot command aſſent to it. What then muſt Mr. White take himſelf for, that ſo ſeverely and inexorably exacts it of all his Diſciples, that the Pope himſelf muſt be an Arch-heretick, if he come in competition with this more refined way, of his Fathers or Mothers, for the Infallibility.

9. Seventhly, that their Churches ſticking cloſe to this Rule, of delivering onely what ſhe received as thus atteſted (which was the great begging the queſtion, on which, in his Grounds, all his demonſtration for Tradition depended, the Minor in his grand Syllogiſm, not offered to be proved) is again tender'd in the like manner, without any offer of proof; But of this I muſt not again ſo ſoon enlarge, having ſo lately elſewhere ſpoken abundantly of it. P. 120.

10. As theſe fundamental propoſitions of his ſhall be found to have demonſtrative truth, ſo his conſequences ſhall be allowed the privilege of their connexion to them, and by the ſame neceſſity fail of all degree of probability, if his grounds appear to have been miſlaid, and to that iſſue I leave the whole dozen of them, and the Sermon caſt in, to make up the weight.

11. Onely one ſpecial prodigy more may deſerve to be call'd out from his tenth conſequence, that my denying any company of men on earth (my words apparently muſt be underſtood of none on earth) to be infallible, is no leſs than the deſtroying at once all belief, and making it a ſin to believe any article of the Chriſtian faith, ſince if the Authority that conveys Scripture and Primitive Doctrine to us, cannot be evidenced to be infallible, no man is bound to believe either, nay he muſt needs ſin in precipitating his aſſent without evidence to ground it.] Whereas I had thought, that the univerſal conſent of the whole Church of the firſt ages (that were certainly competent teſtifiers) might ſo be convey'd to us, as infallibly to aſſure us of the Scriptures, and all Apoſtolical Doctrine, and that that Church of this age that were thus infallibly aſſured in many things, might yet be fallible in others, ſuch as on their own diſcourſes and reaſonings, or but pretenſe of Tradition, they define without the like teſtification of their coming from the Apoſtles. And if my ſaying of this be as much as he ſays or deſires (as* himſelf confeſſes it is) one would think this might be the ſetting an end to this controverſie. But then, alas, our new Preacher that hath not been oft in the Pulpit, would loſe his Text, on which his harangue is prepared, and therefore it muſt be decreed, that I have contradicted my ſelf, and ſo that my condition is but ſo much the worſe, for having gone as far as he himſelf could deſire of me. When will diſputes be at an end, whilſt theſe are the contrary arts and ways of eternizing them? P. 123. * P. 123.

12. A like art it is which hath produced his whole 13th. Section, where from my ſaying that 'tis in vain to ſpeak of motives to return—— (i. e. in plain terms, that we were excommunicated by (and did not ſeparate from) them, and cannot now be readmitted to their communion without diſſembling and lying, by which means our reunion is become impoſſible, and ſo 'tis a mere vanity to talk of motives to it) he makes no difficulty to conclude, that I profeſs my ſelf uncapable to hear motives or reaſons, and that it is in vain to ſpeak of them to me, and what greater obſtinacy than this? But ſuppoſe I had ſaid 'tis vain to ſpeak reaſon to S. W. who is ſo reſolved to miſunderſtand, and put odious colours on all that is moſt innocently ſaid and meant; would he conclude from thence, that I profeſs'd never to ſpeak reaſon more, and ſo were reſolved to ſubſcribe all his infallible Dictates? The juſtice were equal on both ſides; the caſe being clear, that what is made ſimply impoſſible by their tyranny and intolerable conditions, is thereby become vain to think or ſpeak of, to thoſe that will not ſin againſt conſcience; and then, what need we attend to more motives for what we deſire already, when if we deſired it more ardently, 'twere ſtill as impoſſible as ever?

13. What to my Replies concerning Antiquity and Poſſeſſion (Repl. p. 20, 21.) he hath returned p. 129, 130. I deſire the Reader to conſult in the places; and ſo alſo concerning the fallibility of the teſtimonies of men in a known matter of fact, as that there was ſuch a King as Henry VIII. which teſtimonies though in one reſpect I count fallible, becauſe every man that hath teſtified it, is, as a mere man, but fallible, yet the concurrence of all men, that then lived, and ſince, in thoſe teſtimonies, aſſures me infallibly of the truth of it, ſo that no imaginable motive can beget any doubt of it in me, and ſo upon the ſtrength of that reaſon I believe it infallibly.

14. When therefore he ſaith that I account the reaſons of believing that Henry VIII. was King—fallible, he muſt know 'tis a miſrepreſentation, * My words are, The reaſons on which I believe it, are the teſtimonies of mere men, and ſo fallible] The word fallible he might, if he had pleaſed, have applyed to what was next before it, [mere men] and then it muſt have been evidently true, for ſure mere men are fallible: But he might with more reaſon have applyed it to [teſtimonies of mere men] for of them 'tis viſible that I ſpake it, by what follows [the bare fallibility of thoſe teſtimonies] but (againſt this evidence) he muſt miſtake, and affix it to the firſt word, that the reaſons of believing I account fallible] Whereas 'tis plain enough, that the teſtimonies, as they are of fallible men, being fallible, yet the concurrence of all men in thoſe teſtimonies is an infallible reaſon, of which therefore no man can reaſonably doubt. * Repl. p. 22.

* P. 132. 15. This kind of certainty, he ſaith * I put as a parallel of the Proteſtants uncertainty, and challenges me to ſhew the thouſandth part of it for any point wherein we differ from them.] But this is another miſrepreſentation, † My words were, that the fallibility of the Proteſtants, whilſt yet they are without doubting verily perſwaded that their reaſons have force in them, cannot make it poſſible for them to believe what they do not believe, or lawfull to profeſs contrary to their belief; and this illuſtrated by believing the teſtimonies of Henry VIII. the fallibility of which teſtimonies (though 'twere ſuppoſed) would not make it raeſonable for me to doubt of it, nor lawfull to profeſs I do not believe it. What need then had he to take ſuch ſolemn pains to prove that it is demonſtrable, there was ſuch a man as Henry VIII. which I believe as much as he, and believe as infallibly as he would have me? What then follows to the end of the Section is unſignificant, and ſo I give it leave to paſs.

† Reply p. 21. Sect. 3. n. 34.

SECT. VII.

His fourteenth Section. Schiſm againſt the whole Church. S. W's Logick of Sacrilege found in every theft. His ſuggeſtion of my denying authority of Councils. Power of a Council of Biſhops over one Biſhop. Omitting to enlarge of Councils is not leaving out that branch of Schiſm. S. W's ſtrange miſrepreſentation, by inſerting of words in my period.

1. HIS 14. Section well provided with ovation and reports of his victories, I moſt willingly adventure to the Readers judgment, who ſhall compare it with Repl. Ch. III. Sect. 1. and doubt not but he will believe, that if I vindicate the Proteſtant from having ſeparated from any one Father or Brother in the whole Chriſtian world, I have freed him from dividing from the whole Church, and from the authority of Councils, it being impoſſible to ſeparate from the whole, without ſeparating from any one part of the whole, or from Councils, which are made up either of all the Biſhops, or of a greater or ſmaller number of them, in caſe he be vindicated from having ſeparated from any one of thoſe Biſhops.

2. What a gainleſs exerciſe then muſt it be to the Reader, ſhould I ſurvey his ſeveral arts to make this plauſible, which is as far from being poſſible, as an univerſal affirmative [communicating with all] is unreconcileable with an univerſal negative, ſuch is communicating with none (and [ſeparating from the whole Church] is the interpretation of that) or even with a particular negative, there being not any one man in the world, with whom I refuſe to communicate; For if there be any ſuch, he muſt be my Superiour, or equal, or inferiour, and that we have not ſeparated from any of theſe, is the undertaking, confeſs'dly, of that Tract of Schiſm.

3. His firſt incounter againſt that which ſo palpable, may deſerve to be taken notice of, as an eſſay of what is to be expected from the reſt. Schiſm, ſaith he, againſt the whole Church is not compriſed in any one head, becauſe it is in an higher nature ſinfull, and ſo exceeds it. As if he had ſaid, the Virgin Mary is not compriſed under the head of women, becauſe ſhe is more excellent than other women, and ſo exceeds it. His own inſtance will clear the matter as well as any could have been pickt out. Sacrilege, ſaith he, and Parricide according to the common notions are found indeed in every ſimple theft and murther, but according to their ſpecifical differences they exceed them, and ſo are not compriſed in them. As great a miracle in Logick, as Mr. White is ſaid to be of wit. For 1. is it poſſible that any man ſhould imagine that ſacrilege is found in every ſimple theft? What ſacrilege (in any the moſt common notion that includes ſacrilege, and if it do not ſo, 'tis bare theft, not ſacrilege) is found in ſtealing a horſe out of a Lay-man's Stable, when neither the man, nor the horſe, nor the Stable, had any ſacred relation upon them? Or what Parricide in each bloody Duel, that is fought betwixt Strangers, that met and quarrel'd yeſterday at the Ordinary? There is one of S. W's rarities of refined Logick, inſtead of which, he that were guided by ordinary rules, would have ſaid that Sacrilege and Parricide according to their common notions are found under the general heads of theft and murther.

4. But had S. W. deſcended to this puling mean-ſpirited vulgar idiome, he could not have maintained life to the end of his period, for that concludes with a ſecond rarity, that according to their ſpecifical differences they are not comprized in them] Is not a man according to his ſpecifical difference compriſed in a living creature which contains in it both rational and irrational living creatures? And ſo, is not ſacrilege compriſed in theft, which contains purloining of any thing whether common or ſacred? and is not Parricide contained under Murther, when murther contains all killing whether of ſuperiours or equals? And what if killing ſuperiours be a greater ſin, than killing of equals, is not the greater compriſed in the general word, as well as the leſſer? Are not theſe fine nets and Laws, and generical words, that catch hold onely of the leſſer, and let go the greater? Such extracts of ſublimed ſenſe S. W. hath communicated to us, in his attempt to prove that a man may be guilty of the higheſt, when he is perfectly free from any even the loweſt degree of ſin? Might not another man's Diſciple, as well as Mr. White's, have retained, without boaſting of it, as much Logick, as this Magiſtery hath appeared to arrive to?

5. Such ſtuff as this the whole Section is made up of, and muſt not with ordinary charity be minutely inſiſted on, onely I cannot omit to reflect on one moſt ſcandalous ſuggeſtion moſt cauſeleſly whiſpered againſt me, that I ſeem to doubt whether Councils have any authority, and durum telum neceſſitas] applyed to it; When he cannot be ignorant of the authority we allow Councils, and when all that I was in that place guilty of, was the framing a Dilemma, which part ſoever of which he took, it was manifeſt his cauſe was overthrown, thus, Either the Councils, that are ſuppoſed to be left out of my Scheme, have ſome authority over him that is accuſed to divide from them, or they have none; If they have any, that (ſaid I, and muſt ſtill affirm) muſt be reducible to paternal power (as made up of thoſe under whoſe authority he is placed, be it a Diœceſane, Provincial, National, or General Council) If they have none, (as a Council of Spaniards have none over an Engliſh man) any farther than by way of council and advice, that will directly fall under the head of fraternal charity.

6. Meanwhile

6. Meanwhile it is evident, that as I acknowledge the just authority of Councils of all sorts from Diœcesane to General, and that as paternal to all that are subject to each, so I * then affirmed expressly, that the power which belongs to the Bishops in each Province (and the proportion holds in a Nation, and the whole world) is united in that of a Provincial Council, where all the Diœcesane Bishops are assembled (which again he strangely disguises, and misrepresents, making me to say no more; but that the offence against the whole was consequently an offence against any one there residing, (he would have said against every one, and consequently against all that have authority over him) and the despising of that, is an offence under the first sort of Schism, that of dividing from, or disobeying our superiours. * Repl. p. 29.

7. In defense of his great subtilty he proceeds to ask an abstruse question, What paternal power have a company of Bishops over a single Bishop? I answer, the same that any Aristocratick Government hath over every single member of it, and this, I take it, is as Paternal, as in a Monarchy, Monarchick power could be.

8. But because having mentioned this of Councils of all sorts, I did not, for some reasons particularly mentioned, proceed to handle the authority of Councils, or any other question on that so large head of various discourse, farther than to say, that the Emperour when those last remedies were seasonable, had power of convoking Universal Councils (as every Prince in his own Dominions National) hence he is qualified by his gifts, to conclude that I confess I treated not specially against Schism against general Councils, and presently interprets that, my confessing my division of Schism insufficient, which was onely objected. But I pray how can my omitting to handle one part more largely, or contenting my self (for reasons to me convincing) to have named it, infer my not nameing it at all, or excluding it quite out of my Scheme? Which if I visibly and confess'dly did not, 'tis then as visible and confess'd, that my division was not insufficient, or maimed in that respect.

9. What he adds p. 241. of my divination, that towards the end of the world I think it probable there may be a General Council, and his reason which his best auguries can give of it, that Antichrist who is to be then the Universal secular Governour, and by consequence according to D. H's grounds, the head of God's Church, or Supreme in Ecclesiastical affairs, will doe Christianity that favour as to gather a General Council, adding that this if any must be my meaning, is, all of it put together, as unparallel'd an unsincerity, as Antichrist himself, of whom he speaks, with his τερατα ψευδους, was likely to be guilty of.

10. I (that believe Diogenes spake very reasonably, when beholding the Southsayers, he cryed out μηδεν ανθρωπος γελοιωτερον man was the most ridiculous of creatures) could not but behold with some amazement such words cited from me, that toward the end of the world I think it probable there may be a General Council] Could I write in so deep a sleep, as to transcribe what I never remember to have been the matter of my dream? Yet these are S. W's plain words [towards the end of the world he thinks it probable there may be one] But looking nearer, it was observable that [towards the end] and [probable] being put, as citations, in Italick letters, the [of the world] and [he thinks there may be one] were not so noted, and then 'twas obvious to smell one of S. W's arts, and therefore looking on my words * Repl. Ch. III. Sect. 1. n. 13. I found to my astonishment (what I could not be so uncharitable to have suspected) none other than these words of mine [the congregating of the like (when possible, and probable toward the end) is recommended p. 158. as a supply, when there should be need of extraordinary remedies.] * P. 30.

11. Can there be any question of the sense of these words, that when the congregating of Councils is 1. possible to be had, 2. probable to conduce toward the end, to which Councils have been, or should be alway designed, then I recommended the assembling of them, as supplies, &c. And behold a metamorphosis by one slight of hand, inserting [of the world] and then I that have written an intire dissertation, to prove that Antichrist was already come in St. John's times, (not, as † Bellarmine teaches his Catechumeni, that toward the end of the world he will endeavour to deceive us; but I say, that he was long since come) in the Infancy of Christianity, must now turn an extemporary Augur, and Southsay of Antichrist, an Universal secular Monarch, towards the end of the world, and what not, when S. W. hath decreed to have it so. † Christ. Doctr. c. 3. p. 65.

12. To all the forty and four false dealings in his Index amass'd together, I shall oppose this one Peccadillo of S. W. and if it do not outweigh them all (in pressing toward the Abyss) as much as the grossest falsehood can truth, I shall be content to lye under as great a load, as his arts can provide for me. And so I take my leave of this Section, (and of his captious suggestions, which constantly partake of some degree of this craft, though it do not always arrive to this perfection of visible unhappiness) having to his grand question [why I treated not of Schism against the King] given competent satisfaction in the Answ. to Sch. Disar. Ch. VII. Sect. 5. n. 4. if he had been at leisure to reade so far, instead of * saying, that, as it appears, we decline to own the Supremacy of Kings in sacred matters. How truly, he may judge by what is there largely said in defense of it. * P. 144.

SECT. VIII.

His fifteenth Section. Of retrenching the Roman Patriarchy. His mistaking the question. Difference between Metropolitical power and Patriarchate. Ruffinus's words onely of the former, and so mine. The double use of the word Patriarch. The City of Rome, and Italy distinct Provinces. His causeless censure of the unintelligible testimony. The strange contumelies heaped on Ruffinus, without all provocation. Christ's precepts how much for our ease, if obeyed. St. Jerom's displeasure to Ruffinus. Palladius's testimony of him. Erasmus's censure common to him and Hilary (his mistake of Orbis Deucaleon) His calling James Bishop of the Apostles. His grounds for it. The agreement of others, Hesychius, the authour de ætat. Eccl. His rendring Marde & Macarius. The mistake of Pamphilus for Eusebius. S. W's rendring of the Nicene Canon. His proofs uneffectual, and his rendring disproved. St. Basil's testimony little for the Pope's credit. St. Jerom and he, onely for his Patriarchate of the West. So Nilus and Zonaras their words.

1. HIS fifteenth Section is all spent on my retrenching the Roman Patriarchy, as the Catholick Gentleman was pleased to call it, and vindicating Ruffinus. And many artifices he hath made use of, to advance from thence a seeming exception against the Tract of Schism.

2. To clear this whole business, it must be remembred how this dispute began. What I first said on that subject, came in † incidentally, and onely as an example of Metropolitical power, in Scripture and the first antiquity, as in Timothy and Titus and James of Jerusalem, and the Angels of the seven Churches, so in the Bishop of Rome over the Province, or Region to him belonging, called the Urbicarian or Suburbicarian, as distinguished from the Province of Italy, under the Archbishop of Milane. This was then set down at large from several passages of ancient story, and from the observations of Leschasser, and Mr. Brerewood, and from Ruffinus's Paraphrase of the Nicene Canon. Then in the Reply to Cath. Gentl. it was resumed, and in every part vindicated, and now the Dispatcher comes with his renewed assault, and his first undertaking is to evidence that the question was of the extent of the Roman Patriarchy.] I might be allowed to know best, what was the subject of the question, but I shall not assume so much to my self, but leave it to the Readers eyes, which will find it most evident and certain (as hath been shewed from the first proposing of it) that it was of the Metropolitical power of the Bishop of Rome, never mentioned by me in any opposition to any greater dignity, than of the chief Primate, or Patriarch of the West, which he (long after Ignatius's time of which I speak) obtained, but onely as a pattern of Metropolitical power in the infancy of the Church. This being adverted to, takes away the whole dispute between us in this matter, for I that confined the Bishop of Rome his Metropolitical power to the Suburbicarian Region, never doubted but his Patriarchate extended farther, to the whole West, as hath oft been granted by me.

† See Tr. of Schism, p. 50, 51. l. 3. p. 52. l. ult.

3. But, saith he, (in despight of my gainsaying, or appeal to the Readers own eyes, or testimony concerning my own words) it is evident the question is of the Roman Patriarchy. And how is it evident? Why, both by bringing Ruffinus's testimony upon the stage, who acknowledg'dly spake of Patriarchal Jurisdiction, as also by the Doctour's words Repl. p. 33. l. 2. and p. 34. l. 4, 5. But as to the citations from my Reply, the Reader will easily satisfie his own eyes, that I had respect onely to the Catholick Gentleman's word (and used it onely as his dialect, who had called it the Roman Patriarchy) and so demonstrated p. 33. that that Province of the Patriarch of Rome i.e. that which I had called the Province of the Bishop of Rome, but he the Roman Patriarchy, extended not to all Italy, and p. 34. I speak expresly of the Presidency of the Bishop of Rome, as that which I suppose he must mean by the Roman Patriarchy, but therein never dream'd of that greater dignity among Primates whereby 'tis vulgarly known there were first three, and after five Patriarchs in the whole world, and the Bishop of Rome the first of these, and Patriarch of the whole West, and so of a greater extent than the Picenum Suburbicarium, yea than all Italy, which yet never belonged to his Metropolitical power.

4. As for Ruffinus's speaking acknowledgedly of Patriarchal Jurisdiction, 'tis suggested without any colour of truth; for 'tis evident, I bring Ruffinus's word, Suburbicariarum Ecclesiarum solicitudinem gerere, to declare onely the extent of his Metropolitical power. And besides I have oft shewed, that Patriarchs, as they differ from Metropolitanes and Primates, have no Jurisdiction, but onely an addition of honour or dignity, and if by the phrase he should mean no more, but the πρεσβεῖα or honourable privileges of a Patriarch, in distinction from a Metropolitane or a Primate, then 'tis certain Ruffinus is not acknowledged to have spoken of those, nor consequently I by citing the testimony of Ruffinus. And so there is the upshot of his evidences.

* P. 154.

5. And then with what face can he * say that I conclude against the extent of the Patriarchal power by impugning the farther extent of the Metropolitical, when 'tis certain I onely spake, in that place, of his Metropolitical power, and never so much as glance at his Patriarchate at all. 'Tis true I † after said, in another Paragraph, that that of Primates or Patriarchs was an higher degree than that of Archbishops and Metropolitans; but this is in that notion of Primates, wherein 'tis * known there were fourteen of them in the whole Empire, each of which might sometime be called Patriarch, but not in that use of the word Patriarch (more received) wherein there were but three, the Bishop of Rome, Alexandria and Antioch, (till Jerusalem and Constantinople were added to the number) and by this latter saying of mine of that other matter, no more can be concluded but this, that as the Bishop of the City of Rome, was also Metropolitan of the Suburbicarium, so he was, in another capacity, one of the fourteen Primates, and one, and the chief of the whether three or five Patriarchs; But still this is not to confine the extent of his Patriarchy to that of his Primacy, or the extent of his Primacy to that of his Metropolitical power, any more than I confine the extent of his Metropolitical power to that of his Episcopal, making the bare City the subject of the one, and the Suburbicarium of the other.

† Tr. of Schis. p. 54. §. 21.

* See Tr. of Schis. p. 57.

† P. 145.
* P. 146.

6. All this is so manifest in my first handling this matter, and since in my defence of it, that for him still to affirm with all confidence, that I † blender and * mix and jumble authorities together

ther for my own ends, is a moſt palpable ſlander, upon which alone is founded all that he hath put together againſt me and Ruffinus in this whole Section, neither of which have ſaid a ſyllable againſt any Romaniſt's intereſts in this matter, if the Catholick Gentleman at firſt, and ſince S. W had had the patience to underſtand plain words, inſtead of feigning adverſaries, and then confuting them.

7. Next he arraigns my teſtimonies which I produced, as manifeſtations that the Province of the Biſhop of Rome was diſtinguiſh'd from the Province of Italy, which I ſaid could not have truth in them, if the Province of the Patriarch of Rome extended to all Italy (by the way, and to ſuperſede his farther miſtaking, by Patriarch of Rome muſt be underſtood in this place, the Metropolitan of the Roman Province, which the Catholick Gentleman, not I, but as from him, called the Roman Patriarchy.) Againſt my teſtimonies his objection is, that there is not one word found in any of them making mention of the Patriarchy, nor yet of the Province of the Biſhop of Rome at all, nay the three firſt onely mention the City of Rome.] I anſwer for the mention of the Patriarchy, it matters not, that was not my word, but the Catholick Gentleman's, not underſtanding or not adverting to the common uſe of words, nor is it my intereſt to maintain it, but the contrary rather.

8. But for the mention of the Province of the Biſhop of Rome, it is enough that it is in every of the teſtimonies ſo expreſs'd, as to oppoſe the City of Rome to Italy, for that ſhews that theſe were not the ſame, but diſtinct Provinces; and to all that underſtand any thing of the ſtyle of the old Lawyers, or the Notitia Provinciarum, is known to ſignifie the famous diviſion into the Province or Region Suburbicarian, and the Province of Italy, and in the fourth or laſt of the teſtimonies there is expreſs mention of Provincia Romana, as in Ignatius's Epiſtle 'tis called τῆς χώρας Ῥωμαίων, the place of the Region of the Romans.

9. Of that fourth teſtimony he hath pleaſed to take ſo much notice, as to reſolve that it is not intelligible in the Latine, and, as I cannot (ſaith he) but know, very corrupt. The words are theſe, * Ex urbe Roma, quos Sylveſter Epiſcopus miſit, Claudius & Vitus Preſbyteri, Eugenius & Quiriacus Diaconi. Ex Provincia Italiæ civitate Mediolanenſi Oroſius Epiſcopus, Nazarœus Lector, and afterwards Ex Provincia Romana, civitate Portuenſi Gregorius Epiſcopus. From the City of Rome, Claudius and Vitus Preſbyters, Eugenius and Quiriacus Deacons, ſent by Biſhop Sylveſter, or whom Biſhop Sylveſter ſent. From the Province of Italy, from the City of Milane Oroſius the Biſhop, Nazarœus the Reader. From the Roman Province from the City of Portua Biſhop Gregory. Is not this plain and intelligible Latine? Where did the Club of Wits confer, or what ſhift have they made to perſwade any man elſe, or themſelves, that 'tis unintelligible, and not ſimply corrupt, but very corrupt? If S. W's † Printer have not thoſe Wits in his belly, I know no man on earth, that doth or can think either corrupt or unintelligible, but as diſtinct, and expreſs, as any thing could be imagined, to make difference betwixt the City of Rome, (ſtrictly taken for no more than the City) the Roman Province, and the Province of Italy, and if it mean (as now he ſaith) the Pope's Metropolitical Juriſdiction, never ſo much as naming his Patriarchal, that he knows, is the very thing I would have, and for the proving it, produced that, and the other teſtimonies.

* Concil. To. 1. p. 266.

† Who hath ſet it Ex urbe Roma quod Sylveſter Epiſcopus miſit ex Provincia Romana, onely mending in the table of Errata, quod into quos, but not inſerting the Comma after miſit.

10. What he concludes from my treating of the Præfecti Prætorio in Conſtantine's time, that the Patriarchy of Rome muſt needs extend to all Italy] hath already been anſwered, viz. that as a Primacy is of a larger extent, and power, than the Metropolitical authority, ſo 'tis granted, that all Italy was under the Primate of Rome; but he now knows I ſpake onely of the Metropolitical power of that Biſhop, and that extended not to all Italy.

11. And now what can be more confident, and more groundleſs than that all my teſtimonies are finally reduced to that authority from Ruffinus? When every teſtimony that I brought (being underſtood, as alone the ancient ſtyle permits them to be underſtood) and the Subſcriptions in the Council of Arles, expreſly and irrefragably define the very ſame thing; which alſo is farther confirmed, and I hope muſt not in any reaſon be blaſted by the addition of the clear words of Ruffinus, of which being not confident enough to ſay again, as ſo lately with no greater reaſon he did, that they are unintelligible and very corrupt, he muſt fly to new arts, but yet thoſe with which he hath been long acquainted, of calling him a * great Knave, and accuſing him of † ſyllineſs and ignorance of propriety of ſpeech, * and doltiſh ignorance, the monſter of that and all future ages for eminence in that talent, and at once concluding him † a knave and fool both, and as if that were not enough, with the addition of Old Knave and old Fool, for no other reaſon but becauſe he was an ancient Writer; And all this his but juſt reward, that he durſt ſay, what, merely for want of underſtanding, S. W. would not have had him ſay, though when it were duely weighed, it is as much for his turn, as mine, i. e. wholly impertinent to the main cauſe betwixt us, of Schiſm, and as much to the retrenching the extent of the Roman Patriarchate, the paſſage belonging wholly to the Biſhop of Rome his Metropolitical power, and not his dignity Patriarchal.

* P. 149.
† P. 151.
* P. 153.
† P. 151.

12. What an infelicity then is it to fall into the hands of a diſpleaſed S. W. whoſe paſſion will not permit him to diſcern whether Ruffinus have done him any wrong or no, and whoſe principles of bitter zeal preſently break out into Great knave and fool and dolt and monſter, wherever he but apprehends himſelf or his cauſe to have received the leaſt oppoſition? How much better were it to look, before he leaps into ſuch impertinent unprovoked rages, or to reſolve on the Apoſtles method towards real, much more phanſied enemies, of overcoming evil with good? What is eminently obſervable in Chriſt's Supplemental precepts, that they are not additions of burthen to humane life, but make the former Laws of nature more eaſie and practicable, will be very appliable to S. W. in this matter, for had he made conſcience of calling his Brother Racha, or thou fool, he had never been guilty of thoſe other exceſſes againſt nature and common humanity, of accumulating thoſe higheſt contumelies and ſlanders, of Knave and old Knave, on one who had not deſerved the leaſt ill of him.

13. As it is, I ſhall not I hope now need farther to vindicate him with whom I have had nothing to doe, but as he is a Paraphraſt of that one Canon) from all the accuſations that St. Hierome (and * Mr. Daille, onely out of St. Hierome's opinion, and as an inſtance how that Father dealt with his adverſaries) hath heaped upon him, as an Origeniſt, or a Pelagian, with either of which hereſies this Canon certainly is not defiled by him.

* See De vero uſu Patr. p. 278. & 279.

† Hoc unum denuncio & repetens iterum iterumque monebo, cornutam bestiam petis. Hieron. contr. Ruffin, To. 2. p. 311. B.

14. 'Tis certain St. Hierome was a passionate Writer, and † again and again tells Ruffinus, that he must know that he deals with an horned beast. And such indeed his severe and goring language approved him to be. And then no wonder at any thing that is cited from him. 'Tis certain others, which knew as well, have given another manner of character of Ruffinus, witness Palladius Lausiac. Hist. c. 118. who speaking of him, affirms, ἦν γνωσικώτερον καὶ ἡμερώτερον ἐν ἀνθρώποις οὐκ ἄν εὕροις, there was not found among men any thing more knowing and more mild, or temperate, or moderate than he; and if the latter of these were, or because it might be the reason, that he was not so diligent in defending himself, and paying St. Hierome in his own Coin, it will not be just to impute it to the want of the former.

15. 'Tis here suggested against him from Erasmus, that he took to himself not the liberty of an Interpreter, but the licence of a Contaminatour of other mens writings. This is cited from his * Preface to Hilary, but looking it there, the words ly thus, Hilary never translated any thing out of Greek but with that liberty of rendring the sense at his own pleasure, leaving out also and adding as he thought good. Poggius took the same liberty in translating Diodorus Siculus, and Ruffinus in all almost that he rendred, specially in the Books of Origene, and Eusebius's History; But this, saith he, is not the liberty of an Interpreter, but the licence rather of one that contaminates other mens writings. Where 'tis evident he charges no more on Ruffinus, than on St. Hilary himself, of whom yet in the same † Preface he tells us, that St. Hierome that almost contemned St. Augustine, and attributed not much to St. Ambrose, doth yet with so much veneration cite Hilary, that he calls him sometimes the Deucalion of the world, (where, by the way, I think that learned man was mistaken, applying to Hilarius Pictav. what Jerom had spoken of Hilarius Diaconus, that joyned to Lucifer Calaritanus in his Schism, and went farther, to rebaptize as many as had lapsed in time of persecution, and for that cause was called Deucalion by St. Jerom, as is manifest in his book adversus Luciferian.) the Trumpet of the Latine speech, the Rhoan or great River of Latine Eloquence, and much more in the profusest commendation of him.

* ß. 3.

† ß. 2.

16. Among the special ignorances imputed to Ruffinus, it is one, that he in Hist. Eccl. Euseb. l. 2. c. 1. makes of James Bishop of Jerusalem, James Bishop of the Apostles;] whether he did rightly translate Eusebius herein, I need not inquire, for if the Greek Copy before him had then, as now it is in our books, [Ἱεροσολύμων] it is sure he could not truely render that, [of the Apostles] But then there is as little reason to impute that misrendring to his doltish ignorance; for it cannot be imagined that he that translated a Greek Authour, should not know the true rendring of Ἱεροσολύμων Jerusalem. It is therefore unquestionable, that either the Copies he used, had Ἀποστόλων of the Apostles, where we now have Ἱεροσολύμων of Jerusalem, and then he is not so much as blameable in the least degree; or else, that reading as we do, he used the liberty of a Paraphrast, as 'tis sure he oft did, and whatever other crime this Paraphrase shall affix upon him, be it that which St. Hierome chargeth on him, of being a Contaminatour of other mens writings, yet still this is far enough from S. W.'s present charge, that of monstrosity for doltish ignorance. But even for all other guilts in this Paraphrase, it may not be amiss a while to examine, before we credit S. W. that he was the monster of that and all future ages. And

* l. 2. c. 1.

first in that very * place of Eusebius, where from Clemens we reade, that James the Just was chosen Bishop of Jerusalem, this other passage is subjoyned from the same Clemens, that the Lord παρέδωκε τὴν γνῶσιν, delivered the knowledge or faith, after his resurrection, to James the Just, and John and Peter, ὅτι τοῖς λοιποῖς Ἀποστόλοις παρέδωκαν οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ Ἀπόστολοι τοῖς ἑβδομήκοντα, they delivering it to the rest of the Apostles, and the rest of the Apostles to the Seventy. And if this were so, what great iniquity, or contamination was it, to call this James, which was one of those three, a Bishop of the Apostles, the delivering the faith to them being not incompetent to have given him the yet higher title of an Apostle (I say not, the, by way of eminence over all, because John and Peter are joyned with him in it, but an Apostle) of the Apostles. Nay farther yet, were not the Apostles at this time all of them members of the Church of Jerusalem? If they were, then those very Apostles, nay the principal of them, making him, whilst they abode there, Bishop of Jerusalem, i. e. of the Church there, what monstrous absurdity was it to call him Bishop of the Apostles? as when so many Bishops of a Province chuse, and ordain their Metropolitan. That this had truth in the utmost propriety, I need not interpose my sentence, lest it solemnly commence a new head of Controversie between S. W. and me, every word that is said, like the teeth sown, being so apt to spring up into a contention. 'Tis sufficient to the refuting of him, if I give him some instances of the like sayings in that or future ages, for then he is not the monster of all; And first let him consult these passages in † Hesychius a Presbyter in the Church of Jerusalem, who styles him, in Photius's Epitome (from whom alone we have this book, as many others) τὸν τῆς νέας Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἀρχισράτηγον, τὸν τῶν ἱερέων ἡγεμόνα, τῶν Ἀποστόλων τὸν ἔξαρχον, the chief Captain of the new Jerusalem, the Leader of the Priests, the Prince or chief Ruler of the Apostles, adding more, which I shall reserve for another occasion, this being sufficient for the present, to keep any man from deeming it a Prodigy, that he that is styled the Ἔξαρχος, should be called the Bishop of the Apostles. I shall add but one more, the Anonymous Authour de Ætatib. Eccles. near three hundred years since, who from this very testimony of Clemens in Eusebius, thinks reasonable to conclude, quod Jacobus super Apostolos accepit principatum, that James received a principality over the Apostles, and sedem Domini Jesu accepit possidendam, received the See of our Saviour to possess; Let this serve to remove the first great prejudice against Ruffinus.

† Ap. Phot. Myriob. p 125.

Cap. IV.

17. The second, of making the Greek word μακάριος happy, a Saint by name Macarius, I cannot account for, not guessing, as I am not directed, what passage it refers to; but sure the errour, if it be any, is not monstrous, nor much above the proportion of those that render Θεόφιλος Lu. 1. and Act. 1. Theophilus, and Δόρκας, Dorcas, especially when a Saint if dead, is so solemnly called μάκαρ, whatsoever his name be.

18. His third instance of doltishness, is, that he makes of Eusebius of Pamphilus heretick and Arian, Pamphilus Catholick, and Martyr, where I shall not inquire why he chose so obscure a phrase, as to English ears [Eusebius of Pamphilus] must be, (The Reader might understand it, as well, as before he did Simon of Cananee) but suppose there was design in it, to make Ruffinus's mistake more gross, and yet more credible, by the affinity betwixt the names, Eusebius of Pamphilus, and Pamphilus, and yet the distance betwixt the men, the one an heretick, and Arian, the other a Catholick and Martyr.

But

But there is somewhat more in that agnomen of Eusebius ὁ τῦ Παμφίλυ, than the Reader was to be told of. He was so called because of the great friendship between him and Phamphilus (and S. W. that resolves the one to have been an heretick and Arian, may learn from thence, that a Catholick and Martyr may have the closest friendship with some that are called hereticks) so we have it in the life of Eusebius, διὰ τὴν φιλίαν πρὸς τὸν μάρτυρα Πάμφιλον ἐπωνυμίας αὐτῦ ἠξιῶθη, because of his friendship to Pamphilus, he had that agnomen given him, And as he was his special friend, * the dearest and most loved of all his acquaintance, so he was his fellow Student too, θείας βιβλιοθήκης ἅμα Παμφίλῳ ἐπιμελατὴς ἀνιχνευτὴς, saith the Writer of his Life, he together with Pamphilus was the most diligent Searcher of the Divine Library (i.e. of Origen's and other Ecclesiastical Writers Books, as Eusebius interprets the phrase, Βιβ. ς. κε. λβ.) This near acquaintance, I say, and communication of studies was the Original of this title, or agnomen of his, Εὐσέβιος ὁ τῦ Παμφίλυ, Eusebius the friend of Pamphilus, or Pamphilus's Eusebius, And then, as they read, why might they not write Books together? And so that Apology for Origen may have been lamented between them, and so Ruffinus not confound these two persons, or take one for the other, an heretick for a catholick, an Arian for a Martyr (as S. W. will needs have it) but say that book was written by Pamphilus, which yet is acknowledged to be written by Eusebius. That this is not a bare possibility, or whimpering may be, as he is elsewhere pleased to speak, but indeed the single truth of the matter, I appeal to his own Baronius, Tom. 11. Ann. 256. n. 40. or to a more authentick witness, Eusebius, that best knew, in his * Ecclesiastick History, where speaking of Origen, he saith, Ὅσα δὲ ἀναγκαῖα τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν διαγνῶναι ἦν, ταῦτα ἐκ τῆς ὑπὲρ αὐτῦ πεπονημένης ἡμῖν τε καὶ τῷ καθ' ἡμᾶς ἱερῷ μάρτυρι Παμφίλῳ Ἀπολογίας πάντων ἀναλέξασθαι, ὧν τῶν φιλαιτίων ἕνεκα συμπονήσαντες ἀλλήλοις διὰ σπουδῆς πεποιήμεθα. What was necessary to declare concerning him, may be read in an Apology laboured by us and Pamphilus the holy Martyr of our time, which we labouring together composed with diligence for their sakes who love to find fault. Which concludes irrefragably that the Apology for Origen was framed by the joynt labours of Eusebius and Pamphilus, and so that Ruffinus was not mistaken in citing that as written by Pamphilus, which Eusebius, that could not be ignorant, saith was written or laboured by him and Pamphilus. 'Tis true † St. Hierome expresseth his opinion, that Eusebius wrote that Apology, not Pamphilus, but what heed is to be given to his conjectures, against Eusebius's express affirmation of a thing which he was so nearly concerned to know, the Reader will soon judge; But S. W.'s conclusion from hence, crudely put down, as his assertion of a plain matter of fact, that Ruffinus makes of Eusebius of Pamphilus heretick and Arian, Pamphilus Catholick and Martyr,] and this as an instance of his doltish ignorance, and proof that he was the monster of that and all future ages for eminency in that talent; will not be thus excused, that St. Hierome led him into that errour; for as bitter as that Father was against Ruffinus, he makes this no instance of his doltishness; if he had, we now see how unjust a temerity he had been guilty of.

* Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 8. c. 17.

* Biβ. ς. κεφ. λγ.

† Ep. 65. ad Pam. & ad vers. Ruff. l. 2.

19. By these instances the Reader will be satisfied, what justice is to be expected in the rest of the suggestions of S. W. against Ruffinus, and spare me the pains of proceeding to a view of the severals; Onely when for an upshot, he resolves to add the words (as he saith) of their most famed Daille (against whom he is sure I will not take up the Cudgels, being a person so highly commended by the Lords Faulkland and Digby) who l. 2. c. 4. characters Ruffinus to be an arrant wooden Statue, a pitifull thing, one that scarce had any reason in what he said, and yet much less dexterity in defending himself, which also are the very words of Mr. White in his * Answer to Daille and are there remark'd with a reference to those that account of so fundamental a passage of his in the interpretation of the Canons of the Council of Nice —— (I hope I shall not hence be accused, as Ruffinus was, to make S. W. Mr. White) I shall beseech the Reader to turn to Mr. Daille's Book, and examine this citation, or, to save him the pains, I shall doe it for him. It is in his book de vero usu Patrum, p. 278, 279. where speaking of St. Hierome's manner of treating his adversaries, how he draws their sayings beyond their sense, and affixes most remote meanings to them, which are not in their words, and then sets upon them most hostilely with contumelies, stinging speeches —— gives an instance first in his dealing with St. Augustine, and then with Ruffinus, the former, saith he, he gibes as sarcastically and wittily as he can, but deals otherwise with Ruffinus, for then he fought with an inconsiderable man, and wounded a stake, who perhaps had a worse cause, and indeed had no industry to defend himself, and so after he had scoured the poor man from head to foot, and wounded him as sharply as he could, he tells him at last, that through fear of God he abstain'd from revenge, and lent not words to his raging breast, but with the Psalmist set a guard upon his mouth. I now leave the Reader to consider, which of these two Ancients had most of Mr. Daille's favour at this time, Ruffinus, that was thus scourged by St. Hierome, or St. Hierome that thus dealt with him, and others that he met with, and whether [an arrant woodden Statue, a pitifull thing, one that had scarce any reason in what he said, and yet much less dexterity in defending himself] which are all noted by the change of the letter, to be the words of the citation, be all to be found in Mr. Daille; If they are, I am sure he must be beholden to the false English Translatour for them, and 'twill hardly be worth my pains to persue it thither.

* P. 243.

Cum homine futili pugnabat, palo vulnera infligebat, cujus & causa ipsa fortassè deterior, industria quidem certè ad sui defensionem nulla erat.

20. But how severe soever the sentence be, that is gone out against Ruffinus's person, and learning, and what liberty soever he took in paraphrasing that Canon, 'tis not imaginable how the Romanist should be provoked, or the Papal greatness suffer by it (though it is true that Baronius, and other jealous advocates have suspected there lay some poyson under it) when whatsoever can be deemed of his Patriarchate, 'tis certain, he was Bishop of Rome, and Metropolitan of the Roman Province, and Primate of a διοίκησις, and each of these of narrower circuit than the Patriarchate of the West; and for Ruffinus to set down in one place, what was the peculiar circuit that belonged to him in any of the three former relations, particularly as to a Metropolitan, 'tis impossible it should be any prejudice to the fourth.

21. And therefore for S. W. in this Panick fright, to fly to his arts of new interpretation, and give the Canon so strange a rendering, is much more unseasonable, than any thing committed by Ruffinus in his Paraphrastical translation of it.

22. His

22. His rendring of the Canon is not so literal, as that he should allow himself to be angry at a Paraphrast; The words are these, Τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, τὰ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ Λιβύῃ καὶ Πενταπόλει, ὥστε Ἀλεξανδρείας ἐπίσκοπον πάντων τούτων ἔχειν τὴν ἐξουσίαν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τῷ ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἐπισκόπῳ τοῦτο συνηθὲς ἐστίν. To which S. W. cannot imagine a more proper sense than this, that the Bishop of Ægypt, Libya and Pentapolis should be subject to the Patriarch of Alexandria, because the Pope had used to hold them for so. And his proofs are two, 1. Because ἐπειδὴ quandoquidem manifests that the words following are the reason of the decree, 2. because hoc and τοῦτο cannot possibly refer to any thing but the thing decreed.] But 1. 'tis certain his proofs, gain him nothing, for in Ruffinus's, and the vulgar way of rendring the Canon, 'tis apparent that both the latter part, beginning at ἐπειδὴ, is the reason of the former, (It is to be so at Alexandria, because it is proportionably at Rome, and Antioch) and the τοῦτο that, is the thing decreed, viz. that those lesser Cities and Regions of Ægypt, &c. should be under the Bishop of the Metropolis, because this course is customary in other places, at Rome, and Antioch, &c. But either or both of these proofs not so much as offering at that, where the onely difficulty is, are far from concluding S. W's to be the truest rendring; for to omit that there is not in the Greek Canon any mention either of the word Patriarch, or Pope, (which yet were * even now weighty objections against my conclusion from three of the four testimonies) both which are here inserted by S. W. instead of Bishop and Bishop; I demand, what is there in the Canon, of which these words [the Pope had used to hold them so] are either the version, or Paraphrase? τῷ ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἐπισκόπῳ τοῦτο συνηθὲς ἐστίν,] they that have any the lightest knowledge of Greek (and S. W. much † loves the language, though he seem not to discover any great skill in it) will be able to construe for him, this is customary for the Bishop which is at Rome, (what in the Greek is there answerable to [holds them for so]?) and so the practice at Rome is set as a Copy of what is to be at Alexandria; and is not that honour enough to Rome, unless withall the Nicene Canon be founded in the Pope's handling and judging matters belonging to Alexandria? Whereas 'tis clear that the foundation of the Canon is laid in the ἀρχαῖα ἔθη, the Primordial customes in Ægypt, &c. which sure depended not on the Pope's judgment or holding them for so.

* Not one word is found in any of the testimonies making mention of the Patriarchy P. 46.

† P. 18.

23. So strange, and uncouth, and groundless an interpretation could not well have been looked for, but from S. W. (yet if Bellarmine had it before him, de Rom. Pontif. l. 2. c. 13. §. Quarta igitur, and if Pope Nicholas the first suggested it to him, Epist. ad Mich. Imper. he must not then enclose the honour of it.) And by this means (one would think, sufficiently improbable) though the Metropolitical rights be most expressly referred to, by the latter part of the Canon, [ἐὰν τὶς χωρὶς γνώμης τοῦ Μητροπολίτου γένηται ἐπίσκοπος, if any man shall be made a Bishop without the consent of the Metropolitane] and those equally specified in Alexandria, Rome and Antioch, the three most eminent Metropoles in the whole world, yet the Canon is, without all colour of excuse, detorted to Patriarchy, and Papacy, and the latter presumed to have jurisdiction over the former, when yet in his production of proofs for his side, he ascends no higher than to his Patriarchy over all the West, which certainly is not sufficient to give him any jurisdiction over his fellow Patriarchs in other Climes.

P. 541.

P. 154.

24. It is therefore observable in the last place, that in case Ruffinus's Paraphrase of the Metropolitical power over the Suburbicarian Province, should not hold, but the Canon were indeed to be understood of Patriarchs (as his testimonies out of Basil, Hierome, Nilus and Zonaras import, and being the first that ever S. W. produced, to my best remembrance, 'twere even pity not to be convinced by them) yet his interpretation, which consists in asserting the Pope's Jurisdiction over other Patriarchs, must needs destroy it self, and then I cannot imagine, why either in point of manners, or knowledge in Greek, or propriety of rendring, Ruffinus may not be fit to compare with S. W. unless it be that the one is not as Old as the other. And thus much for this main important affair of Ruffinus.

25. Meanwhile I may be allowed to make my best of that sprinkling of testimonies which S. W. hath afforded me in this place, not knowing when I shall have another such largess from him. And then if * St. Basil call the Bishop of Rome the Coryphæus or head of the Western Churches (he there mentions indeed ἀνικὴ ὀφρὺς the Western Brow, or Pride, in one place, and κορυφαῖος their Coryphæus in another, and betwixt them saith, that they † neither know nor endure to learn the truth, but are prepossess'd with false presumptions, contending with those that annunciate truth to them, but by themselves establishing heresie, and then what hath he to doe with that Brow of the West? as the African Fathers in their Synodical Epistle to Boniface mention istum typhum, and in their Epistle to Celestine, the introducing fumosum typhum seculi in Ecclesiam Christi, speaking of the transmarine Appeals; and Carolus Calvus in his Rescript to Pope Adrian II. c. 10. hath the like, umbrosum seculi typhum —— why then may not I conclude, that that of Coryphæus or Antesignanus of the West, was his highest title, which it must be in that Father's perswasion, who asks what hath he (and so sure disclaims having any thing) to doe with him, quite contrary to the Universality of his Pastourship, and then allowing him to have been possess'd of that by the curtesie of the Church, as the other testimonies express, what pretense can there be of his being Universal Pastour from Christ?

* Epist. 10.

† ὅτε ἴσασιν ὅτε μανθάνειν ἀνέχονται —— Basil. To. 2. p. 795. D.

26. So again if St. Hierome account it the self same thing to be condemned by Damasus and by the West (he hath indeed these words, * hæreticum me cum Occidente, hæreticum cum Ægypto, hoc est cum Damaso, Petróque condemnent) let Damasus be confined to the west, and allowed the chief there, as Peter in Ægypt, in St. Hierom's time, and then what becomes of the jus divinum of the Universal Pastourship?

* Ep. 77. p. 252.

27. So if Nilus be to be heard in distributing the climes, and accordingly the west be to be allowed the Bishop of Rome, by force of the Nicene Canon (as I shall willingly grant to be his words, and sense, τῷ Ἐπισκόπῳ Ῥώμης τοῦτο δίδοται, ὑπὲρ πάντων τῶν Ἑσπερίων κρατεῖν, it is given to the Bishop of Rome to preside or have power over the west) then 1. that is a prejudice to S. W's rendring of the Canon, for that gives him jurisdiction over the East, instead of power and presidency over the West, which are prettily distant; and 2. the authority of the same Nilus may be extended farther, as that the Pope having two things, 1. to be the Bishop of Rome, as the Synods witness, and 2. to be the first of all Bishops, the former he hath from St. Peter, the latter from the holy Fathers and pious Kings a long while after, for orders sake; and again, that the privileges are given the Pope by the Fathers, because it was the Imperial City, and not because he is St. Peter's successour, 2. that Leo Bishop of Rome writing to Theodosius the Emperour

† De Prim. Pap. p. 67.

P. 49.

P. 53.

P. 94.

begs,

begs it as a mighty boon (the words of the Letter are, they do all * μετὰ δακρύων with tears beseech his clemency) that he will command a special Synod (so ἰδικὴν, or rather εἰδικὴν, is to be rendred, as appears by the title of Leo's 24th Ep. by that meaning a General Synod on a special occasion) to be held in Italy, which, saith he, he would not so humbly have begged, if before he had had any right to it. And many the like passages, which will yield small advantage to S. W's interests, yet must in reason be taken in, to give the due and full sense to the words cited from Nilus, that it may appear what he meant by the Patriarch of the West, one that was so dignified by the Church, upon that accidental consideration, of Rome being the Seat of the Empire, and one that had not power enough by it to assemble all the Bishops of Italy in a Synod, if the Emperour did not issue out his writs for the congregating them.

* Omnes mansuetudini vestræ cum gemitibus & lachrymis supplicant sacerdotes..... Leo Epist. 24.

28. So if that be the meaning of the Nicene Canon, which Zonaras gives, that the ancient custome had given to the Bishop of Rome πρωτοδρίαν to preside over the West; then first, this may be allowed to be the full sense of it, contrary to S. W's rare conjecture of jurisdiction over the East; 2. the marginal note of the Romanist, affix'd to that Exposition of Zonaras [that he and Balsamon had added this, whereas the Pope was known to have had authority over the East and all the whole world] must goe for a fiction, and very unnatural gloss upon that Canon.

29. Lastly, if the same Zonaras's note on the VI. Sardican Canon, be of any force, to prove more than the former, viz. that over and above the Provinces of the Western Empire, almost all those Provinces of the Eastern also, which lay westwardly, were granted the Bishop of Rome (Zonaras's words are [At that time σχεδὸν πᾶσαι αἱ δυτικαὶ ἐκκλησίαι, almost all the Western Churches, the Macedonian, Thessalonian, Illyrian, Grecian, Peloponnesian and the Church of Epirus, which afterward came to be under Constantinople) then sure the whole world, even in those days, was not under his government, and yet even of that which belonged to him much was cut off, and assigned to the Bishop of Constantinople, and no Schism committed by that means. P. 368. A.

30. The Exposition on the same Canon adds, that the Popes had endeavoured by that Sardican Canon to draw appeals from Bishops to them in whatsoever cause, and affirmed it to have been framed in the first Nicene Council, but being proposed in the Council of Carthage it was found not to accord with truth, it being not made by the Nicene Fathers, nor at all pertaining to all Churches, but those which were subject to him. Which, I must suppose, concludes, that all were not so subjected. P. 367.

31. And now in the name of truth let S. W. reap the fruit of his testimonies. And so at length I shall dismiss his 15th Section.

SECT. X.

His sixteenth Section. Indicting of Councils belongs to secular Magistrates; The Popes entreaty humble not authoritative. Instances in Pope Leo and Agatho. The being an act of extraordinary power, no prejudice to the being an act of sovereignty. Of this power devolving to a private man in S. W's judgment. Calling the Pope Summum Genus. His answer to the Milevitan Canon of appeals proved null. The Africans free from Papal jurisdiction. His answer to the Nicene and Apostolick, frustrated. A principle of Papal tyranny. The Pope's presence and consent not necessary to give the Nicene Canon force. The Primates being called head, a prejudice to the Universal Pastourship. The title of Head peculiar to the highest. Peter and Paul Heads in Agatho. Names not belonging, signifie Negation of power. Christ's example that Masters may be called so: His second, and third answer superseded. The Pope's refusing the Title, no modesty. His fourth answer. S. W's answer contrary to the Pope's words. His fifth. St. Gregory's humility, in denying himself to be a Priest, examined. Four answers more. Gregory's assuming what he disclaimed. The Bizacene Primate. The Pope's power from, or in subordination to the Emperour, in cases referred to him by him. Other testimonies from Gregory answered. The Patriarch of Constantinople his pretended confession of his subjection. The case of John of Constantinople. Six strange misadventures in one answer. Pontifex maximus. Episcopus Episcoporum. Tertullian's testimony in jeer to the Pope. Cyprian. Balsamon. The Canon of Chalcedon as schismatical as Protestants: Phocas's donation of the title of Universal.

1. HIS 16. Section, the last of his first part, comes to the power of calling Councils, which I had mention'd to belong, National, to each Prince, and, General, to the Emperour, and to be a proof, that none is above Primates in the Church, but onely the Sovereign Prince.

2. To this he saith he gave in Schis. Disar. three answers the two former of which, 1. that my proofs were nothing unless they proved that the Emperours called Councils without the Popes signifying their desires to them, next, that if they did it without this, I must prove they did it lawfully] he complains, had not their due consideration from me. But having given him a complete answer to the third, and thereby shewed that this of convoking Councils is a prerogative inseparable from the supreme power, and now most challenged by the Bishop of Rome, as such, and is indeed the most eminent in it self, and most characteristical of the supreme power, there was no great need to cast away time on the two former.

3. For suppose there were any such causa sine qua non, or that there were customarily any such civility payd the Pope, that Emperours would not exercise this their undoubted power, till he thought the time seasonable, and the extremities of the Church so pressing, as to request the Emperour to repair to that remedy, and so when it were done, without that respect to the Pope, it were not done lawfully, as to that circumstance, yet what prejudice were that to the residing of the supreme power in the Emperour? Would it thence follow that the Pope could lawfully doe it without the Emperour? Which yet, by this arguing, he certainly might, if he were the supreme power.

4. But to satisfie the importunity of his first answer (and that being done there is no place of doubt or scruple for the second) I shall demand what he means by [the Pope's signifying such his desires] is it his authoritative declaration of his pleasure, or is it his humble request and petition? The latter would not much agree with a supreme Potentate, humbly to beseech his Vassal; yet in the very last Section I easily

casually gave him an example of Pope Leo begging it μετὰ δακρύων with tears of the Emperour Theodosius's clemency, ἵνα καλέσῃ, that he will command a Synod to be held in Italy, which is pretty distant from the Pope's commanding it, or the Emperour's being unable to doe it, without authoritative signification of the Pope's desires.

* Ch. 2. Sect. 3. n. 18.

5. I * formerly gave him another instance (on another occasion) of Pope Agatho in his Epistle to the Emperours, concerning the calling a General Council; where he mentions with great veneration and thanksgiving, the Emperours purpose to call a Council, † σὺν ἐπαίνῳ θαυμάζομεν διάθεσιν θεάρεστον, and ἕνεκεν τῶν θεοσεβεστάτων διὰ τῆς θειοτάτης σαρκὸς——ἱλαρυνόμεθα ἐπὶ τῇ τοιαύτῃ εὐσεβοῦς προθέσεως μετὰ τῶν ἐκ βάθους τῆς καρδίας ὑμῶν εὐχαριστεῖν ἐπῃξάμεθα, with praise we admire your purpose well-pleasing to God (the style was not, [well pleasing to the Pope) and for these commands of yours by your divine writ we are rejoyced, and with groans out of the depth of our heart we have begun to give God thanks. And store of the like might be afforded him; and then, what joy will he have from the Popes signifying their so humble desires, which are far from any marks of the least, much less of the highest power in him.

† Concil. Tom. V. p. 60. E. F.

6. Next he endeavours to reconcile this of the Emperours calling Councils, to his Phenomena, by telling us this is no ordinary act of standing Jurisdiction, but an extraordinary affair] so I conceive the King's power of calling a Parliament is no ordinary act of every days exercise, yet sure it belongs to the supreme power, and is an evidence that the Kings in our Nation have been always acknowledged such; and the more extraordinary the affair is, the more worthy it is of the supreme power to take care of it, and the more unreasonable, that any body else should assume it.

7. What he then tells me, that if I think it inseparable from the Pope, I am in a great mistake] might sure have been spared, for I think it so far from being inseparable from him, that I believe it not to belong to him at all (and not onely, as he is pleased to yield, when the See is vacant, or the Pope unsound in the Faith, or distracted, or imprisoned, or in case there be an Antipope——) and as little to the Cardinals, in defect of him, much less to any private man, as at last he saith, for that to such it is lawfull in any case, much less duty, so that he not onely may but ought to congregate Assemblies, or assume that, which belongs to the supreme power (if by saying [he ought to apply his power and skill, as much as in him lies, to prevent the harm of the publick] he mean any thing less than assembling of Councils, then sure he speaks not to his purpose) is a maxim in S. W's Politicks fit to be bound up with Mr. White's rare Book of Government, but sure is not as yet received into the number of Aphorisms, whereby all Christian Monarchies and Churches, yea the most Democratical States are content to be regulated.

8. For my great unhappiness in calling the Pope a Summum Genus, I am sharply chastised, but am not so fully, as I might desire, convinced of my errour; For if above all Priests, Bishops, Metropolitanes, Primates, Patriarchs, there be still one that is every of these, and yet somewhat more than (and transcendentally superiour to) all of them, I know not what either nibbling at wit was betrayed, or what unfortunacy in using this ordinary style; sure I am, his objection against it, viz. that the summum Genus in Logick is perfectly included in every individual under it, but the Pope's power is not in every Priest] is of no force; for as in one respect Genus is pars actualis, so in another it is totum potentiale, and so contains as much, and somewhat more, than any species or Individuum; and then the species is but part of that, and the whole on that fashion will not be intirely contained in every part, and in this most comprehensive notion of Genus I might be allowed to use the phrase, when I speak of the Pope's supreme assumed power over Emperours and Kings, as well as Patriarchs and Primates; and so much for his hypercritical-Logick observation.

9. Then he comes to Marshal, and survey my arguments against this Supremacy of the Pope. And beginning with the head of Appeals, the first is that from the * Milevitan Canon, where speaking of Appeals from their Bishops, the rule is, non provocent nisi ad Africana Concilia, vel ad Primates Provinciarum suarum, they must not appeal save to the African Councils, or the Primates of their own Provinces. To this his answer is, † it onely forbids the Appeals of Priests from their Bishops, but leaves it indifferent whether the Bishops, Archbishops, nay even Primates themselves may appeal to the Pope.]

* Can. 22.

† P. 160.

10. The vanity of this answer I shall thus evidence. This Canon, as to the substance, we have twice repeated in the African Codex, Can. XXVIII. and Can. CXXV. In the latter the words are, as we have already set them down, with this addition, that he that will appeal to the transmarines, τὰ πέραν θαλάσσης, he shall not be received to Communion in Africk, and in the former somewhat more largely, thus, μὴ ἐπικαλείσωσαν εἰς τὰ πέραν θαλάσσης διαιτήσεις, μηδὲ παρὰ τοὺς προκαθημένους τῶν ἰδίων ἐπαρχιῶν, ὡς καὶ παρὰ ὑμῶν τὸ ὁμοούσιον πολλοὺς ὅρισαι, εἰδὲ περὶ πραγματικῶν διαιτήσεια ἀκκαλέσωνται, παρ' ὑμῖνὸς ἐν τῇ Ἀφρικῇ ἀρχιερεῖς εἰς κοινωνίαν, Priests and Deacons, &c. must not appeal to the transmarine Judicatures (i. e. without question to the * Roman) but to the Primates of their own Provinces (the Latine Manuscripts in Thuanus and Bochards Libraries add, aut ad Universale Concilium, or to an Universal Council, and the † Synodical Epistle to Pope Celestine confirms the reading, meaning no doubt the Universal Councils of the whole διοικησις of Africk, called the Councils of Africk, i. e. of all Africk in the latter Canon, in opposition to their Provincial Councils, there being Six Provinces in that διοικησις) as it hath often been defined concerning Bishops. But they that appeal to the transmarine Judicatures shall not be received to communion by any in Africk.

* See August. Ep. 162.

† Ad concilia suæ Provinciæ vel etiam Universale provocare.

11. Here it is evident that the same Law of Appeals that holds for Presbyters, &c. holds for Bishops also, that they shall not appeal to the Roman Judicatures, and this as a thing oftentimes formerly resolved among the Africans, an instance whereof we have Can. XXIII. where 'tis interdicted Bishops to goe beyond sea, i. e. to Rome, in the notion of those Canons, εἰ μὴ μετὰ ψηφίσματος τῆς ἰδίας ἐπαρχίας τῆς ἰδίας ἐκκλησίας χώρας ὁποκόπτ, unless it be by the consent of his own Primate of every Region. Nothing could more particularly have prevented S. W's σοφὸν φάρμακον, obstructed his subtile evasion; he saith it belongs to Priests onely, the Canon saith expresly it belongs to Bishops, as well as Priests; I hope this will satisfie him. And what thinks he of the case of Athanasius, who was not a bare Presbyter but a Bishop, yet when Julius received him to communion contrary to the Eastern Bishops, I formerly told him out of their Epistle, * and Sozomen assures him of the truth of it, that

* I. III. c. VII.

ἐγκλήτους

ἐγκλήπτωνον ὡς ὑβρισμένης αὐτῶν τῆς συνόδου, καὶ τὸ γενόμενον ὡς ἄδικον καὶ ἐκκλησιαστικῷ θεσμῷ ἀπᾴδον, ἐβδελλοντο. They complained of it as of an injury done to their Synod, and accused the fact as unjust and disagreeable to the Ecclesiastical Canons.

12. Let him also, if he please, consult St. Augustine's 162 Epistle, and there he will find it his resolution, that Melchiades Bishop of Rome with his transmarine College Bishopi, i. e. the Pope and a Council of his Bishops, non debuit sibi illud usurpare judicium —— ought not to usurp to himself that judgment which had been determined by a Council of seventy Africans under their Primate. And if the Pope had nothing to doe with a determination of an African Council of Bishops, and it was an usurpation in him to meddle in it, let him shew me, how the Bishops, Metropolitans and Primates of Africa were still under his Jurisdiction.

13. The second testimony was that of the Nicene * Canon out of the twelfth Apostolick, that they which are excommunicated by some, shall not be received by others.] But saith he, those words are not universally true; for then there can be no appeal from a Bishop to an Archbishop, Primate or Council. But I answer, that though it hold not so universally, as to exclude all appeal from inferiour to superiour Bishops in the scale of due subordination, yet it holds against appeals to foreign, transmarine, and so from England to Roman Judicatures. This was before evidenced to him to be the meaning of the Canon by the Synodical Epistle of the African fathers to Pope Celestine, which is in the Roman as well as the African Code, where beseeching him that he will not for the time to come easily receive those that come to him from Africk, nor admit to his communion those whom they had excommunicated, the reason is rendred ἐπειδὴ τοῦτο καὶ ἐν Νικαίᾳ συνόδῳ ὁρισθὲν ὑγιῶς ἴσχυσε — because he might easily find this decreed at Nice also. This if he had marked it, I had † formerly set down as the means to secure him of the sense of that Nicene and Apostolical Canon, that it did expresly belong to appeals to Rome; and if, as I put them together in a paragraph, the one to interpret the other, so he had taken them into his consideration, this answer of his had been anticipated; as also his return to those words of the African Fathers, which he proceeds to as my third testimony, and saith of it, that 'tis so far from gainsaying the Popes power, that being onely a request that he would not admit their appeals easily, 'tis an acknowledgment of it, This 'tis to pull things asunder, and then break them single, which in conjunction were not easily to be broken. I hope it is not strange for Christians to be civil to their equals, especially to those that are more highly dignified, and to intreat such (not command, or sullenly to admonish them) not to doe them injury unprovoked, upon any light or no occasion. This the Africans there doe to the Pope; yet from thence I conclude not, that the Pope had not that power over them, but from the concluding reason, ἐπειδὴ τοῦτο καὶ — because this is also determined in the Council of Nice. The determinations of that Council the Pope was surely bound to observe, and swears now at his inauguration that he will observe them, and this being first a Canon Apostolical, which might lay a competent obligation on him, and also a Canon of the Nicene Fathers, they civilly tell him his duty, and 'tis not in the power of their soft intreating language to prejudice the force of those Canons. And so both his answers to the second and third (as he styles them) testimonies are perfectly superseded by putting them together, the former by the Africans application of it, as an interdict to Romes taking Appeals from Carthage, the latter by their fortifying their request with the double Canon, Apostolical and Nicene, which is an evidence, that he might not lawfully, not onely an intreaty that he would not (as the phrase is) easily admit such foreign appellants to his Communion.

* Can. V.

† Repl. p. 401

14. What he adds here of the Pope's violating Laws of General Councils (which yet we know he hath sworn to keep inviolate) when evidence of publick good licenses him to use extraordinary authority, and to proceed now not upon Laws, but upon the dictates of nature, the ground and rule of all laws] I shall not now take into stricter considerations, but lay it up among his Politick Aphorisms, which will make good room for tyranny, whereseever 'tis admitted (laying the proportion betwixt the Pope receiving an Appeal from foreigners, and breaking laws on pretence of publick good) but withall, will make the Popes some amends for the infallibility, that Mr. White hath deprived them of, by allowing them to be the sole Judges of extremities and publick good, and so giving them not a Superiority onely to Councils, which I had thought a disciple of Mr. White would not have allowed them, but also a power to break the laws of the most venerable of them, and that very frequently, and in that sense, ordinarily, as oft as any foreign, i. e. forbidden appeal shall be made to them.

P. 162.

15. An intimation he * gives, that the Pope's presence in the Nicene Council, and consequently his consent to the framing that Canon, keeps it from being any detriment to his authority; and so I think indeed, that what the Nicene Canon inacted, was no prejudice or detriment to any authority which the Pope before that injoyed; but this, not upon his reason, the Pope's presence and consent (though even on that head, if he were granted to have concluded himself, 'twere not reasonable for him to exercise the power, of which he had by consent in a General Council devested himself) but because, if he mark it, the Nicene Canon was but the reciting and confirming of the Apostolick, which as it was not past by the Pope's consent, or received any validity thereby, so it was of full force to the obliging him, before he consented to the Nicene.

* P. 160.

16. The fourth and last testimony that the Bishops of every nation must account their Primate their head] I designed against the proofs of the Romanist taken from the title of head given either to Saint Peter, or to his successours Bishops of Rome, and so in like manner the title κορυφαῖος to the same sense, whereas the Bishops being by the † Apostolick Canon instructed in their duty, whom they are ἡγεῖσθαι κατὰλιὼ, to esteem their head, they are led no farther than their own Primate, and that is a shrewd prejudice to the Popes being an head to be acknowledged by any, but those of his own διοίκησις, or Primacy, and abundantly shews, that as I said, he is not the one onely head, meaning by that phrase, such an head, as none is beside himself, which if he be not, he is not then the Universal Pastour, as he pretends, for sure such an one, would be the one onely head, there being not in one body more heads than one, more Supreme Princes in a Monarchy.

† Can. 34.

17. And therefore although S. W. in consideration of his particular circumstances and for his own ends is pleased to call a Priest an head, meaning of a Parish, and so a Bishop an head, meaning of a Dioceſe, yet I had as little thought that either of theſe ſhould indeed have been called an head, as a firſt or Primate, which we know is not the title allowed the fourth, in relation to the fifth and ſixth; or the ſecond, in relation to the third; but onely to him which is ſimply firſt, in relation to all after him; as the ſhoulders are not wont to be called the head, in relation to the ſides, which are below them, or the neck, in relation to the chin, but ſimply, and by way of incloſure, the one onely uppermoſt part, is in all propriety of language afforded that title, upon the notion of the but one head in a natural, and not monſtrous body.

18. Yet after all this, if he ſhall ſhew me any Canon (of equal authority with that which I cited for the headſhip of the Primate in every Nation) for the whole worlds acknowledging the Pope as their head, or, which I acknowledge equivalent, for St. Peter's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, I ſhall depart from this teſtimony, and yield it hath no force in it.

19. But I may be allowed the inſolence of perſwading my ſelf confidently, that this will not be done by S. W. in the Apoſtolical times, when ſo long after as Agatho's age, we find the ſtyle ſomewhat diſtant, that Pope himſelf in his letter to the Emperours, formerly cited, calling Peter and Paul οἱ τῶν Ἀποστόλων κορυφαῖοι, the heads or Anteſignani, firſt or chief of the Apoſtles, which as it equals St. Paul to St. Peter in the Primacy, ſo it evidently concludes, that the ſole abſolute Primacy belonged to neither of them.

Concil. To. V. p. 61. B.

20. The ſecond ſort of teſtimonies produced by me he calls arguing from names and titles denyed him, as Princeps Sacerdotum, Summus Sacerdos, aut aliquid hujuſmodi, Prince of Prieſts, chief Prieſt, or any thing of the like ſort, Univerſalis, and Univerſalis Epiſcopus, Univerſal, and Univerſal Biſhop] And truely I that thought ſuch names as theſe, titles that belonged or belonged not to Sees, might be a convincing argument, from which to conclude, what power did pertain, or not pertain to them; did adventure by S. W's good leave, thus to make uſe of them.

21. But, ſaith he, firſt theſe teſtimonies come ſhort of what they are intended for, in this, that none ſpeaks of the right of Juriſdiction, but onely of names, and titles, appelletur——which denote no exception againſt the authority, but againſt the titular expreſſion of it onely, which ſounded proudly, and ſeemed inconvenient and new at that time.] An eſſay again what feats the wits, when they are ſet on it, can practiſe upon a wordiſh teſtimony. He told me theſe teſtimonies were arguments from names and titles, and ſo I intended they ſhould be, and now he acknowledges they ſpeak of names and titles, and yet they come ſhort of what they were intended for. But how can that be, when from thoſe names not belonging to them, the whole concluſion was regularly drawn, that if the names did really not belong to them, and thereupon were forbidden, then the powers ſignified by thoſe names were certainly forbidden alſo: are not titles expreſſive of powers? Is it imaginable the Church ſhould acknowledge that Chriſt hath conſtituted the Pope Univerſal Paſtour, and ſo ſupreme Governour of all Prieſts and Biſhops in the world, and yet forbid that title of Supreme Biſhop, Univerſal Biſhop, Prince of Biſhops to be beſtowed on him? Can any man by inſtinct, or intuition, come to know that he is ſuch, which he muſt do, before he can obey him as ſuch, when the Church, from whom in S. W's Scheme, he hath his Faith, tells him that title doth not belong to him? Nay can that Church forbid him to be called by it, if it be his due? Doth not Chriſt tell them, they doe well in calling him Maſter, when indeed he is ſo? Did he, in his profoundeſt meekneſs and humility of heart, which he propoſes to be tranſcribed by his Diſciples, Mat. XI. 29. ever refuſe the title of Maſter and Lord, from thoſe Diſciples?

22. And why ſhould that or the like ſeem inconvenient or new at that time, or ſound proudly for the Pope, if indeed from Chriſt to St. Peter, from St. Peter to him it were infallibly devolved upon him? Might not the argument hold much better on the other ſide, that, if theſe titles had indeed by the civility of the Church been given him, without any farther proof of the power conferred by them, then theſe were but titular expreſſions? But though titles do not ſometimes convincingly prove real power, it cannot thence follow, that denyal of titles, which is the conteſting that ſuch titles are not his due, is not denyal of power, when there is no reaſon why the title ſhould be denyed, but that the power doth not belong to him.

23. If this anſwer of his ſatisfie not, you may be ſure he hath another as good, viz. that it is a great weakneſs in underſtanding the nature of words (and then there is a weakneſs of the Doctours to be ſcored up, and numbred in the Index) not to advert, that the vogue of the World altering from plainneſs to complementalneſs, as it doth ſtill daily, the ſame word may be uſed without fear of pride at one time, which could not at another.] But 1. he muſt remember, I ſpake of Canons forbidding it, to be beſtowed upon him, and of his own confeſſion, that it belonged not to him, and not onely of its being counted pride, if he aſſumed it; 2. complementalneſs, as oppoſed to plainneſs, muſt ſignifie giving titles of civility, that really do not belong to thoſe, to whom they are thus given. And if that be the obſervable of latter ages, in relation to this matter, then the title of Univerſal Paſtour, in latter times beſtowed on the Pope, is hence concluded but a complement of his Flatterers, or civil admirers, but no title, that in plain truth belongs unto him, and ſo S. W. e'er he was aware, hath ſtated the whole difficulty.

24. A third anſwer he hath for failing (and there was need of it) that Univerſalis Papa in St. Gregory's time, if taken in a due ſenſe, ſeemed tolerable both by the example given in the Council of Chalcedon in order to Pope Leo, and by Eulogius Patriarch of Alexandria's letter giving it to Pope Gregory; but 'twas refuſed by that prudent and humble Pope, becauſe the proud Patriarch of Conſtantinople uſurp'd it in an illegitimate and intolerable ſenſe. I anſwer, In what ſenſe the Fathers of Chalcedon gave or offered it him, may be gueſs'd by what they Synodically decreed, that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſhould have ἴσα πρεσβεῖα equal privileges and titles with him, and then ſure it was not in ſuch a ſenſe, as ſhould belong to none, but him i. e. not the modern notion of univerſal Paſtour; and what Eulogius meant by it, S. W. hath already minded us, by telling us, that one age is more complemental than the former. But then 3. that Pope Gregory refuſed it, was not to be imputed to any peculiar humility of his, or any peculiar motive ariſing from the conſideration of the preſent circumſtances, the pride of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, becauſe 'tis manifeſt his Predeceſſours uniformly had done the like, and that on the ſcore of juſtice, not modeſty, Pope Leo in the time of the Council of Chalcedon, and all after him, by name Pelagius, that ſaith that none muſt ever uſe it, and to that Gregory's reaſons, as well as prudence, give evidence, when he reſolves the contrary Diabolical and Antichriſtian; tichristian; for I suppose it no eminent modesty to abstain from that, that none but the Devil hath pride enough to admit of. Lastly, I desire to be told, in what sense did the Bishop of Constantinople usurp it? I may answer my self; that it was not possible it should be in any larger sense than that wherein the Pope now assumes it, viz. thereby to signifie his supreme power over the whole world (meaning by that word this inferiour world, and not taking in Angels, which some Court-flatterers have added to his οἰκουμένης) I do not believe the Patriarch of Constantinople meant so much; but if he had, this is no more than the Pope now means by it, and if that were the intolerable illegitimate sense, wherein that (therefore proud) Patriarch was to be blamed for assuming it, and Gregory was prudent, as well as humble, and therefore refused it, because that other proud Patriarch usurp'd it in this sense, then sure he would not himself assume it in that highest, and proudest, and most intolerable sense; which is all that I inferred (and I must by this his answer suppose now granted) from these testimonies.

25. But a fourth answer will ('tis to be expected of such a Demonstratour as S. W.) supply all the defects and vacuities of the three former, and it is this, that the sense of that title in the Testimonies being this, that none could be Patriarchs but himself, and the Romanists tenet being not such as shall debar other subordinate degrees, and, in particular, Bishops and Patriarchs to be truely what they are called, it is evident likewise, that the Romanists meaning is different from what the objectours take it in.] But we have no more reason to believe that the Bishop of New-Rome designed his title of Universal to the destroying of all other Patriarchs power, than that the Bishop of Old Rome designs the same by assuming that title. Yet Gregory himself tells us the natural consequences of it both to Patriarchs and other Bishops, restat ut vos Episcopi non sitis; And how true this was, and now is, they that know the practices of the Papacy, and opinions of the Jesuites in point of Episcopacy, may pass some judgment. As for Patriarchs alone, 'tis manifest that the Universal Pastourship of one, is a prejudice to that, because a Primate, or Patriarch (by the notation of each word) being one that hath none over him in respect of authority or power, and so is absolutely first in his own οἰκουμένης, the supposing a supreme universal power in one, must needs prejudge that, as much as a Monarchick power in one, is incompetible with an Aristocracy. And this was the very reason, why Pelagius and Gregory refused it, because they must doe wrong to the rest of the Patriarchs in assuming it. And if that very reason, for which they were bound to refuse it, can now be a satisfactory account, why they might, and now may assume it, then either those Popes, or this S. W. must be extremely ill Disputants; for otherwise, so contrary conclusions could never follow from the same premisses. And the competition being thus laid by this answer, which were the more rational Disputers, two Popes of the learned'st and best sort, or one wit a playing upon wordish testimonies, I shall not need offend Mr. White in pressing the infallible authority of the former, to cast the scale, at this one time, on the Pope's side. At another time perhaps he may out-wit or out-dispute many Popes; but at this medium, that one universal supreme excludes five or fourteen equal Supremes, the old Popes, which I hope are not old, as Ruffinus was, may be able to manage the dispute against him.

26. But, saith he, we grant him onely such an higher degree of power over Patriarchs, as an Archbishop hath over Bishops. And then sure Pelagius and Gregory were to blame, to be so obstinate, as to say, it was prejudicial to the rest of the Patriarchs; But the Popes Ghosts will answer, that the Bishop is not a Primate, as the Patriarch is, with an advantage, and therefore is not wronged in being under a Metropolitane, because the Apostle that set Titus in Crete, and Timothy at Ephesus, gave them power to ordain or rule Bishops under them in every Church, who therefore suffer no detriment by being obliged to that subordination; but for Primates and Patriarchs, they are simply independent, and supreme every one of them in his Dominions, and for that very reason they are called πρωτόθρονες, and then, unless there may be some body before the first, without prejudicing his firstship or Primacy, the Popes carry it in the dispute most clearly against S. W. as cunning an artificer as any, if he had but a better cause, or keener tools to manage, or deal in.

27. Fifthly, then, he must provide him better tools, and they are soon ready at hand, for, saith he, No wonder St. Gregory (such was his humility) should deny to accept what was due to him, who denies himself even to be a Priest, 4. Ep. 31.] But doth he so indeed? Let the Reader judge. The Epistle is to the Emperour Mauritius, who had, it seems, severely reprehended him, and, as he saith, laid to his charge (urbanè, more civilly than S. W. did to Ruffinus, who yet was, I hope, not so much under him, as St. Gregory acknowledges himself under the Emperour) folly and lying. To these two charges he replies, Sed & si Sacerdos non sum, scio gravem esse hanc injuriam Sacerdoti, ut veritati serviens fallax credatur. But if also I am no Priest, I know it is a great injury to a Priest, that he should be believed a Lyer, who serveth the truth. What more can be concluded from these words, but that he that was reprehended for lying, when he thought himself most guiltless, and most obliged, as a Priest, to be so (not insisting on the charge of simplicity and folly, having been indeed * deceived by the craft of Arnulphus, as the Reader might have been, if he had believed S. W.'s citation) thought he might by the same hand be accused of any thing, and debased to the lowest and vilest degree, and not acknowledged a Priest any longer; [If also I am not a Priest] saith he, i. e. if this will not be believed of me, or if it be believed, that by so gross a crime, as is lying, I have made my self irregular, &c. where yet by what follows, [that Priests must not be injured and charged of lying, when they are not guilty of it, and their office is to serve the truth] it is manifest he took himself to be a Priest, and so is far from denying it: So, † soon after in the same Epistle, Sacerdotibus autem non ex terrena potestate dominus noster citius indignetur, but let not our Lord be too soon angry with Priests, meaning himself questionless under that title, and so on, giving him reasons, why he should so far honour the Priests, as to imitate Constantine in burning accusations against them.

* Ab Arnulphi astutiâ deceptus.

† P. 790. A

28. But he hath also these words, to which I divine not whether S. W. might not refer, Hæc non pro me, sed pro cunctis Sacerdotibus suggero, ego enim Homo peccator sum. These things I suggest not for me, but for all Priests, for I am a sinfull man. But neither is that, the denying himself to be a Priest, but affirming that he pleads not his own cause to an offended Emperour, who, he thinks, would not heed him in that, but the cause of all the Priests in the world, which yet were very impertinent to his business in hand, if he were not comprehended in that number.

29. And now let S. W. himself say, if St. Gregory denyed himself to be a Priest, as he refused to be called Universal; Did he say 'twas impious, Antichristian, Luciferian, to assume to be a Priest, as he said it was to assume to be Universal Bishop? If he did no such thing, if he pleaded the cause of Priests, and his own evidently in that notion, then away with these artificers, that can make testimonies unintelligible when they please, and when it is for their turn, can understand in them what they neither said, nor meant, For so 'tis evident S. W. hath done in his fifth answer.

30. But he hath four more still behind, and if one of them do not hit, he is indeed very unfortunate in his diligence, but cannot be accused for it, for 'tis evident he hath done what might be done for a Client; and the truth is, I set so much stress upon these Testimonies, being so unreconcileable to the Universal Pastourship, as that is the foundation of the whole cause in debate between us, that I must in justice attend him to the utmost he hath attempted on this head, and therefore I shall yet proceed farther to the other four.

31. His Sixth answer then is, that whosoever reads Gregory's Epistles sent throughout the whole Church, it is impossible but he should see, that however he denyed the word of Universal Bishop, which sounded then proudly, yet he both challenged and practised the thing it self.] If this were true, it is evident what the consequence would be, even that Gregory, offended against his own conscience, and solemnest professions; really assumed that, which he acknowledged to be most impious to assume; and if that were the interpretation of profound humility, to invey bitterly at a vice in another, and give arguments, why he might not by any means admit it himself, and yet more than by surprize, or weakness admit it, even without all modesty challenge and practise it, as if he declaimed again it, to bring others out of love with it, that he might himself have the incloſure of it, I doubt not but that humble Bishop might have many followers at this time. But S. W. must pardon my charity, if I do not easily believe so ill of his profoundly modest Pope, lest I should come under temptation to question also the profoundest humility, of equal depth with his knowledge, which S. W. hath elsewhere mentioned of another, with whom he hath more familiarly convers'd than with St. Gregory, and may be allowed to be more partial to him.

32. But he hath instanced in some passages that shall prove this, A perfect instance, saith he is found 7. Ep. 65. Ind. 2. Where he saith, siqua culpa, &c. If there be any fault found in Bishops, every Bishop is subject to the Apostolical See, but when their fault doth not exact it (i. e. make it necessary for him to use his authority) that then upon the account of humility all were his equals.] If the Reader shall turn to the place in Gregory l. 7. Ep. 65. Ind. 2. he will not there meet with these words, but I desire not to take any advantage of that. In the Epist. 64. the words are found, siqua culpa—— The contexture of the whole Epistle lies thus; the Bishop of Syracuse had from one, that, came from Africk, communicated to Pope Gregory a secret, something it seems, that concerned him: Gregory returns him thanks, but tells him, he did not exactly understand the business in hand; and therefore he declares it to him, that the Primas Byzancenus, Primate (it should sure be) of Byzacium, (a Province in Africk, as * Baronius affirms, and as the subsequent mention of Theodorus inforces, a man of great authority in Africk, to whom † Rescripts are directed there by Justinus II. and also by Tiberius and Mauritius) and not of Byzantium or Constantinople (as the * title of the Epistle suggests) that, I say the Primate of the † Byzacene Province in Africk, was accused of a fault, and the Emperour would have him judged by Gregory according to the Canonical Statutes, But, saith he, Theodorus a great Officer was bribed, that it might not be. Yet the Emperour admonished us to doe what was Canonical—— But now the Primate saith somewhat of his own purpose, and it is very doubtfull whether he say it intirely, or indeed because he is opposed by his Fellow Bishops. For that he saith that he is subject to the Apostolick See, If there be any fault in Bishops, I know not what Bishop is not subject, but when fault exacts it not, all are equal according to the account of humility.

* Ann. 599. n. 4.
† Corp. Jur. Civil. Dion. Gothofredi Constit. ex Juliano Antecess.
* De episcopo Constantinopolitano, de crimine accusato.
† In quodam crimine Byzancenus Primas fuerat accusatus, & piissimus Imperator eum juxta Statuta Canonica per nos voluit judicari.

33. Here you have the total of this testimony, where (if we shall suppose that this Pope at that time did avowedly assume, what in a private letter to a Bishop, that had given him an information, he pretends to, but in this moderate style, Nescio quis non, I know not who is not subject in this case; Yet it must be kept in remembrance, what the case was, the Byzacene Primate, one which (as all Primates) was under no other Bishop, was accused of a fault. To whom was he accused? to the Pope? no certainly, to the Emperour, of whom it is said, Piissimus Imperator eum per nos voluit judicari, the Emperour would have him judged by us, and so 'tis an instance, to whom appeals ly from a Primate, viz. to none but the Supreme Magistrate, who in all causes and over all persons Ecclesiastical as well as civil is under Christ Supreme Governour. To which purpose it may be remembred, that in the cause of Maximus Bishop of Salona, who had been irregularly ordained, and thereupon decreed excommunicate by Gregory, l. 3. Ep. 20 l. 4. Ep. 34. l. 7. Ep. 1. Yet still his sentence is with this Reserve and Submission, nisi prius à sereniſſimis Dominis cognoscerem si hoc ipsi fieri jussissent, unless I should first understand by my most serene Lords (the Emperours) that they commanded it to be done. And if he will abide by that, then before we go any farther, the whole cause between S. W. and me is at an end, being finally decided by this testimony, if it be allowed to have any force in it, and if it be not, why was it produced?

34. Well, the Emperour to whom that Primate was subject, would not himself take cognisance of the cause, but appoints Pope Gregory to take it, and † judge according to the Canons, and according as the Canons should direct, and herein no doubt he did that which was very reasonable; the * Bishops of his own Diocese accused him, and therefore 'twas not reasonable to refer him to a Council of his accusers, and the Bishop of Rome was the prime Patriarch of the world, in order of place superiour to the Bishop of Constantinople, and the other three Patriarchs were after him even in place.

† Juxta Statuta Canonica judicari, and quicquid esset Canonicum judicaremus Ibid.
* A Coepiscopis suis impetitur.

35. When the Emperour hath thus remitted the cause to be judged by him, 'tis then certain, that Apostolica sedi subjicitur, he is subjected to the Apostolical See, and the Pope may truely say, that he knows not quis ei subjectus non sit, what Bishop, be he never so great, may not be thus subjected, siqua culpa invenitur, if any fault be found in him, i. e. (according to the tenure of the present case) if he be accused to the Emperour of any misdemeanour, and the cause by the Emperour remitted to the Pope to be heard by him, and judged according as the Canons, which were in force in the Empire, directed.

36. And

36. And in this case, suppose the Bishop of Rome had stood, as the Byzacene Primate did, accused to the Emperour by his own Bishops (this case cannot be strange to be supposed, when so lately we saw from l. 4. Ep. 31. that this very Gregory was charged by the Emperour of folly and lying) might not the Emperour have referred this cause to be heard and Canonically determined by the Bishop of Constantinople? If he might, then what hath S. W. gained by this testimony? If he say he might not, let any tolerable account be given, why he, whose subject the Pope acknowledged himself to be, as hath formerly been shewed, and appears every where in his Epistle to the Emperour, might not either judge him himself, or appoint that other Bishop, next dignified to him, to determine the cause Canonically; Especially when the same Gregory confesses, that cum culpa non exigit, omnes secundum rationem humilitatis æquales sunt, When fault exacts it not, all are equal according to the account of humility; Which concludes not, that it was his supererogatory humility to say so, or that he said it not upon obligation of justice, but as S. W. renders it, upon account of humility (and accordingly he hath his id est, like other frail mortals, when their fault doth not exact it, i. e. saith he, make it necessary for him to use his authority) but that indeed they were equal as to any jurisdiction, belonging to one over the other, and that to assume jurisdiction over any Primate (or even Bishop, that was not Canonically subject to him, as Primate or Patriarch) was directly contrary to that humility, which was his necessary duty, expected from him by Christ's ordinance, and the contrary to which he himself had so oft censured to be Luciferian pride, and so was in any other case, but this, when fault exacted, when a Primate was accused to the Emperour for misdemeanour, and the cause by him referred to be heard and Canonically determined by the Pope. He that were really a Subject, must be so, when he is innocent, as well as when he is criminous; and so this also is a prejudice to the Supreme Pastourship, which if it were truly his, would belong to him always, and not onely when faults had been committed.

37. And so much for his first and perfect instance; Those that follow, do not pretend to that perfection, yet for them we are referred to l. VII. Ep. 64. where, saith he, he puts it as undoubted, that the Church of Constantinople is subject to the Apostolick See, and this to be acknowledged by the Emperour and Bishop of Constantinople himself, and again to another express testimony to the same purpose, l. V. Ep. 24.

38. Here by his citation from l. VII. Ep. 64 I shall suppose he meant Ep. 63. for there in an Epistle to the same Bishop of Syracuse, he hath the passage here referred to, De Constantinopolitana Ecclesia quod dicunt, quis eam dubitet sedi Apostolicæ esse subjectam? Quod & Dominus piissimus Imperator, & frater noster Eusebius ejusdem civitatis Episcopus assiduè profitentur. As to that which they say of the Church of Constantinople, who can doubt but it is subjected to the Apostolick See? Which the Emperour and our Brother Eusebius Bishop of the same City daily profess. To this testimony the substance of the former answer will be equally appliable, as shall soon appear.

39. In the beginning of this Epistle we find quod aliqui murmurant dicentes quomodo Ecclesiam Constantinopolitanam disposuit comprimere——— Here it seems the Pope's dealing with Constantinople is disliked, and murmured at by some, and his whole account for it is given in these words, that the Emperour and Eusebius a Bishop of the same City, daily profess'd it, and therefore none can doubt but 'twas subjected to him. Which in any other sense, than what we have delivered in answer to the former testimony (unless perhaps in point of place and degree of dignity, wherein the Pope by the Council of Chalcedon was allowed the first, and Constantinople the second place) cannot be imagined to have any truth in it.

40. For 1. I demand, Who was this Eusebius Bishop of the same City? If we can believe S. W. it was the Bishop of Constantinople. But, by his leave, there was never any Patriarch of Constantinople of that name contemporary to St. Gregory; John and Cyriacus are all that sate in that See within his time, witness Zonaras, witness their own Baronius, John, saith he, was Patriarch there seven years before Gregory came to the Papacy, and Cyriacus immediately succeeded John, and he out-lived Gregory, and still contested, and at last was cast by Phocas in Boniface's time. All this is most evident, and assures us there was no Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople to make daily acknowledgments of subjection to Gregory, and so though observation of historical directions would not, yet the want of it may make a shift to make wordish testimonies unintelligible. Zonar. Tom. 3. p. 62. l. 56. Baron. Ann. 596. n. 2, 3.

41. Secondly, 'tis as evident by all Gregory's Epistles, that the Bishops of Constantinople resisted him all his time, and were resisted by him; John being the man that assumed the title of Universal. And besides, what possibility is there, that this Church should at this time profess subjection to Gregory, which was so lately raised to ἴσα πρεσβεῖα, equal privileges with Rome it self, and at this very time maintain'd its own right so vigorously, yea and had the favour of the Emperour Mauritius in it, of whom therefore it cannot be said with any more credibility, that he, viz. Mauritius, profess'd it daily in this sense.

42. It remains therefore, that the subjection spoken of, as profess'd both by Eusebius the Bishop, and the Emperour, must be 1. no acknowledgment of the Patriarch, 2. no more than of subjecting him in a particular cause, to St. Gregory's cognizance, no subjecting him to his ordinary or real Jurisdiction, much less 3. any supreme jurisdiction of divine right from Christ, which alone serves S. W.'s turn, and is sufficiently prejudiced (instead of being confirmed) in that it is never so much as named in either of these Epistles.

43. In this place I shall not ask S. W. why he would take upon him to create a Bishop of Constantinople, being himself but a Priest; but rather leave the Reader to consider more seasonably, whether [frater noster Eusebius ejusdem civitatis Episcopus] may not, though improperly, signifie some Bishop belonging to that Patriarchate of Constantinople, by name the Archbishop of Thessalonica, to whom about this time we find an Epistle of Gregory's, Gregorius Eusebio Thessalonicensi, lib. VII. Ep. II. Indict. 1. and again Ep. 7 Ind. 2.

44. I should not propose this, if it were imaginable, there should be any such man so called, Patriarch, and, in that notion, Bishop of Constantinople at that time; And therefore if any shall dislike this proposal, I wish he would shew the contrary reconcileable with story. But if he cannot, then then what other truth can there be in Gregory's words, but this, that the Emperour, and that Bishop, most probably the Metropolitan of a City (and Primate of a Region under the Patriarch of Constantinople) viz. of Thessalonica in Macedonia, did daily profess that the Church of Constantinople was subjected to the Apostolick See; Which as it is not the acknowledgment of the Bishop of Constantinople himself, on which alone S. W's argument was built, so it is clearly agreeable to our former interpretation, that another Primate or Bishop having complained to the Emperour against the Patriarch of Constantinople; the Emperour had subjected the cause (and so far the Church or Patriarch) to the Pope, as to the chief Bishop, prime Patriarch of the world, to pass his judgment of it; and the Bishop that had complained, willingly submitted his cause to be heard and judged by him, and daily profess'd the Church of Constantinople it self, viz. in this particular case, to be thus duely subjected.

45. But how the Patriarch himself liked it, is no farther here express'd, than that some murmured at Gregory, saying, quomodo Ecclesiam Constantinopolitanam disposuit comprimere? Which though it be no convincing argument against, is sure no proof of S. W's conclusion, that the Patriarch profess'd subjection to him.

46. From what hath been said, the Reader will guess at the reason, that Baronius, who had diligently survey'd Gregory's Epistles, and collected arguments out of them for his assuming the power of Universal Pastour, Ann. 595. n. 34, 35. makes no use there of this confession of Eusebius, nor any where else, that I have observed.

47. The third testimony to which he refers, from L. V. Ep. 24. belongs indeed to the Bishop of Constantinople, that John that contended for the title of Universal; It refers to somewhat that had pass'd before, in the case of John a Presbyter, and must be understood by reflecting on that story. But first the words are these, Nunquid non ipse nostri quia in causa quæ à Johanne Presbytero contra Johannem Constantinopolitanum fratrem & coepiscopum nostrum orta est, secundum Canones ad sedem Apostolicam recurrit, & nostrâ est sententiâ definita? Do you not know that in the cause which by John the Presbyter was raised against John our fellow Bishop of Constantinople, according to the Canons it resorted to the Apostolical See, and there was defined by our sentence?

48. Of this cause betwixt John the Presbyter and John the Patriarch of Constantinople, somewhat we have Indict. XI. l. 2. Ep. 52. where it appears, that that John the Presbyter having been beaten in the Church, made his complaint to Pope Gregory, who presently, as he saith, wrote twice about that and one other matter of the Monks of Isauria to the Patriarch, who it seems answered him not himself, but * another, a secular person, his Secretary, I suppose, in his name, telling him that he knew not de qua causa scriberet, what the matter was about which he wrote; This answer, it seems, † displeased the good Bishop, and thereupon he makes him this dilemma, that if it were true that he said, that indeed he knew not the matter, nothing could be worse than that such things should be done against the Servants of God, and he that ought to take care of them and defend them, should know nothing of them; But, if he knew it, and yet wrote those words, Ego nescio, I know not, this must be a falsity. Hereupon he is willing to suppose, that it was not John, but this other secular person, whom he calls familiaris vester juvenculus, which wrote the letter, and therefore exhorts him that he will first correct him, and not be ruled by him, or * if he be, he knows that he can have no peace with his brethren, adding that as he earnestly desires to have peace with all men, and especially with him, whom he vehemently loves, † if he be the man he took him for, so if he observe not the Canons, but will break the Laws established by their Ancestours, he * knows not who he is, disclaims that fraternal communion, or having any thing to doe with him. Then he tells him, that he may evidently shew that he seeks nothing per elationem by way of lifting himself up above him, that if it were not for the power that young man holds with him, * he would conceal what the Canons allow him to doe, and would at the first have transmitted the Plaintiffs to him, being confident that he would charitably receive them. As it is, he now exhorts him either to receive them to their places, and afford them peace, or, if he would not, then without alteration he should observe the Statutes of their Ancestours, and the bounds of Canons; But if he would doe neither, he would not inferre rixam, begin the quarrel, yet neither would he avoid or refuse it, if it came from (or were begun by) John. And then tells him what the Canons say against Bishops that are strikers (in relation to the beating of the Presbyter) and that he hath sent Sabinian his Deacon to give him his Ecclesiastical answer, and to speak with him more exactly. Another short † Epistle there is on the same subject written to Narses, where he professes himself much concern'd, and resolved with all vigour and weight to require right to be done to the injured, and if he see the Canons of the Apostolick See not to be kept, God will direct him what to doe against the Contemners. This is all that appears in this story, unless it be, that (as is repeated from Narses's letter) before the time of this latter Epistle to Narses, the Patriarch of Constantinople had * declared himself resolved to observe the Canons, yet, it seems, took it not well, that the Pope had thus interposed.

49. † Baronius indeed adds, according to his manner, much more to this story, that the Patriarch acknowledged himself his subject when he was severely reprehended by him, and sent the acts of the cause to Rome to be discussed, then that he obeyed, fearing the threats brought by Sabinian, and sent the acts of his judgment to Rome, whither the appeal had before been made. And so fain he would have it a formal appeal as from a lower to an higher judicature, and this acknowledged, and pleaded to by the Patriarch, and finally obedience payd to the Pope's judicature. But for all this, beside his own fancy, which was always fruitfull on this theme, he offers not the least proof, save onely from those * two Epistles; which therefore having now been set down, as far as concerns that matter, the Reader may judge, how far they infer his conclusion.

50. It is true, that in case of injury done to any by a Primate or Patriarch (there being no lawfull superiour, who had power over him) the injured person sometimes made his complaint to the Bishop of Rome, as being the most eminent person in the Church; and in such case he questionless might, and ought in all fraternal charity, to admonish the Primate or Patriarch what his duty was, and disclaim communion with him, unless he reform; which is the interpretation of having no peace with his brethren (but differs much from jurisdiction of a superiour over inferiours) and for this, Gregory pleads ancient Canons, and the Bishop of Constantinople, though he acknowledged

* Alter mihi secularis quidam sub ejus nomine loquebatur.
† Obstupui. Ibid.
* Si illum audit, scio quia pacem cum suis fratribus habere non poterit.
† Si ipsi quos novi vos estis,
* Non cognosco qui estis.
* Quæ mihi de Canonibus suppetunt tacere potuissem.
† L. 2. Ep. 63. Indict. XI.
* Ipsum puto adversarium patimur, quem asseris velle Canones custodire.
† Ann. 595. n. 34.
* De qua extat Epistola Gregorii ad ipsum data. Greg. l. 2. Ep. 52. & Ep. 64. ad Narsetem.

ledged not any of his power, and so expresses his dislike of his interposing, yet it seems, he doth justice to the injured person, and signifies his intention not to break but to observe all Canons; and so this is the utmost that this third testimony amounts to, and that which Gregory must be supposed to mean by saying, the cause according to the Canons came to the Apostolick See, and was defined by his sentence, i. e. the Patriarch of Constantinople was as carefull to doe justice to the injured party, as he to have him.

51. If by this, and the like passages, Gregory were willing to draw some authority and accession of power to his See by pretense of Canons, this was not any essay of his profound humility; yet far from any claim of universal Pastourship held by divine right, or donation of Christ to S. Peter; for I appeal to S. W. whether that were the interpretation of secundum Canones? and yet he knows that no other tenure but that will stand him in stead. But if he onely desired to preserve the due reverence to the Apostolick See, by which he might be able to succour all that were injured, and had none to appeal to, in the direct line of superiour jurisdiction, as some eminent persons in all times have had that veneration and so authority among their neighbours, and some Princes, through all Europe, that they have been the constant Umpires of all differences, (so our Histories tell us of our Henry VIII. for some years) I cannot think he did amiss, or that he thwarted, in the least, his profes'd disclaiming of universal Rule; especially, if either the Emperour or the Canons of the Church referred the case to him (always preserving that great moderation, which he requires of his Officer the Defensor, that he * goe reverently to the Bishop, and intercede for the person, that pretends to be injured, that so he may both relieve him that desires his help, & jura præpositi non turbentur, and not disturb the right of the Bishops.) The onely unhappiness is, that such acts of (at first) but necessary fraternal charity, were by ambitious men drawn into example, and means of assuming power; which yet as they pretend from Christ to St. Peter, on the score of Universal Pastourship, cannot be more vehemently prejudiced by any thing, than by these examples, which being rightly considered, pretend no higher than Ecclesiastical Canons, and the Universal Laws of Charity, and relieving the oppress'd by admonishing the oppos'ers, (fraternal charity still, not paternal authoritative Jurisdiction) but never made claim to any supremacy of power over all Bishops by divine Institution. So that still it appears not, after all S. W's endeavours, that Gregory was an hypocrite, as he would have him, in practising or challenging that office of Universal Pastourship which in word he so vehemently denyed. And so much for these three testimonies, which make up his sixth Answer.

* Lib. 7. Ep. 64.

52. His 7th Answer is short, but yet somewhat extraordinary, Those words, Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex Universalis est appellandus, are not, saith he, found either in the Council of Carthage it self, or in the ancient Copies, but are Gratian's addition onely, wherefore they are to be understood in the sense wherein Pope Pelagius took them, whose Epistle he cites to make good those words.] I dare say never any wit did practise an higher piece of self-denyal for the avoiding the force of a wordish testimony, than is here discoverable.

53. For 1. what should he project in this subtile observation, that those words, Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex — are not found in the Council of Carthage it self?] Did any man cite them from that Council. 'Tis certain I did not. My words are visible, Repl. p. 40. n. 10. [But to return to their Corpus Juris, so again Decret. par. 1. Dist. 99. c. 4. Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex Universalis est appellandus, the Pope of Rome is not to be called universal Bishop, citing the Epistle of Pope Pelagius the II.—] 'Tis then Corpus Juris, i. e. Gratian's collection that I cite, and that is not the Council of Carthage. And it is as visible, that that Corpus, or Gratian, cite not the Council of Carthage in that place, but the Pope Pelagius. Who then is it, that thus cited it, and was therefore thus to be refuted, by reminding him that the words are not found in the Council of Carthage? Sure none but S. W's own fancy, that can connect any things most distant, confound Pelagius the Pope, and the Council of Carthage, rather than not add a 7th answer to an argument that lay upon his hands.

54. Secondly, what should he mean by the ancient Copies? the ancient Copies of the Council of Carthage? So it must be, if it signifie any thing. And then 1. what need was there of that addition? What other image can we have of that Council, held so long before our time, than by the ancient Copies of the Acts of it? when therefore he had said [it was not found in the Council it self] the Reader would well enough have understood his meaning, that so it was not found in the ancient Copies of it; I divine not what tolerable account can be given of this addition, unless he would perswade us, that having found it in some later Copies of that Council, yet searching the ancient, he found it missing there; And that were very fine, when, as hath been said, it is not so much as cited, or pretended to be fetch'd from any either old or new Copies of that Council, but from Gratian's collection out of a Pope's Epistle.

55. Thirdly, with what truth can it be said, that it is Gratian's addition onely? If he knows what belongs to the Corpus Juris, he must discern, that those words [Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex Universalis est appellandus] are the title of the 4th Chapter, that title written by Gratian, the Chapter it self being the proof of it, from a testimony in Pelagius's Epistle, to which yet it can be no addition, because the words of the Epistle unavoidably infer it, Nullus Patriarcharum universalitatis vocabulo unquam utatur—Let none of the Patriarchs ever use the name of Universal—applying this in the conclusion to himself, being then Pope, as one of that number. And so, if he were Romanus Pontifex, and he might not be called Universalis, or if he were a Patriarch, and no Patriarch might be called Universalis, then sure here was nothing added by him, that said [Nec etiam Romanus Pontifex, not even the Bishop of Rome must be called Universal Bishop.

56. Fourthly, if they were Gratian's addition onely, as he saith they were, how can he say, they are to be understood in the sense wherein Pope Pelagius took them? Did then Pope Pelagius use them? so he must, or he could not take them in any sense. If he used them, and, as also he saith, Gratian cited them from his Epistle, how can it be true that they were Gratian's addition onely?

57. Fifthly, Is not S. W. a Romanist? If he be, then he cannot but know, that the Corpus juris, and that part of it which he thus despises, with the title of Gratian's addition onely, is in full force with his Church, and the authority as constringent, as if it had (which is impossible) been cited out of any Council of Carthage.

58. Sixthly and lastly (for here are misadventures enough in a short but pithy answer) the words shall submit to be understood in the sense wherein Pope Pelagius took them; But what then is that sense? On the resolving of this, the whole weight of the answer necessarily depended, and yet he hath not given the least intimation of that, nor vouchsafed so much as to pretend, that Pelagius took them in any sense, but what I and all men understand them in. This indeed is numbring answers by the poll, and not so much as ever considering, whether the Reader be able to advance any higher with all his stock of rational faculties, than just to tell seven, or ten. If he can but doe that, and no more, he is a Reader after S.W's own heart, and by the judgment of common sense he must resolve that the Romanists is the true Religion, else how could S.W. give so many answers to one argument?

59. Pass we then to his eighth Answer, it is this, Equivalent terms to what they mean by those words, were far more anciently given to the Bishop of Rome Zephyrinus by Tertullian l. 1. de pudicitia, where he calls him Pontifex Maximus and Episcopus Episcoporum.] But what are the [those words?] That must be supplyed from the words of the Testimony recited in the seventh answer [Universalis est appellandus] the onely antecedent to this relative. What then the Romanist means by Universal Bishop, is if we will believe S.W. equivalent to Pontifex Maximus and Episcopus Episcoporum. What the meaning of those words is, we cannot be ignorant, Pontifex Maximus was the title of the chief Ruler of all sacred things in heathen Rome, and was frequently assumed by the Emperour and proportionable to him, in Christian Rome, the Supreme Governour, at least in matters of Ecclesiastical cognisance, through the whole world. And so Episcopus Episcoporum, the Bishop of Bishops, is he to whom all other Bishops were subject. This then I confess to be equivalent to the title of Universalis, and then 'tis strange indeed that both Pelagius and Gregory should disclaim being called Universal, and censure them for Antichristian that received it, when yet their Ancestours assumed to be Bishops of all the Bishops in the world. It remains then, that we examine the testimony on which this is fathered.

60. And by the first sound of Tertullian de pudicitia, we know 'twas a book written in heresie, by a Montanist, in opposition to the Church, and then, though that would carry little authority with it, to prove that a truth, for which it were produced, yet it is hereby rendred the less probable, that he that divided from the Roman Church at that time, should give the Bishop of Rome the title of Universal Pastour, or any thing equivalent to it, for that were to profess himself a Schismatick. Secondly what is the interpretation of L.1.de Pudicitia? Did Tertullian write more books with that title? other folks have heard but of one; but who can tell, what rarities S.W's greater diligence hath met with in his travails in Antiquity.

61. But passing by these infirmities, 'tis yet sure, that Tertullian in his one book de Pudicit. hath these words, and the Reader, if he please, may view them, soon after the beginning of the Book, where in mere jeer and ironie he saith, Audio etiam edictum esse propositum, & quidem peremptorium, Pontifex scilicet Maximus, Episcopus Episcoporum dicit. I hear that an Edict is set out, and that a peremptory one, The High-priest forsooth, and the Bishop of Bishops saith, And some hereticks perhaps might smile to see, how glad Pamelius is of this catch, Bene habet, & adnotatu dignum, quod etiam jam in hæresi constitutus, & contra Ecclesiam scribens, Pontificem Romanum Episcopum Episcoporum nuncupet, & infra c. 13. bonum Pastorem & benedictum Papam, & c. 21. Apostolicum. And 'tis very true he doth all this, but no man left to his own eyes could have miss'd to see, in what sense; 'tis all delivered by an enemy, in perfect scoff, as of a decree that he saith is in prostibulis appendendum, to be hanged up in the Stews, as opening the way to sins by proposing impunity to them, exactly in the same dialect, as S.W. would have cryed Saint, and Preaching, when he meant heretical and talking nonsense. And yet this is a demonstrative argument on his side, fit to be opposed to two Popes, Pelagius, and Gregory's disclaiming this title; for certainly an hereticks jeer hath more convincing force in it with S.W. than two fallible Popes ('tis archhæresie, saith Mr. White, to hold them any other) most seriously and solemnly protesting the contrary.

62. But lest he may yet mistake this jeer for great earnest, when the words he gives him are capable of a good sense, I shall refer him to St. Cyprian, that came not long after Tertullian, and professes to be a great Reader of him, and in much more earnest than he, even in a Council of Carthage, Neque enim quisquam nostrum Episcopum se esse Episcoporum constituit, aut tyrannico terrore, ad obsequendi necessitatem collegas suos adegit, for no one of us hath made himself to be a Bishop of Bishops, or by tyrannical terrour hath driven his fellow Bishops to a necessity of obedience. Which that it was spoken by him particularly in relation to Stephen, Bishop of Rome at that time, is resolved by * Baronius himself, and so needs not be more largely proved to a Romanist.

* Ann. 258. n. 24.

63. But after all this, there is a ninth and last answer behind, which, saith he, puts this whole business out of doubt; Balsamon confesses, that that title was forbidden, to take away the arrogancy of names, and that for that reason many Patriarches did style themselves ταπεινὸς καὶ εὐτελὴς, vile and base. See Balf. Conc. Carth. 3. Can. 42. Where though he mingles something of his own Schism, yet thus far he is clear for S. W. that the name or title was onely treated there, not the thing or Jurisdiction.] This is a killing answer indeed, and I shall confess with Balsamon, that these names were forbid, to take away arrogance, but can never imagine, that leaving of a proud name and keeping up all the height, that is signified by the name, could ever be by wise or pious men look'd on as a supersedeas for, or an antidote against arrogance. For indeed why should the name be arrogant, if the power that were express'd by it, were not so? and why the shadow conscientiously disclaimed and laid down, as long as the solider part, the power, or Jurisdiction were retained? If this be the answer of answers, and that which puts all out of doubt, which is no other in effect but the yielding as much as I or any other of my dear friends (as he saith) demand, the Reader will know hereafter, what is the meaning of nine answers to a difficulty, all which, I willingly consent, shall be judged of by this last irrefragable one.

64. Onely 'tis by the way to be observed, what it is, that in that place Balsamon mingles of his own Schism, even nothing in the world but his citing of the 9th Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, and the 6th and 7th of Sardice, but especially directing the Reader to observe that of Chalcedon, μεταγλωττέρας ὕστης, which was the latter, not as the Latine Interpreter reads, quæ est antiquior, which is the more ancient. This is all he saith in that place, beside what S.W. hath cited for his own interest, and this it seems was naughtily done of Balsamon, who might else, at this turn, have stood intirely upright in S.W's favour, had he not cited three Canons of Councils, especially a more late one of Chalcedon; and what is that latter Schismatical Canon? Why, that a Clerk must not leave his own Bishop, and flie to secular Judicatures (which, if he remember, S. Paul had said, before that Canon) that if he have any contention with his own Bishop, he shall be judged by the Synod of a Province, that if a Bishop or Clerk have a Controversie with the Metropolitan of the Province, he shall goe to the Exarch of the Diocese, i.e. in the ancient style, to the Primate, or to the throne of the Imperial City of Constantinople.

65. This then was the crime, and Schism, of no less than an Universal Council, which the Pope himself is ſworn not to violate; and with that company poor Balſamon, and the Proteſtants muſt be content to fall, in caſe S. W. have by this anſwer put this whole buſineſs out of doubt. Meanwhile if one of the four general Councils be not ſchiſmatical, 'tis as good as confeſs'd that neither are we, and to that iſſue this whole buſineſs is come, and there we are content to leave it, whilſt S. W. declaims and calculates with his kind Reader, the manifold weakneſſes of this Section. Which yet he will not conclude, till he hath conſidered the other part of my teſtimonies of Phocas's giving Boniface the title of Univerſal Biſhop.

is

68. On this he frames a Dilemma, that if I mean the name and title before forbidden, but then firſt allowed by him, then nothing followeth againſt them who maintain a real power. But if I mean the ſupreme Juriſdiction over the whole Church, then beſides that this Juriſdiction they diſpute of, was over Kings and Emperours, and ſo not likely to be given by Phocas the Emperour, they muſt be put to imagine that an Univerſal Government in Eccleſiaſtical matters over the whole Chriſtian world could be introduced without any viſible effects of ſiding, oppoſing, &c. and then he is gotten again into his ſafe fortreſs of Ruſhworthian no leſs than demonſtrative Theology: To that, being, before this time, become a thredbare repetition, I ſhall not, I hope, need to attend him, for as I do not take all Ruſhworth's demonſtrations to be ſuch indeed, many of them falling ſhort of probability, ſo 'tis not in the power of a thouſand improbabilities to prejudice one matter of fact, ſufficiently teſtified, it being ordinary to ſee thoſe things actually done, which were moſt improbable, and even contrary to the greateſt, and moſt important intereſts of the doers.

69. Onely to his Dilemma I ſhall return my ſhort anſwer, that all that Phocas can be imagined to have afforded Boniface, was the title of Univerſal, which being then gained from him, but no more than a Sceleton, being unaccompanied with power, hath ever ſince endeavoured its utmoſt, to gather fleſh and juice, ſtrength and verdure to it, and now takes upon it, as S. W. ſaith, to be a juriſdiction over all Kings and Emperours, but hath not had the deſired ſucceſs in attaining it.

70. For the Teſtimonies of this donation of Phocas's, more than that of Paulus Diaconus, I have in this anſwer formerly ſpoken, and therefore this ſhall ſuffice to his 16th Section, and ſo we are at length arrived to an end of his Firſt Part.

CHAP. VI.

A Reply to his Second Part.

SECT. I.

A view of his firſt Section. His charges, of endeavouring to be witty, of denying my words, of an ill memory, of producing evidences which are none of theirs. His reducing all to Tradition of the preſent Romiſh Church. Difference betwixt a Title, and an Argument. Of calumniating their Tenent, of pleading poſſeſſion; His definition of Preſcription. Quiet poſſeſſion.

1. ALthough the variety of S. W's miſtaken grounds, and triumphs, of cavils aſſuming to be weighty and demure objections, and of paralogiſms impoſed whether on others onely or on himſelf, for ſevere, nay rigorous demonſtrations, hath, in his firſt part (beyond which we have not yet advanced) led us on to ſo great a length, that it is now matter as much of neceſſity, as of choice, to make toward harbour; and although, if there were any thing imitable in him, his miſtaking much leſs than a third part for the whole, and intitling that a Rejoinder to two Replies, which hath not attempted to proceed beyond a firſt third part of either of my two Anſwers, might be the moſt juſtifiable errour I could tranſcribe from him: Yet that he may not be tempted to think, that the dealings of his two remaining parcels lie undiſcovered, or, which is more agreeable to his humour, conclude they are dreaded, not neglected, I ſhall give the Reader a farther view if it be but of a tith of his injuſtices, caſting his gold wire (which hath nothing but the diſtenſion to own that title) into the cruſible, and bringing it out in as contracted a form as I can, tracing his ſteps through the remaining Sections, but crowding them into as narrow a compaſs, as the Readers intereſts ſeem to exact from me.

2. In his firſt Section the precurſory part entertains it ſelf with my miſtake, that there being in his prints two ſeventh Sections, I was not ſo curious, in ſo main a difficulty, as to reſort to the table of Errata, to ſee whether one of them were reformed into the ſixth, and ſo was led to think that, which went before the firſt ſeventh, to be the ſixth, when indeed it was but the fifth, for which foul miſdemeanour I ask his pardon, but admire his faculties that could repreſent this as an indeavour to be witty, be it in never ſo dry a way.

3. In the inſuing paragraph I ſhall onely ask with what conſcience he can again repeat, and outface it, that I ſaid the Romaniſts muſt manifeſt the matter of fact that it was thus in England as I had acknowledged it to be, 2. the conſequence of that fact, &c. when 'tis viſible, Tr. of Schiſm. p. 68. l. 11. that all that I ſaid was, that every of the many branches of the objection (of which theſe were but two) muſt be manifeſted or granted to have truth in it, or elſe the objection would be of no force. This is not to ſay that either all, or that theſe two muſt be manifeſted, but ſome manifeſted, others granted to have truth in them, in which latter form were theſe two, which therefore I † expreſly profeſt to grant, and not require the pretenders to prove, in the ſame page l. 28. And yet to ſhew me what to truſt to in the proceſs of the Section, without all ſhew or colour of pretence, I am here charged with denial of my expreſs words, for denying there was the leaſt cauſe or ground for his ridiculous colours, in that paſſage of the Tr. of ſch. † Ibid. l. penult.

4. But I ſhall paſs this, and join with him onely in that which he calls the point, where I am charged of a bad memory, and expreſly (this ſecond time in few lines) of denying my own words, that is, if there be truth in his ſuggeſtion, of the groſſeſt whether tergiverſation or falſifying. This were an ugly charge from another hand, but from S. W. it ſhall go neither for calumny nor contumely, but p. 172. l. 4.

either for glibneſs of habit, or in his own dialect, pure zeal and obligation to the certainty of his Faith.

† Tr. of Schiſ. p. 67. The plain and whole truth of the buſineſs is, I † ſaid, my method led me to enquire what evidences are producible againſt the Church of England, whereby it may be thought liable to the guilt of ſchiſm, and accordingly proceeded to all the objections I had read in Phil. Scot's Tract of Schiſm, or ever heard of from any other; and this, both he and the Cath. Gent. will call my requiring of the Catholicks to prove their

* Repl. p. 44. pretenſions; and my * denying this concluſion of his to be regular, is now my great crime of denying my own words. But I am ſecure enough, that his own concluſion is not my words, either in ſound or equivalence, and that for their pretenſions in general, or in particular their pretenſion to the ſupremacy, I did not at that time in the leaſt-wiſe require them to produce their proofs, and for their pretending that we are Schiſmaticks, which alone came then in my way, and was my buſineſs, I neither did nor could require them to prove, or attempt to prove that, when I ſuppoſed that requeſt was already granted me, charges actually brought in by the accuſers.

P. 175. 5. To this he adds in a meeker ſtyle (pretending to omit it) that the evidences I produce in their names are none of theirs.] And yet the firſt evidence I produce, is that of the Biſhop of Rome's preſumed ſupremacy from Chriſt's donation to S. Peter, the very thing which all Romaniſts, before Mr. White, and this his ὑποφήτης, have queſtionleſs inſiſted on, as their great foundation of charge, and evidence that we were guilty of ſchiſm, and which he himſelf premiſes (in his third Ground) to have been held in England before the Reformation, on purpoſe that from its being held ſo, he may ſeem to make good this charge againſt us; and can he think his pretending that it was held, or acknowledged in England, a ſufficient evidence, and yet that the ſame preſumed, or attempted to be proved from Scripture and Fathers, ſhall not by them be deemed an evidence? Is there no weapon of war but what comes newly pointed from Mr. White's forge and anvil? This is not to act the petty tyrant Pike in our ſhallow rivers, but the Leviathan in the Ocean, not onely to aſſume the victories, but to incloſe all the agones, and allow no man elſe leave to appear in the Palæſtra, to be worthy to be called a Romaniſt, or Oppoſer of Proteſtants, or other but doltiſh adverſary (as by and by his phraſe is, near the bottom of the page) till the knack of the Oral Tra-

† Apol. for Trad. p. 1. dition of their preſent Church was thought on by the † two kinſmen in practiſing their poſtures.

6. But he gives the reaſon of his aſſumption; for, ſaith he, the onely evidence we produce when we pleaſe to oppoſe, is the evidence of infallibility of Univerſal Tradition or atteſtation of our Fathers, which we build upon, both for that and other points of Faith, Nor do we build on Scripture at all, but as interpreted by the practice of the Church and Tradition now ſpoken of.] What the [Tradition now ſpoken of] is, we are ſufficiently informed, the Oral of their preſent Church: And what the [that] muſt ſignify in our preſent debate, I, whoſe words occaſion'd it, cannot be ignorant; It muſt be, if it be any thing to the purpoſe, that we are Schiſmaticks, for that onely was it for which I was then inquiring, what evidences were producible. Firſt then, I demand, is this one point of their Faith, that we are Schiſmaticks? If it be, what Apoſtle revealed it to their forefathers? Secondly, can the Infallibility of whatſoever forefathers atteſtation, by him ſuppoſeable, be of it ſelf competent to prove us Schiſmaticks? Can proteſt parties be received as witneſſes? So it muſt be, if it be meant of S. W's immediate forefathers; or can the whole nation of England, that caſt out the Papacy, and are the more remote forefathers, join to evidence that they themſelves were Schiſmaticks in doing ſo? It muſt then ſure be ſomewhat elſe, which they are ſuppoſed to atteſt, from whence we are, by conſequence, concluded Schiſmaticks, and that muſt be, according to S. W's grounds, that we were actually under the Papal Authority, as inſtituted over us by Chriſt; and if that be it, that was the very evidence that I propoſed to examine, and ſo was not in juſtice to be chid for miſtaking their evidences.

7. But if I ſhall take him at his word, that this of the Infallibility of Univerſal Tradition (in his ſenſe, i. e. Oral of the preſent Roman Church) is their onely evidence, and that Scripture is not to be built on at all, but as, &c. then firſt, the Tract of Schiſm hath no need of farther defence, all the evidences which that examined, being by this Diſpatcher caſt aſide and diſowned; and ſecondly, All that is in the inſuing Sections attempted to be made probable from Scripture, is diſcharged alſo by conſent of parties. Thirdly, This one Reſerve of Tradition Oral hath now in the foregoing Chapters (particularly in the third) been removed alſo, And then why ſhould any thing that is behind be worthy our farther conſideration, ſave onely to behold S. W's faculties?

8. In reſpect to which, we muſt next conſider the diſtinction, which he next obſerves betwixt a title and an argument, p. 176. and then, either ignorance or obſtinacy are my portion, that I do not, or will not know the difference between theſe. But I both do, and will know and acknowledge that difference, and yet be juſt where I was before; for that which is in it ſelf a title for a claim, may in reſpect of an oppoſer be uſed as an argument to prove that claim, and if S. W. be ſo ſecure in his deemed poſſeſſion, as to need no arguments, others that are humbler than he, may think they need, and accordingly make uſe of them, and ſo be ſo mean ſpirited, as to offer proof for their pretenſions, and think Chriſt's donation, if they can make it good, ſuch proof. As for S. W. all that I ſaid was, that he founded his pretenſions for the Popes ſupremacy, in the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of S. Peter, and ſo, that (if I anſwered not his argument, when he vouchſafed not to produce any, yet) I removed his foundation, and that I think is as deſtructive to his building, as anſwering arguments is to a cauſe; and that may ſerve him at this time.

9. Next he charges me for calumniating the Catholick tenent, calling it Preſcription, for changing and ſhuffling the name to alter the ſtate of the whole queſtion, for uſing arguments that are exquiſite pleas for all malefactours] and all this, but for asking, whether they are now in poſſeſſion of the obedience of Repl. p. 45. this nation, and if not, concluding that by his argument, that poſſeſſion, and all the arguments deducible thence, are loſt to him, the preſcription being now on our ſide, as before on theirs, &c. Where firſt 'tis evident that I change not the terms, nor conſequently calumniate their tenent (for that is founded in the pretended change) for I ſpeak expreſly of their poſſeſſion, and when I name preſcription, intend another thing by it, viz. an argument drawn from poſſeſſion, as when we ſay we can preſcribe for this, we mean we have poſſeſt it long, and have that means to prove our right to it. 2. That I uſe no argument, that can be appliable to any malefactour, but onely ſet down what plea might be made by force of S. W's argument, which I profeſs to think very unſufficient to prove any thing, and indeavour to ſhew it ſo, from the inconveniences conſequent to the uſing it.

10. Yet

10. Yet can I not think the proportion betwixt our present possession, and their late pretended one, to be the same, as betwixt that of a thief and the former undoubted owner. The difference is visible in this; the thief pretends no right, his strength is his law of justice, or if he should pretend a right, hath nothing to shew for it, but a violent possession of a day or week, which is his accusation, not his title; But what we now possess, we hold by declaration, and proof of former right, (not onely original and lost, but) continued and uninterrupted, against a deemed onely, but not real possession. See ch. 11. Sect. 2.

11. By the way, How came this great Controvertist to define Prescription, that it is a title to get a right in that which was known to be none of his before] Sure all prescription is not such, a man may prescribe for time out of mind: (and that is, beyond which nothing is known) and no prescription is so rational or valid as this, when no other former owner or pretender is producible: And so by his good leave, Catholicks might prescribe, if they could maintain their possession to have been from the beginning; and so I am sure the ancient Councils did (though little to the advantage of the modern Catholicks) when to maintain the right of Primates, they say, † Τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, let the ancient customs remain in force, † Can. Nic. vi. and * μηδένα ὑπερχῆναι τὴν ἄνωθεν τῶν ἐξαρχῶν τοῦ τόπου ——— καταλαμβάνειν, that none should seise on or usurp * Can. Eph. 8. a Province which was not from the beginning under his hand or power, i. e. for which he could not prescribe; whereas by S. W's definition, he might then onely prescribe, when it were known it did not originally belong to him. Let him now, if he please, say that I am against all immemorial prescriptions, who profess to be for them; he may do it as well, as just now he suggested to the Malefactours the benefit they might receive from my plea from possession, both being equally mentioned by me as the consequence of his discourse, and not of mine.

12. What followed in my Reply p. 46, 47. (of which † he desires to make such rare game) the Reader † Schis. Disp. shall judge if it were not most sufficient to the end to which it was designed, which was onely to shew p. 182. the no force of a bare pretended possession, abstracted from all consideration of any right to it, at the time when usurpation and injustice was publickly charged on it, when the supremacy acknowledgly vested in the King, was evidenced eo ipso to exclude all other pretenders, when reasons for casting off their pretensions were largely and solemny rendred; In which case it is certain, his possession was not quiet, as he pretended it to be, the contests held up, the claim made, superseded all imagination of that, or consequently, of prescription; All these I there mentioned, and above all insisted, that in Ecclesiastical matters, whatsoever 'tis in secular, prescription can be of no force against truth of right, and this was somewhat more than to quote onely my own book, and another of our own folks, as he unjustly suggests; and herein I did all that the Cath. Gent. whom I answered, required (i. e. shewed sufficient cause for what we had done, by referring to a book, where a list of causes was visible) and as much as this very Dispatcher thinks sufficient to disprove the quiet of a possession wherein prescription is founded: for so saith he, p. 180. Even this present book which I now write, attests that the debate is yet on foot ——] and then how came it to be so ridiculous in me to appeal to my Tr. of Schism, and to the Opus Eximium in Goldastus for the like attestation? 'Twere most easie to make of the rest of this Section a sad spectacle of unsincerity; The Reader by comparing it with the Reply, to which it relates, will doe it for me.

SECT. II.

The misrepresentations in his second Section. Of Peter's Commission limited to the Jews onely. Of undoing him. Of limiting the Jurisdiction of each Apostle. Of exclusive Provinces. Κανὼν Ἀποστολῆς, ὁ τόπος ὁ ἴδιος. Apostle of the Circumcision, and Gentiles; Christ an Apostle of the Circumcision. Lesser Provinces. Nicephorus's Testimony of Peter's, Andrew's, &c. Eusebius's. S. W's mistakes cleared. Charges answered. Of interpreting Scripture, that of Act. 1. Lot, Place. The antecedent intent, transaction it self, the effect subsequent, nature of the phrase, Διακονία.

1. IN the second Section he sets out with a competent number of misrepresentations, that I undertake to undoe St. Peter by shewing his Commission was limited to the Jews onely, that I limit the jurisdiction of each Apostle to certain Provinces, and call them p. 70. of Schis. Exclusive Provinces, that I fetch the pedigree of these from the Lot of Apostleship, Act. 1. and Judas's proper place in hell, which I will have signify exclusive Provinces; and then, what tragedies and tempests are, and have been raised from all these? no Laplander could have sold him a wind to have done the like.

2. But it is well my Tract of Schism may yet be consulted; by help of that, the truth will be visible through all these meteors. My words there, p. 70. are these. 'Tis evident by Scripture, that Peter was the Apostle of the Circumcision or Jews, exclusively to the Uncircumcision or Gentiles, which were generally another's Province; By Apostle, I understand a Commissioner of Christ's indued with authority by him, and this Commission given to him, as to all the Apostles, indefinitely and unlimitedly, not restrained by Christ's words to any particular Province, but extending equally to the whole world, what therefore is done in this kind, is by subsequent act of the Apostles themselves, who are testified to have distributed their universal great Province into several κανὼς Ἀποστολῆς, Act. 1. 25. distributions, or lots, or lesser Provinces, one or more to go one way, the other another, which is there called πορευθῆναι εἰς τὸν τόπον τὸν ἴδιον, to go to his own or proper place or assignation, for the witnessing the Resurrection. Now if the Circumcision or Jewish Christians were peculiarly St. Peter's Province, the lot or division assigned to him, (agreeable to which it is, that both his preaching in the Acts is to the Jews in Judæa and Samaria, and his Epistles are both addressed to the Jews of the dispersion, and none else) then it is not imaginable how he should be the universal or supreme Pastour or Bishop of the whole world. For the Christians of that age being either Jews or Gentiles, the Jews either those that remained in their Country, or that were dispersed in other Regions, there was but one portion of these that can reasonably be placed under St. Peter's jurisdiction (by Jurisdiction meaning what the argument required, and what is * expresst in * P. 73. l. 12, 16. the close of that Paragraph, his singular supremacy there, or any peculiar transcendent power that belonged to him, and not to others.) These I think are all my words, in that Treat. of Sch. on which his ſuggeſtions are grounded.

3. Now firſt, where do I ſay that St. Peter's Commiſſion was limited to the Jews onely? 'Tis viſible I ſay the direct contrary, [this Commiſſion given to him, as to all the other, indefinitely and unlimitedly.] Could any two expreſſions be more palpably unreconcileable and contradictory, than his [limited to the Jews onely] and my [given to all unlimitedly?] There is one eſſay of his ſincerity.

And yet 2. if I had ſaid this, how had this been the undoing of St. Peter more than any other of the Apoſtles? St. Peter is acknowledged the prime Apoſtle, by whoſe wiſedom after our Saviour's aſcent, the firſt acts of the Church were directed, Act. 1. 15. by whoſe preaching the firſt converts were gathered and ſuperſtructed, and united to thoſe foundation-ſtones of a Church that Chriſt had laid, three thouſand at his firſt Sermon, Act. 11. 41. and in this ſpecial ſenſe, he the foundation, on which the Church among the Jews was ſignally built; And is he then undone, onely becauſe he is not the Univerſal Monarch of the Church of the whole world, and yet all the other Apoſtles who founded the Church in other Regions, well dealt with by S. W. though they hold no part of it but in dependence from St. Peter? Theſe are rare meaſures of meekneſs and juſtice, by which to paſs judgment and diſtribute portions among thoſe holy men.

4. Secondly, Can I be ſaid to limit the juriſdiction of each Apoſtle to certain Provinces, any farther than they limited themſelves? Might not, did not they thus limit themſelves? and go one one way to preach, and another another way: Doth not their own Baronius, an. 44. n. 20, 21. ſay, Singulos Apoſtolorum in eas orbis regiones eſſe amandatos, ad quos Spiritus ſanctus privato inſtinctu voluit eos proficiſci, That every Apoſtle was diſpatched into that region to which the Spirit by private inſtinct would have them goe? and might not I ſay, they did ſo?

5. Thirdly, When he ſaith, I call them excluſive Provinces, and fetch the pedigree of them from the lots of Apoſtleſhip and Judas's place in hell; I anſwer 1. that from κληρὸς ἀποστολῆς Lots of Apoſtleſhip, Act. 1. I infer nothing but what was clear without it, viz. That the Apoſtles diſtributed their univerſal great Province into ſeveral leſſer, one to go one way, another another, to preach Chriſt. 2. For Judas's place in hell, my opinion is, that there is no intimation of it there, and then how can I fetch any thing from it?

6. Thirdly, The words which ſound moſt to excluſive provinces, are the firſt of Sect. 5. It is evident by Scripture, that this Apoſtle was Apoſtle of the Circumciſion or Jews excluſively to the uncircumciſion, which were generally anothers province. In theſe words I referred viſibly to thoſe of Saint Paul, Gal. 2. 7. where Paul is ſaid to be πεπιστευμένος intruſted with the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion, as Peter was intruſted with the Goſpel of the Circumciſion (and ſo not to thoſe of Luke, which he ſuggeſts, Act. 1.) Theſe it ſeems, were in like manner intruſted, the one with the preaching to the Jews, and the other to the Gentiles, and muſt be judged of the one by the other. Now of one it is oft ſaid elſewhere, that he was an Apoſtle of the Gentiles, See Rom. 11. 13. Foraſmuch as I am an Apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnifie my διακονία, miniſtration (that belonged to him; which by the way, I ſee not how it differs from κληρὸς διακονίας, Lot of miniſtration, Act. 1.) and Rom. 15. 18. The grace given to me to be λειτουργὸς, a Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the Gentiles, and διδάσκαλος 1 Tim. 2. 7. a Teacher of the Gentiles, and 2 Tim. 1. 11. a Preacher and Apoſtle, and Teacher of the Gentiles. Theſe, I ſuppoſe, expreſs him to be ſo an Apoſtle and Preacher, and Doctour of the Gentiles, as he was not of the Jews, and in this reſpect excluſively to the Jews, which were generally another's province. Not that his Apoſtolical commiſſion in its latitude extended not, or that he might not, or did not ever preach to the Jews (which is his notion of excluſive Provinces;) for I know he oft did, and begun with them, as Chriſt had commanded, before he turned to the Gentiles; but that his office principally and peculiarly lay this way, Act. 9. 15. to preach to the Gentiles (and having converted them he became their Father, 1 Cor. 4. 15. and as ſuch, he exerciſes juriſdiction over them, v. 19.) and not in like manner to the Jews.

7. And then by proportion the ſame I concluded of Saint Peter for the Jews, that he was an Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, or Jews, and ſo of them, as he was not of the Gentiles, and ſo, in this reſpect, excluſively to them, i. e. ſo as to allow them to be anothers Province, or peculiar aſſignation; that as * Chriſt is called a Miniſter of the Circumciſion, Rom. 15. 8. not that he never preached to any Gentile, but becauſe, as he ſaith of himſelf, he was not ſent ſave to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and accordingly went not out of thoſe Regions of Judæa, Galilee and Samaria, in his preaching; So Peter might fitly be called the Apoſtle and Miniſter of the Jews, and ſo they his peculiar province (as my words diſtinctly are, of Schiſ. p. 71. l. 6.) Of which, that is no ſmall intimation, which is S. W's onely argument againſt it, his receiving a Viſion from heaven, to give him confidence to preach to Cornelius a Gentile, though alſo a proſelyte of the Jews.

* Ὁ Κύριος, Ἀποστολὴν τῶν περιτομῆς, ἀπεστάλη πρὸς ἐθνῶν. Clemens in Euſeb. Eccl. hiſt. l. 6. cap. 18.

8. As then, every one of the Apoſtles retaining their Univerſal authority committed to them by Chriſt, had a portion aſſigned him, whither he ſhould goe and preath (and preaching convert, and having converted govern) and preaching there, did certainly not preach in other places, and then he was the Apoſtle of that Region, and not of others, and of that excluſively to others, to which his line, in Saint Paul's ſenſe of that phraſe, reached not; ſo ſure it might be, and was to St. Peter; And of this onely it was pertinent for me to ſpeak, becauſe in this onely the force of my argument conſiſted, viz. that as in reſpect of the Apoſtolical unlimited Office, nothing accrued to him, which was not common alſo to every other Apoſtle, and ſo his Univerſal Paſtourſhip was not foundable in that; ſo that which belonged to him in ſeveral, was far from the whole world, the Gentiles were peculiarly another's Province, who was called the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; where if, by any ſuppoſition, any part of thoſe other portions ſhould be brought in to Saint Peter, as Cornelius, and ſome other Gentiles preacht to, and converted by him, yet ſtill if the whole remaining grand body of the heathen world (to name no more) did not thus pertain to his province, the argument abides of the ſame force againſt the Univerſality of his Juriſdiction, meaning ſtill ſomewhat elſe than what belonged to him as to an Apoſtle, for that could not come under the preſent conſideration, or be uſefull to the Romaniſts pretenſions, lying in common to every other Apoſtle as well as him.

9. But

9. But becauſe he ſaith, that this limitation of the Apoſtles Univerſal Juriſdiction (my words are) [their * diſtributing their Univerſal great Province into ſeveral leſſer Provinces] is ſo rare a novelty, that blind antiquity never dreamt of it: Let us conſider a little whether it be not more ſtrange, that this ſhould ſeem to any man ſuch an unheard-of Novelty, as he (having put it into his frame) ſuppoſes it to have been. Do not all Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtories give us narrations of this? See † Nicephorus l. 2. c. 35. where firſt of Peter he ſaith, Τὴν γλῶ διελθὼν, καὶ τοῖς ἐπὶ πολὺ μᾶλλον ἅπασιν, οἵτε Παλαιστίνη, καὶ Συρίᾳ, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ σχεδὸν γῇ τὸ κήρυγμα διασπείρας, καὶ ταῖς ἀρχαῖς Νέρωνος τῇ Ρωμαίων ἐπιδημήσας δὲ ἡ μυσαρὸν Σίμωνα, That he paſſed through the earth, and ſcattered the Preaching (ſowed the ſeed of the word) to all that were of the Circumciſion both in Paleſtine and Syria, and the reſt almoſt of the earth, and in the beginning of Nero travelled to the Romans becauſe of that abominable Simon Magus (he may by the way mark here, if he pleaſe, that as large as his Preaching-province was, yet ὁι ἐκ περιτομῆς ἅπαντες, all they of the Circumciſion are the men peculiarly he preach'd to.)

* Beati Apoſtoli ab invicem diviſi ſuas provincias ad fidem induxerunt. Anon. de ætat. Eccl. c. 11. Tunc quilibet dicere poterat, Ecce pueri mei, quos dedit mihi Dominus. Ib.

† To. 1. p. 190. D.

10. So of the other Apoſtles, Andrew, ſaith he * Κλῆρὸν μὲν ἔσχε τὸν εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἐξέλεξο, he had by lot his Province aſſigned him to preach to the Gentiles; and again, Cappadocia, Galatia, Bithynia, ὥστε διελάγχανον, fell by lot to him, i. e. were his κλῆρος, and he went alſo to the region of the Anthropophagi, and the deſart of Scythia, and both parts of the Euxine Sea, &c. So, ſaith he, to Philip and Bartholomew, Συρία καὶ Ασία ἡ ἄνω κατὰ κλῆρον, Syria and the upper Aſia fell by lot, or were their κλῆρος or Province. So Thomas † ἡ ἐν Ἰνδοῖς καὶ Αἰθίοψι κλῆρον λαχών, had his lot or province among the Indians and Æthiopians. James the ſon of Alphæus * was for Gaza and Eleutheropolis, and the neighbouring Cities, and ſo of the reſt, particularly † Matthias ὁ τὸ ἐλλεῖμμα τοῦ δωδεκάδος ἐναριθμηθεὶς, who filled up the void place in the twelve, ἔτος τῇ πρώτῃ Αἰθιοπίᾳ περιβαλὼν, he betook himſelf to Æthiopia prima, all one with going to it, Act. 1 as to his ὁ ἴδιος ὁ τόπος, his own or proper place or aſſignation.

* Ib. c. 39. 199. D.

† Ib. c. 4.

* Ib. p. 202.

† P. 203.

11. So before him * Euſebius of the Apoſtles and Diſciples diſperſed through the world, Θωμᾶς μὲν Παρθίαν εἴληχεν, Thomas's lot was Parthia, Andrew's Scythia, John's Aſia, πλὴν ἔτι, but Peter ſeems to have preached in Pontus, and Galatia, and Bithynia, and Cappadocia, and Aſia, τοῖς ἐν διασπορᾷ Ἰουδαίοις, to the Jews of the diſperſion. Here then 'tis moſt viſible what appeared ſo ſtrange, that the Apoſtles had each of them their leſſer Provinces for the exerciſe of their office, and Peter among the reſt. 2. That his was peculiarly the Jews of the diſperſion. 3. That the word κλῆρος lot is very proper to ſuch an aſſignation (as the Jews ſeveral portions aſſigned them by Joſuah in Canaan are their κλῆροι lots.) And thus I am ſure 'tis moſt frequently uſed in good Authours, See Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, † ὁ θεῖος Ἰάκωβος ὁ τὴν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν ἐκκλησίας τὸν κλῆρον λαχών, James obtained the lot of the Church of Jeruſalem, i. e. as there follows, was the firſt Biſhop of that City.

* Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 1.

† Περὶ Παραδ. τ. Θεὸ. Λογ. p. 156.

12. Which being thus added to what hath been formerly ſaid on this matter in the Reply to the Cath. Gent. and Anſwer to Schiſ. Diſ. all his little colours will preſently vaniſh before this light. For 1. when he proceeds after his wont, to charge me, that I am aſhamed to father my own words, but deny that I meant them (i. e. κλῆρος and ἴδιος τόπος, Act. 1.) for evidences, or ever thought on them as ſuch, and then cites my words, wherein I profeſs to offer my evidences, and immediately proceed: And firſt, It is evident by Scripture, and no evidences from Scripture pretended in the ſame Paragraph, but theſe two miſerable miſtakes of it:] All this is but a miſtake on his ſide, the one thing which I there ſay, is evident from Scripture, being immediately ſet down from thence, viz. That Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, as hath now, and formerly been cleared from Gal. 2. 7.

13. Next, when from * Anſw. to Schiſm. Diſar. he cites me, telling him, that it needed no evidencing, and thereupon asks, Why I went about to evidence it? Schiſ. p. 70. l. 4.] I anſwer, he might ſee, if he would, that theſe were two things, that which I went about to evidence, was the Negative of the Queſtion of Peter's Univerſal Paſtourſhip: That which I ſaid, needed no evidencing, the Apoſtles going out not all to one, but diſpoſing themſelves to ſeveral Provinces; and what influence this had on my Argument, I have newly ſhewed.

* P. 38.

14. Thirdly, I am accuſed of terrible rigorouſneſs, and another Tragedy raiſed on that Head againſt my love of Novelty, reaching to my Folio Annotations on the Bible. And for what think you all this ſharpneſs? Why, that I advertiſed the Reader, that what he had borrowed from the ſhort notes of the Cath. Gent. was anſwered in my Reply to him: That this is the whole truth, I appeal to the Reader's own eyes, Anſw. p. 38. l. 15. Whether in that Reply I left any thing material unprevented, which dilating on the Cath. Gent. his grounds, he hath added in Sch. Diſ. I leave to the Reader's judgment: and ſo, whether there be any thing ſeaſonably added in his fourth charge.

15. For his harangue about interpreting Scripture (which is his fifth) my preſent intereſts ſuggeſt no other Reply, than that I think with him, that the circumſtances of each context are to be conſidered, as well as the Grammatical importance of the Word, or the uſe of it in other places; and onely contend at this time, that the Union of the two latter with the firſt, is the moſt convincing proof of the reaſonableneſs of my preſent interpretation. At another time it may not be amiſs to remember, that the circumſtances of the Context direct not always to any, or lie indifferent to ſeveral interpretations, and then the Grammatical importance of the word or phraſe, or the uſe of it in other places, muſt be the onely guides of the interpretation (reſerving always the due reſpect of all other places of Holy Writ, analogy of Faith, or Tradition truly Apoſtolical, and the judgment of the ancient Church, where theſe interpoſe) and in that caſe, to depart from theſe, muſt bring in all confuſion, diſturb all the Records and Evidences both of God and man; And therefore I muſt not conſent to this addition of his, that the beſt Authours (eſpecially when the diſcourſe was of the ſacred Penmen onely) may miſtake or be careleſs in the right uſe of a word] It had been more tolerable, if he had reſolved, that we judge not by their meaſures, are not acquainted with their dialect. But this is no place for theſe diſquiſitions of ſacred Criticiſm, which I think not to be any of S.W's faculties; for the main, I demand no more than he grants, to juſtify my Expoſition of κλῆρος and ἴδιος τόπος, and whatever elſe I have ſaid in thoſe Interpretations.

16. For his ſuggeſtions to the contrary, let us briefly view them. Firſt, ſaith he, Of their antecedent intent we have no other notice, than that they meant to make up the number of the Apoſtles by ſubſtituting one in the place of Judas, not to go to a leſſer Province, but to witneſs with them the reſurrection, which though all grant it was performed by going ſeveral ways, yet there is no ſuch thing there expreſt.] But 1. If the Apoſtleſhip was to be exerciſed by preaching to all Nations, and that could not be done but by going ſeveral ways, then then what need any more expreſſion, than that they met to chuſe one to a void place in the Apoſtleſhip to teſtify the Reſurrection? 2. Is not all that I pretend, competently expreſt v. 8. where Chriſt tells them, that after the Holy Ghoſt is come upon them, they ſhall be witneſſes to him both in Jeruſalem and Judæa, and Samaria, and to the uttermoſt parts of the earth? Here is mention of their going ſeveral ways, for ſure they were not every one to go to all theſe; and accordingly v. 17. conſideration is had, that Judas the Traitour had obtained κληρὸν τ῀ διακονίας τ῀υτης, a lot of this miniſtery, which is v. 20. his ἐπισκοπὴ Biſhoprick, and this ſo perfectly a ſeveral, that another is to be choſen to it, ἑλλειμμα ἀναπληρῶσθαι, as was ſaid, to fill up a vacuity, now he hath left it; and what can be more preparative to the chuſing Matthias to the κληρὸν διακονίας κ᾽ ἀποστολῆς τ῀υτης, in this notion of a particular and ſo leſſer Province, whither he ſhould betake himſelf to preach the Goſpel? 3. The neceſſity that Peter mentions, v. 22. that one muſt be ordained to be a witneſs of the Reſurrection, is a moſt proper preparative to it; For to what was it neceſſary, but to this of taking his Province, going his ſeveral way, to preach? Sure, not to make up the number of twelve men, πρὸς βεβαίωσιν, by ſuch a full Jury of teſtifiers, as an ἰσοπληθεία, to confirm and ſettle the truth; for 1. eleven might be competent for that. 2. There were many hundred ſuch witneſſes, that had ſeen him ſince the Reſurrection; and 3. There was no need of any election or ordination to qualify them to be fit teſtifiers; for 4. It was onely the power from on high, which brought with it the gift of tongues and miracles, that was ordained to fit them for that, and that was promiſed every one of them, and by that every one commenced a convincing teſtifier, though there had been never another in the world, συμμαρτυρεῖν, to teſtify with him. And then to what elſe was the choice of a twelfth neceſſary, but to this of undertaking the Province that belonged to this twelfth? and ſo this may well ſignifie their antecedent intent, contrary to S.W's ſuggeſtion.

17. He adds again by way of Objection to this, that the phraſe, v. 17. [he was numbred with us] ſignifies they had reflexions on the imperfectneſs of their number.] But I ask, To what uſes could their number of eleven, more than of twelve, be deemed imperfect, ſave onely in order to the quarter, whither he was to be ſent out to preach? and ſo ſtill that is the leſſer Province. But, ſaith he, Judas had not obtained a leſſer Province in his life.] I anſwer, 1. Judas had queſtionleſs his part in the Apoſtleſhip; and at a fit time, all ſuch were to go and preach over the world, as ſons are to inherit after their Fathers death, and ſo Judas ſhould have done, if he had continued faithfull, and ſo now another muſt in his ſtead, and to him that enters on it, and performs it, it is a leſſer Province, though to him it were not, that continued not to be capable of it; and though no man falls but from what he hath, in ſome ſenſe, yet we know he may fall from what he is not yet poſſeſt of; a diſcharded ſon falls from his inheritance which he never actually had, and in like manner another may ſucceed to his κληρος, and actually come to it, though he never did; and ſo did Matthias here, as he very well knows, for all his Sophiſtry.

18. Next he argues from the tranſaction it ſelf, and in that, he ſaith, There is nothing looks this way; I anſwer, The tranſaction it ſelf, is the chuſing and praying God to direct their choice of a fit perſon to a κληρὸς τ῀ διακονίας τ῀υτης, a lot of this, i. e. a particular Miniſtery, a void place or Province (as we ſay) that wanted one to fill it, and that is all I deſire from it. And to ſay, we ought in all reaſon to omit the phraſes in controverſie, is to appeal to a witneſs, and not to let him ſpeak, or not to ſtand to the words which are ſaid and plain, when yet 'tis acknowledged there are no other.

19. From the effect ſubſequent he argues alſo, which is, ſaith he, That Matthias was numbred with the eleven Apoſtles, anſwerable to v. 17. Judas was numbred with us: I anſwer, that his being numbred with them, v. 17. is interpreted by what there follows, he obtained a κληρὸς lot, or part of this miniſtery, and that is all that I pretend, and directly anſwerable to that is the effect, the lot fell, and he was numbred, the falling of the lot on him, is the ſettling of Judas's void place on him, and that moſt directly introduces his going to it, as to his ὁ τόπος ὁ ἴδιος, his peculiar apartment.

20. And now I have run through all his pretenſions, and ſhall willingly leave the Reader to judge, what one circumſtance reſiſts, nay whether all do not fully conſpire to confirm my interpretation, eſpecially when to the circumſtances of the intire Context, the nature and uſe of the words in other places do ſo exactly accord, that he hath not adventured to offer one leaſt exception againſt all that was ſaid on that Theme in the Reply, to which yet more inſtances have here been added, eſpecially that of Proclus, where James his being Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which ſure was a leſſer Province, is thus expreſt by τ῀ Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν ἐκκλησίας τ῀ κλῆρον λαχὼν, obtaining the lot of the Church of thoſe of Jeruſalem, and ſo alſo moſt of the Apoſtles going out to their partitions in Euſebius and Nicephorus.

21. But for the nature of the phraſe here, he asks 1. where I have read διακονία for a place of Miniſtery] I anſwer, he is very much out in his Criticiſm, for what need I make διακονία a place, as long as I ſuppoſe κληρὸς and τόπος to be a place, where his διακονία or Miniſtery is exerciſed? 2. He asks, What means τ῀τῆς] I anſwer, it means [this] which they were then ſpeaking of, which Judas had forfeited and left void by his Apoſtaſie. 3. He asks whether κληρὸς, &c. do not ſignify ἐπισκοπὴ, and whether that be not an office?] I anſwer, that an office is founded in, and hath a relation to a Province, and both thoſe together are there meant, and Matthias took both together. Now having briefly replied to all his demands, I ſhall add nothing to his Contumelies, but that I take this interpretation of mine to be, for the main, as to κληρὸς, ſo far from new, that I am not yet aware of a ſecond to S.W. that hath receded from my ſenſe of it, and for ἴδιος τόπος, we muſt leave that to the next Section.

SECT.

SECT. III.

The notion of ὁ τόπος ὁ ἴδιος, accused of singularity, D. Th. Jackson, Τόπος for Province, S. W's misrepresentations, Judas's being in hell, a secret not revealed by St. Peter. Chrysostome's Testimonies of Judas's τόπος. Παρεν θεσις δικη, Parentheses, Comma's, Charges of falsifying Scripture, what they signifie with S. W. Articles prepositive, emphatical: Another charge of falsifying Scripture. Of bragging, Προσδηναι εις τοπον.— S. W's acknowledgment of Scripture being the ground of faith.

1. HIs third Section is spent on τὸ τόπον τὸ ἴδιον, his own or proper place,] Act. 1. 25. which he must needs have to signifie Judas's own place in hell, but I, it seems, was so bold to imagine that it signified, Matthias's proper place or assignation for the witnessing the Resurrection, and proclaiming the Faith or doctrine of Christ to the world: Thus he sets down the state and terms of the controversie between us, and I consent to his setting it, and leave it to be indifferently judged, what Trophees shall be found here due to him, seeing he is at leisure to return to this Contention again, when he knows, that if he were yielded the Conquerour, he gains but the ἆθλον of the Olympick games, a Crown of leaves onely, not the least solid advantage to his Universal Pastourship, no kind of interest of mine, having any dependance on my interpretation of this phrase.

2. And first, saith he, Others, and among them the Cathol. Gent. and S. W. nay even all the Protestants, as far as he can hear, except D. H. make account it signifies Judas his own place in hell, and that 'tis absolutely impossible it should signifie in that place a lesser province, as D. H. would have it.] Here are two things assumed, the singularity, and the absolute impossibility of my interpretation.

3. I shall say somewhat of the former. 1. That I confess I have oft heard that Mr White hath expresst great indignation at D. H. for his interpretation of this place, and that S. W. is a profest admirer of him, and of the Cath. Gent. and therefore the authorities of these three will amount to little more than of any one of them, and so are of no great weight in this matter; and for his others if they are more than these, he is so reserved as not to name them, and I shall imitate him so far as not to consider them.

4. Secondly, For Protestants, 'twere strange if they should be of authority with him, or if he should so much as hear what they think of this, or other the like places; When he promises to be moved by their suffrages, I may help him to some more; In the mean time I shall commend to him one as modest and learned and universally esteemed as any of his time, * D. Th. Jackson, and he voucheth it also from another (whether Protestant or Papist I cannot be assured, seeing he no otherwise names him, than that he is a learned Critick of our times in matters sacred) who points (with a comma after Ἰούδας,) and interprets this verse to this sense, that he that took part of the ministration and Apostleship, from which Judas had fallen, might be sent that circuit, which Judas had he not fallen, should have gone. * Tr. of the Holy Cath. Church. p. 58.

5. From this Learned man 'tis near forty years since I received this interpretation in his publick readings in that University, wherein I had my education, and from that day I never heard the least objection or exception against it, which made the alarm of the Cath. Gent. and advertisements of Mr. White's vehement dislikes, the greater surprisal to me.

6. If this will not a while allay his indignation, and satyre at my singular (as he supposed) interpretation, I shall refer him to those greater names that were produced in the Answ. to Sch. Dis. p. 39. and proceed to his second more eager impression, that 'tis absolutely impossible it should in that place signifie a lesser province.] But sure it implies not any contradiction (and I know nothing else absolutely impossible) to say that ὁ τόπος ὁ ἴδιος signifies a lesser province, or that it signifies so in that place, when both a province is a place, and the word τόπος place is not rarely used in that sense of a province, witness the Title of τοπαρχίαι Toparchies, for governments of Provinces, in Josephus frequently, and in many other good Authours; Witness † Ignatius's ἐν τόπῳ χωρίς Ῥωμαίων, in the place, i. e. Province of the Region of the Romans; and the Epistle under the name of * Anacletus, In capite provinciarum, ipsis quoque in civitatibus vel locis nostris Patriarchas vel Primates: In the head of the Provinces, and in our Cities or places, Patriarchs or Primates were constituted; and when ὁ ἴδιος being the confining a common to an incloſure, a general to a peculiar and particular, must needs import a lesser of that kind which is spoken of: If then a plain proper direct paraphrase be an unreconcileable contradiction, S. W. hath affirmed with some reason at this time the absolute impossibility; but if not, we may be allowed ἐπέχειν to demur of the demonstrativeness of his dictates. For 2. As to this place, that no circumstance hinders, whether from the antecedent intent, transaction it self, or consequent effect, but that it may signifie as I would have it, hath (I hope) been competently shewed in the last Section. If it have not, yet I am sure nothing was suggested against it by S. W. which can prove it to imply any contradiction, such as may found his absolute impossibility, which is now before us, and so there is the breviate of his great feats and successes in this matter. † In Tit. Ep. ad Rom. * Ep. 2. ad Epi. Ital.

7. After this, he descends to a view of my Reply, p. 53. and makes this strange repetition to it [His first argument, saith he, that it cannot signifie a place in hell, is drawn from the charitable opinion we ought to have of Judas, accusing the Cath. Gent. of uncharitableness for interpreting it so.] And then there is an advantage gotten toward the exercise of his gifts upon the Doctour. But in this short suggestion there are two discernable misrepresentations (and then it matters not what he seems to infer from them) The first, That my first argument pretends that it cannot signifie a place in hell, which 'tis evident it doth not, but on the contrary yields, That the * Cath. Gent. might have enjoyed his own judgment, without censuring them as blasphemers, that differed from him in expounding a difficult phrase. All that I there pretend is, that there is no inconvenience in mine; and when I produce that argument, it is onely in this style, that there is no indication in the context, that favours the other interpretation. Let that serve for his first affirmation. * Repl. p. 52, 53.

8. The ſecond is as cauſeleſs a miſrepreſentation alſo. For I no where once mention the charitable opinion that ought to be had of Judas, nor accuſe the Cath. Gent. of uncharitableneſs: I onely ſay of St. Peter (and that is not the Cath. Gent.) that it was ſufficient to ſay that which had been ſaid, verſ. 16, 17. 18, 19, &c. but he needed not to proceed to revealing of ſecrets, the ſadder conſequents which remained in arrear after death; and to that St. Chryſoſtome directed me, ἰδὲ τὸ φιλόσοφον τοῦ ἀνδρὸς, behold the Chriſtian carriage of the man, how he doth not reproach and inſult on him, but ſets down the fact ſimply, and his preſent vengeance; From no other words but theſe, S. W. that inveighs oft and bitterly againſt falſifying, will needs conclude that my argument is drawn from the charitable opinion, &c. and that I charge the Cath. Gent's uncharitableneſs: what truth or fairneſs there is in both theſe, let him now judge: The utmoſt of my ſpeech is, that Judas's being in hell, is a ſecret, and when he hath conſidered, that every man's final and eternal condition is reſerved onely to God's Tribunal, I hope he will give me liberty to leave thoſe dreadfull judgments on perſons, among the abſcondita Deo noſtro, and ſo to call them ſecrets; The ſon of perdition, I well know what it ſignifies, one that well deſerves to be deſtroyed, but that reſiſts not what I ſay, that his actual being in hell was a ſecret, that St. Peter needed not to reveal.

9. His next project is fetcht from the ſame mint: His ſecond argument, ſaith he, is drawn from St. Chryſoſtome's words (thoſe juſt now recited.) But when this was a branch of my firſt argument, how comes it to be called the ſecond? The deſign is viſible, to divide one into two, that each part taken alone may be the weaker. But what doth he object or reply to this teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtome, that St. Peter in this place ſets down the fact ſimply and his preſent vengeance? Hath not this force in it? Doth he that tells of tranſgreſſing to go to hell, ſet down the fact ſimply, and his preſent vengeance? All that he hath to ſay is, that I annex my Corollary, that ſure the preſent vengeance is it which befell him in this world, and then he ſcoffs at the weightineſs of the argument, as if any ſpace intervened betwixt wicked mens death and their being in hell, and to this applies Pſal. 55. 16. Let them go quick into hell, which, ſaith he, expreſſes a vengeance preſent enough, and earlier than their vengeance in this world, to wiſh them in hell before they are dead.] But to all this I anſwer by asking, 1. Whether Chryſoſtome did not mean by παρὸν δικὴν preſent puniſhment, that which befell him in this world? If ſo, then 2. Why might not I ſay, Sure he did? What needed I farther accumulation of Arguments to prove that which is already evident? And 3. How could this miſs of being an argument of weight, that in that Father's judgment thus it was; and therefore was no ſingular conceit of mine? To this I ſhall now farther add, that it may by that Father's uſe of that phraſe [Judas's place] be competently diſcerned, whether he favour S. W's interpretation for his place in hell. I refer him to two paſſages, firſt on Act. 1. 16. where he mentions praying to Chriſt, that he would give, εἰς τὸν τόπον Ἰούδα τινὰ, ſome body into the place of Judas, ſure not to go to hell after him, or in his ſtead, but to fill up his place in the College of Apoſtles; The ſecond on v. 26. προσῆκεν ἕτερον προβάλλεσθαι, ὥστε μάρτυρα γενέσθαι εἰς τὸν ἐκεῖνου τόπον. It is fit another ſhould be advanced, that he might be a witneſs in his, i. e. Judas's place. Was this his place in hell, or in the Church of Chriſt? 4. The onely queſtion being, whether his going to hell were mentioned, what matters it to conſider how little ſpace intervenes between the death of wicked men and their being in hell? The pious man's paradiſe may as immediately attend his death, yet when our Saviour ſpeaks of their preſent reward (the hundred-fold more in this life) it is evident he ſpeaks not of the glory after death, but leaves to that the ſtyle of [in the world to come everlaſting life] and ſo ſure muſt St. Chryſoſtome alſo, when he ſpeaks of preſent vengeance, oppoſe it to that future in another world. 5. The Pſalmiſt's expreſſion of going quick into hell, I always underſtood in relation to the fate of ſuch as Corah, being ſwallowed up alive with the opening of the earth, the word Scheol there (as frequently) ſignifying the earth or grave. But whatever it is, it cannot, with this circumſtance, be appliable to Judas who ſure took death in his way to his future ſtate, and ſo ſtill his hell was his future and not his preſent vengeance, and could not by St. Chryſoſtome be meant by that ſtyle.

10. In the next place he would fain refute my ſuppoſal of a parentheſis, to include thoſe words [from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell] and 1. calls this pounding up, &c. and confutes that by ſaying it is too hard dealing: I anſwer, the ſame objection holds equally againſt all parentheſes in Scripture, and all other authours, i. e. well nigh againſt every leaf in every book in the world. 2. He would know my meaning when I ſay, it needs no more formal expreſſion than by putting a comma after Ἰούδας, and then adds the diſtinction between a Parentheſis, and that which is within comma's, that what is within comma's cannot oftentimes be omitted without maiming the ſenſe.] But I anſwer, that what always is not, ſometimes is, and what but oftentimes maims, may as often not maime, and then the Parentheſis, and that within comma's, is all one, and ſo, I ſuppoſe, it is here, and ſo we are agreed in that matter. But, ſaith he, how muſt a comma put after Ἰούδας, needs make his interpretation ſo clear and unavoidable, ſince many put the comma there, and never dream of that.] I anſwer, that I cannot give account of all mens dreams, or not dreaming, but yet think it likely, that they that put the comma as I put it, and yet interpret otherwiſe than I interpret, doe it upon the liberty (which even now he obſerved) that what is within the comma's, ſometimes it is read in ſome kind of conjunction with the neighbouring words; But then ſeeing oftimes this is otherwiſe (as his reſtrictive term [oftentimes] acknowledged) I that meant it ſo here, and expreſt that to be my meaning, by making the comma after Judas, equivalent to a parentheſis, needed not require any more but that, to render my interpretation unavoidable.

11. But after all this, there is a terrible flaw found in D. H. when he comes to reducing his doctrine of comma's to practice, for there, ſaith he, his words are [to receive the lot of his Miniſtery and Apoſtleſhip (from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell) to go or that he may go to his proper place] where, ſaith he, to omit that he takes now the liberty of a formally expreſt parentheſis, though while he was begging it of us he ſeemed willing to be contented with a comma onely, to omit this, he will ask why I change the word this miniſtery into his? If I be loth to anſwer, S. W. will doe it for me, and accordingly he will render no leſs than four reaſons for it, each of weighty importance, and then there is a falſification of Scripture for his Index (by good luck the firſt he had obſerved) and there we have it noted to this, p. 194.

and

and then my candour and my Saintſhip, and my profeſſing, Anſwer. p. 18. to ſpeak the whole truth of God, are ſeverely to be arraigned, and the poor Doctour for ever paradigmatized for a falſifier even of Scripture. But the hope is, the Reader will not have loſt his eyes and patience quite in all this duſt and clamour, but make uſe of the firſt to reade in my * words, what it was that I had begged, viz. the omiſſion of a parentheſis in that paſſage; adding that that might be well done without more formal expreſſion of it, than putting a comma after Ἰούδας, as 'tis already in the printed copies.] If then this which I demanded (and gave this reaſon for, that the Printed Copies already had it, and ſo it was already granted me by them) were thus, as I propoſed, admitted, it muſt follow that the parentheſis were admitted, and then what could hinder this practice of my Doctrine, the putting thoſe words in a parentheſis? This may briefly ſerve for that which he would ſeem willing to omit. * Repl. p. 53. l. 26.

12. As for that which he muſt not omit to mention, and that with pomp enough, and ſo I am obliged to account for it to the Reader, I ſhall hope it will be no vaſt exerciſe of his patience, when I aſſure him that it was the Printer, not I, that for [this] ſet [his] (if indeed he ſo ſet it, for to me it ſeems probable by the diſtance of [his] from [of] that the [t] was ſunk ſo low as to miſs making impreſſion) and that it was not reformed in the Errata, the account is as obvious, either that the difference was ſo light, that it paſt the obſervation of the Collectour of them, or that bare literal errours were conceived ſuch, that every Reader's pen would eaſily amend, and none but S. W. interpret to be falſifications of Scripture.

13. This being the place that hath the honour of precedence in his Index under that title of Falſifications, and thoſe of Scripture, I muſt beſeech the Reader to take notice what things they are that fall with him under this brand, the Printers omitting but one letter; and yet this, and ſuch like, are the means * which wit and art can invent, and ſo his zeal is obliged to make uſe of, to defame his brethren: His Index directs me to another in the very next page 195. and ſo again 196, 197. The former of theſe muſt here be conſidered, though what it is, truly I cannot tell, onely the competition ſeems to be betwixt two, one of which muſt be a falſification of Scripture, the other a falſe pretence from Scripture, for theſe are two ſtyles, and p. 195, noted to them both, the firſt is, that I, ſaith he, change the words of our own tranſlation [that he might go] into [that he may go] the ſecond, that I ſay that a comma after Ἰούδας, is already in the printed Copies.] To which of theſe the falſification of Scripture belongs, I ſhall not divine, the other charge is equivalent, and I am ſure they are equally guilty of either, but that of the comma ſeems to be repreſented by him as moſt liable, becauſe he ſaith [it is neither in the printed Copies of Stephanus nor Arias Montanus] and [the Printed Copies import it is ſo in all] But I anſwer, that my Logick hath taught me that an indefinite propoſition is in materia contingenti equivalent to a particular, not to an univerſal, and he yields that ſome printed Copies have the comma, and of the many, vouches but two to the contrary, and ſo I might truly ſay, the printed Copies, and having them for my defence, I hope I have not added ſo much as a comma to the Scripture, and then if their own Popes and Cardinal Cajetan have not fallen under the fault of falſifying Scripture, by various readings, or correcting of tranſlations, I am ſecure from the brand of his 195 page. Meanwhile, there is another eſſay what the ſtyle falſification of Scripture] in his Index ſignifies. * P. 11.

14. To my third (which he calls fourth) argument, that hell, the common place of the wicked, cannot fitly be expreſt by ſuch a double emphaſis as is ἴδιον τόπον τὸν ἴδιον, he anſwers, firſt by denying that there is a double emphaſis, the firſt τὸν, ſaith he, being nothing but a plain prepoſitive article.] But I reply, firſt, That prepoſitive Articles are oft emphatical, as ὁ λόγος and ὁ Χριστὸς, the word and the Chriſt, and then why ſhould not τὸν τόπον by analogy be the place, and that is emphatical though prepoſitive. But then 2. If the double emphaſis will not be concluded from the double ἴδιον, I hope it may from the addition of τὸν ἴδιον] his own] applied to τὸν τόπον] carrying one emphaſis in its nature, τὸν τόπον ἴδιον his own place] being emphatically his, and then τὸν ſuperadded to that, is the double emphaſis.

15. He hath two anſwers more; one, That Judas had a ſpecial title to hell, another that he hath a proper place of his own there.] But I think neither of theſe ſufficient to own the double emphaſis, or make it fit to affirm, that Hell, the common place of all wicked men, was by the Apoſtle pronounced to be Judas's ὁ τόπος ὁ ἴδιος, the place, the proper place of him. However the difference is diſcernable in this particular, between the appliableneſs of theſe words to Judas, and to Matthias. Matthias's τόπος or province where he is to preach, is ſo his, as it is no bodies elſe, no other Apoſtle is ſent to preach there; But hell, if that be allowed Judas's τόπος or place, is not ſo his, as that no body elſe goes to it but he. And ſo when Judas goes to the common place or receptacle of all the damned, and onely, hath a place of his own there by a ſpecial Title, Matthias may go with an emphaſis to the particular province particularly aſſigned to him and to no body elſe. That he may, is all that I demand, I do not aſſume to demonſtrate every minute, nor need I at this time ſecure this as the undoubted ſenſe of the place, if it be not improbable, it will ſerve my turn abundantly, againſt him that affirms it abſolutely impoſſible, and ſo ſtill I may be competently armed to come into the liſts with S. W. how faſtidiouſly ſoever he concludes that Paragraph.

16. My laſt argument he hath onely recited, That it is not near ſo proper to ſay, he ſin'd to go to hell, as that the other was choſen and ſurrogated into Judas's place to go to preach to ſuch a quarter of the world.] The truth of this he confeſſes, and yields more than I demanded, that 'tis ſo far from proper, that 'tis abſurd and non-ſenſe, and then arraigns my maimed and corrupt rendring, he ſinned to go to hell;] and then the good Reader is again required to obſerve my profeſt ſincerity and earneſt deſire to ſpeak the truth of God, whilſt I purpoſely annihilate God's word, which is his truth, firſt gag it, next cut out its tongue, and then without more adoe, no leſs than two pages 196. and 197. muſt accompany the two former, and be noted in the Index for the diſcovery of falſifications of Scripture. But when his feigned rage is over, I ſhall advertiſe him, that by his favour I did not at all aſſume to render the period at that time, but onely recited the double pretending ſenſe of it, as briefly as I might, to give the Reader (that by the frequent repetition in the foregoing lines, and by my rendring before as he would have it, as himſelf confeſſes in this Paragraph, knew the intire period well enough) the full importance of S. W's notion of it: and in ſo doing, I am not yet convinced, that I have in the leaſt offended, whilſt in his diſguiſe I am one of the fouleſt miſcreants in the world: For if Judas παρέβη prevaricated from his Apoſtolacy (ſo S.W. approves the rendring) to go to hell, then ſure he ſinned to go to hell; to prevaricate ſimply is to ſin, and ſo to prevaricate from an office or duty: In like manner, departing and going aſide, which are the reſt of S. W's Synonyma for the ſame phraſe) I ſhould rather have ſaid, apoſtatiſing (for ſo παραβάτης is an Apoſtate, and Judas as well as Julian may own the Title) ſpecially when it is departing from ones office or duty, is queſtionleſs ſinning, onely ſinning is the ſhorter word, and therefore I uſed it, but ſhall now, on his admonition, exchange it for his larger expreſſion, and appeal to the Reader, as before I did, whether it be near ſo proper to ſay, Judas prevaricated from his Apoſtleſhip to go to hell, as that Matthias was choſen to Judas's place to go to ſuch a quarter. However, I hope the latter of theſe, for which I am concerned, is not abſolutely impoſſible (and that is as much as I need ask againſt S.W.) and ſo ſtill this is all he hath gained by theſe loudeſt clamours.

17. Thus much for his Animadverſions on the Reply to the Cath. Gent. in this matter; Now becauſe in my Anſw. to Schiſ. Diſp. to allay his diſpleaſure for the novelty of my interpretation, I had produced ſome teſtimonies of the Ancients, and even ſome of his own ſide, ſome to approve, and ſome to teſtify that my ſenſe was not novel, he muſt exerciſe his diſcipline on this. And his method is, firſt to tell the Reader, I brag that theſe teſtimonies are juſt the ſame with the Doctours, meaning my ſelf] and that this is a Pyrgopolynices humour to brag that mine and thoſe are juſt the ſame.] Where again I am to ſeek whereon the bragging is faſtened; whether on uſing the word Doctour, which I confeſs I have ſometimes done, both in the Title Page and other places of the Book, but was never done before, but by a Quaker, that this was bragging; or whether it was for ſaying, my interpretation was juſt the ſame with thoſe ancient Scholiaſts (which is all he hath mentioned to own the charge) or whether it be for ſome expreſſions he hath not repeated, as that I asked, Would ever any have thought, that all theſe ſhould have been thus adventurous to mention ſuch a blaſphemous interpretation? If this were bragging, I muſt ſubmit to that cenſure, rather than lie under the greater vanity of affecting ſingularity and novelty; but for the Pyrgopolynices humour, i.e. the aſſuming to have conquered many forts, I cannot well be deemed guilty of that, who confeſs I have had none ſuch to aſſault, ſince I was acquainted with S.W.

18. His ſecond project is to repeat the Teſtimonies, and becauſe none of them mentioned the phraſe [leſſer Province] therefore to conclude that they are nothing at all to my purpoſe, but ſo perfect an abuſiveneſs to my Readers, that will be able ever hereafter to diſhearten my beſt friends from crediting—— But I muſt demand that Juſtice, 1. That it be remembred, what the preſent queſtion is between S. W. and me; I interpret the phraſe πορεύθηναι εἰς τὸν τόπον τὸν ἴδιον, to go to his own place, of Matthias his going to his own or proper place, or aſſignation, for witneſſing the Reſurrection. The Cath. Gent. and after him S.W. pronounce this to be a blaſphemous explication, a relinquiſhing the ſenſe of the whole Catholick World; and now, no leſs than a double blaſphemy, a fair inlet to all Atheiſm, and muſt needs have it applied to Judas's going to hell: If then the Authours, whoſe Teſtimonies I have brought, underſtand the words of Matthias and not of Judas, as every one of the four evidently do; Is not this a ſufficient proof, that all the whole Catholick World doth not apply it to Judas? and again, that unleſs theſe were guilty of the double blaſphemy and Atheiſm, I was not guilty? Doth all the blaſphemy lie hid in the phraſe [leſſer Province] is that the onely mormo, without addition of which I had been innocent?

Of Schiſ. p. 71. l. 1.

19. Secondly, Though three of theſe Scholiaſts proceed no farther than to interpret ἴδιον τόπον his own place to be that place which Matthias ſhould obtain, the Epiſcopacy, the place or order of a Biſhop, yet the ordinary gloſs expounding the whole phraſe, reads, ut abiret in locum ſuum, i.e. ſortem Apoſtolicam, [d] that he might go to his own place, [of] i.e. the Apoſtolical Lot, and this was it which I ſaid was juſt the ſame with the Doctours; having ſaid of the former, that they were perfectly to my ſenſe; and for both theſe I now render my reaſon (though before I apprehended it not needfull) taken from the πορεύθηναι, to go] applied to Matthias. For taking it of Matthias, as it is evident all four take it, what other ſenſe can [going to his own place] bear, than that of going to a particular aſſignation? The office of Apoſtle, ſaith S.W. But firſt, how is that ἴδιος τόπος (either with, or even without the emphaſis) is that his own, or proper, or peculiar place, which is common to eleven more? Or again ſecondly, How is that a place to which he ſhould go? Can the going be referred to any thing but the going to preach the Reſurrection, which was the very end of the Election of a twelfth, v. 22. and can he go for this end to τὸν τόπον τὸν ἴδιον, the place, the proper or own place, in any other notion than that I contend for, and to which all Hiſtorians ſay he (as the reſt alſo) went, i.e. every man to his ſeveral Region? and then that is the very leſſer Province, that S.W. is all this while ſo vehemently diſpleaſed with. I now appeal to the Reader, friend or enemy, what perfect piece of abuſiveneſs this is, how blaſphemous to the honour due to God's Word, or to the Faith? The double blaſphemy which now (to make me amends) he hath faſtened upon it, and with great earneſtneſs proved for two Pages together, and then ſolemnly gibitted, in his Index, for two Blaſphemies againſt Faith and the ground of Faith, with what colour of Juſtice let him now judge: All that I ſhall farther note, is, that (for once) it ſeems the Scripture is made the ground of Faith (and then what is become of his onely Ground, the Oral Tradition of the preſent Church?) or elſe the Satyr and Index are not found in the ſame tale. And ſo much for his third Section.

SECT.

SECT. IV.

S. W's Challenge and high displeasure, and strange proof of my Confession. As strange of my contradicting my self, and denying my own words. More testimonies of the distribution of the Gentiles to Saint Paul, the Jews to Saint Peter: Clemens, Chrysostome, Jerome, Eucherius, Baronius, Epiphanius. S. W's strange dealing. Of medling with a Gentile. My nine self-contradictions cleared, And his Arts discovered, The unlimitedness of Commission from Christ is no proof of Universality of Jurisdiction.

1. HIS fourth Section is after the image of Jehu's driving, with incredible vehemence, and incitation, resolved to cast all that is ill (nine self-contradictions is the least part of it) into his Chancery-bill.

2. To this purpose he first recites a challenge which he had formerly made, and then without more adoe, this he calls a most grievous, heavy, and unheard-of charge, a fault gross, palpable, visible to the eye of every Reader; then again the Reader must reflect on the grievousness of the charge, and make full account there must be (no less than) most open knavery, and perfect voluntary unsincerity on one side or other, and it being easily supposable, that this is not by him designed as a piece of shrift, an act of confession and accusation of himself, it remains fairly at my door, and I must take it in good part, having, if S. W. may be believed, my self confest in my Reply and Answer.

3. What I have there confest, he hath not punctually expressed, but leaves the Reader to collect, who cannot reasonably understand it of other than of the whole charge, and that is no less than most open knavery. If I shall now demand in what part of my Reply or Answer, I have made this so strange confession, he is so reserved, as to point to none, but contents himself with the general assertion: D. H. himself hath confest in his Reply and Answer. If I demand what my words are, wherein this confession is made, all that I can hear of, is, that seeing it impossible to shew any one word in all that army of Testimonies which I mustered up there, limiting Saint Peter's jurisdiction to the Jews, or excluding it from the Gentiles, which yet was there pretended, I have recourse for my justification, to the most unpardonable shift that ever was suggested by a desperate cause, viz. to deny that I meant exclusiveness of Jurisdiction. But where do I deny I meant that? No least direction is afforded for that neither; And this is S. W's method of bringing in, and proving his charges.

4. Had there been any such expres words in either of those Books (as I know there is not any) 'tis not imaginable, that he that can set down page and line so distinctly elsewhere, would here, where so great a weight is set upon the particular, as is not I think on any in the whole Book, have omitted it; and had there been any, though not expres, yet dark phrase, from which his Limbeck could have extracted it, one would have thought that he that can doe miracles that way, should have vouchsafed us an experiment of his art, and pointed out the place from whence he was resolved to extort this denial: And even this would have stood us in some stead, for by seeing the words, on which the charge was laid, the Reader would also have had some guess at the designed meaning of them, and discerned how far and in what sense I denied, and in what I granted exclusiveness of Jurisdiction. In the second Section he told me I call them exclusive Provinces, but told me not where, and I that had no-where used that very phrase, but some other words very near it, have never averted his expression, but oft told him what I meant by those words, and how my argument was founded in that understanding of them; and because he can have no exception to this, he will outface the Reader, that I deny my own words, and then am guilty of open knavery, and 'tis mercy that M. Dailles portion from M. White, is not mine from S. W. of impudent lying knave; and what fence can the perfectest innocence have against such flails as this?

5. In this case the utmost that I think can be expected from me, in answer to so foul a charge, is,

1. To give some account of that his former challenge.
2. To set down from the Tr. of Sch. my words concerning exclusive Provinces and Jurisdictions.
3. To manifest my constant accord with them both in my Reply and Answer.
4. To give my plain meaning of this, such as wherein my argument is founded, and against which his exceptions produced have no force.
5. To add, if there should need, or however to cast in ex abundanti, somewhat more to confirm the truth of my sole pretention in this matter.

6. For the first then, that challenge was given in Schis. Dis. p. 52. That if among those many Testimonies there be but found any one sentence, line, word, syllable or letter, which excludes St. Peter's authority from the Gentiles, more than what I put in of my own head, he would yield the whole controversie.] To this my * Answer was, In these words, what follows there of the agreement made between St. Peter and St. Paul concerning the division of their Provinces, the one to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, and is matter to S. W. of such challenge and triumph, is cleared in the same Chap. of the Reply, Sect. 3, 4. to be a mistake in him, and all that I pretend, manifested from Scripture, to which I now add the plain words of St. Ambrose——] setting down much more to confirm the truth of what I had said, and the reconcileableness of it with St. Peter's acknowledged preaching to Cornelius. * P. 39.

7. Here it is evident, why I gave no farther answer to his challenge, having (as I thought) sufficiently forestalled it in my Reply to the Cath. Gent. and what then could be required more of me, than to refer him to the place, which I did accordingly? And yet it falls out, that the Disarmer being pleased † again to repeat his challenge, though upon a strange mistake of some words of mine; I * did, for all that, so far answer it, as to offer him three of those places, from whence I doubted not to infer the conclusion, that in Rome it self, St. Peter's Jurisdiction was restrained to the Jews onely, and exclusively to the Gentiles. How well those places conclude it, belongs not to this place to consider, where the onely concernment is, what return hath been made to his challenge. Let this serve for the first Point, where I hope the fault is not so gross or palpable, nor the Doctour liable to the grievous heavy unheard-of charge. † P. 73. * Answ. p. 502.

Sect. 2.

8. Secondly, Then for my words in the Tr. of Schiſ. they muſt needs be thoſe which were juſt now recited from the Tr. of Schiſ. p. 70. l. 5. It is evident by Scripture, that this Apoſtle Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion or Jews, excluſively to the Uncircumciſion or Gentiles, which were generally another's Province; and again, p. 71. l. 5. The Circumciſion or Jews, were peculiarly St. Peter's Province, the lot or diviſion aſſigned to him; and again, the Chriſtians of that age being either Jews or Gentiles, the Jews thoſe that remained in their Country, or that were diſperſed in other Regions, there was but one portion of one of theſe which can reaſonably be placed under St. Peter's juriſdiction. Again, p. 73. l. 18. the Uncircumciſion or Gentile Chriſtians were not St. Peter's Province, but peculiarly St. Paul's, and other the like. Thus near I have approached to the phraſe excluſive Provinces or juriſdiction.

9. Now for the third, the manifeſtation of my conſtant accord with theſe, both in my Reply and Anſwer; I refer the Reader, 1. To the Reply, Ch. 4. Sect. 3. n. 3. in theſe words; The Poſition which is here ſaid to be ſo directly againſt Scripture, was to my underſtanding the expreſs affirmation of Scripture it ſelf, naming Gal. 11. 7. What the Poſition is, muſt be learnt from the Cath. Gent. (to whom the Reply is made) in theſe words, He telleth us firſt, that Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion excluſively to the uncircumciſed or Gentiles. And then after a few lines, His poſition is directly againſt Scripture:] What now can be plainer? What I had firſt ſaid in Tr. of Sch. was evident by Scripture, in the Reply I ſay (in expreſs oppoſition to him) was to my underſtanding the expreſs affirmation of Scripture it ſelf, and recite the words whence I conclude it, and confirm that ſenſe of them; Is this to deny that I meant excluſiveneſs of Juriſdiction? So again, n. 5. ſpeaking of diſtribution by agreement of Fellow-commoners, to which I reſemble this, I ſay, that the proportion of one is ſo his, that it belongs to no other, that part his, excluſive to any other part, his ſtanding to any ſuch diviſion cuts him out, and ſo excludes him from any farther right; and in the application, the Jews are become S. Peter's peculiar, or portion, or Province, and that ſo his, as the Gentiles were not his, adding, and that I expreſt by that phraſe, Peter was the Apoſtle to the Jews excluſively to the Uncircumciſion. Here again the very words recited and owned, and ſo certainly not denied either in ſound or ſenſe: Then n. 7. and 9. I ſhew how Peter's preaching to Cornelius was very competible with my Poſition, and prevented in the Tr. of Sch. by the clear explication of my meaning, which is ſo far from denying, that it is the vindicating it: Then n. 8. reflecting on the Tr. of Sch. I ſay, I have already expreſt how far this agreement extends, and how far excluſive it is; and I hope that is adhering to what I ſaid before, and no denying it. So again, Sect. 5. n. 4. It hath already been cleared, in what ſenſe the Apoſtle of the Gentiles——was ſo peculiarly or excluſively to the Jews, and n. 5. The argument drawn from hence, that in the Text to the Gal. there is no word of excluſion, is of little force; If there were any agreement and diviſion, and ſeveral aſſignation of Provinces, it muſt follow, that what was ſaid to be one man's Province, is his ſo, as it is not the others, and ſo peculiarly, and ſo, as far as that agreement holds, excluſively his. Thus much for the Reply, which ſure hath been guilty of no tergiverſation, retracted nothing that had been before ſaid, and when will S. W. make ſatisfaction for the injuſtice of this ſuggeſtion, and the groſſeſt contumelies affixt to it?

10. Turn then to the Anſwer to Schiſ. Diſarm. and ſee whether that can yield him any relief, ch. 3. ſ. 4. n. 4. there you have theſe words; What follows of the agreement made between S. Peter and S. Paul concerning the diviſion of their Provinces, the one to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, and is matter to S. W. of ſuch challenge and triumph, is cleared in the Reply to be a miſtake in him, and all that I pretend, manifeſted from Scripture; To which I now add the plain words of S. Ambroſe.—No more diſclaiming here, it ſeems, than was in the Reply, where it hath appeared to be aſſerted, and yet farther proofs here brought to the confirming (and that ſure is not the denying) it: So n. 6. I ſaid——That the Circumciſion was peculiarly S. Peter's Province or diviſion aſſigned to him; and again, When I ſay, Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion excluſively to the Uncircumciſion, the meaning is evident, that he was ſo the Apoſtle of the one as he was not of the other, or as Paul was and is in Scripture ſaid to be of the other. Thus much alſo from the Anſwer joined with the Reply in the Charge, and equally removed from all degree of guilt of it, and that will ſuffice for the third ſtep.

11. As for the fourth, my full meaning in this point, &c. it hath ſo oft, and was now again ſo lately ſet down, Sect. 2. n. 6. that I have no more to doe, than to refer the Reader to what hath formerly been ſaid; The ſhort of it is this (he knows it well enough) that as in the diviſion of the whole world into Provinces, ſome part of the Jews of the diſperſion were S. Peter's Province; Some John's, &c. and the Gentiles (though he could not move to all of them) peculiarly aſſigned (by Chriſt immediately) to be S. Paul's, ſo thoſe two Apoſtles, and James, conferring with Paul and Barnabas, Gal. 2. agreed that (when they met in the ſame City) one ſhould betake themſelves to the Jews, and the other to the Gentiles, and from thence came the ſeveral cœtus of Jews and Gentiles in the ſame Cities.

12. Now for the fifth ſtep propoſed, though that be no way needfull, to vindicate me from the preſent charge, nor to confirm the truth farther; yet to ſhew how little 'tis my intereſt or inclination to renounce what I have thus hitherto affirmed, I ſhall ex abundanti caſt in a few more teſtimonies, as an auctarium to thoſe in the Anſw. p. 39, 40. to avouch all that I pretend in this matter: And 1. Clemens in * Euſebius ſpeaking of S. Paul's Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and reaſons why he prefixt not his name, Paul an Apoſtle——as in other Epiſtles, this for one is rendred from one of the Ancients, ἐπεὶ ὁ Κύριος ἀπόστολος ὢν παντοκράτορος, ἀπέσταλη πρὸς Ἑβραίους, διὰ μετριότητα ὁ Παῦλος ὡς ἂν εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἀπεσταλκὼς, οὐκ ἐγγράφει ἑαυτὸν Ἑβραίων Ἀπόστολον, διά τε τὸ πρὸς τὸν Κύριον τιμᾶν, διά τε τὸ ἐκ περισσοῦ καὶ τοῖς Ἑβραίοις ἐπιστέλλειν ἔθνων κήρυκα ὄντα καὶ Ἀπόστολον, Seeing Chriſt being the Apoſtle of the Almighty, was ſent to the Hebrews, Paul through modeſty, as being the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, inſcribes not himſelf Apoſtle of the Hebrews, both for honour to the Lord, and becauſe it was beſide, or pertained not to his office to write to the Hebrews, being Preacher and Apoſtle of the Gentiles. This † Tertullian calls officii diſtributio, diſtribution of their office, whilſt both retained the unity of the preaching, or ſociety of the Goſpel. Next * S. Chryſoſtome, Τὸς μὲν Ἰουδαίους ἐπίστρεψε τῷ Πέτρῳ, τοῖς τε Ἕλλησι διὰ Παύλου ἀπέστειλεν ὁ Χριστὸς, Chriſt committed the Jews to Peter, but conſtituted Paul over the Gentiles, and one of theſe, ſaith he, † κατὰ διαστολὴν, by way of oppoſition to the other, (ſo * elſewhere in this matter Ἰουδαίων λαὸν ἀπιδιαστέλλων τοῖς ἔθνεσι, contradiſtinguiſhing the people of the Jews to the Gentiles) and this, ſaith he, † after the manner of a wiſe King, which commits the horſemen to one, and the command of the foot, to another: So, ſaith he, Chriſt divided his army into two parts, and committed the

* L. 6. καφ. 1δ.

† Adver. Marcion. l. 1. c. 20.

* Hom. in Gal. 2. 11. Tom. 5. p. 403. l. 18.

† L. 23.

* Tom. 3. p. 729. l. 22.

† Tom. 5. p. 403. l. 26.

Jews

Jews to Peter, and the Gentiles to Paul; and the reason of this œconomy he † at large renders: So * again speaking in the persons of the three Apostles and of Paul, ἐν τῷ κηρύγματι διειλάμεθα τὸν οἰκεῖον, κἀγὼ μὲν τοὺς ἐξ ἐθνῶν, ἐκεῖνοι δὲ τοὺς Ἰουδαίους ἔλαβον, καὶ τὸ τῷ θεῷ δοκοῦν, We have divided the world in preaching, and I received those that came from the Gentiles, and they the Jews, according to that which pleased God. So † S. Hierome, Providentia Dei alius Apostolus circumcisis datus est, alius in præputio constitutis, by God's providence one Apostle was given to the Jews, another to the Gentiles; and proposing this Question, whether then Peter might not, if he found a Gentile, or Paul a Jew, bring him to the Faith, he solves it, (as I should) by granting he might, and saying, that the principal mandate was given to each, to one over the Jews, to the other over the Gentiles, that those that defended the Law, might have whom to follow, and that there might not want a Doctour, and one to go before them that prefer grace before it; both meanwhile joining in one common purpose of gathering a Church of all Nations: So * Eucherius Lugdunensis, Electi duo præcipui ad duorum populorum salutem, Petrus ad Judæorum, Paulus ad Gentium, Two principal persons were elected to the saving of two people; Peter to the Jews, Paul to the Gentiles.

† p. 404. &c.
* Tom. 3. p. 729. l. 24.
† In Gal. p. 125.
* In Hom. in Nat. Petri & Pauli.

13. Instead of more of this kind from the Ancients, take their own Baronius in several passages; First, of Antioch, that † though the dispersed Disciples spake not the word to any but the Jews, yet there was no small number of Jews there, from whom, though the door of faith were not opened to the Gentiles, a Noble Church might be gathered there, cui peculiariter præesset Petrus Apostolus, over which Peter the Apostle should peculiarly preside; but when the Gentiles came to the Faith, then Barnabas was sent thither from Jerusalem; nothing then hinders, saith he, but before this, Peter's Antiochian See might be erected, of those that believed of the Circumcision. Here then is St. Peter's Church at Antioch onely of the Jews, and when the door was opened to the Gentiles, they are not of Peter's cœtus, nor under his See or jurisdiction, but Barnabas is sent thither to receive and manage them, and he, we know fetcheth Paul to them. To this matter yet * farther, on occasion of the difference among the Ancients, what Bishop immediately succeeded Peter at Antioch, Euodius or Ignatius, he cites it from Clement's constitutions, which, saith he, most holy and most learned men have used, that over the Church of Antioch Euodius was created Bishop by Peter, Ignatius by Paul, nec sanè unum post alium, ut de cæteris dicitur, sed simul, and not one after the other, as in the rest it is said, but together; rendring the reason of it, from the dissention between the Jewish and Gentile Christians, during which, that remedy was used, ut uterque sederet, that both should have their Sees, alterque eorum præesset, and one of them should preside over those of the Circumcision, the other over those that from the Gentiles came to the Church. The same must be his meaning afterwards, when he saith on the death of Euodius † Subrogatur qui aliquando collega sedisset Ignatius, Ignatius succeeds, who for some time had sate his Cellegue, i. e. had been Bishop at the same time in the same City with him, which abundantly convinces the duo cœtus.

† To. 1. Ann. 39. n. 14.
* To. 1. Ann. 45. n. 13, 14.
† Tom. 1. An. 71. n. 11.

14. And what he saith of Antioch, is as evident of Rome; To the testimonies I have before given of it, I shall now add one more out of * Epiphanius, which moves me to change my opinion in one little particular, concerning Cletus and Anacletus, ὅμως ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἡ πρὸ ὀπτακαίπων διαδοχὴ τοιαύτην ἔχει τὴν ἀκολουθίαν, Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος, Λῖνος καὶ Κλητὸς, Κλήμης, which I suppose is thus to be understood, that as Peter and Paul sate certainly together, Bishops at once, one over the Jews, the other over the Gentiles, and being martyred together, could not succeed one the other, so Linus and Cletus sate immediately after them, Cletus succeeding Peter, whose Deacon he was, as Linus did Paul, whose Deacon he was, as Ignatius tells us; Then Clement succeeded Cletus, being also S. Peter's Deacon and so Successour on the Jewish side, who outlived Linus, and so both the cœtus were joined under him; for as to that conceit of Clemens being chosen and refusing first, and (after the death of the other two in Peter's life-time) his being ordained by Peter for his Successour, though it be mentioned by Epiphanius, and the ground of it from some words of Clement's, ἀναχωρῶ, ἄπειμι——yet neither hath he any † confidence of it, nor are those words, which we are now acquainted with in Clement's first Epistle to the Corinthians, any way appliable to that matter. See the place, p. 65.

Tr. of Sch. p. 76, 77. and Repl. p. 63.
* Hær. 27.
† Εἴγε ὅπως ἐπιτύχω, διανοοῦμαι γὰρ οὐκ ὀλίγα ζητεῖν. Ibid.

15. But as I said there was here no need of this addition of Testimonies, nor of any thing else but of silence and admiration; that any man living should without any the least pretence or colour by him tendred, or really to be found, quite contrary to all evidence, impose upon the Reader with so much pomp of ill language (the known School of such Rhetorick could not have yielded worse) so gross an untruth as is this of my denying, I meant exclusiveness of Jurisdiction.

16. And yet this is but the first pang of his approaching birth; Having once said this, he makes no stay nor scruple to affix upon it what he counts the utmost of possible or imaginable prevarications.

1. My denying my own express words.
2. My denying the whole tenure of my discourse; then
3. My denying the main scope and intention of that Chapter.

And lastly, My changing and altering the state and face of the whole Question, and then to see what this is improved to in the Index.

1. 'Tis contradicting four places of my own, noted with p. 204, 205. then 'tis contradicting six other places of my own, noted with Ib. then 'tis prevarication from my own most express words, the whole tenour of my discourse, the main scope of my most substantial Chapter, and lastly from the whole Question, which being noted with p. 202. to p. 207. visibly relate to this passage. And what is the interpretation of all this? Why, that he hath produced out of the Tr. of Sch. and the Reply, ten places wherein I have affirmed what he tells the Reader, but offers no word to prove that I have denied. And what shall be replied to such an artificer as this, but Μακάριοι ὅτων ὀνειδίσωσιν—— and then גם זו לטובה * Blessed be God for all this.

* El. Lev. Thibi, p. 49.

17. What he next adds to make good his four charges by setting down my words, &c. wherein I asserted the exclusiveness of the Provinces, being, as far as my words are recited, willingly granted by me, can expect no other answer from me. As little can his next stage that leads him to shew my self-contradictions, for those may well be supposed to be founded in the former, nor indeed can it be imagined, but that I who have so often asserted what he saith I deny, shall be found to contradict that feigned personated self, which he imposes on me. Yet in the former of these, one thing hath so little connexion nexion with the reſt; and the ſelf-contradictions in the ſecond, are ſome of them ſo cunningly repreſented, that they may deceive ſome, and therefore I ſhall not paſs them over untouched.

P. 206. 18. In the former part he ſuppoſes it evident, that I muſt mean S. Peter's juriſdiction was ſo limited to his ſuppoſed Province, that he had no juriſdiction or power at all to meddle with a Gentile, but that it was againſt right, and unlawfull for him to doe ſo.] Here when he joins together Juriſdiction limited to his ſuppoſed Province, and power at all to meddle with a Gentile; he uſes the fallacy plurium interrogationum, and joins things that ſhould not be joined: He that hath a Province, and a juriſdiction limited to that Province, is no way obliged not at all to meddle with others to whom his juriſdiction extends not; he may meddle charitatively, and if need require, miniſterially, i. e. he may reveal the truth of God, and upon accepting it, and demanding baptiſm, he may afford it him; eſpecially if by a ſign from Heaven, God warn him to doe it; May not now, after the moſt exact diviſion of Provinces, a Dioceſan Biſhop take pains in bringing in an Alien to the faith, who belongs not to his, nor indeed as an Alien, † 1 Cor. 3. 12. to † any man's Province, without any guilt of ἀλλοτριεπισκοπία, invading any other man's Biſhoprick? But for the preventing of this, I have formerly ſpoken enough, both from the words of S. Ambroſe and S. Hierome, and by explicating the whole matter, as far as my argument depended on it.

19. Now for the ſelf-contradictions.

1. He ſaith, that Anſw. p. 38. parag. 2. I make the point I was to prove, to be no more but this, that the Apoſtles went not all to one, but diſpoſed themſelves over all the world to ſeveral Provinces, from whence he concludes, We have quite loſt the Queſtion: But the Reader, if he will truſt him, muſt quite loſe his eyes; for all that in that Paragraph is ſaid, is but this, that the κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς, Act. 1. was not by me thought on as my evidence to prove, that the Apoſtles went not all to one Province, but that indeed, that was ſo plain that it needed no evidencing. And then, how doth this belong, as the Diſpatcher would now have it, to my making the point to be no more than this, and conſequently the Queſtion to be loſt? Thus is one detortion cured or recompenced with another, and that is S. W.'s way of replying to Anſwers.

20. And 'twere well if it were but with one ſingle other, but his ſecond ſelf-contradiction is inferr'd from the very ſame words, my ſaying that what was ſignifyed by κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς, is evident by its own light, and needs no evidencing; when yet, ſaith he, I ſet my ſelf formally to offer evidences for that point, and proſecuted my intent from par. 5. to 20. with ſuch clouds of Teſtimonies, as may very near if not perfectly equal all the reſt that are found in my whole book.] But this was objected before, and * Sect. 2. n. 13. before * anſwered, that the cloud, as he calls it, of Teſtimonies was brought to prove one thing, and the κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς ſignified another.

21. His third ſelf-contradiction is, That when my words were for excluſive juriſdiction, yet I call his acception of my words in that ſenſe, a miſtake, and that I do it twice, Anſ. p. 39. l. 34. and p. 41. l. 7.] Let the Reader conſult the places; the firſt is in theſe words, not long ſince recited, 'What follows there, "of the agreement made between S. Peter and S. Paul concerning the diviſion of their Provinces, the one "to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, and is matter to S. W. of ſuch chalenge or triumph, is cleared "in the ſame fourth Chapter of the Reply, Sect. 3. and 4. to be a miſtake in him, and all that I pre-"tend, manifeſted from Scripture. Here indeed is the word miſtake, but nothing more toward his concluſion. Did I here ſay that his miſtake was in taking my words in the ſenſe of excluſive Juriſdiction? No ſuch matter; but in thinking, excluſive Juriſdiction denied S. Peter power to preach (when God appointed him) to Cornelius a Gentile Proſelyte. And other miſtakes there were noted in the Reply, but certainly not that, of his thinking I meant excluſive Juriſdictions: So much for the firſt place. But his ſecond is ſomewhat more violenced, to ſound his way. The art is to cut my words off in the midſt, for he ſaith, 'I complain that S. W. would conclude from my words that he would have all the Apoſtles to "have ſeveral Provinces limiting their Juriſdictions and excluſive of one another's right, which, ſaith "he, I call a miſtake and diſtortion. But if the Reader look, he ſhall find, that theſe are my words. "His Ninth Section hath ſomewhat new, as firſt, That he will conclude from my words, that I "will have all the Apoſtles to have ſeveral Provinces, &c. and from thence making the Circumciſion "or Jewiſh Chriſtians peculiarly S. Peter's Province, and the Gentile Chriſtians peculiarly S. Paul's, I "have gotten all the Apoſtles leave to play.] Here it is evident what in that place I complain of, viz. That which is new in the Ninth Section; and what is that? why, his concluſion, That I have gotten all the reſt of the Apoſtles leave to play; But this I could not, with juſtice to him, ſet down, without premiſing the grounds, on which he inferr'd it, and therefore I ſet them down, the grounds acknowledged by me, but the concluſion, after his manner of demonſtrating, without the leaſt probability, deduced from them, which I there ſhew, by inſiſting on this one thing, that I had ſaid no word of concluding all the Jewiſh Chriſtians under S. Peter's aſſignation, or all the Gentiles under S. Paul's, from which alone his concluſion of the play for the reſt is inferred: Let the Reader ſee the place, p. 41. l. 25, &c. and nothing is more manifeſt, than that the miſtake I noted was this; That when I had placed ſome of the Jewiſh Chriſtians expreſly under S. John, and ſo not all of them under S. Peter, and ſo in the reſt, he concluded I had left no Province to any but S. Peter and S. Paul.

22. The fourth ſelf-contradiction is founded in this laſt place again, and ſo needs no farther anſwer, than that my complaint is miſtaken by him.

23. The fifth is the production partly of his own id eſt's, which I ſhould have been rebuked for ſeverely, and partly of a change of my words: For having cited from me, that S. Peter's Province is ſo his, as excludes him from any farther right, he adds his interpretation, i. e. from any right to preach to another's Province, and when I had ſaid, it was not unlawfull for Peter to preach to a Gentile, he recites it, to preach to Gentiles, † See Repl. p. 56, 57. with another id eſt, that is, to thoſe of St. Paul's Province. But to omit all † other Anſwers given already for the reconciling of S. Peter's preaching to Cornelius, with the Jews being his Province excluſively to the Gentiles; it is ſufficient to avoid the ſelf-contradiction, if I tell him, that Gentiles] indefinitely, which he hath put in, ſignify much more than a Gentile, or Cornelius and his Family, of which I ſpake, and that though the Gentiles were S. Paul's Province, yet all the Gentiles were not, nor particularly Cornelius and his Family, that I ever heard of, who (by the way) were Jewiſh Proſelytes before Peter came to them.

24. His ſixth is, that I ſay, the particular aſſignations of S. Peter to the Jews and S. Paul to the Gentiles, were not by any particular aſſignation of Chriſt's, but by agreement among themſelves: Reply, p. 55. And yet,

Of

Of Schiſ. p. 74. l. 4. I ſay Paul had his aſſignation immediately from Chriſt:] I anſwer, that theſe two places belong to two ſeveral matters, and ſo are no contradiction, for that muſt be an affirmation and negation of the ſame Subject. The former is of the Agreement made between the Apoſtles mentioned, Gal. 2. and that was not by any aſſignation of Chriſt; The latter was of Paul's Apoſtleſhip to the Gentiles, and that was by direction and aſſignation immediately from Chriſt, as that is oppoſed to Commiſſion received from, or dependance on S. Peter; See the places, and the difference of matter and circumſtances is moſt evident.

25. The ſeventh is from the conſequence formerly mentioned, of getting the reſt of the Apoſtles leave to play, and is already cleared in anſwer to the ſecond; whatever new inforcement there is (all but his contumelies) is ſoon anſwered and evacuated, by telling him (what he knows) that I never interpreted the committing the Goſpel of the Circumciſion to Peter, to ſignifie that all of the Circumciſion were his Province, but that others, namely John had part of them.

26. His eighth is grounded on a ſuppoſition of Peter's being in Britanny, which I mentioned as Simon Metaphraſtes his affirmation, and not as mine opinion, and onely concluded, That if he were there, it would ſtill hold that he preached there to the Jewiſh part, and left the Gentile to Joſeph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, (the unqueſtioned planters of the Faith in this Iſland) as he did in other places to S. Paul; and in caſe the ſuppoſition were (as it is not) poſitive, what contradiction were there in this? There were other Apoſtles of the Gentiles beſide Saint Paul, as well as other Apoſtles of the Jews beſide Saint Peter, and each might have and content themſelves where-ever they came, with their own Provinces.

27. The ninth he draws from my making Saint Paul's peculiar Province to ſpring onely from the Jews refuſing and rejecting his Doctrine. But the [onely] on which the whole weight lies, is a mere inſertion of S. W. (ſee Repl. p. 58. n. 5.) and all he hath to ſalve this is, to confeſs the addition his, yet grounded in my ſaying, That till the Jews refuſed and rejected it, he did not betake himſelf ſo peculiarly to the Gentiles, whence, ſaith he, follows in all likelihood— But 1. His all likelihoods] by Mr. White's Rule, are no proofs; 2. I am ſure they are not here, when (as was newly mentioned in that place) in Paul's Commiſſion from Chriſt, it was peculiarly expreſt, that he ſhould preach to the Gentiles, and he and Peter and the other Apoſtles were determined, he to the Gentiles, the other to the Jews, by their mutual agreement.

28. Thus have I as briefly as I could paſſed through his no leſs than nine ſelf-contradictions, every one the brood of his own fruitfull invention; and yet I am never the near, for he ſtill reſolves there are others, which it ſeems he is too reſerved to communicate at this time. But one Dilemma he will add, which ſhall conclude the Section, as convincingly, as they all could have done. It is this, Either St. Peter's authority was ſo limited by his pretended deſignation to one Province, as he had no power to preach to another, or it was not, but ſtill remained illimited and univerſal.] To this I anſwer from p. 70, &c. of the Original Tr. of Sch. (our μῶλον λεγων) that his commiſſion from Chriſt was, as to all the other Apoſtles, indefinite and unlimited, and by that no doubt he might preach to Cornelius a Gentile (though Jewiſh Proſelyte) when God called him. But this can no more found an Univerſal juriſdiction to him, than to every other of the twelve Apoſtles, and Paul and Barnabas, and ſo S. W's cauſe neither gains nor ſaves ought by this conceſſion. The limitation of juriſdiction came from agreement of him and thoſe other Apoſtles, with Paul and Barnabas afterward, and ſo is not concerned in his Dilemma.

29. And ſo much for this extraordinary Section, which if it diſcourage not my friends from ever crediting me, then S. W. is not ſo profound an Augur as he undertakes to be.

SECT. V.

S. W's pretended mercy; His many objections anſwered. Inſtances may be explications. Of excluſiveneſs onely when they met in the ſame City. Peter's Supremacy unreconcileable with that. The Lydian Aſia under John, not Peter. Amplitude without Univerſality. The Union under Clemens no proof of Univerſal paſtourſhip. Of the fancy of promiſcuous Authority. S. W's fanſied hurly-burly. Task and Government, difference betwixt theſe, in reſpect of confinement.

1. HIS fifth Section is not quite ſo furious, but as befits the weaker leg of our Controvertiſt, comes more meekly after the other, yet hath its meaſure of cunning and miſrepreſentments alſo.

2. Firſt, he pretends to mercy, in not taking notice of all, but onely that part of the Reply which he finds moſt pertinent to the point in hand.] The interpretation of which is, that whereas there are in two or three Sections of the Reply, ſeveral Anſwers, each ſufficient to ſatisfie his one Objection againſt my Notion of excluſive Provinces, taken from their Preaching to ſome others, Peter to Cornelius, and the like; one paſſage there is, of which he hopes to ſerve himſelf, or at leaſt by carping at it, to offer the Reader ſome divertiſement, and then all the reſt is not to be taken notice of, but onely that which by ſome Midwifery of his, may be taught to bring forth what he would have it. Yet how little favourable Lucina hath been to him, will ſoon appear. * Ch. 4. ſect. 3, 4, 5.

3. The words of mine that he pitches on, are theſe, "I have ſufficiently expreſt (Tr. of Sch. ch. 4. par. 7.) how far this agreement extended, and how far excluſive it was; not that it ſhould be unlawfull for Peter to preach to a Gentile, or for Paul to a Jew, but when they met at the ſame City (as at Antioch certainly they did, and at Rome alſo, I make no queſtion) then the one ſhould conſtantly apply himſelf to the Jews, receive Diſciples, form them into a Church, leave them to be governed by a Biſhop of his aſſignation, and the other ſhould doe in like manner to the Gentiles. Theſe I acknowledge to be my words; what hath he to except againſt, or to conclude for his advantage from them? Why 1. ſaith he, I bring theſe words as an explanation of my meaning, whereas in the place cited it is onely put as an inſtance of their imagined excluſive Juriſdictions.] I anſwer, the words were indeed an Anſwer to his Objection from Peter's preaching to Cornelius, yet if they were alſo propoſed, as an nexion with the reſt; and the ſelf-contradictions in the ſecond, are ſome of them ſo cunningly repreſented, that they may deceive ſome, and therefore I ſhall not paſs them over untouched.

P. 206. 18. In the former part he ſuppoſes it evident, that I muſt mean S. Peter's juriſdiction was ſo limited to his ſuppoſed Province, that he had no juriſdiction or power at all to meddle with a Gentile, but that it was againſt right, and unlawfull for him to doe ſo.] Here when he joins together Juriſdiction limited to his ſuppoſed Province, and power at all to meddle with a Gentile; he uſes the fallacy plurium interrogationum, and joins things that ſhould not be joined: He that hath a Province, and a juriſdiction limited to that Province, is no way obliged not at all to meddle with others to whom his juriſdiction extends not; he may meddle charitatively, and if need require, miniſterially, i. e. he may reveal the truth of God, and upon accepting it, and demanding baptiſm, he may afford it him; eſpecially if by a ſign from Heaven, God warn him to doe it; May not now, after the moſt exact diviſion of Provinces, a Dioceſan Biſhop take pains in bringing in an Alien to the faith, who belongs not to his, nor indeed as an Alien, † 1 Cor. 3. 12. to † any man's Province, without any guilt of ἀλλοτριεπισκοπία, invading any other man's Biſhoprick? But for the preventing of this, I have formerly ſpoken enough, both from the words of S. Ambroſe and S. Hierome, and by explicating the whole matter, as far as my argument depended on it.

19. Now for the ſelf-contradictions.

1. He ſaith, that Anſw. p. 38. parag. 2. I make the point I was to prove, to be no more but this, that the Apoſtles went not all to one, but diſpoſed themſelves over all the world to ſeveral Provinces, from whence he concludes, We have quite loſt the Queſtion: But the Reader, if he will truſt him, muſt quite loſe his eyes; for all that in that Paragraph is ſaid, is but this, that the κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς, Act. 1. was not by me thought on as my evidence to prove, that the Apoſtles went not all to one Province, but that indeed, that was ſo plain that it needed no evidencing. And then, how doth this belong, as the Diſpatcher would now have it, to my making the point to be no more than this, and conſequently the Queſtion to be loſt? Thus is one detortion cured or recompenced with another, and that is S. W's way of replying to Anſwers.

20. And 'twere well if it were but with one ſingle other, but his ſecond ſelf-contradiction is inferr'd from the very ſame words, my ſaying that what was ſignifyed by κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς, is evident by its own light, and needs no evidencing; when yet, ſaith he, I ſet my ſelf formally to offer evidences for that point, and proſecuted my intent from par. 5. to 20. with ſuch clouds of Teſtimonies, as may very near if not perfectly equal all the reſt that are found in my whole book.] But this was objected before, and * Sect. 2. n. 13. before * anſwered, that the cloud, as he calls it, of Teſtimonies was brought to prove one thing, and the κλῆρος Ἀποστολῆς ſignified another.

21. His third ſelf-contradiction is, That when my words were for excluſive juriſdiction, yet I call his acception of my words in that ſenſe, a miſtake, and that I do it twice, Anſ. p. 39. l. 34. and p. 41. l. 7.] Let the Reader conſult the places; the firſt is in theſe words, not long ſince recited, 'What follows there, "of the agreement made between S. Peter and S. Paul concerning the diviſion of their Provinces, the one "to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, and is matter to S. W. of ſuch chalenge or triumph, is cleared "in the ſame fourth Chapter of the Reply, Sect. 3. and 4. to be a miſtake in him, and all that I pre- "tend, manifeſted from Scripture. Here indeed is the word miſtake, but nothing more toward his concluſion. Did I here ſay that his miſtake was in taking my words in the ſenſe of excluſive Juriſdiction? No ſuch matter; but in thinking, excluſive Juriſdiction denied S. Peter power to preach (when God appointed him) to Cornelius a Gentile Proſelyte. And other miſtakes there were noted in the Reply, but certainly not that, of his thinking I meant excluſive Juriſdictions: So much for the firſt place. But his ſecond is ſomewhat more violenced, to ſound his way. The art is to cut my words off in the midſt, for he ſaith, 'I complain that S. W. would conclude from my words that he would have all the Apoſtles to "have ſeveral Provinces limiting their Juriſdictions and excluſive of one another's right, which, ſaith "he, I call a miſtake and diſtortion. But if the Reader look, he ſhall find, that theſe are my words. "His Ninth Section hath ſomewhat new, as firſt, That he will conclude from my words, that I "will have all the Apoſtles to have ſeveral Provinces, &c. and from thence making the Circumciſion "or Jewiſh Chriſtians peculiarly S. Peter's Province, and the Gentile Chriſtians peculiarly S. Paul's, I "have gotten all the Apoſtles leave to play.] Here it is evident what in that place I complain of, viz. That which is new in the Ninth Section; and what is that? why, his concluſion, That I have gotten all the reſt of the Apoſtles leave to play; But this I could not, with juſtice to him, ſet down, without premiſing the grounds, on which he inferr'd it, and therefore I ſet them down, the grounds acknowledged by me, but the concluſion, after his manner of demonſtrating, without the leaſt probability, deduced from them, which I there ſhew, by inſiſting on this one thing, that I had ſaid no word of concluding all the Jewiſh Chriſtians under S. Peter's aſſignation, or all the Gentiles under S. Paul's, from which alone his concluſion of the play for the reſt is inferred: Let the Reader ſee the place, p. 41. l. 25, &c. and nothing is more manifeſt, than that the miſtake I noted was this; That when I had placed ſome of the Jewiſh Chriſtians expreſly under S. John, and ſo not all of them under S. Peter, and ſo in the reſt, he concluded I had left no Province to any but S. Peter and S. Paul.

22. The fourth ſelf-contradiction is founded in this laſt place again, and ſo needs no farther anſwer, than that my complaint is miſtaken by him.

23. The fifth is the production partly of his own id eſt's, which I ſhould have been rebuked for ſeverely, and partly of a change of my words: For having cited from me, that S. Peter's Province is ſo his, as excludes him from any farther right, he adds his interpretation, i. e. from any right to preach to another's Province, and when I had ſaid, it was not unlawfull for Peter to preach to a Gentile, he recites it, to preach to Gentiles, † See Repl. p. 56, 57. with another id eſt, that is, to thoſe of St. Paul's Province. But to omit all † other Anſwers given already for the reconciling of S. Peter's preaching to Cornelius, with the Jews being his Province excluſively to the Gentiles; it is ſufficient to avoid the ſelf-contradiction, if I tell him, that Gentiles] indefinitely, which he hath put in, ſignify much more than a Gentile, or Cornelius and his Family, of which I ſpake, and that though the Gentiles were S. Paul's Province, yet all the Gentiles were not, nor particularly Cornelius and his Family, that I ever heard of, who (by the way) were Jewiſh Proſelytes before Peter came to them.

24. His ſixth is, that I ſay, the particular aſſignations of S. Peter to the Jews and S. Paul to the Gentiles, were not by any particular aſſignation of Chriſt's, but by agreement among themſelves: Reply, p. 55. And yet,

Of

Of Schiſ. p. 74. l. 4. I ſay Paul had his aſſignation immediately from Chriſt.] I anſwer, that theſe two places belong to two ſeveral matters, and ſo are no contradiction, for that muſt be an affirmation and negation of the ſame Subject. The former is of the Agreement made between the Apoſtles mentioned, Gal. 2. and that was not by any aſſignation of Chriſt; The latter was of Paul's Apoſtleſhip to the Gentiles, and that was by direction and aſſignation immediately from Chriſt, as that is oppoſed to Commiſſion received from, or dependance on S. Peter; See the places, and the difference of matter and circumſtances is moſt evident.

25. The ſeventh is from the conſequence formerly mentioned, of getting the reſt of the Apoſtles leave to play, and is already cleared in anſwer to the ſecond; whatever new inforcement there is (all but his contumelies) is ſoon anſwered and evacuated, by telling him (what he knows) that I never interpreted the committing the Goſpel of the Circumciſion to Peter, to ſignifie that all of the Circumciſion were his Province, but that others, namely John had part of them.

26. His eighth is grounded on a ſuppoſition of Peter's being in Britanny, which I mentioned as Simon Metaphraſtes his affirmation, and not as mine opinion, and onely concluded, That if he were there, it would ſtill hold that he preached there to the Jewiſh part, and left the Gentile to Joſeph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, (the unqueſtioned planters of the Faith in this Iſland) as he did in other places to S. Paul; and in caſe the ſuppoſition were (as it is not) poſitive, what contradiction were there in this? There were other Apoſtles of the Gentiles beſide Saint Paul, as well as other Apoſtles of the Jews beſide Saint Peter, and each might have and content themſelves where-ever they came, with their own Provinces.

27. The ninth he draws from my making Saint Paul's peculiar Province to ſpring onely from the Jews refuſing and rejecting his Doctrine. But the [onely] on which the whole weight lies, is a mere inſertion of S. W. (ſee Repl. p. 58. n. 5.) and all he hath to ſalve this is, to confeſs the addition his, yet grounded in my ſaying, That till the Jews refuſed and rejected it, he did not betake himſelf ſo peculiarly to the Gentiles, whence, ſaith he, follows in all likelihood— But 1. His all likelihoods] by Mr. White's Rule, are no proofs; 2. I am ſure they are not here, when (as was newly mentioned in that place) in Paul's Commiſſion from Chriſt, it was peculiarly expreſt, that he ſhould preach to the Gentiles, and he and Peter and the other Apoſtles were determined, he to the Gentiles, the other to the Jews, by their mutual agreement.

28. Thus have I as briefly as I could paſſed through his no leſs than nine ſelf-contradictions, every one the brood of his own fruitfull invention; and yet I am never the near, for he ſtill reſolves there are others, which it ſeems he is too reſerved to communicate at this time. But one Dilemma he will add, which ſhall conclude the Section, as convincingly, as they all could have done. It is this, Either St. Peter's authority was ſo limited by his pretended deſignation to one Province, as he had no power to preach to another, or it was not, but ſtill remained illimited and univerſal.] To this I anſwer from p. 70, &c. of the Original Tr. of Sch. (our μᾶλλον ἐεὶ ☉) that his commiſſion from Chriſt was, as to all the other Apoſtles, indefinite and unlimited, and by that no doubt he might preach to Cornelius a Gentile (though Jewiſh Proſelyte) when God called him. But this can no more found an Univerſal juriſdiction to him, than to every other of the twelve Apoſtles, and Paul and Barnabas, and ſo S. W's cauſe neither gains nor ſaves ought by this conceſſion. The limitation of juriſdiction came from agreement of him and thoſe other Apoſtles, with Paul and Barnabas afterward, and ſo is not concerned in his Dilemma.

29. And ſo much for this extraordinary Section, which if it diſcourage not my friends from ever crediting me, then S. W. is not ſo profound an Augur as he undertakes to be.

SECT. V.

S. W's pretended mercy; His many objections anſwered. Inſtances may be explications. Of excluſiveneſs onely when they met in the ſame City. Peter's Supremacy unreconcileable with that. The Lydian Aſia under John, not Peter. Amplitude without Univerſality. The Union under Clemens no proof of Univerſal paſtourſhip. Of the fancy of promiſcuous Authority. S. W's fanſied hurly-burly. Task and Government, difference betwixt theſe, in reſpect of confinement.

1. HIS fifth Section is not quite ſo furious, but as befits the weaker leg of our Controvertiſt, comes more meekly after the other, yet hath its meaſure of cunning and miſrepreſentments alſo.

2. Firſt, he pretends to mercy, in not taking notice of all, but onely that part of the Reply which he finds moſt pertinent to the point in hand.] The interpretation of which is, that whereas there are in * two or three Sections of the Reply, ſeveral Anſwers, each ſufficient to ſatisfie his one Objection againſt my Notion of excluſive Provinces, taken from their Preaching to ſome others, Peter to Cornelius, and the like; one paſſage there is, of which he hopes to ſerve himſelf, or at leaſt by carping at it, to offer the Reader ſome divertiſement, and then all the reſt is not to be taken notice of, but onely that which by ſome Midwifery of his, may be taught to bring forth what he would have it. Yet how little favourable Lucina hath been to him, will ſoon appear.

* Ch. 4. ſect. 3, 4, 5.

3. The words of mine that he pitches on, are theſe, "I have ſufficiently expreſt (Tr. of Sch. ch. 4. "par. 7.) how far this agreement extended, and how far excluſive it was; not that it ſhould be unlawfull for Peter to preach to a Gentile, or for Paul to a Jew, but when they met at the ſame City (as at "Antioch certainly they did, and at Rome alſo, I make no queſtion) then the one ſhould conſtantly apply himſelf to the Jews, receive Diſciples, form them into a Church, leave them to be governed by "a Biſhop of his aſſignation, and the other ſhould doe in like manner to the Gentiles. Theſe I acknowledge to be my words; what hath he to except againſt, or to conclude for his advantage from them? Why 1. ſaith he, I bring theſe words as an explanation of my meaning, whereas in the place cited it is onely put as an inſtance of their imagined excluſive Juriſdictions.] I anſwer, the words were indeed an Anſwer to his Objection from Peter's preaching to Cornelius, yet if they were alſo propoſed, as an explanation of my meaning, they might well be ſo, his argument notwithſtanding, for what is more ordinary than to explain by inſtances? and then that which was there an inſtance of my poſition, may here be appeal'd to for the explication of my meaning in it; This ſatisfies his firſt objection.

4. His ſecond is, That "the excluſiveneſs of juriſdiction which before made ſuch a loud ſound, is "now onely come to be ſuch when they met at the ſame City, and by conſequence abſtracting from "that one circumſtance, St. Peter had univerſal authority.] In this Objection there are theſe conſiderable miſcarriages. 1. That in reciting my words in this place he hath put in the reſtrictive [onely] upon which the whole weight of this objection, and of moſt that follows, depends: I ſaid, It excluded not ſo far, as that it ſhould be unlawfull to Peter to preach to a Gentile, &c. but that when they met at the ſame City, &c. No way excluding at that time all other but that one of meeting at the ſame City; And he makes no ſcruple to caſt in the word [onely] and ſo thinks to ſet my diſcourſe quite contrary to it ſelf. 2. If it were granted to his hearts deſire, that the excluſiveneſs of Juriſdiction were onely in this one caſe when the two Apoſtles met in the ſame City, this were ſufficient to refute his whole pretenſion founded in the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of St. Peter. For ſure one (if it be but one) particular Negative is perfectly ſufficient, without acceſſion of aid, to deſtroy an Univerſal affirmative; and then the Juriſdiction which extended not to all Rome or Antioch, will never be extenſible to the whole world, but by caſting theſe Cities out of it. However, what is not in terms immediately affirmed, may by deduction and conſequence be concluded, and then 3. What reaſon can be imagined, why when St. Paul and St. Peter met, St. Paul ſhould be abſolute, and yet at all other times he ſhould be ſubjected and ſubordinate to St. Peter? 4. His conſequence, that abſtracting from that circumſtance St. Peter had univerſal authority;] is of little force. 1. Becauſe when it is certain they did really meet, it is really impoſſible, that they ſhould not have met, and ſo his juriſdiction being in that caſe limited, cannot be totally unlimited: And 2. Becauſe if we ſpeak of that unlimited power which belonged to him as an Apoſtle, that belonged in like manner to every other Apoſtle, and ſo this kind of Univerſal Juriſdiction being granted St. Peter, will conclude nothing more for the benefit of the Pope his Succeſſour, than the ſame in Saint John will conclude for his Succeſſour at Epheſus, and ſo in the reſt alſo.

5. His third Objection is, "That ſince theſe two Apoſtles never met thus, ſave at Rome and Anti-"och, it follows that as far as I know his Juriſdiction was unverſal over all beſides and at all other times, "except thoſe ſhort ſeaſons wherein they met.] But he muſt again remember, that if there were any time or place after Chriſt's Aſcenſion, wherein he had not the pretended Supremacy, then his ſupreme Univerſal Paſtourſhip was not given him by Chriſt; and then all S. W's pile is fairly on the ground. Much more might be ſaid (I muſt put that in, to prevent the [onely] in his next Reply) were not this ſufficient for ſuch arguing.

6. His fourth is, That it follows, That the Pope's authority is not limited, ſave onely where he meets, St. Paul's Succeſſours (or perhaps St. John's) and then he conceives it will be very ample.] But 1. what is very ample, is not Univerſal, and I need no more than that. 2. If St. Paul were the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and, as he ſaith of himſelf moſt truly, he labcured more abundantly than they all, that alone will be a great prejudice to the [very ample] at leaſt in compariſon with St. Paul's plantations. 3. His mention of St. John, though it come in very unſeaſonably at this time, where he ſpeaks of Peter's meeting St. Paul (which refers to the agreement of going one to the Gentiles, the other to the Jews, whereas St. John was for the Jewiſh part, as well as St. Peter) yet it is a farther prejudice to the Pope's Univerſal Paſtourſhip; thoſe large Provinces of Jewiſh believers, that were converted and governed by St. John in the Lydian Aſia (his ſeat of reſidence being placed at Epheſus) cannot well be ſuppoſed to be under St. Peter's juriſdiction in his life-time (the different cuſtomes there, from thoſe at Rome introduced by St. Peter, are, beſide many other, ſome argument of it) much leſs that Apoſtle himſelf and his Province too, under the Biſhop of Rome, after St. Peter's death. 4. I know not why ſome place ſhould not be left for the ten other Apoſtles alſo, yea and ſome for James the Lord's Brother, who was in this agreement, Gal. 2. as well as St. John and St. Peter; and then, as ample as theſe premiſſes will render it, I ſhall moſt willingly allow it, but ſtill ſee not that ſuch amplitude is Univerſality.

7. His fifth is. That ſince I grant both Congregations of Jews and Gentiles were joyned in one under Pope Clement, that Pope by conſequence ſucceeded them both—and then he concludes, that unawares I grant the Pope as much as they deſire, and then great joy and ſcoff is built on this argument. But ſure the anſwer is not difficult, that the two Congregations that were joyned under Clement, were but the Congregations at Rome, not thoſe at Antioch thoſe were not joyned under Clement, but ſeveral under Euodius and Ignatius, and joyned at length under the latter) much leſs in all other parts of the world: If there had been no other cœtus, but thoſe at Rome, and all the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians of the world had been members of thoſe, he had had ſome colour for his conſequence; but as it is, Clement's Succeſſour muſt be content, for ought I know, with the portion that Clement had, i. e. the Roman cœtus thus united, and thoſe that regularly depended on that Metropolis or Primate's See.

8. The ſixth is wholly founded in the word [onely] which being his inſertion, is to be anſwered for by himſelf.

9. His ſeventh is, That I have no word in any Teſtimony to prove their excluſive juriſdictions, in Rome and Antioch, but onely thoſe which affirm that they preacht, were Biſhops in Rome, and founded the Church in both places, All which might eaſily be done by a promiſcuous authority.] To this I anſwer.

1. That 'twere enough for me, if they were proved in other places, where the Apoſtles going ſeveral ways, there is no place for their promiſcuous authority.

But then 2. my fundamental proof from Gal. 2. was much more than he here mentions, for there as Peter was Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, and Paul of the Uncircumciſion; So they agreed one to betake himſelf to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, and as this muſt belong both to Rome and Antioch, ſo it cannot be explicated of their promiſcuous but their divided labours there.

3. If they were both of them at the ſame time Biſhops, as at Antioch firſt, ſo after at Rome, then this is a competent proof of the ſeveral cœtus in each of thoſe Cities, over whom thoſe Biſhops preſided, and that again an evidence of their ſeveral and not promiſcuous authorities, each preſiding over thoſe whom he he had converted, and not medling beyond his line, and then that is all I do or need pretend to.

4. Beſide their preaching and being Biſhops, and founding the Church in both places, I add Teſtimonies of their leaving ſeveral Biſhops after them; Euodius at Antioch ſucceeding one and Ignatius the other, Linus at Rome ſucceeding Paul and Anacletus, and after him Clement St. Peter. And then what greater prejudice could have been imagined to their promiſcuous authorities, or proof of the different cœtus? And yet to theſe I have alſo added many other Teſtimonies, as thoſe * of the two great Apoſtles ἰσοτιμία equality of honour, one having the Primacy in founding the Church of the Jewiſh Converts, the other of the Gentiles, the full authority of the one in the former, and the perfect authority of the other in the latter; and now many more, of their dividing the two ſorts of the world (though not all of either) betwixt them, one taking, i. e. adminiſtring one, the other the other, quite contrary to their promiſcuous labours or authority; and many teſtimonies of Baronius himſelf for the different cœtus, which one thing of it ſelf hath great force in it to the whole matter. * Anſw. p. 39, 40.

10. His eighth is founded in my uſing the phraſe, that one ſhould conſtantly apply himſelf to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, which, ſaith he, falls ſhort of excluſive Juriſdictions, becauſe prudent conſideration of circumſtances may determine one to doe conſtantly this thing, another to doe conſtantly another without inferring that either loſt their right to doe the other.] But I anſwer briefly to this deep conſideration, that I ſpake of an agreement to doe thus, and from that agreement I concluded, not from their conſtant doing this; Ταῦτα ἐκατέρωθεν ἐδόκει, ſaith † Chryſoſtome, καὶ ἐκείνοις Ἰουδαίοις κηρύττειν ὅπου καὶ τῆπερ τοῖς ἔθνεσι, Both parties conſented, both that they ſhould thus preach to the Jews, and he to the Gentiles. † Tom. 3. p. 729. l. 11.

11. His ninth, tenth and eleventh (as much as is ſerious or can pretend to crave anſwer) are already totally ſuperſeded, by diſcovering his inſertion of [onely] to my words. For the agreement made betwixt the Apoſtles, that one ſhould go to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, though it had place, when they met at the ſame City, yet not onely then. And ſo his whole ludicrous fabrick is blown down; for ſuppoſing St. Peter to come firſt to the City, and to preach to the Jews, and St. Paul to come after, and preach to the Gentiles, or St. Paul coming firſt, and being as Chriſt foretold him rejected by the Jews (to whom yet in obedience to the Ἰουδαίοις πρῶτον, he firſt addreſt himſelf) preſently to turn to the Gentiles, there is no occaſion of the hurliburly he dreams ſo: St. Peter, according to the agreement, and as the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtorians have related the matter of fact, preached to the Circumciſion peculiarly, and formed a Church of them, and left them with a Biſhop of his creating, and ſo St. Paul of the Gentiles, and thus they continued diſparate cœtus, till the wall of partition between them was by time and God's bleſſing taken down. Of this let him believe his own Baronius, if my other Teſtimonies are of no force with him; what he will fanſie upon Paul's departure, and leaving behind him a Biſhop of his aſſignation over the Gentiles of a City, viz. that St. Peter's juriſdiction ſhall bud forth afreſh to thoſe Gentiles, is very ſtrangely concluded, when the ſole end of St. Paul's leaving that Biſhop, was to preſerve the cœtus under him, and the main of the Apoſtles agreement was to this, that one ſhould betake himſelf to the Jews, and the other to the Gentiles, and neither meddle beyond his own line, or put his ſickle into his harveſt; and therefore for his merry monſter of the two Gentile Biſhops in a City, he now ſees the parents of it, his fancy, and ſomewhat elſe can beget many ſuch monſters as this, on a very ſmall warning.

12. As for his profound jealouſie, in caſe a Gentile ſhould come in, whilſt St. Peter was preaching, that then all muſt be huſht preſently, and the Sermon quaſht, or elſe the Gentile in a civil parentheſis deſired to withdraw, at which he requires his Reader not to refrain ſmiling, I leave it accordingly to that way of anſwer, which he moſt deſires, elſe I might ſoon remind him, that the believer of one Dioceſe, among us, of this age, may be permitted to be preſent at the Sermon of the Biſhop of another Dioceſe, and yet I hope their Dioceſes are excluſive enough, and ſo may St. Peter's province, ſtill for all his pageantry.

13. When therefore he again Queſtions, what I mean by ſaying it is not unlawfull to preach to another's province, and yet ſaying he had no right to doe it, it is but another dreſs of the fifth ſelf-contradiction in the former Section, and is ſoon anſwered, either by asking again, what he means by preaching to another's province? (for if it be no more than immediately before he was ſpeaking of, to preach where a Gentile is preſent, or as elſewhere, to Cornelius, I never ſaid he had no right to doe that) or if he pleaſe, by reſorting to the * places, whence the words by him are cited, where is no appearance of ſuch contrariety: In the one, onely this, That it was not unlawfull for Peter to preach to a Gentile; In the other, that as after agreement and diſtribution between Fellow-Commoners, from thenceforth that which is the portion of one, is ſo his, that he hath no right to any other part; ſo after the agreement made between the Apoſtles concerning the two parts of mankind, to which they were to preach, and among whom to preſide, the Jews are become St. Peter's peculiar, or portion, or province, and that ſo his, as the Gentiles were not his, they being left to St. Paul and Barnabas: Where the proportion lies thus, that as after agreement and diſtribution, the Fellow-Commoner had no other right to any part but his own, So the Jews were become S. Peter's peculiar, or portion and province, to which to preach and among whom to preſide, and ſo his, as the Gentiles were not his, and that by agreement. Two things he may obſerve, are there put together, preaching and preſiding, the one a task, the other a government: The task-part he is no otherwiſe confined in, than to be aſſigned his Sphere of motion peculiarly among the Jews, that there he ſhould be bound to preach, not that any opportunity of obeying any direction of Chriſt, or benefiting others ſhould be loſt by it, as when ſervants in a family have their ſeveral offices aſſigned them, there are beſides, ſaith Ariſtotle, ἐγκύκλια διακονήματα, ſome ſervices that remain common to all, and again, 'tis more than lawfull for any ſuch ſervant, on emergent occaſions, to perform ſome work, which by that aſſignation doth not belong to him. But the governing part wherein onely our Queſtion is concerned, is of another nature; he that preſides in one cœtus, is not to aſſume or exerciſe juriſdiction over thoſe, that by his own agreement, or by the common Maſters diſpoſition, or by any other way of acquiring a right (ſuch is that of the Spiritual Father, begetting to Chriſt) are aſſigned, and regularly appertain to another. * Rep. p. 56. l. 2. p. 57. l. 19.

14. The remainder is ſpent in repeating what was ſaid and anſwered before, and I ſhall not need imitate him in that. And ſo much for this whether Scene or Section.

SECT. VI.

The true foundation of our inference againſt Univerſal Paſtourſhip: An explication of Gal. 1. & 11. Defects in S. W's. way of explicating. Right hand of fellowſhip. Of the Circumciſion being thoſe in Judæa. Multitudes of Jews in other regions. Synagogue of Libertines, &c. Theophylact's and Jerome's words anſwered. Πεπίστυμαι. Gal. 11. Agreement may interpret that, without being the ſame with it.

1. IN his ſixth Sect. he propoſeth to come to the point it ſelf, Excluſiveneſs of Juriſdiction, and in it conſiders 4. Poſitions, the laſt of which onely, ſaith he, concerns our preſent queſtion, which if it have truth in it, I ſhall not need trouble my ſelf or the Reader by reflecting on the three former. This laſt he ſets down in theſe words, that their Juriſdiction was included within ſuch a Province, and excluded from all other imagined Provinces.] But by ſetting it down was in words ſomewhat different from theſe, viz. that this Apoſtle was the Apoſtle of the Jews, excluſively to the Gentiles, which were generally another's province. And in ſuch changes his aimes commonly are to gain ſomewhat. Yet if by all other imagined provinces he mean no more than the reſt of the Provinces, each pertaining to ſome other Apoſtle, I ſhall make no ſcruple to accept it in his terms, for then ſtill, if ſo many provinces belonged to others beſide S. Peter, as certainly they did, then each of thoſe others was to have his Juriſdiction intire with-in his own province, as well as S. Peter within his, and then there is an end of his Univerſal Paſtourſhip, farther than as it was likewiſe given to every of the Apoſtles, and ſo belongs not ſingularly to S. Peter.

2. Againſt this Poſition, he 1. commemorates what feats he hath done; and I may now anſwer, that I have examined them ſeverally, and ſhewed they have no force in them to invalidate it, in this my notion of it. 2. he adds, that it comes not home to the queſtion, asking what inference is this? Each Apoſtle was immediate overſeer of his own Province, therefore one of them was not over all the reſt?] But to this I anſwer, that this is none of my inference. And that he cannot but know, it is not, and therefore is to blame thus to indeavour to impoſe upon the Reader contrary to his own expreſs knowledge; For hath not he all this while ſuppoſed me to aſſert excluſive juriſdictions? Hath not this been the ground of all the clamour, ſince the beginning of this ſecond part? And was not S. Peter one of the perſons concerned in this? If he were ſo, then 'tis manifeſt that from that excluſiveneſs it was that I argued (and not barely from each Apoſtle being overſeer of his own Province.) And thus I ſtill hope the argument will hold, Peter was Apoſtle of the Jews excluſively to the Gentiles, which were S. Paul's Province; Theſe being peculiarly under S. Paul's were not under S. Peter's juriſdiction; and yet farther, all the Jews were not S. Peter's Province, but ſome of them peculiarly S. John's, ſome left under the government of James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and yet not intruſted or delegated to him by Peter, as one placed over all, but either by Chriſt immediately, and ſo without dependence on S. Peter, or elſe by ſo many as made a Synod of Apoſtles, Peter being but one of them (And this being the leaſt that my antecedent can be truly ſaid to conſiſt of, the inference will be more rational) Ergo. Saint Peter was not Univerſal Paſtour.

3. He next proceeds to conſideration of Gal. 11. 7, 8, 9, 10. inſiſted on by me as my evidence, and indeed makes ſtrange work of it, mixing ſome things true but no-way pertinent (ſpecially the firſt part p. 224.) or ſatisfying the rational importance of the context. The deſign of the Epiſtle, which muſt be the clue, is not adverted to, viz. to maintain the Chriſtian liberty againſt the Judaical yoke, which the Judaizers would have impoſed ſtill upon the Diſciples of Chriſt: This S. Paul calls another Goſpel, c. 1. 6. diſclaims it, though it ſhould pretend from an Angel, v. 8, 9. avouches his doctrine of liberty from Chriſt himſelf, and his immediate revelation. v. 10, 11, 12. tells the ſtory of his former life and converſion, and miſſion Apoſtolical particularly to the Gentiles, v. 13, 14, 15, 16. and withall, his no miſſion from or dependance on any man, no not from the College of Apoſtles themſelves, v. 16, 17. but his proceeding wholly on the authority given him by Chriſt, and preaching unto the Gentile Cities (the Jews not enduring, and laying wait for him there, and) the Churches of Judæa not ſo much as knowing him by face, ſave onely Peter and ſome few at Jeruſalem, whom he viſited, but hearing of a perſecutour converted, and preaching to the Gentiles, and yet never complaining that herein he did any thing amiſs, as now the Judaizers complain, but bleſſing God for him, v. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then he proceeds in his relations, that fourteen years after he went up to Jeruſalem, on no other errand but to declare to them his whole ſtory, and to juſtifie his actions againſt all the Judaizers pretentions, no-way complying with them, on apprehenſion of any ſpies or dangers, c. 11. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and the effect, ſaith he, was, that the Biſhop of Jeruſalem and the two great Apoſtles that were with him, neither objected nor diſliked any thing that he had done, but approved all, and concluded, that he was deſigned by Chriſt to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as Peter of the Jews (this appearing viſibly, 1. By the Call, and 2. By the powerfull aſſiſtances that were from Chriſt afforded to each in their ſeveral Provinces, and 3. The ſucceſſes proportionable) v. 6, 7, 8. and diſcerning that thus Chriſt had indeed revealed, and given him Commiſſion to be Apoſtle of the Gentiles, they chearfully ſubmitted to it, and reſolved each to go on their former courſe, Paul to keep to the Gentile-pale, and to preach the Goſpel of liberty to them, and receive them without any obſervation of Jewiſh rites, and ſo to compact aſſemblies of Gentile believers, and place Biſhops, and govern them after that manner, and Peter to doe proportionably with the Jews, allowing them to retain their Jewiſh Ceremonies, and ſo when they happened both to preach, and have Converts in the ſame City, ſtill this method ſhould be obſerved, v. 9. (till a better underſtanding could be had between theſe diſtant parties;) what follows, v. 10. of remembring the poor, is no more to this purpoſe than thus, that they made no more demand to Paul but this, that in his Province of the Gentiles, he would take care to relieve the diſtreſſes of the Jewiſh Chriſtians, which were very great in Judæa (and probably in their diſperſions alſo) and he very willingly conſented to doe ſo.

4. This

4. This explication of the whole place, I ſhall not adventure to compare with the other of S. W's forming, but leave the Reader to judge which is moſt agreeable to all circumſtances, and words, and parts of the Context, and which keeps cloſeſt to it; As for ſome defects in his, I may be allowed to mark them.

1. That by being Apoſtle of the Gentiles, or being intruſted with that Goſpel of liberty, he will underſtand no more but preaching to them, and not to them onely] when ſure it ſignifies preaching to them Chriſt's reformation and Chriſtian liberty, compacting them into cœtus, wherein the Judaical Rites were not obſerved, which were conſequently of neceſſity to be diſtinct from thoſe of the Jewiſh believers, which retained them, and admitted no ſociety with thoſe which rejected them.

2. That he makes the deſign of his coming to Jeruſalem, Gal. 2. 1. to be to give an account of his doctrine, and efficacy of his preaching to the Gentiles; whereas it was certainly that of Act. 15. of debating the lawfulneſs of omitting the Moſaical rites, in order to which he declares the ſtory of his converſion and revelations, and peculiar commiſſion to the Gentiles, without reſpect, nay in oppoſition to the Judaizers; and in this again is built the difference of obſervances among his from thoſe of the Jewiſh converts, and conſequently the diverſity of their cœtus.

3. That the giving the right hands of fellowſhip ——— ſignified onely their acknowledging him a true and fellow-Apoſtle, and that onely upon the ſcore of his thriving beſt among the Gentiles, he ſhould go to them, and Peter remain in Judæa; whereas 1. the giving the right hand] is a vulgar perſpicuous phraſe for a pact or agreement mutual, συνεφώνησαν, they agreed, ſaith Theophylact, and with κοινωνίας fellowſhip] with it, a kind of aſſociation to the great work of Chriſt, the advancing the Goſpel among all, ſo ſaith that Scholiaſt ἵνα ἐγὼ, they agreed that I and Barnabas ſhould preach to the Gentiles, αὐτοὶ δὲ but they to the Jews. 2. The foundation of that compact was Chriſt's revelation concerning S. Paul, and his commiſſion to him to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles. 3. The effect of it, that he ſhould proceed accordingly, leave the circumciſion or Jews to them, and betake himſelf peculiarly to preach the Goſpel of liberty, and ſo to gather and form a Church of ſuch, as ſhould come in on thoſe terms, Peter, &c. being left to thoſe that adhere to the Moſaical Rites, and that not onely in Judæa, but James peculiarly in Judæa, he being, long before this, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and ſo of all that Province, and John of the Lydian Aſia, and Peter of that other diſperſion, to which his Epiſtle is addreſt, and which Eccleſiaſtick Writers aſſure us was his province or aſſignation, as hath been ſhewed, ſect. 2.

5. On this particular he * farther inſiſts, and ſaith, that the circumciſion, v. 9. he takes to be Judæa, or the Jews there, not thoſe in diſperſion, and the Gentiles to be thoſe out of Judæa. But this, as hath been ſaid, is quite contrary to all Hiſtory, Euſebius particularly, expreſſing that Peter's diviſion was Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Cappadocia and Aſia, the Jews in diſperſion there, and at length Rome, the laſt of which, and alſo Antioch, S. W. afterwards allows to have been S. Peter's province, and yet theſe were not ſituate in Judæa. 2. 'Tis certain that Jeruſalem the Metropolis of Judæa, and ſo by conſequence all under it were committed to James the Lord's Brother, and when Peter had freely given his ſuffrage to the ſetling him in that See, 'tis not to be imagined that he himſelf continued his reſidence there. 3. To his excluſive phraſe [not thoſe of the diſperſion] the addreſſing of his Epiſtle peculiarly to them, is a competent prejudice. But then 4. What means he by the Gentiles being thoſe out of Judæa? I hope he means not all indifferently, Jews and Gentiles too, that are out of Judæa; If he do, that is indeed conſonant to the former part of the interpretation, that the Circumciſion are onely thoſe in Judæa, but this would enlarge Paul's, and as his phraſe is, cramp up S. Peter's Province into a narrower compaſs, than I have done: He hath ſoon after theſe other words, that Paul was over the Gentiles without Judæa, which indeed confines him ſeemingly to the Heathens (and if that were it before, as the words will alſo bear, I have nothing to diſlike in that part) but his making the ſole ground of the diviſion this, that the efficacy of Peter's preaching to the Circumciſion had been experienced within Judæa, and Paul's out of Judæa, and ſo the oppoſition ſtill not betwixt Jews and Gentiles, but betwixt within Judæa and out of Judæa, would make it ſeaſonable to ask, whether this be his meaning or no, but that no advantage ariſing to him from it, I conclude from thence it is not. And then, as I ſaid, I have no exception to that part of his period.

* P. 226.

7. But he offers no leſs than ſix arguments to prove this main point, That the Circumciſion to which S. Peter was to apply himſelf, was onely the Jews in Judæa: The firſt is that now rehearſed, becauſe the efficacy of S. Peter's preaching to the Jews, had been experienced within Judæa, S. Paul's over the Gentiles without Judæa, and their ſevering themſelves being, ſaith he, on this account, ſhould mean this. But I anſwer, 1. That this was not the ſole account of their diviſion, but that other, which I have mentioned, Chriſt's revelation to S. Paul, committing the Goſpel of liberty to him, and leaving others to plant the faith among thoſe that were tenacious of the Moſaical Law: And 2. If it were, yet before this time, Peter had had experience of the power of Chriſt afforded him in preaching out of Judæa among the diſperſed Jews, particularly at Antioch, See Baronius in the place † forecited, of Peter's Antiochian See being erected of thoſe that believed of the Circumciſion, before the door of Faith was opened to the Gentiles there.

† To. 1. Ann. 39. n. 14.

8. His ſecond is, That the Jews do not live united in any conſiderable confluence ſave in Judæa, nor the Gentiles but out of it. But I anſwer, that the queſtion being onely of the former (the latter being willingly granted) there is no truth in that, Act. 6. 9. we find mentioned the Synagogue, i.e. Jewiſh cœtus, of Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Aſians, all of them Jews, and ſo likewiſe of many other Countreys that come to Jeruſalem at the Feaſt, Act. 11. Joſephus and Philo will ſhew him before this, great multitudes in other regions, and now upon a very late account (the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen) the * Text is expreſs, that they that were then ſcattered abroad, travelled as far as Phœnice, Cyprus and Antioch, preaching the word to none but to the Jews onely, which they could not well doe, if there were not ſtore of ſuch there.

* Act. 11. 19.

9. Againſt his third, which from their deſiring Paul that he would remember the poor, concludes that Paul was to go out of Judæa, I ſhall not conteſt, willingly yielding that part of the concluſion, that Paul is concerned in, and denying the other onely about S. Peter.

10. The

SECT. VI.

The true foundation of our inference againſt Univerſal Paſtourſhip: An explication of Gal. 1. & 11. Defects in S. W's. way of explicating. Right hand of fellowſhip. Of the Circumciſion being thoſe in Judæa. Multitudes of Jews in other regions. Synagogue of Libertines, &c. Theophylact's and Jerome's words anſwered. Πεπίστυμαι. Gal. 11. Agreement may interpret that, without being the ſame with it.

1. IN his ſixth Sect. he propoſeth to come to the point it ſelf, Excluſiveneſs of Juriſdiction, and in it conſiders 4. Poſitions, the laſt of which onely, ſaith he, concerns our preſent queſtion, which if it have truth in it, I ſhall not need trouble my ſelf or the Reader by reflecting on the three former. This laſt he ſets down in theſe words, that their Juriſdiction was included within ſuch a Province, and excluded from all other imagined Provinces.] But by ſetting it down was in words ſomewhat different from theſe, viz. that this Apoſtle was the Apoſtle of the Jews, excluſively to the Gentiles, which were generally another's province. And in ſuch changes his aimes commonly are to gain ſomewhat. Yet if by all other imagined provinces he mean no more than the reſt of the Provinces, each pertaining to ſome other Apoſtle, I ſhall make no ſcruple to accept it in his terms, for then ſtill, if ſo many provinces belonged to others beſide S. Peter, as certainly they did, then each of thoſe others was to have his Juriſdiction intire within his own province, as well as S. Peter within his, and then there is an end of his Univerſal Paſtourſhip, farther than as it was likewiſe given to every of the Apoſtles, and ſo belongs not ſingularly to S. Peter.

2. Againſt this Poſition, he 1. commemorates what feats he hath done; and I may now anſwer, that I have examined them ſeverally, and ſhewed they have no force in them to invalidate it, in this my notion of it. 2. he adds, that it comes not home to the queſtion, asking what inference is this? Each Apoſtle was immediate overſeer of his own Province, therefore one of them was not over all the reſt?] But to this I anſwer, that this is none of my inference. And that he cannot but know, it is not, and therefore is to blame thus to indeavour to impoſe upon the Reader contrary to his own expreſs knowledge; For hath not he all this while ſuppoſed me to aſſert excluſive juriſdictions? Hath not this been the ground of all the clamour, ſince the beginning of this ſecond part? And was not S. Peter one of the perſons concerned in this? If he were ſo, then 'tis manifeſt that from that excluſiveneſs it was that I argued (and not barely from each Apoſtle being overſeer of his own Province.) And thus I ſtill hope the argument will hold, Peter was Apoſtle of the Jews excluſively to the Gentiles, which were S. Paul's Province; Theſe being peculiarly under S. Paul's were not under S. Peter's juriſdiction; and yet farther, all the Jews were not S. Peter's Province, but ſome of them peculiarly S. John's, ſome left under the government of James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and yet not intruſted or delegated to him by Peter, as one placed over all, but either by Chriſt immediately, and ſo without dependence on S. Peter, or elſe by ſo many as made a Synod of Apoſtles, Peter being but one of them (And this being the leaſt that my antecedent can be truly ſaid to conſiſt of, the inference will be more rational) Ergo. Saint Peter was not Univerſal Paſtour.

3. He next proceeds to conſideration of Gal. 11. 7, 8, 9, 10. inſiſted on by me as my evidence, and indeed makes ſtrange work of it, mixing ſome things true but no-way pertinent (ſpecially the firſt part p. 224.) or ſatisfying the rational importance of the context. The deſign of the Epiſtle, which muſt be the clue, is not adverted to, viz. to maintain the Chriſtian liberty againſt the Judaical yoke, which the Judaizers would have impoſed ſtill upon the Diſciples of Chriſt: This S. Paul calls another Goſpel, c. 1. 6. diſclaims it, though it ſhould pretend from an Angel, v. 8, 9. avouches his doctrine of liberty from Chriſt himſelf, and his immediate revelation. v. 10, 11, 12. tells the ſtory of his former life and converſion, and miſſion Apoſtolical particularly to the Gentiles, v. 13, 14, 15, 16. and withall, his no miſſion from or dependance on any man, no not from the College of Apoſtles themſelves, v. 16, 17. but his proceeding wholly on the authority given him by Chriſt, and preaching unto the Gentile Cities (the Jews not enduring, and laying wait for him there, and) the Churches of Judæa not ſo much as knowing him by face, ſave onely Peter and ſome few at Jeruſalem, whom he viſited, but hearing of a perſecutour converted, and preaching to the Gentiles, and yet never complaining that herein he did any thing amiſs, as now the Judaizers complain, but bleſſing God for him, v. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then he proceeds in his relations, that fourteen years after he went up to Jeruſalem, on no other errand but to declare to them his whole ſtory, and to juſtifie his actions againſt all the Judaizers pretentions, no-way complying with them, on apprehenſion of any ſpies or dangers, c. 11. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and the effect, ſaith he, was, that the Biſhop of Jeruſalem and the two great Apoſtles that were with him, neither objected nor diſliked any thing that he had done, but approved all, and concluded, that he was deſigned by Chriſt to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as Peter of the Jews (this appearing viſibly, 1. By the Call, and 2. By the powerfull aſſiſtances that were from Chriſt afforded to each in their ſeveral Provinces, and 3. The ſucceſſes proportionable) v. 6, 7, 8. and diſcerning that thus Chriſt had indeed revealed, and given him Commiſſion to be Apoſtle of the Gentiles, they chearfully ſubmitted to it, and reſolved each to go on their former courſe, Paul to keep to the Gentile-pale, and to preach the Goſpel of liberty to them, and receive them without any obſervation of Jewiſh rites, and ſo to compact aſſemblies of Gentile believers, and place Biſhops, and govern them after that manner, and Peter to doe proportionably with the Jews, allowing them to retain their Jewiſh Ceremonies, and ſo when they happened both to preach, and have Converts in the ſame City, ſtill this method ſhould be obſerved, v. 9. (till a better underſtanding could be had between theſe diſtant parties;) what follows, v. 10. of remembring the poor, is no more to this purpoſe than thus, that they made no more demand to Paul but this, that in his Province of the Gentiles, he would take care to relieve the diſtreſſes of the Jewiſh Chriſtians, which were very great in Judæa (and probably in their diſperſions alſo) and he very willingly conſented to doe ſo.

4. This

4. This explication of the whole place, I ſhall not adventure to compare with the other of S. W's forming, but leave the Reader to judge which is moſt agreeable to all circumſtances, and words, and parts of the Context, and which keeps cloſeſt to it; As for ſome defects in his, I may be allowed to mark them.

1. That by being Apoſtle of the Gentiles, or being intruſted with that Goſpel of liberty, he will underſtand no more but preaching to them, and not to them onely] when ſure it ſignifies preaching to them Chriſt's reformation and Chriſtian liberty, compacting them into cœtus, wherein the Judaical Rites were not obſerved, which were conſequently of neceſſity to be diſtinct from thoſe of the Jewiſh believers, which retained them, and admitted no ſociety with thoſe which rejected them.

2. That he makes the deſign of his coming to Jeruſalem, Gal. 2. 1. to be to give an account of his doctrine, and efficacy of his preaching to the Gentiles; whereas it was certainly that of Act. 15. of debating the lawfulneſs of omitting the Moſaical rites, in order to which he declares the ſtory of his converſion and revelations, and peculiar commiſſion to the Gentiles, without reſpect, nay in oppoſition to the Judaizers; and in this again is built the difference of obſervances among his from thoſe of the Jewiſh converts, and conſequently the diverſity of their cœtus.

3. That the giving the right hands of fellowſhip ——— ſignified onely their acknowledging him a true and fellow-Apoſtle, and that onely upon the ſcore of his thriving beſt among the Gentiles, he ſhould go to them, and Peter remain in Judæa; whereas 1. the giving the right hand] is a vulgar perſpicuous phraſe for a pact or agreement mutual, συνεφώνησαν, they agreed, ſaith Theophylact, and with κοινωνίας fellowſhip] with it, a kind of aſſociation to the great work of Chriſt, the advancing the Goſpel among all, ſo ſaith that Scholiaſt ἵνα ἐγὼ, they agreed that I and Barnabas ſhould preach to the Gentiles, αὐτοὶ δὲ but they to the Jews. 2. The foundation of that compact was Chriſt's revelation concerning S. Paul, and his commiſſion to him to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles. 3. The effect of it, that he ſhould proceed accordingly, leave the circumciſion or Jews to them, and betake himſelf peculiarly to preach the Goſpel of liberty, and ſo to gather and form a Church of ſuch, as ſhould come in on thoſe terms, Peter, &c. being left to thoſe that adhere to the Moſaical Rites, and that not onely in Judæa, but James peculiarly in Judæa, he being, long before this, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and ſo of all that Province, and John of the Lydian Aſia, and Peter of that other diſperſion, to which his Epiſtle is addreſt, and which Eccleſiaſtick Writers aſſure us was his province or aſſignation, as hath been ſhewed, ſect. 2.

5. On this particular he * farther inſiſts, and ſaith, that the circumciſion, v. 9. he takes to be Judæa, or the Jews there, not thoſe in diſperſion, and the Gentiles to be thoſe out of Judæa. But this, as hath been ſaid, is quite contrary to all Hiſtory, Euſebius particularly, expreſſing that Peter's diviſion was Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Cappadocia and Aſia, the Jews in diſperſion there, and at length Rome, the laſt of which, and alſo Antioch, S. W. afterwards allows to have been S. Peter's province, and yet theſe were not ſituate in Judæa. 2. 'Tis certain that Jeruſalem the Metropolis of Judæa, and ſo by conſequence all under it were committed to James the Lord's Brother, and when Peter had freely given his ſuffrage to the ſetling him in that See, 'tis not to be imagined that he himſelf continued his reſidence there. 3. To his excluſive phraſe [not thoſe of the diſperſion] the addreſſing of his Epiſtle peculiarly to them, is a competent prejudice. But then 4. What means he by the Gentiles being thoſe out of Judæa? I hope he means not all indifferently, Jews and Gentiles too, that are out of Judæa; If he do, that is indeed conſonant to the former part of the interpretation, that the Circumciſion are onely thoſe in Judæa, but this would enlarge Paul's, and as his phraſe is, cramp up S. Peter's Province into a narrower compaſs, than I have done: He hath ſoon after theſe other words, that Paul was over the Gentiles without Judæa, which indeed confines him ſeemingly to the Heathens (and if that were it before, as the words will alſo bear, I have nothing to diſlike in that part) but his making the ſole ground of the diviſion this, that the efficacy of Peter's preaching to the Circumciſion had been experienced within Judæa, and Paul's out of Judæa, and ſo the oppoſition ſtill not betwixt Jews and Gentiles, but betwixt within Judæa and out of Judæa, would make it ſeaſonable to ask, whether this be his meaning or no, but that no advantage ariſing to him from it, I conclude from thence it is not. And then, as I ſaid, I have no exception to that part of his period.

* P. 226.

7. But he offers no leſs than ſix arguments to prove this main point, That the Circumciſion to which S. Peter was to apply himſelf, was onely the Jews in Judæa: The firſt is that now rehearſed, becauſe the efficacy of S. Peter's preaching to the Jews, had been experienced within Judæa, S. Paul's over the Gentiles without Judæa, and their ſevering themſelves being, ſaith he, on this account, ſhould mean this. But I anſwer, 1. That this was not the ſole account of their diviſion, but that other, which I have mentioned, Chriſt's revelation to S. Paul, committing the Goſpel of liberty to him, and leaving others to plant the faith among thoſe that were tenacious of the Moſaical Law: And 2. If it were, yet before this time, Peter had had experience of the power of Chriſt afforded him in preaching out of Judæa among the diſperſed Jews, particularly at Antioch, See Baronius in the place † forecited, of Peter's Antiochian See being erected of thoſe that believed of the Circumciſion, before the door of Faith was opened to the Gentiles there.

† To. 1. Ann. 39. n. 14.

8. His ſecond is, That the Jews do not live united in any conſiderable confluence ſave in Judæa, nor the Gentiles but out of it. But I anſwer, that the queſtion being onely of the former (the latter being willingly granted) there is no truth in that, Act. 6. 9. we find mentioned the Synagogue, i. e. Jewiſh cœtus, of Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Aſians, all of them Jews, and ſo likewiſe of many other Countreys that come to Jeruſalem at the Feaſt, Act. 11. Joſephus and Philo will ſhew him before this, great multitudes in other regions, and now upon a very late account (the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen) the * Text is expreſs, that they that were then ſcattered abroad, travelled as far as Phœnice, Cyprus and Antioch, preaching the word to none but to the Jews onely, which they could not well doe, if there were not ſtore of ſuch there.

* Act. 11. 19.

9. Againſt his third, which from their deſiring Paul that he would remember the poor, concludes that Paul was to go out of Judæa, I ſhall not conteſt, willingly yielding that part of the concluſion, that Paul is concerned in, and denying the other onely about S. Peter.

10. The

10. The fourth, that all the Phænomena of circumſtances favour it, ſignifies little, till he tells what circumſtances he means, which he hath not formerly named, or make it appear, that any one circumſtance favours that part of the concluſion which is denied by me, viz. that of Peter's continuing in Judæa, and not going to the diſperſion.

11. His fifth, taken from the words of Theophylact, is not pertinent to the proving that part of the concluſion, but onely the other, for ſo are the words, Paul being come to Judæa departed thence, both becauſe he was ſent a preacher to the Gentiles, and becauſe he would not build on another's foundation; where no leaſt mention being made of St. Peter, no art can infer, therefore Peter was to apply himſelf to the Jews in Judæa, not to thoſe in the diſperſion: If he reply, that Peter is implicitly mentioned in that phraſe [another's foundation] I anſwer; 1. That thoſe words of Theophylact being on Gal. 1. 21. can no more refer to Peter than to James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who is together with him mentioned, v. 19. and then the foundation might be James's, as well as Peter's; and 2. if it were Peter's foundation, yet James being by the Synod of the Apoſtles and particularly by Peter ſet to govern whom Peter had converted, Peter might then be free to leave them, and goe to the diſperſion.

12. His laſt is taken from S. Hierome's words of St. Paul, me miſit ad Gentes, illum poſuit in Judæa, he ſent me to the Gentiles, and put him in Judæa. And that may have had truth, in its time, of Chriſt's commiſſion, but no way reſiſts their latter fact of committing Judæa to the Biſhop James (as all Hiſtorians † Hypotyp. l. 5. ſay they did, particularly Euſebius from † Clemens) and then Peter and John going to ſeveral parts of the diſperſion of the Jews, and one of them at length to Rome, where ſuch were ſcattered.

13. On the back of this he adds, [Yet Dr. H. from this place gives St. Peter an excluſive Province, to wit, the Gentiles, nor any Gentiles, but thoſe of the diſperſion out of Judæa onely.] The Reader may perhaps think that by [this place] he means the laſt cited from St. Hierome, but that cannot be, for I remember not to have produced that place at all, and then I cannot have made this, or any concluſion from it. I rather think he means the place, Gal. 11. which he had been explicating, and then 'tis true, that from the pact between James and John and Peter on one ſide, and Paul on the other, I do conclude that part onely of the Jews to be Peter's Province, which was not committed to James as Biſhop of Jeruſalem, nor yet aſſigned to John, that other Apoſtle of the Jews. What he means by thoſe words [to wit the Gentiles, nor any Gentiles, but thoſe of the diſperſion out of Judæa onely] I underſtand not, nor am directed by the table of Errata how to help it, yet I ſuppoſe Gentiles are miſtaken for Jews in both places, and then I acknowledge this to be my concluſion, in no-wiſe wreſted from me by his ſix arguments.

14. The remainder of the Section is an indeavour to ſmooth over the former explication, by repeating it in other words, but adding no farther weight of reaſon to it, and I ſhall leave it to be compared with the paraphraſe of the whole place, which I have now given. Onely when in the * Rep. p. 55. l. 12. cloſe he cites * words of mine, that the agreement between the Apoſtles was the interpretation of the πνεῦμα, and thence concludes it my acknowledgment that there is no farther deſignation over and above Chriſt's ſpecial cooperation, ſignified by the right hands of fellowſhip, &c. Gal. 11. 9. here is a double miſrepreſentation, 1. Chriſt's ſpecial cooperation with thoſe Apoſtles is made to be all one with the πνεῦμα, or Commiſſion from Chriſt (Chriſt's cooperation, I confeſs, ſignifies not the ſevering of Juriſdictions, but his diſtinct Commiſſions, or intruſting one with the Jews, the other with the Gentiles, do, and thus 'tis expreſly ſaid, that Paul was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles) 2. that when I ſay the agreement is the interpretation of the πνεῦμα, and viſibly mean no more by ſaying ſo, than that the matter of both is the ſame, and ſo what the matter of one is, may be reſolved by what is expreſt of the other (they now by pact divide themſelves as Chriſt had by his Commiſſion divided them, ſending Paul to the Gentiles, as Peter was left to the Jews) he will infer that pact, and that deſignation of Chriſt's, to be by me made to ſignifie the ſame thing; and ſo conclude that I hold the ſame point my ſelf, viz. that there was no new and farther deſignation, as if two acts by being converſant about the ſame object, were inferred to be the ſame act, Chriſt's precedent deſigning, and the Apoſtles ſubſequent. By his good leave, thoſe may interpret one the other, which do not ſo ſignifie as to be the ſame thing, the community of the matter is ſufficient for the former, but the identity of the act is required to the latter. And let that ſerve for his ſixth Section.

SECT. VII.

S. W's cutting a Teſtimony in pieces. The uſe of Eccleſia for leſs than the whole Church. Peter and Paul, Κορυφαῖοι, Μαχαίρα Νας, Πέτρος, &c. Paul's perfecta authoritas among the Gentiles, Ἰσοτιμία, in Theophylact, &c. His interpretation of perfect authority, for greater powerfulneſs; ἐνεργῆσας, Gal. 11. Of a prudent conſent to act, without making a pact. The Apoſtles deſire of uniting Jews and Gentiles, yet keeping their cœtus apart. Of the 14 years betwixt the paſſages, Gal. 1. and 2. His skill in Chronology. My ſubſtituting Pelagius for St. Jerome, accounted for. Of Bellarmine's proofs that the leſſer Comments are Pelagius's. An Heretick's Teſtimony in a matter of fact not belonging to his Hereſie. An Heathen's.

1. THE ſeventh Section undertakes to anſwer my Teſtimonies, and begins with that of St. Ambroſe, and is very well worth the conſideration of any Reader that is not ſufficiently acquainted with S. W's artifices. But to another it will be of leſs importance.

2. His way is that which he hath formerly made uſe of, firſt cutting a Teſtimony in pieces, and leaving out the greater part of it, and then dealing with the Remainder, as he pleaſes, and when he hath done ſo, at length taking notice of the other part. The half which he ſets down is, Petrum—— "he names Peter alone, and compares him to himſelf, becauſe he had received the Primacy to found "the Church, and he likewiſe is choſen to have the Primacy of founding the Church of the Gentiles.] and from hence, if onely Primacy be allowed to ſignifie Primacy of Juriſdiction (as I willingly acknowledge knowledge it doth in that place] then he concludes it impoſſible to imagine a Teſtimony more expreſly for their Tenet of St. Peter's Univerſal Juriſdiction, and greater than St. Paul's, than this which I alledge againſt it; and then poor I am reminded of my old and bold trick of gulling the Reader to his face, without either ſhame or conſcience, and much more of the ſame dialect. But 1. If I had cited no words but theſe, had I ſo utterly forfeited my cauſe? Let us try that a while.

3. In the proceſs of this anſwer, he hath theſe words, St. Peter is not here at all particularized to any part of the Church; but extended to all, unleſs D. H. will ſay, that the word Eccleſia Church ſignifies a piece of the Church onely:] This then is the utmoſt that the ſuppoſed impoſſibility is built on, the great abſurdity that the word Eccleſia ſhould ſignifie no more than a part of the Church: Whether this be ſuch an unheard of abſurdity, let the circumſtances of the place help us to judge.

4. And 1. here is a double Primacy mentioned, that is clear, St. Paul had one of them, and St. Peter another; and can two Primacies to the ſame be imagined any fitter way than by underſtanding them of ſeveral parts, eſpecially if the two Primates were ἰσότιμοι of equal dignity, as I there brought teſtimonies in a parentheſis to prove that theſe two were, for if one have the prime juriſdiction of the whole, every other that hath juriſdiction over a part muſt be inferiour to him, and ſo not have an equal Primacy of Juriſdiction.

5. Secondly, St. Paul's Primacy is here expreſly ſaid to be a Primacy of this kind, of founding a part, viz. the Churches of the Gentiles; and can there be any neceſſity that St. Peter's ſhould be underſtood in another notion, of founding the whole Church? The Church is a body, and ſo bears analogy with the natural body, the whole Church with the whole body, and the particular Churches with parts of the body, and the Primate with the head. And then to me it is not obvious to diſcern, how one ſhall be acknowledged the head of one part, if it be but of the hand or foot, much leſs of a far greater part of the body, and yet another to remain the head of the whole body. It is much eaſier to conceive that the Gentile Chriſtians are conſidered as one body, and the Jewiſh as another, and ſo each of them have their ſeveral heads. I need not now ſay, that this muſt unavoidably be ſo, 'tis ſufficient to me at preſent againſt the Diſpatcher's aſſertion, that thus it may be, for then this Teſtimony, even after his mutilation of it, is not the moſt expreſs againſt me imaginable.

6. Thirdly, I ſhall propoſe to conſideration, whether when a parity of manner is ſaid to be obſerved in their Election (as the * words of the Teſtimony by him recited affirm) it be more reaſonable to make the compariſon of Primacies in founding, betwixt that of the whole, and that of the part, or betwixt one of one part, and another of another part. This latter I am ſure is no news, viz. for one of theſe Apoſtles to be ſaid to found one part, and the other another, and from thence for them to be joyned together as † two heads, which I think muſt refer to two bodies. So St. Chryſoſtome in his ‖ Oration on the martyrdom of theſe two, having called them * κορυφαίους heads or principal perſons, and that in reſpect of men that come to ſalvation by them, he ſoon adds † Πετρὸς τῶν ἀγγωμόνων Ἰουδαίων ὁ χάλινθ, Παῦλος τῶν ἐθνῶν ὁ διδάσκαλθ, Peter the bridle of the ignorant Jews, Paul the teacher of the Gentiles, and in that reſpect, ſaith he, Peter a fiſher was intruſted with the Jews, ‖ ἐβυθίζετο γὰρ ἡ δόξα τῶν Ἰουδαίων, for the glory of the Jews was ſunk into the deep; and to Paul the tentmaker he committed the Gentiles, that he might cloth their nakedneſs, &c. and then * Ὦ μακαρία δύας, O bleſſed two, which are truſted with the ſouls of the whole world, † οἱ ζευκτοὶ βόες τῆς ἐκκλησίας, the pair of Oxen of the Church, that carry the croſs for their yoke, joyned now, in relation to the whole Church, as they were ſevered, in reſpect of the parts, and ſo both together in his Θration on theſe two Apoſtles, † τῆς ἐκκλησίας πέτρα, the rock or foundation ſtone of the Church in the ſingular. And if all this have any truth in it, or becauſe it is poſſible it may, 'tis certain I have not produced ſuch an unfortunate treacherous teſtimony, as he would perſwade his credulous Reader.

* Pari modo electus.

† κορυφαίοι μαθηταί, and κορυφαίοι Ἀπόστολοι. Niceph. To. 1. p. 196.

‖ T. v. p. 992.

* L. 8.

† L. 16.

‖ L. 19.

* L. 27.

† L. 33.

Ib. p. 995. l. 18.

7. But then 2. it muſt ſtill be remembred, that there was another large parcel of St. Ambroſe's words ſet down at length by me, but left out wholly in this place by S. W. no doubt on the ſame account, becauſe they manifeſt the Church in the former words to be the Church of the Jews onely, and not the whole Church; which was mine, but not S. W's intereſt. The words are, Ita tamen ut & Petrus prædicaret Gentibus, ſi cauſa fuiſſet, & Paulus Judæis, nam uterque invenitur utrumque feciſſe, yet ſo, or notwithſtanding ſo, that Peter preached to the Gentiles alſo, if there were cauſe, and Paul to the Jews, for both of them are found to have done both. By this (e'er we proceed) the matter is evident; for 1. what ſenſe could there be in the ita tamen, yet ſo, if Peter had before been reſolved the Primate in building of the whole Church? for then there could be no doubt of his preaching to either part of it. 2. What ſenſe in the & alſo? for ſure the Gentiles were no addition to the whole Church; and 3. What proportion between his preaching to the Gentiles if need were, and Paul to the Jews, if the forementioned Primacy of the one, were not confined to the Jews, as the other was expreſly to the Gentiles?

8. But this is not all yet, for there is ſtill another part, and it farther follows in the Teſtimony, Sed tamen plena authoritas Petro in Judaiſmi prædicatione data agnoſcitur, & Pauli perfecta authoritas in prædicatione Gentium invenitur. But yet (though Peter when there was cauſe, preached to the Gentiles, and Paul to the Jews) the full authority is acknowledged to be given to Peter in the preaching to the Jews, and Paul's perfect authority is found in preaching to the Gentiles. This is enough (I need not add the ſmall remainder of the Teſtimony) to clear this matter that is now in debate betwixt us: For ſure if Peter's full authority were given him in relation to the Jews, and St. Paul had a perfect authority in reſpect of the Gentiles, the Church, in founding of which Peter's Primacy conſiſted, muſt needs be the Church of the Jews, and not the whole Church, the Church of the Gentiles in like manner belonging not to his, but Paul's Primacy. Thus much for the firſt Teſtimony, which (by the way) was brought by me, not onely to prove that the Jews were Peter's Province, and not the Gentiles, and the Gentiles St. Paul's, and not the Jews, but withall to ſhew how reconcilable this poſition was with his preaching to Gentiles, when occaſion required, and ſo was full anſwer to his one argument fetcht from his preaching to Cornelius, &c. But this S. W's intereſts lead him not to take notice of.

9. The

9. The words of Chryſoſtome, that St. Paul ſhews himſelf to be ὁμότιμον equal to them, and compares himſelf with Peter the chief of them] I brought in by way of parentheſis, to explicate and confirm the words of St Ambroſe of the double Primacy, and ſo I did the words of Theophylact alſo, he ſhews himſelf ἰσότιμον equal or equally dignified to Peter. And theſe he will call my ſecond and third Teſtimonies, thereby to inhanſe the number of his victories. To the former of theſe his anſwer is, that τιμὴ ſignifies any kind of extrinſecal honour, whether it ſprings from better parts, greater efficacy, more induſtry in preaching, and from whatſoever cauſe, and not onely from dignity and juriſdiction; And then 2. The ſubject matter, Gal. 2. 8. referrs it onely to efficaciouſneſs of preaching to Jews and Gentiles, and not to juriſdiction; and that ſo it muſt needs be, he infers from the conſequents in Theophylact, for he that had given Peter efficacy of preaching to the Jews, gave me the ſame toward the Gentiles.] To all this I reply, 1. That I am not concerned in enquiring the ſpring of his honour, any farther than that ſignifies the grace or gift of Chriſt; To that ſpring St. Chryſoſtome, and to that St. Paul, v. 9. refers it: But the honour it ſelf, from whence ſoever that come, it hinders it not from ſignifying the honour of juriſdiction. 'Tis confeſt on both ſides, that St. Peter had ſuch honour of juriſdiction; and then, 'tis not well imaginable how St. Paul could be ὁμότιμος, and how he could compare himſelf to him, unleſs he had the ſame honour alſo; ſo ὁμότιμος ſignifies, or equal, ſo ἰσότιμος, and then ſtill that muſt be juriſdiction; This is farther expreſt in Chryſoſtome by τὴν αὐτὴν ἑκάτερος ἀπέλαυσεν ἀξίαν, each enjoyed the ſame dignity, which as it need not ſignifie the dignity of juriſdiction onely, ſo it can with no reaſon exclude that of juriſdiction, the equality whereof cannot more fitly, nor is by any other phraſe more frequently expreſſed, than by ὁμοτιμία and ἰσοτιμία, the ſameneſs and equality of dignity.

10. Secondly, for the ſubject matter, Gal. 2. 8. it is not barely, as he mentions, efficaciouſneſs of preaching, but Chriſt's operating in him to the preaching: and why may not Chriſt's Commiſſion be part of his operating in or on him? If it be not, it is yet evident by the γάρ, for, that that v. 8. is ſet as a proof of the 7. and that is of Chriſt's Commiſſion, expreſt by πεπίστευμαι being intruſted; So offices, we know, are committed to the truſt of Stewards, and thoſe, I hope, bring juriſdiction with them.

11. Thirdly, For Theophylact, It is far from true that he refers the ἰσοτιμία equality of dignity onely to efficaciouſneſs of preaching: He ſets down three verſes 7, 8, 9. together, and then gives his brief Scholia joyntly upon them, and at the foot of v. 7. where the Apoſtle mentions his being intruſted with the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion, as Peter of the circumciſion, he adds ἐνταῦθα δὲ δείκνυσιν ἑαυτὸν ἰσότιμον τῷ Πέτρῳ, but, or mean while in that place (what place? why evidently v. 7.) he ſhews himſelf to be equally dignified with St. Peter; proceeding then, as the Text led him, to v. 8. Ὁ γὰρ δοὺς— for he that gave him the energy of the Goſpel to the Hebrews, gave the ſame alſo to me to the Gentiles, which is a proof indeed, and ſo is produced by him, of the truth of the foregoing verſe, an argument of his ἰσοτιμία, Chriſt's diſpenſing his gifts, as he doth his commiſſions, but is no way the explication of the former words, or leaſt intimation that the ἰσοτιμία ſignified not juriſdiction, but onely efficaciouſneſs of preaching: Nay, it is an argument to the contrary, for no wiſe man attempts to prove the ſame by it ſelf: So little heed is due to S. W. when he ſaith of his ſenſe, that nothing can be more evident] the contrary to which is moſt true.

12. The fourth Teſtimony forſooth, is the other part of St. Ambroſe's words, which he now confeſſes is rather the ſecond part of the firſt, and had he let the Reader know it then, there had been no room for his Anſwer to it. All that he pretends for this dealing is, that it ſculks under a parentheſis in which the two late Teſtimonies are found,] What this ſculking here ſignifies, I divine not; the two laſt out of Chryſoſtome and Theophylact were indeed in a parentheſis, and being there, were ſo viſible to him, that he made them, above what they aimed at, a ſecond and a third teſtimony; but this other part of St. Ambroſe's was not in the parentheſis, and therefore could not ſculk under it, but indeed was left as viſible, as any line in the book, to be joyned with the words before the parentheſis, and ſo it was but his artifice to hide it from the Reader, when it would have ſuperſeded his anſwer; and now, to tell him, it ſculks, as if it were aſhamed to be ſeen, when he cannot but know, that he alone was guilty of denying it the light.

13. By this trick he thinks he had gained another advantage alſo, for the one teſtimony being thus cut into two, the firſt thing it now ſaith is, Ita tamen ut & Petrus prædicaret Gentibus, but ſo, that both Peter ſhould preach to the Gentiles, if cauſe were, and Paul to the Jews, which, ſaith he, is expreſly contrary to D. H. this granting that each might preach to either, he denying they had right to doe ſo; Repl. p. 56. and that Peter had no juriſdiction, &c. Of Sch. p. 71.] But to this I anſwer, 1. That I no-where ſaid, that Peter might not, or had not right to preach to any Gentile, if cauſe were; but in the place which he cites from the Reply, I join preaching and preſiding, as was ſhewed, Sect. 5. and ſay, the Jews were his peculiar, or portion, or province, and that ſo his, as the Gentiles were not his, not ſo his, as that he might preach to no other; and in the other place, expreſly ſpecified juriſdiction. 2. That if theſe words had been permitted to be joyned with the former, they had not onely ſhewed that St. Peter's Primacy was confined to the Church of the Jews, as St. Paul's was to the Gentile Churches, but alſo that his preaching, when God directed him, to Cornelius, and his family, was reconcileable with the Jews being his peculiar (or, as he ſaith, excluſive) province, and ſo would have been ſo far from contradicting me, that, as I have now ſhewed, it would have teſtified all that was my purpoſe or my intereſt to affirm.

14. But there is yet another part of this Teſtimony, that Paul had perfect authority in the preaching to the Gentiles and Peter full in preaching to the Jews, and what will he make of this? why, ſaith he, that is onely meant of greater powerfulneſs and authoritative efficacity in preaching, not of fuller power of Juriſdiction.] But 1. how come perfect authority of the one, and full of the other, to ſignifie, onely greater powerfulneſs? Doth full and perfect ſignifie onely greater? or doth authority ſignifie onely powerfulneſs? Certainly this cannot be, till we have gotten both new Grammars and new Dictionaries: I ſhall make one trial whether he will ſtand to this himſelf: If authority be no more than powerfulneſs or authoritative efficacity, then why ſhould not ἐνέργεια efficacy ſignifie authority? If it do, then ἐνεργήσας, Gal. 2. 8. is in all reaſon to be rendred Chriſt's giving Peter authority for the Apoſtleſhip of the Jews, and

Paul

Paul for the Gentiles; and then his whole Scheme, founded in the bare efficacity in that verſe, is utterly ruined; Whereas if I, in compliance with him, grant ἐνέργεια to ſignifie bare efficacity there, yet the Commiſſion, v. 7. is ground enough for the authority which I contend for, and ſo unleſs authority ſignifie efficacity excluſively to juriſdiction, i. e. unleſs it ſignifie not authority, there can be no place for the onely in his interpretation.

15. Yet, ſaith he, it cannot be otherwiſe neither proceeding upon grounds common to us both, theſe words being the explication and comment on the greater efficacity of preaching, v. 8. But 1. though the words are written on v. 8. what hinders but the data authoritas—may refer to the Commiſſion precedent, v. 7. of which the proof is brought, v. 8. for ſhould that be the interpretation of ἐνεργήσας, v. 8. it muſt follow that the ἐνέργεια or efficaciouſneſs there, muſt be authority, which is more than I demand. The truth is, St. Ambroſe's words are, data agnoſcitur, and invenitur, their full authority being acknowledged, and found to be given; and to this the efficacity of their preaching was uſefull, and ſo this is a Comment on the 8. verſe, the delivering the authority being ſet down, v. 7.

16. What he adds from my grounds, who, ſaith he, make no deſignation of Provinces till the agreement, v. 9. hath ſurely no truth in it; for where have I ſaid this? He is wont to cite page and line, but here he cites neither, becauſe certainly he cannot, for I have always affirmed deſignation of Provinces from the πιστευμα intruſting or commiſſion, v. 7. as well as from the agreement.

17. Yet once more, to render this place impoſſible to ſerve D. H's turn. Let us, ſaith he, look, Anſw. p. 51. l. 26. where he contends, that preaching and converting is nothing to the matter of Juriſdiction.] But how doth my ſaying ſo, infer this impoſſibility? Though bare preaching do not infer Juriſdiction, becauſe I may preach to him, who is neither mine, nor any other man's province: yet full and perfect authority in preaching to a peculiar province, as the Jews and Gentiles here, may infer it, and ſo muſt the Primacy in founding Churches in the beginning of the Teſtimony, which ought to be allowed ſome regard in interpreting the end of it.

18. Now follows my fifth Teſtimony from St. Hierome, that the Churches of the Jews ſeorſim habebantur—were held apart, nor mingled with thoſe of the Gentiles, and that the agreement was made that St. Paul ſhould preach to the Gentiles, Peter, James and John to the Jews. To this his firſt application is, that the latter part of it, is already anſwered, and ſhewn that it was a prudent conſent to act in ſuch a ſort—to act, ſaith he, not to make a formal and perpetual pact.— But 1. (to omit that this latter was not before brought, and then how could it be anſwered, but by divination?) I ſee not how I am prejudiced by the prudence of the conſent; If it were, as he ſaith, a prudent conſent, and that mutual, I ſhall deſire no more of it, for that to my ears ſignifies a prudent agreement, and it is no intereſt of mine to queſtion the prudence of it; and then 2. I ſhall allow it to be a conſent to act, and not require him to add to make a pact (for a conſent or agreement to make a pact, is, I think, an agreement to make an agreement) and it will ſerve my turn, if they agreed to act after this manner, without agreeing ſo to agree. Laſtly, If the agreement were made, if the conſent were mutual, I think, no more wanting to make it formal, and being not limited to a time, I ſee not how it can eſcape being perpetual, at leaſt as long as the occaſion laſted, i. e. the partition betwixt Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians.

19. Now then for the firſt part, he confeſſes the Apoſtles did prudently let them uſe their devotions apart, as long as the Jewiſh cuſtomes were in freſh obſervation—but he denies abſolutely that which can ſerve D. H's turn, viz. that they uſed their endeavours to keep them ſtill apart for the future, which they had done, had they conſtituted diſtinct Biſhops over them to govern them as contradiſtinct Provinces. To this I anſwer, that if it be granted that the Apoſtles prudently let them keep their devotions apart, it will alſo be as reaſonable to conceive that their ſeveral cœtus were ſeverally governed, their diſtant Cuſtomes ſo requiring; and that being granted, my turn is ſerved, without their uſing any endeavours to keep them ſtill (as that ſignifies perpetually) apart for the future. For I doubt not, but their Union and Communion was the Apoſtles mutual aim, but they did not yet ſee it a time to attempt it, the Jewiſh Cuſtomes being (as himſelf ſaith) in freſh obſervation, and ſo certainly they continued beyond this time, referred to, Gal. 2. and then ſo long they were to be governed as contradiſtinct cœtus, and then this agreement was reaſonable, and then St. Peter was in all reaſon to obſerve his part of it, and then he could not exerciſe juriſdiction over the Gentile cœtus, and that is all that I contend for.

20. As for their conſtituting diſtinct Biſhops over them, I refer him to his own * Baronius formerly cited, out of the Conſtitutions, that over the Church of Antioch Euodius was created Biſhop by Peter, and Ignatius by Paul, and that together, upon account of this diſtinction betwixt theſe Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians; and ſo he now ſees whoſe fault it was, that he did not ſooner (as he after complains) hear news from antiquity of ſuch Biſhops over the Jews or Gentiles onely, and of their reuniting afterwards alſo: Which in like manner he might have done, and that it was at Antioch, under Ignatius, as under Clement at Rome; But 'tis not his intereſt to uſe clues, and then he muſt remain in mazes. * To. 1. An. 45. n. 13, 14.

21. His next approach is by obſerving, that the two parts of that Teſtimony of St. Hierome were the firſt on the firſt, and the ſecond on the ſecond Chapter to the Galatians, and this, ſaith he, happened fourteen years after that, as is clear, c. 2. 1. and indeed much longer, the ſcandal between the Jews and the Gentiles having been much ancienter, and ever ſince the beginning of the preaching of the faith to both, and then this is my abuſing the Reader. To this I anſwer, that what he hath here pleaſed to obſerve of my addition, was by me freely told the Reader before, and in no-wiſe endeavoured to be concealed from him; I ſaid one was, c. 1. 22. the other on this v. of c. 2. and then how it could be the abuſing any man, I know not. 2. That the ſpace between Gal. 2. and c. 1. v. 22. is of no concernment to my Teſtimony; for if ſo long before, the cœtus were kept ſeveral, and ſo continued to this time, and beyond it, as it is certain they were, then ſtill the more reaſon was there for this agreement to be made, for one to go apart to the Jews, and the other to the Gentiles, and then he that preſided over the former, could not have the government of the latter, which is all that my cauſe required: How neceſſarily it will follow hence, that theſe ſeveral Provinces, as deducible from this Teſtimony, were, as he ſaith, four- teen years before they were, he may now judge. But then 3. when he ſaith this of Gal. 2. was much longer than fourteen years after that which is recounted, c. 1. 22. his skill in Chronology doth not diſcover it ſelf to his advantage.

* Ann. 51. n. 6. 22. For 1. if he conſult his own * Baronius, he will find it the conſent of all, that this of Gal. 2. is of the ſame date with the Council at Jeruſalem, Act. 15. then, that theſe fourteen years were to be reckoned from Paul's converſion, and not to begin three years after his converſion, c. 1. 18. And then v. 22. being after v. 18. and deſcribing the time following, the concluſion muſt be, that the time ſpoken of, Gal. 2. can be but eleven years after the time ſpoken of, c. 1. 22. and I hope eleven are not much longer than fourteen years. And what if the ſcandal between the Jews and Gentiles was ever ſince the beginning of the preaching of the faith to both? Will that prove that it was much longer than fourteen years? How many years was the Goſpel preacht to the Gentiles before the ſtoning of Steven, and the immediate conſequent of that, Paul's converſion? and yet ſaith Baronius, it was but fourteen from that: It is pity to inſiſt longer on this.

23. But the fierceſt impreſſion is ſtill behind; for, ſaith he, What if this Teſtimony be not St. Hierome's, but another Authour's, and he too an Heretick, and in all probability the Arch-heretick Pelagius, and this confeſt by all ſides, and moſt unlikely to be unknown to D. H. What character ſhall we think ſuch a Writer deſerves, who characters himſelf ſo earneſtly to deſire to ſpeak the whole truth of God, &c. And great circuit of words is uſed to prove this a wilfully affected unſincerity; and then, as ſuch, it is ſolemnly lifted in the Index, as falſely ſubſtituting the Arch-heretick Pelagius his Teſtimony for St. Jerome, noted with p. 239, 240, 241.

24. But after all this noiſe, what is it that D. H. hath committed? In the utmoſt of truth, no more but this, that to ſatisfie himſelf and the Reader, what underſtanding the Ancients had of St. Paul's words, Gal. 1. and 2. among others he reſorted to St. Hierome, as he was ſet out by Mar. Victorius in the Coloine Edition, and there finding what he thought pertinent, he put it into his anſwer to S.W. And who would have thought this would have been thus criminous? It is true, there are two ſorts of Comments on that Epiſtle ſet out in thoſe works, the one larger and the other briefer, and I had reaſon at that time, of full force with me, to look into the latter and not the former: The reaſon was that of the three Volumes of that Father, the ſecond, which contained thoſe larger, had been ſnatcht from me by theſe evil times, and onely the firſt and third Volume (wherein the latter is) were remaining by me. Since that time I have had commodity to look into the larger, and there alſo I find what is ſufficient for my purpoſe, that

* To. 2. in Gal. 2. p. 126. H. ſeeing the Gentiles, being of age, could not reaſonably be circumciſed, when it would torment but profit them nothing, nor required to abſtain from meats to which they had been accuſtomed, and ſeeing the believing Jews that had been circumciſed, could not be brought to contemn thoſe things wherein they gloried, therefore by the providence of God one Apoſtle was given to the circumciſed, who ſhould ſeem to acquieſce in the ſhadows of the Law, another to them that were in uncircumciſion, who ſhould not think the grace of God to be a ſervitude but a free faith: Other Teſtimonies to my purpoſe I have here formerly produced thence: Where now was the unſincerity at all, much leſs the wilfulneſs or affectedneſs thereof?

25. But he will not in kindneſs to me ſuſpect, that I could be ignorant, that this leſſer Comment is a known heretick's.] I anſwer, he can think me ignorant enough in greater matters, when his intereſt leads him that way, and I ſhall make no ſcruple to diſclaim all title to his good opinion, when it is ſuch an ἄδωρον δῶρον, ſo viſibly deſigned to my hurt. The truth is, I had not, that my memory ſuggeſted to me, any leaſt ground of ſuſpicion of the authority of the book, but now upon his advertiſement (the firſt by which I have edified) I have lookt among their Writers, and find that † Bellarmine verbatim ſaith, what without citing him S.W. hath tranſcribed from him, concluding it to be Pelagius's, becauſe St. Auguſtine ‖ ſaith he had read ſome ſhort Comments of Pelagius upon all the Epiſtles of St. Paul; and after, * ſaith he, alledges words out of the Comment on 1 Cor. 7. which are here found; and again, that Pelagian Opinions are found in them in the places which S.W. hath ſet down. To this I might reply, 1. That Sixtus Senenſis doth from St. Auguſtine alſo, 3. de Bapt. give a competent reaſon, that they are not Pelagius's. 2. That when in the † place firſt cited hy Bellarmine, St. Auguſtine ſaith, he had read ſome writings of Pelagius, Viri, ut audio, ſancti, & non parvo profectu Chriſtiani, an holy man, as he heard, and a Chriſtian of no ſmall proficiency, and ſets down from his Comment on Rom. 5. 12. quandam eorum argumentationem, qui negant parvulos peccatum originale geſtare, an argumentation of thoſe who deny that Children have original ſin, ſetting down, as he ſaith, the ‖ very words of that Authour. * Hi autem inquit, qui contra traducem peccati ſunt, ita illam impugnare nituntur.—— There are now no ſuch words to be found in that ſhort Comment on that place, as the Reader that will compare, ſhall ſoon find, which to me is an unanſwerable argument, that theſe are not the Comments which St. Auguſtine aſſigned to Pelagius. 3. That when it is ſuggeſted, that on 1 Cor. 7. St. Auguſtine cites words from Pelagius that are found here, the truth is no more than this, St. Auguſtine ſpeaking of v. 14. of that Chapter hath theſe words, aut ſic eſt accipiendum, quemadmodum & nos alibi, & Pelagius cum eandem—— tractaret, expoſuit, quod exempla jam præceſſerant & virorum quos uxores, & fœminarum quas mariti lucrifecerant Chriſto, & parvulorum ad quos faciendos Chriſtianos voluntas Chriſtiana etiam unius parentis evicerat—and the Authour of theſe ſhort Comments hath theſe, Exemplum refert, quia ſæpe contigerit ut lucrifieret vir per mulierem, citing the words of St. Peter, that if any believe not the word, they may by the converſation of the wife be gained without the word: Where, to omit that St. Auguſtine cites from himſelf alſo, what he cites from Pelagius, it will be hard to look into any Commentatour on the place, whoſe words ſhall not come as near St. Auguſtine's, as that Authour's do; So little of evidence can be fetcht from that correſpondence. 4. Whether there be Pelagian paſſages in theſe Comments, is too long a work to be tried in this place, when it muſt be conteſted by conſulting the Comments indefinitely, on five Chapters to the Romans, one to the Corinth. two to the Philip. and one to Timothy, and when in caſe ſuch ſhould be there found, they will no farther prove them written by Pelagius, than it can be demonſtrated, that no other perſon but he could write ſuch.

† De ſcriptor. in Hieron.

‖ De Pec. mer. & Rem. l. 3. c. 1.

* c. 12.

† De Pec. mer. & Rem. l. 3. c. 1.

‖ Iiſdem verbis quibus eam legi. Ibid.

* c. 2. in init.

26. But to conclude this matter (without beginning a new examination of Rivet's arguments, who I doubt not will readily take Bellarmine at his word in ſuch an argument as this) ſuppoſe it granted that

that no other but the very heretick Pelagius wrote these Comments, what hinders but he, an heretick, as long as he was in his wits, in a bare matter of fact or historical truth, as distant from any point of his heresie, as Abraham's begetting Isaac was, and as probable to come within his cognisance, as St. Hierome's (being his contemporary) should be beleived, and consequently appealed to in that matter, wherein no ancient Writer contradicts him? what is more ordinary than (for the Traditions of the Church, &c.) to fetch Testimonies out of Tertullian, and he was an heretick, a Montanist, and that even from his book de Corona militis especially, which yet was written either after he was in heresie, or at least when he was inclining to it? And was not Origen an heretick with a witness? And yet sure 'tis ordinary to fetch Testimonies from him even for points of Doctrine, and I have seen it done sometime by S. W's friend, for a point * bordering very near on his heresie: Finally, if Pelagius were an Arch-heretick, yet (to omit St. Augustine's Elogy of him, even now mentioned, much higher than belongs to many that are no hereticks at all) neither will this yet so utterly prejudge his Testimony. Do not all Catholick Writers in the like cases appeal even to Heathens, to Dio, Ammianus Marcellinus, nay, to the Arch-heathens, Zosimus and Lucian themselves, when their own Superstition and Idolatry, or malice are not concern'd? Undoubtedly they do; and then what a foul crime was it in me to cite a Testimony of that kind from one that S. W. and Bellarmine probably believe to be the authour that St. Augustine calls Pelagius, when the very thing that I cite from him, is asserted by Baronius their own great Master of history?

* See M. Wh. de Med. Anim. Stat. Dim. 8. p. 57.

27. Thus much for this heavy charge, that makes such a noise here and through the remainder of this Dispatcher: As for his additional accusation (that nothing may remain unattempted) that I have falsified the words of this Testimony also] that will soon be dispatcht. I said that St. Hierome added on Gal. 2. 8. that the agreement was made, that Paul should preach to the Gentiles, and Peter and James and John to the Jews: whereas, saith he, there is no news of any agreement expresst in this place. But if those short Comments be consulted, it will be found, that these words which he confesses to be there, dextras dederunt ita nos docere debere, they gave hands that so we should teach] do contain this; For what [so we should teach] signifies, must, as a relative, be understood by looking back to the antecedents, the Scholion of the former verse, ut prædicem in Gentibus, sicut illi Judæis, that I should preach among the Gentiles, as they to the Jews; They] are Peter, James and John; and we] Paul and Barnabas: Our so teaching] (not teaching thus and thus, as S. W. would render it,) but in reference to the antecedents, teaching or preaching to the Gentiles as they to the Jews, and then dextras dederunt ita debere, they gave hands that so we should] can be no less nor more than making an agreement that they should doe thus; which is all that I cited from thence. And so much for this Testimony.

SECT. VIII.

S. W's imputing all to prudential Considerations. Paul was directed to the Gentiles by Christ. He averts building on another's Foundation. His Commission not unlimited. My self-contradictions cleared. Of falsifying by omitting some words. Same rarities of S. W. My falsifying a Testimony from Chrysostome largely examined. Eusebius's Testimony of Peter's κλησις. S. W's Observations on St. Hierome's words evacuated.

1. HIS eighth Section proceeds to a view of the words of Theophylact, which he calls my sixth Testimony, though if I had been to make my own Inventory, it could have been but the third in any justice; But the more numerous they are, the more they adorn his Victories, being sure to be carried in triumph by him.

2. The words of the Testimony are, that St. Paul being come to Judæa departed thence, both because he was sent a preacher to the Gentiles, and because he would not build on another's foundation; His first answer to this is, that unless he says he could not build on another's foundation, or as D. H. expresses it, Repl. p. 56. had not right to doe it, these words are nothing to him, who desires not that Paul should doe imprudently, i. e. leave a place where his preaching was most needfull, and most particularly fruitfull; and stay in another where it was needless, and not so particularly fruitfull.] But I reply 1. That this Testimony, being produced in the Answ. to Schis. Dis. and not in the Reply to the Cath. Gent. was brought to prove the division of provinces, which was then before me, and not all that I had at any other time spoken of that matter, or particularly what I had insisted on in the place of the Reply, to which he refers, and thence concludes me to affirm the no right. As for the particular at which it was aimed, to that the testimony is of force, though it did not say [he could not] the two reasons which are there given for his leaving Judæa, being pertinent to this purpose, though he added not a third of a greater efficacy.

3. Secondly, He that makes the prudential consideration the onely reasons of St. Paul's leaving Judæa, should in all reason shew at least, that there is any place for it in this testimony, and not impose on a Father's words what is no way deducible from them; Theophylact renders two reasons expresly, why St, Paul leaves Judæa without preaching in it; and he imputes the action wholly to a third, which he doth not mention; this is an excellent way of answering Testimonies, especially when it no way appears that St. Paul at this time had preacht to the Gentiles, and then how could his preaching be particularly fruitfull among them, as he yet saith it was, and in that onely founds the prudential consideration?

4. But then 3. Seeing it would by his own confession have force with him, in case it had been [he could not] or [had not right to doe it] let this be applyed in the latitude, to his preaching in Judæa, and then I shall propose to his consideration, and demand what it is that in his imagination should give a right to any man to be the Apostle of such a Province? Is it not fundamentally a Commission from Christ? If then St. Paul was thus commissionated to be a preacher to the Gentiles, and not to the people of Judæa, nay, if he were by Christ expresly commanded to leave Jerusalem, and at the same time, and by the same expres command commissionated to this Apostolacy of the Gentiles, in opposition to those of Judæa, what can he demand more to make good the [he could not, or had no right] to continue and preach in Judæa? And is not this the importance of St. Paul's own relation of Christ's words, Act. 22. 21. Depart (from Jerusalem, v. 18.) for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles; and so likewise of the first part of this testimony (which seems to be founded on that Revelation mentioned in that Text) that he departed from Judæa, because he was sent a Preacher to the Gentiles, which to my senses hath this force in it (I know not how the wits may make a shift to transform it) that he that was by his Commission from Christ directed to leave Judæa, and preach far off to the Gentiles, could not, or had no right to stay and preach in Judæa; But Paul was by his Commission from Christ thus directed, Therefore——

5. I need not now farther enquire, whether it were simply unlawfull for him to build on another's foundation (and so whether he could not, or had no right to doe that) it is sufficient that we know he disclaims doing it, Rom. 5. 20. and saith, he studiously and solicitously avoided it, directing his actions by this as by a rule, not to be transgrest [yea so have I strived to preach the Gospel not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation] and so likewise 2 Cor. 10. 16. where he averts this very thing with some earnestnes, under the repeated style of boasting of things without his line, measure, v. 13. the measure of the rule that God hath distributed: And it may be observed, Heb. 13. 7. what a strict conjunction there is between those that have the rule over them, and those who have spoken to them the word of God (in the notion which critically belongs to that phrase, speaking or preaching the word of God, for preaching the Gospel to them that had it not before, and so laying the foundation among them) and that the command of remembring them (expounded, v. 17. by obeying them) belongs jointly to them; and then it will be no more lawfull to build on another man's foundation, than ἀλλοτριεπισκοπεῖν, to pretend power over another man's province. But I say, I need not farther examine this, seeing his Commission, which certainly was his rule, determined him to the Gentiles, and to leave Judæa; and that therefore he did it, are the words of the Testimony.

6. But this first answer of his being of no greater force, we were in justice to expect a second, and that he is ready with, viz. that the words [being sent a preacher to the Gentiles] are meant of Christ's Commission, acknowledged by D. H. of Sch. p. 70. to have been unlimitedly given to all the Apostles, not restrained by Christ's words to any particular Province, and in particular speaking of St. Paul's Province, Rep. p. 55. l. 31. So that the bringing this proof for lesser Provinces, is, saith he, perfectly frivolous and self-contradictory] and there is a prize for the inriching of his Index, this being at least a first of the two self-contradictions promised to be shewed in p. 244. But this is soon answered, that the Commission from Christ, which I said was given unlimitedly to all the Apostles, was that of his mission to preach given to the twelve, Matt. 28. and cannot be imagined applicable to St. Paul, who was not then a Christian; and after he was called, had also a Revelation, Act. 22. 21. that he should be the Apostle to the Gentiles, and that is not unlimitedly. As for the words in the Reply, which he saith are in particular of St. Paul's Province. I know not what they are brought to prove; If the citation be pertinent, and in connexion with his former words, the meaning of it must be, that in that page and line of the Reply, speaking of St. Paul's Province, I acknowledge that Christ's mission was unlimitedly to all; But whosoever will look, shall find no such matter in that place, but onely that the assignation of Provinces then spoken of (viz. that when they met at the same City mixt of Jews and Gentiles, Peter and John should betake themselves to the Jews, and Paul and Barnabas to the Gentiles) was not by any particular assignation of Christ's, but by agreement among themselves, which sure may have truth in it, notwithstanding this precedent assignation from Christ of the Gentiles for St. Paul's Province.

7. But he hath a third answer, and that will utterly defeat all force of this Testimony, by remembring that it is spoken by Theophylact on Gal. 1. 21. more than fourteen years before his coming to Judæa, Gal. 2. when this distribution by agreement is pretended to be made; and then, here is shame for the Doctour, &c. and if the Index may be heeded, a second self-contradiction also in this one Testimony. But to omit his false Chronology (formerly noted) of fourteen years, which cannot with any pretence be more than eleven, I answer, that as I confirm the assignation of lesser Provinces from the agreement between the Apostles themselves, Gal. 2. which indeed was after, Gal. 1. so nothing hinders, but I may lay an earlier ground of it, in the assignation of Christ himself, who by direction of his spirit poured on the Apostles, gave the twelve their several distributions, where they should plant the Gospel, and after calling St. Paul, assigned him the Gentiles peculiarly for his portion.

8. But there is yet more shame due to me by S. W's award, that I have put down the testimony in indifferent terms, being come to Judæa he departed thence, without any distinction when this coming was, before or after the pretended agreement, whereas had it been known that it was at his coming onely to see Peter, &c. It had been manifestly discovered to be perfectly useless--] And hereupon he is pleased to set down the testimony intirely, διὰ τὸ— Coming to Judæa onely to see Peter — Here is a foul fault indeed, that setting down a testimony, I did not transcribe all that that authour said, but onely as much as I conceived was to the purpose. And would it not now be some news that this should prove an instance of the many egregious and most wilfull falsifications of the Fathers and other Authours? Such his Index proclaims to be discovered p. 245. Where yet nothing is discovered but this, which I have now set down from him. But I shall hope that this is some mistake, and that this may be allowed to pass under the milder style of falsifying in jest, which he here uses, or in yet civiller terms, design and artifice of omitting, &c. To this therefore I answer, that 'tis true indeed, I onely recited those words, ἔρχεσθαι τὴν Ἰουδαίαν, coming to Judæa — and omitted to express the occasion of his coming, which I thought perfectly unnecessary to be mentioned; and the reason I so thought, is plain, 1. Because of what time soever the words were spoken, it was equally to my interest; nay the longer it were before the agreement, Gal. 11. the more it were for my turn; for if his being sent to the Gentiles, caused him then to leave Judæa, as another man's foundation, and ſo belonging to another, and not to him, then much more would this be of force afterwards, when he and Peter had made their agreement, the one to go to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles. 2. Becauſe if the occaſion of his coming were of any importance to be known, that was otherwiſe ſufficiently provided for, by ſaying the words were delivered on Gal. 1. and not Gal. 11. Which having been carefull to advertiſe the Reader, I hope I am not yet diſcovered falſifying; How I ſhall eſcape the force of his no leſs than five next pages, which are all affirmed to have made the ſame diſcoveries, I muſt now proceed to conſider.

leave

9. And here my friends are more particularly ſummoned, and S. W. moſt meekly even ſubmitteth himſelf to their cenſure, if I be found excuſable, proclaiming that 'tis falſifying in earneſt, and ſo openly and manifeſtly as is impoſſible either to be cloaked with evading gloſſes, or excuſed by ignorance or miſtake, and no leſs than five intire pages ſpent in the arraigning of it.

10. But what is it all this while, that is thus confidently accuſed? I muſt not tranſcribe his pages to ſet it down, but leave the Reader to ſee it in them p. 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250. Where after the brandiſhing his weapon, thus he ſets out. [His ſeventh teſtimony; where after he had told us that Paul and Barnabas had a province intruſted to them by giving the right hands of fellowſhip, which he calls their agreement to doe ſo, he undertakes to prove it, beginning his 4th. Paragraph thus. And this is the ſpecial importance, ſaith St. Chryſoſtome, of the ἀλλὰ τἀναντίον but contrariwiſe, &c.] Setting down all my words to almoſt (within two or three lines of) the end of the Paragraph, and when he hath done ſo, he next ſets down words out of St. Chryſoſtome, telling the Reader they are the comment upon that place which is the teſtimony related to by Dr. H.] And then follows the full voley of the many wilfull falſifications, which were promiſed to be charged upon me.

11. In this rare ſcheme of his, what truth there is, the Reader ſhall now be allowed to judge. And 1. It may not be amiſs to inquire with what propriety this can be called my ſeventh teſtimony, when if it be at all a teſtimony, 'tis certain it muſt be either the firſt or rather the ſecond (either of which is far from the ſeventh) being as he cites it, in the Reply to the Cath. Gent. which he knows was written before the appearing of Sch. Diſar. (much more of the Anſwer to it, from which he pretended to fetch the ſix former teſtimonies.) This I the rather note in paſſing, to diſcover ſome groſs affected miſadventures of this Diſpatcher in this place, as when p. 247. to aggravate my crime, or, as he calls it, my compound forgery, he ſaith my Diſarmer had ſhewed that I had no word expreſſing my poſition in any teſtimony alledged in the Tr. of Schiſm. And that therefore it is expected that I ſhould produce new ones which were expreſs, in my Reply and Anſwer.] And accordingly fetches this as a Teſtimony out of my Reply, when it is notorious to all, that my Reply was publiſht before the Diſarmer appeared in the world, and therefore could not by any ſenſible man be expected to repair the defects, which the Diſarmer is pretended to have diſcovered. So again p. 250. when to lay more weight on the Doctour's falcification in this Teſtimony in the Reply, he ſaith, that ſince id eſt which ſtickled ſo much before (in the Tr. of Sch.) was ſhamed out of countenance by Sch. Diſarmed, now he adds what words he pleaſes without any id eſt at all.] Here again Sch. Diſarmed (to ſet off a fancy of S. W's) muſt be believed to be publiſht before the Reply, which he knows it was not, or by a ſtrange ſuppoſition, not imaginable without more than ordinary divination, have an influence on the framing of that which was before it. This muſt needs be a godly engagement, a zeal founded, in the certainty of his Faith, which brings forth ſuch rarities as theſe.

12. But what if it prove not a Teſtimony at all? Let this, though not neceſſary to be maintained or inſiſted on, be examined a while. In that Reply my method led me not to produce any one Teſtimony of Fathers to prove my aſſertion, but becauſe he ſaid my poſition was directly againſt the Scripture, my undertaking was, in perfect oppoſition to him, to ſhew that it was the expreſs affirmation of Scripture it ſelf, Gal. 2. 7. from whence alone as from a ſelf-ſufficient ground in that third and fourth Paragraph, I endeavoured to deduce it, ſetting down my Paraphraſe of the place: Onely becauſe therein I thought it poſſible he might queſtion or cavil at my explication of ſome phraſes, I took St. Chryſoſtome's Scholia along with me, and in two particulars which I thought moſt liable to ambiguity, I made uſe of his name to ſhew they were not my ſingular interpretations. This I did once in the third, and once in the fourth paragraph, and both theſe were equally teſtimonies, or equally no teſtimonies; If they were Teſtimonies, why did he not ſet down the former of them, as well as the latter? If he had, then that would have been, as I ſaid, the firſt, and this the ſecond Teſtimony (which is not the ſeventh) but he did not ſo, nor at all take notice of the firſt, as a Teſtimony, and therefore I make bold to conclude, from parity of reaſon, that in his own ſerious judgment, he could not deem this a teſtimony, and then the very foundation of all his charge is defeated.

13. By Teſtimony 'tis plain he underſtands a citation from an Author brought to prove a poſition, and accordingly here he introduceth it in theſe words, His ſeventh Teſtimony; where after he had told us, &c. he undertakes to prove it, beginning his paragraph thus, &c.] Here 'tis viſible he ſuppoſeth me to produce the following words both as from St. Chryſoſtome, and as a teſtimony to prove my poſition, viz. that Paul and Barnabas had a province intruſted to them by their agreement; but for that, it is certain they were never produced by me as a teſtimony. For firſt, this ſuppoſed poſition is neither my words, nor meaning, nor to my underſtanding intelligible ſenſe, confounding their having the province intruſted to them (viz. by Chriſt) with their own agreement. My meaning (I ſuppoſe the ſame with the Apoſtles) is evident, that they were firſt intruſted by Chriſt with preaching to the Gentiles, and ſo the Gentiles were the province aſſigned them by Chriſt (as Chriſt * ſaith to Paul, I will ſend thee far hence unto the Gentiles, bidding him depart out of Judæa) and then afterward, they and Peter, &c. agreed accordingly, that we, ſaith Paul, ſhould go to the heathen, they to the circumciſion. Secondly, this poſition as far as it was ſenſe, and mine, i. e. as I now interpret it, was, and ſtill is, to my ſeeming, the expreſs words of that text, and ſo being confirmed from an Apoſtle, needed not, neither pretended to any other authority to prove or confirm it; for when I had produced and aſſumed to juſtify it by St. Paul, why ſhould I apply my ſelf to any Father to confirm what St. Paul had ſaid? when there was ambiguity in St. Paul, I might vouch a Father's concurrence with my interpretation, and ſo twice I did, but if that were citing a teſtimony, it was in another notion of it, than what S. W. ſpake of, onely to ſhew that St. Chryſoſtome interpreted St. Paul's phraſes as I interpret them, not to prove, as he ſaith, my poſition by them. And this I thought uſefull to premiſe to the diſcovery of the perfect injuſtices and calumnies, which he hath heaped up in this matter, founding it on the ſly inſinuation of this being my ſeventh teſtimony, to prove my poſition, when beſides his deforming my poſition, 'tis manifeſt I, in that place, pretended to no humane teſtimony to prove it.

* Act. 22. 21.

there

14. But this is not all, nor indeed any neceſſary part of my anſwer, but onely preluſory, and πρὸς ἔνστασιν, and to make way for that which follows. For ſecondly, when he ſets down four lines of words in Greek out of St. Chryſoſtome. And aſſures the Reader, theſe are his Comment on that place which is the teſtimony related to by Dr. H. either there is a manifeſt fallacy in it, or elſe it is impoſſible he ſhould juſtify it from being another miſrepreſentation. For either he muſt mean, that the place, on which St. Chryſoſtome comments, is my Teſtimony, and then he comes near the truth, that the words of St. Paul, Gal. II. 7. taking in alſo v. 9. are indeed my teſtimony, and if ſo, then how came my teſtimony to be vouched from St. Chryſoſtome? Or he muſt mean, that thoſe words produced by him out of St. Chryſoſtome are the Teſtimony by me related to, and that will have no truth in it, as ſhall thus appear.

15. Firſt, I do no otherwiſe refer to any place or particular words in St. Chryſoſtome, than by naming that Father; I refer not to any line or page, as is manifeſt to any that ſhall look; and why may it not be in ſome other place, and words, than thoſe which he hath recited? Nay, why ſhould I not in any reaſon be ſuppoſed to have referred to that, or thoſe places, one or more, where the words are found, which he ſaith I cited from Chryſoſtome, than to that one place where very few of the words are found, and where there are many words to which I could have no manner of reſpect?

16. If he ſhall ſay I did ſpecifie the place by relating to the words [but contrariwiſe] in the Apoſtle, and thence ſtill endeavour to conclude, that they are thoſe, which he hath recited, beginning with τὸ δὲ ἐναντίον: What is contrariwiſe? I anſwer, that he is ſtill doubly wide of his mark; for 1. I related not ſimply to the Apoſtles words [but contrariwiſe] but (as he will ſee if he look again) to thoſe words but contrariwiſe (the beginning of v. 7.) as that is oppoſed to their adding to him, v. 6. Hence then, i. e. from his Comments on thoſe two phraſes in thoſe two verſes, that which he calls my Teſtimony was to have been fetcht, and that he did not endeavour to doe thus, was his firſt miſcarriage: His ſecond, that faſtening on the latter onely, he takes in the τίνες φασι, what St. Chryſoſtome ſaith ſome ſaid, but himſelf utterly rejected. For how could that be referred to by me, as any part of that Father's Teſtimony, which was quite contrary both to mine and his ſenſe, and as ſuch diſcarded by him, and not ſo much as named or thought of by me? yet this is a full half of that which muſt needs be called my ſeventh Teſtimony.

17. This is very ſtrange dealing, and the bare narration thereof, fit to tire the Reader (as well as writer) who hath ſmall intereſts a driving, whilſt he is forced to be preſent at ſuch gainleſs diſcoveries. That his patience may approach toward the end of its exerciſe, I will as perſpicuouſly and ſuccinctly, as I can, lay (as far as I was or can be concerned) the whole matter before him: The plain and brief of it is this: For the explaining the paſſage between the Apoſtles, Gal. 2. 6,7, 9. I named, and put together ſeveral expreſſions out of St. Chryſoſtome, not as they lay in one place, but as being diſperſed in him they concurred to make up the ſenſe I ſought for, yet ſet them not all down as his, but marking a few in the Italick letter as a citation, I left the other to be read as my own, for which I ſhall by and by give my reaſon; and becauſe S.W. finds not all the words together in one period, which of his own accord, not on my directions, he pitches on, in that Father, he makes full ſpeed to call all my friends together, and proclaims me the groſſeſt falſifier.

18. What he might look for in my citation, was ſufficiently told him in the beginning of the Paragraph, viz. the ſpecial importance of ἀλλὰ τἐναντίον but contrariwiſe, v. 7. as that is oppoſed to προσανέθεντο their adding to him, v. 6. Accordingly my citation was in theſe words of his, τὸ γὰρ ἐναντίον τῷ μέμψασθαι τὸ ἐπαινέσαι, for the contrary of oppoſing or finding fault, is commending, which without ſetting down the Greek, but onely marking the two words [oppoſing and commending] by Italick letters, I interweaved into the ſeries of the interpretation, which I applied to a few verſes of that Chapter, yet affixing no more to Chryſoſtome but this, James, ſaith he, and Peter and John were ſo far from oppoſing any thing that he had done, from adviſing him any thing more, from telling him any circumſtance more than before he knew, that they not onely approved but commended what he had done. This was the utmoſt that he can pretend I cited from St. Chryſoſtome as the importance of τἐναντίον contrariwiſe, &c. But the truth is, I cited not ſo much; not that I think St. Chryſoſtome would not own this, but becauſe I ſaw an errour in the Copy, ſo groſs that I could not but diſcern it to be an errour, yet ſo unconſiderable to our debate, that I could as little deem it reaſonable to go out of the way to take notice of it, but choſe rather to leave ſome of the words in the common letter, than conteſt them to be St. Chryſoſtome's: What this was, I ſhall now think my ſelf obliged to tell him, to remove all miſpriſion: In one paſſage of that Father on v. 7. the words lie now thus in Sir H. Savile's Edition, which I uſe, ὃ τοίνυν τοῦτο βούλεται εἰπεῖν τἐναντίον λέγων, ἀλλ' ὅτι μόνον οὐκ ἐπετίμησαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πόσῳ ἀπέχον τοῦ μέμψασθαι, ὅτι καὶ ἐπήνεσαν, i. e. he therefore means not this, when he ſaith, contrariwiſe, but that onely they reprehended not, but alſo that they were ſo far from finding fault, that they alſo commended. Now to ſpeak plainly, I take not this to be ſenſe, but think it unqueſtionable, that ὐ not, is wanting here, and that it ought to be ἀλλ' ὅτι ὐ μόνον οὐκ ἐπετίμησαν, but that not onely they reprehended not, but alſo ------ (What ſenſe S. W's [ſave onely that] will bear, whereby he interprets ἀλλ' ὅτι μόνον, I will not now queſtion) this being the truth of the buſineſs, but not worth the pains of a ſolicitous diſcovery, ſo much out of its ſeaſon, what could I do fitter, than what I did, ſet down in the vulgar letter, as if it were in my own words, a plain explication of Chryſoſtome's, which I know I could juſtify to be his ſenſe, nay expreſs words in ſeveral places, viz. that Peter and James and John were ſo far from oppoſing any thing that he (Paul) had had done, from adviſing any thing more, from telling him any circumſtance more than before he knew, that they not onely approved but commended what he had done. The ſubſtance of theſe words is already evidenced to be delivered in the citation now ſet down, and for the other words which are added, though but by way of explication, and might be allowed to be my Engliſh paraphraſe of his, or, by his direction, of the Apoſtles Greek, are yet, as I ſaid, in the lines immediately precedent, on v. 6. to be read in him alſo; for whereas I uſe oppoſing, where, in the words already ſet, it was μὴ μεμφαδαι finding fault, I had that from him, as the interpretation of their adding nothing to him, † οὐκ ἀναπιάδησαν, ſaith he, they oppoſed me not, were not contrary to me, whereas I add, adviſing any thing more, telling any circumſtance more than before he knew, I had that alſo from him, οὐκ ἐδίδαξαν, ὃ ἐδιώρθωσαν, ὃ πλέον τι φροσέθηκαν ὧν ἤδεσαν, i. e. literally, they taught not, they adviſed or rectified not, they added not any more than I knew. † P. 728. l. 6. Ibid. l. 8.

19. Where now is the egregious and moſt wilfull falſification? I cited this as Chryſoſtome's interpretation of [contrariwiſe] as that is oppoſed to their adding to him, and I have now avouched it all from thence; Onely it was not every word in one and the ſame period (though all in the compaſs of very few lines, all in his explication of thoſe words to which I affixt them, and the ſubſtance of all in thoſe very words, that S. W. was pleaſed to take notice of.) And ſo much for this long and diſmall Tragedy, this diſcovery of ſtrange unparallel'd falſifications, undoubtedly never thought of by any but himſelf, if yet it be credible that he ſhould in any earneſt think them ſuch.

20. But 'tis poſſible it may ſtill be demanded, Do not there follow more words in that period of mine yet, which are, ſeemingly at leaſt, by me father'd on, but no where to be found in St. Chryſoſtome? I anſwer, theſe words there follow. [And to ſet the things the more unqueſtionably for the future, they made this agreement with him and Barnabas, that whenſoever they ſhould come to the ſame City mixt of Jews and Gentiles, Peter and John ſhould betake themſelves to the Jewiſh, and Paul and Barnabas to the Gentile part of it.] Thus far and no farther are my words in that place, as he himſelf, moſt for his advantage, hath ſet them down. But 1. 'Tis viſible to any man, that knows what a citation is, that theſe words there, pretended not, nor are either by Italick letter, or any other marke, imaginable to pretend to any, and ſo not to St. Chryſoſtome's patronage, but as words of my own, to expreſs that agreement, which I conceived notified by the following verſe, Gal. II. 9. That they gave the right hand of fellowſhip to me and Barnabas that we ſhould go to the Gentiles, and they to the circumciſion. And what if they were not ſevered from the former by any more than a Comma, (which is his onely tender of proof, that they are part of the Teſtimony) the reaſon of that is clear, becauſe I was by way of Paraphraſe deducing the ſenſe of thoſe verſes, as they depended the one on the other, and were not ſevered by any full ſtop.

21. Can I then be imagined to falſify St. Chryſoſtome, onely on this acount, that thoſe words are not found in him, which I never cited from him? I truſt I cannot. And yet if I had done this alſo, which I did not, ſetting aſide the forms of tranſition, and what is merely extrinſical, or needed no proving, which therefore he cannot think I cited from him) the ſubſtance again of theſe my words is to be found in that Father in that part of theſe Comments where any man in his wits would look for them, viz. on v. 9, and 10. I refer him not onely to thoſe words, ταῦτα ἐκατέροις ἐδόκει καὶ ἐκείνοις Ἰουδαίοις κηρύτειν ὅπω, καὶ θεῖον τοῖς ἔθνεσι· It was decreed betwixt them on both ſides, that they ſhould ſo preach to the Jews, and he to the Gentiles (where the ſo preaching muſt infer the preaching, and this as a proof of their συμφωνία agreement) but eſpecially to * theſe, ἐν μὲν τῷ κηρύγματι φησὶ διειλόμεθα τὴν οἰκουμένην, καγὼ μὲν τὰς ἐξ ἐθνῶν, ἐκείνοι δὲ τὰς Ἰουδαίους ἔλαχον κατὰ τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ θέλημα, In the preaching we divided the world, and I took thoſe of the Gentiles, and they the Jews, according to God's good pleaſure. P. 722. l. 10, 11. * Ibid. l. 24.

22. Here their dividing the world, the one taking the Jews the other the Gentiles for his preaching-province, what is it but their giving the right hands of fellowſhip, and thereby ſignifying their mutual agreement, the one pair to preach to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles, v. 9. and this agreeable to what had been avouched from Chriſt's intruſting, or Commiſſion, v. 7. and ſo according to God's good pleaſure: Onely indeed here is no expreſs mention of their ſettling things unqueſtionably for the future, of their coming to the ſame city mixt of Jews and Gentiles, and he cannot pretend that I ſeemed to ſay there was; Yet ſuppoſing what here is expreſly ſaid, that they divided the world between them, that this was there by giving hands, by agreement, and one took (i. e. adminiſtred) the Jews, the other the Gentiles, and it being certain that this was a ſettlement for the future, and not the time paſt, and that there were cities thus mixt of Jews and Gentiles, and again that theſe Apoſtles after this came both of them to theſe Cities, by name to Antioch and to Rome, I need not thank any man for admitting the concluſion, that whenſoever they ſhould come to the ſame City thus mixt, their agreement ſhould then take place, and ſo one pair ſhould betake themſelves to the Jewiſh, the other to the Gentile part of it. And as S. W. himſelf confeſſes, p. 248. that this is expreſly and full to my tenet, ſo the aſſuming of this, cannot be in the leaſt-wiſe ſtrange to him, that knows and weighs any thing of thoſe times; For ſuppoſing, as the truth was, that the Jewiſh converts adhered morofely to the Moſaical Law, and the Gentile, would not be circumciſed, there is no other way imaginable how they ſhould be peaceably adminiſtred, but by diſtributing them into ſeveral cœtus, one to be governed by an Apoſtle that favoured the Jewiſh Obſervances, another by him that taught and practiſed the true Chriſtian liberty.

23. Having thus far travelled for the Reader's ſatisfaction in the diſcovery of this prodigious charge, by laying down the poſitive truth, ſo far removed from the leaſt cauſe or colour of juſt exception, I ſhall now adventure him to ſee through all S. W's arts, induſtriouſly multiplied, to diſguiſe this dealing, and not tender the leaſt word of Reply to them, the worſt ſort of calumniatours being wont to fly the trial, when the clear light appears, as I doubt not it hath done by this time to the eye of the unkindeſt Reader.

24. But it ſeems there is another Teſtimony yet behind, which muſt now take its turn to the bar, having by the help of a parentheſis gotten the favour of Cyclops's friend, to be the laſt that is devoured. The ſecond and third Teſtimonies being in one parentheſis together, were yet eaſily diſcovered, and no notice taken of their poſture, this being then uſefull to S. W. (as we formerly diſcovered) and then again

* P. 233. l. 13. gain that which was out, was yet ſaid to * ſculk under a parentheſis. But now this, that was ſurely as viſible at leaſt as thoſe, is feigned to hide it ſelf ſo nicely in a parentheſis, that it ſcap't his obſervation. Theſe be very little arts, and 'tis pity any man ſhould have need of them.

25. The teſtimony is that which we have here formerly ſet down more at large, from Euſebius of St. Peter, that he preacht in divers nations τῆς ἐν διασπορᾷ Ἰουδαίοις to the Jews that were of the diſperſion; but againſt this, he firſt objects that there is not a word to that purpoſe found in the place alledged. To which I anſwer, that the Printer miſtook, and ſet l. 1. for l. 3. and in that place, c. 1. he ſhall not fail to find it. Secondly, when he asks, how can onely his preaching to the Jews of the diſperſion, countenance that they were his province, ſince 'tis known and granted that he preached alſo to the Jews in Judæa] I anſwer, that having indeed firſt preached to the Jews in Judæa, as did alſo John and his brother James, yet they ſoon left that, and committed it to a ſingular Biſhop, whoſe Province from thenceforth it was, viz. James the Lord's Brother, as hath elſewhere been manifeſted. This then being James's was no longer Peter's province, and Euſebius, ſetting down the κλῆρος or lots of the ſeveral Apoſtles, aſſigns St. Peter diſtinctly not Judæa, but the Jews in the diſperſion in Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Cappadocia and Aſia, and at length Rome: which therefore is the ſum of this Teſtimony, and thus anſwers for it ſelf, how it pretended to countenance that they were his province.

26. But 3. he complains, that here is no excluſion at all, and ſo no word to our purpoſe, it being, ſaith he, granted, that each Apoſtle preached to any ſect or nation as their occaſions invited.] But he might conſider, if he pleaſed, that the place in Euſebius relates the ſeveral κλῆροι, lots or aſſignations of the Apoſtles, Thomas's Parthia, Andrew's Scythia, John's Aſia, as was expreſly premiſed, and ſo likewiſe Peter's the Jews of the diſperſion in Pontus, &c. and at length Rome; Whereon I demand, was not Parthia Thomas's lot excluſively to Scythia, and Scythia Andrew's excluſively to Aſia, and John's the Lydian or Proconſular Aſia excluſively to Pontus and the reſt of the leſſer Aſia, and to Rome? If it were, then by the parity of reaſon, the lot alſo aſſigned St. Peter was Pontus, &c. excluſively to all the former, and to the Gentiles too, which were another's province, and that is as much as I ever pretended to deduce from hence, or as my hypotheſes required; not doubting meanwhile but each might preach to others, as their occaſions invited, having often ſhewed in anſwer to the inſtance of Cornelius, that this is reconcileable with the limitation of provinces, moſt ſtrictly conſidered.

27. But this Section muſt not yet be concluded without one other attempt. To this inſtance ſo oft mentioned of Cornelius, he pretends to recite my anſwer, in Rep. p. 57. that it was before the deſignation of Provinces, and then replies, that "'tis St. Hierome's argument upon Gal. 2. where he moves "the preſent queſtion in theſe words, Occulta hic oritur quæſtio—] But

1. I anſwer. That I ſaid not in the plate cited, that it was before the deſignation of provinces, but that it was before the agreement made at the time of Paul's going up to Jeruſalem, not denying but ſuppoſing that there was a deſignation of Provinces before that.

2. That as St. Hierome propoſes the argument, ſo he anſwers it alſo, which ſhews him to be of my ſide (and ſo I formerly made uſe of his words) and not on the Objectour's.

3. That that which I have ſo often ſaid of the reconcileableneſs of the paſſage of Cornelius with the diſtribution of Provinces, is the ſame in effect with St. Hierome's anſwer to the occulta quæſtio, hidden queſtion. This hath ſo largely been ſhewed already, that I might adventure the Reader with the reſt which he adds to the end of this Section, onely in reflexion on this paſſage in that Father. But becauſe he is reſolved to ſet ſuch a weight upon it, as the moſt expreſs for our controverſie that antiquity affords, and that perfectly for him and againſt me, and to incline it to be ſo, makes his eight Obſervations upon it, I muſt attend him through every of theſe alſo.

28. His firſt Obſervation is, that the very queſtion between D. H. and him, is moved by St. Hierome, concerning the excluſiveneſs or not excluſiveneſs of thoſe Apoſtles Juriſdictions.] I anſwer, that this of excluſiveneſs of their Juriſdictions is rather ſuppoſed, than queſtioned by St. Hierome in that place, as generally the truth is granted, before any man proceeds to propoſe and anſwer objections. And ſo there is no force in that obſervation.

29. His ſecond is, That whereas D. H. Rep. p. 59. places the excluſiveneſs onely in their meeting in the ſame place, if St. Hierome had been acquainted with any ſuch, it had been impoſſible not to expreſs it here. To this I anſwer, 1. That though Rep. p. 59. I ſaid the agreement, Gal. 2. 9. concerned onely thoſe Cities and Regions where they met, yet I neither there, nor any where elſe ſeemed to doubt but there was diſtribution of provinces before, at the Apoſtles aſſigning one another their lots, and Chriſt's ſending Paul to the Gentiles, refer'd to in that 2. to the Gal. v. 7. and this ſometime before this agreement, v. 9. and then St. Hierome ſpeaking of the former of theſe, might very poſſibly omit to enlarge (out of its place, impertinently) on the latter.

30. And therefore, when in his third obſervation he addes, it was ſtrange he ſhould not anſwer, the particular addiction was by Apoſtolical agreement.] I anſwer that St. Hierome's queſtion, or objection being as it was [What then, might not Peter if he had met with a Gentile, have brought him to the faith?] the anſwer that S. W. would put into his mouth, had been very unfit for it, a mere begging the queſtion, not anſwering the objection; he therefore anſwers pertinently (and I hope that is not ſtrange) that their ſeveral charges did not prejudice their common care of congregating a Church of all Chriſtians; and I ſay ſtill the ſame, and ſo that Peter, notwithſtanding his excluſive Province, might preach to Cornelius when God appointed him.

31. His fourth Obſervation is, That his Anſwer inſiſts onely upon the principal charge, to apply themſelves thus ſeverally, and expreſſes it not as an act of diſtinct juriſdiction, but of a prudent œconomy, that either ſide might have whom to follow] I anſwer, 1. That it were very ſtrange indeed, if a principal mandate, and that of Chriſt, to one over the Jews, and a ſpecial mandate to another over the Gentiles, ſhould not be expreſs enough to ſignifie diſtinct juriſdictions, when the one proper original of juriſdictions is Chriſt's mandates or Commiſſions, and no other way imaginable of limiting or diſtinguiſhing them, but by giving them thus ſeverally to one over the Jews, to the other over the Gentiles. 2. that the prudence prudence of the œconomy is no leaſt prejudice to this, unleſs Chriſt ſhould blaſphemouſly be imagined to doe, what he did imprudently. 3. That the particular end to which St. Hierome ſaith it was deſigned, that each might have whom to follow, is by me fully agreed to, and from thence my inference ſtill intire, that if the Jews had one aſſigned them to follow, the Gentiles another, theſe their leaders thus aſſigned them by Chriſt, had ſeverally, and neither joyntly nor promiſcuouſly, the rule over them.

32. His fifth, that this mandate was from God, and ſo is expreſs againſt Dr. H. who holds that the Commiſſion given to each Apoſtle is unlimited] is ſoon anſwered, by diſtinguiſhing times, or Commiſſions given to the Apoſtles. The Commiſſion which I ſay was given them unlimited, was that of Matth. 28. whereas that which I ſay aſſigned them to their particular provinces, was of a latter date, when the Apoſtles by the ſpirit of God, as their own * Baronius told them, were diſpatched or commiſſionated to their ſeveral regions, and when Chriſt by ſpecial appointment ſent St. Paul to the Gentiles.

* Ann. 44. n. 20, 21. ſingulos Apoſtolorum in eas orbis regiones eſſe amandatos ad quos ſpiritus ſanctus privato inſtinctu voluit eos proficiſci.

33. His ſixth is, that the ſpeciale mandatum prejudiced not their intentions to preach to all nations, as is expreſt by in commune vero, and legimus enim] And I anſwer, that as far as thoſe two paſſages do expreſs, I freely acknowledge it, for that is no more than this, that they had in common this purpoſe to congregate a Church of all Nations, and that Peter baptized the Gentile Cornelius, and Paul oft preacht Chriſt in the Synagogues of the Jews, both which being in St. Hierome's judgment reconcileable with Chriſt's ſpecial mandates to one for the Jews, to the other for the Gentiles to follow, and ſo for theſe diſtinct preſidencies and provinces, if this may be granted me from St. Hierome's words, I have no more to demand in this matter.

34. His ſeventh tranſcends all the former, that St. Hierome doth the ſame as the Cath. Gent. viz. makes account that St. Peter's preaching to Cornelius prejudices their excluſiveneſs; So that if D. H. have any thing to ſay againſt the Cath. Gent. let him go and wrangle firſt with St. Hierome.] But I anſwer, that as St. Hierome agrees with the Cath. Gent. in objecting the preaching to Cornelius, againſt my poſition, ſo he exactly agrees with me againſt him in anſwering it, and ſhewing that indeed the objection hath no force to prejudice it; and ſo I leave S. W. to take his utmoſt comfort of that ſo ſoon fading and treacherous advantage.

35. His eighth and laſt is, that St. Hierome bringing this paſſage on Gal. 2. where the agreement is ſuppoſed by D. H. ſhews, that either he made account there was no agreement, or that things ſtood in the ſame manner after as before.] To this I might anſwer, that the agreement is mentioned, v. 9. and ſo that St. Hierome's paſſage on v. 7. precedes the agreement; But I need not that, but can yield him the whole demand, that things were in the ſame manner after as before the agreement, the Gentiles being before it intruſted to the Apoſtle St. Paul, as the Jews to St. Peter, and ſo 'tis affirmed in that v. 7. on which St. Jerome ſtarts this Queſtion or Objection, and accordingly anſwers it, ſo perfectly to the intereſt of all my pretenſions in this matter, that 'tis very ſtrange S. W. ſhould hope to perſwade the Reader the contrary, did he not place a vaſt confidence in that cloud, which his eight Obſervations were to interpoſe between the Reader's eye and that Father's words, which being now alſo diſpelled, there is no more to be added in this buſineſs.

SECT. IX.

Singular Supremacy, Culmen ſingularitatis in St. Gregory. Ariſtocratick Supremacy. Clement his Teſtimony of conſtituting James Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Πεντεπιμωμένοι. No priority of juriſdiction without priority of dignity. Contention moſt probable among equals. Ἐπιδιχάζεσθαι δόξης. Dividing of one Teſtimony into two. Δοκοῦντες εἶναι στῦλοι. Inequality infers not Supremacy. Twelve foundations.

1. HIS Ninth Section, after the prœmial declamation, pitches on the paſſage in Tr. of Sch. of taking off all pretenſions of St. Peter in the ſingular Supremacy there, i. e. at Jeruſalem, and 1. he will ask again, as he ſaith the Diſarmer before did, what I mean by the ſingular ſupremacy, an odd and uncouth Epithet, ſaith he, and ſuch as the Pope's power was never dreſt up in before, and 2. what by adding the word [there] the Supremacy in debate being neither ſubject to heres nor theres but Univerſal] To the firſt I anſwer, that this being punctually anſwered before, he needed not have asked it again; but having done ſo, I again anſwer as before I did, that by ſingular Supremacy, which is the Engliſh of Monarchick power, I mean ſuch as was not common to others with him, or which he could pretend to in this matter, more than thoſe others could, who together with him advanced the Brother of the Lord to the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem: As for the pretended oddneſs or uncouthneſs of the phraſe, I refer him to Pope Gregorie's Epiſtle l. 4. Ep. 38. where the very Title of Univerſal Biſhop, which S. W. deems ſo contrary to it, is yet exemplified by culmen ſingularitatis, which one before him, not very imitable, had aſpired to.

2. By there] he knows I mean Jeruſalem, and when to that he objects, thus the Supremacy in debate is not ſubject to heres and theres, but univerſal: I reply, that without begging the grand Queſtion this can have no truth in it, the whole debate being whether Peter's Supremacy be univerſal or no, and the diſcourſe, whereof a part is now before him, tendred as a proof, that it is not Univerſal, concluding in the ſame manner, as a particular negative doth to the diſproving an univerſal affirmative; for if the government of that Metropolis of Judæa belonged to James the Juſt, and not to Peter, then he had not the rule of all the Jewiſh Converts, but onely of thoſe in the diſperſion. This was the thing which in the Tr. of Sch. was, in the place here referred to, undertaken to be proved. But becauſe it might be ſuggeſted, that Peter conferred this power upon him, and conſequently that Peter was ſtill ſupreme there, and he ſubordinate to Peter, ſome care was there taken to prevent this objection, by giving the affirmations of the Ancients concerning this, ſome ſaying that he was ordained their Biſhop by Chriſt, others by Chriſt and the Apoſtles, others by the Apoſtles alone, three of them ſpecified by Clemens, Peter, James and John. And though herein was ſome variety, yet which ſoever of the affirmations were accepted, no advantage would by it accrue to St. Peter, above others, at leaſt above James and John; therefore no ſingular ſupremacy. And thus ſtood the force of this argument in the Tract of Schiſm, and the reſult of it this, that if Peter had no other ſupremacy at Jeruſalem, the mother City of Chriſtendom, than what was common to him with others, and that made evident by their joint coequal power exerciſed, and avouched in conſtituting the firſt Biſhop there, then his ſupreme Paſtourſhip was not over the whole world, and ſo not Univerſal, the direct contradictory to his grand pretenſion.

3. The ſum of this Anſwer being formerly given, he next hath leiſure to take notice of it, and to ſcoff at it, for being, as he ſaith, as wiſe as the Text it ſelf, and is not able to conclude from it any more than this, that I intimate they had each ſupremacy there, but St. Peter's was not ſingular or above theirs, which, ſaith he, would ground this pretty contradiction to the former, that none at all were ſupreme but all equal (and then there is an act of mercy and ſpecial grace, if this be not poſted in the Index for a new ſelf-contradiction.) To this I anſwer, that it were a rare contradiction indeed, if three men in the ſame reſpect were each of them ſupreme, as that ordinarily ſignifies higher than all others; but ſure I never ſo much as intimated this to be my ſenſe, no, nor that all three together were in power ſuperiour to the reſt of the Apoſtles, reſolving, as he knows I do, that they are all coequal. He that had not ſo many eyes, nor ſuch choice Optick glaſſes as S. W. is furniſhed with, might have diſcerned ſuch a thing as an Ariſtocratick Supremacy, not veſted in any one ſingle perſon, but in a Community. For example in a Council and not in a Pope, and then 'tis no ſuch unimaginable thing for a College of Apoſtles, whether all twelve together, or as many of them as made a Synod, i. e. three, the moſt dignified of any by our Saviour's ſpecial favour) to be, and to act as ſupreme, without placing the ſupreme power either in each or any of them, or even in all theſe three, in reſpect of other their fellow Apoſtles.

4. This was the plain truth, and before viſible enough, but that as S. W's zeal obliges him to make all that is ſaid by his adverſary non-ſenſical, ſo it is one ſymptome of that zeal to ſtop the ears, and run violently, as another to gnaſh upon with the teeth, and S. W. either was, or affected to appear to be in a fit of the former of theſe, at this time, as at other times the latter hath not been a ſtranger to him.

5. But if this will not ſucceed, he hath another ſetch, and then forſooth he accepts of my Comment, and lets me mean ſuch a Supremacy or Authority as was not common to the other two eminent Apoſtles, but asks, how I take off St. Peter's pretenſions to it.] I have here anſwered this already, 1. That if the pretenſion be to the ſame power in Judæa, which he had over the Jews in the diſperſion, that is evident to have been in the Lord's Brother, not in Peter. 2. If the pretenſion be to a tranſcendent power, whereby he might be deemed to have conferred this on the Lord's Brother, then this was not ſingular to him, but common at leaſt to the two other, that are joyned with him in conſtituting him Biſhop there.

6. Here now comes in his rejoynder in theſe words [So that the argument ſtands thus, St. Peter cannot be higher in authority, unleſs he doeth all things alone by himſelf.] I anſwer, This is a piece of ſubtilty in him, but not very difficult to be ſeen through. He will needs have that go for my argument, which is moſt evidently my anſwer, and not my objection. 'Tis true I aſſume to prove, that Peter had not the power over Judæa, by its being in the hand of the Lord's Brother. But then to the evidence of that, there being one onely exception imaginable, viz. that Peter gave him this power, to this I then anſwered, by way of prevention, that whatſoever Peter did in giving him the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem, he did in common with the other Apoſtles; as I made appear out of Clement's words; and what is this but my anſwer to that ſuppoſed pretenſion of the Romaniſt? and my anſwer is not my argument. And yet upon this ſole account it is, that he goes on, and arraigns my Logick (as fit to be hiſt out of the Schools in a freſh-man) that when he brought an inſtance of an Archbiſhop taking two Biſhops with him to ordain a Biſhop, yet not prejudicing the ſuperiority of his authority, I catch at his inſtance, and tell him it will never be made appear by S. W. that St. Peter was an Archbiſhop in reſpect of thoſe two other ſuffragan Biſhops.] To this I anſwer, that if this had been my argument to diſprove St. Peter's Supremacy, as he pretends, my Logick had been faulty; but it being not ſo, but onely my anſwer to his ſuppoſed pretenſion or exception againſt the argument, the failure in Logick is on his ſide, not mine, and he is bound to make good his pretenſion, that when Peter, James and John made the Brother of the Lord Biſhop of Jeruſalem, they did it either as an Archbiſhop and his Suffragans, or after ſome manner, of which that is a proper inſtance, for elſe my concluſion remains as it did in the Tract of Schiſm, that the ſingular ſupremacy in the Church of Jeruſalem and all Judæa, was in the Lord's Brother, and not in St. Peter.

* Anſ. p. 42. 7. This I had in effect * formerly told him, ſaying expreſly, that I did not in Tr. of Sch. undertake to prove their equality by this argument, being about another matter, the extent of St. Peter's province, that it extends not to Judæa; and at the beginning, in the Tr. of Schiſm, ſpeaking of the Juriſdiction in Jeruſalem being intruſted to James by St. Peter alone, I add in a parentheſis (Which might conclude ſome peculiar tranſcendent power of St. Peter there) evidently looking on that, as an objection, and accordingly denying the force of it, and ſhewing that it was not by him alone, but by James and John together with St. Peter. But of all this S. W's zeal and the certainty of his faith obliged him to take no notice, nor of any thing, but what might render my diſcourſe Nonſenſical: and the ſame zeal requires him to repeat it over and over again, in hope that in ſo many forms, never an one being the true, it may be ſure to beguile the inobſervant reader.

8. When

8. When this is done, he ſaith I add a teſtimony out of Clemens, and ſay it deſerves to be conſidered.] But that this may not help on the deceit, by perſwading any, that I brought this teſtimony to confirm what he calls my argument foregoing, I muſt tell the Reader, on what account I added it; Having in the Anſw. to Schiſ. Diſar. ſhewed him that his inſtance of the Archbiſhop and his ſuffragan did him no good, againſt my anſwer of not Peter alone, but James and John with him; and with all reminded him, that I endeavoured not to prove the Apoſtles equality by this argument, but had another buſineſs in hand, which onely then I perſued, I yet told him (as ex abundanti) that to one that had that concluſion in his eye, the words of Clemens might have deſerved to be conſidered; and whether they might or no, let us now examine.

10. The teſtimonie is that of Clemens, that Peter, James and John being by our Lord preferred or honoured before the reſt, did not contend for dignity, but choſe James the firſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Of this then he now asks (and gives me leave to chuſe) what the word προεπεμψάνοι ſhall ſignify there, preeminence in authority and juriſdiction, or ſome other priority of favour, gifts, &c.] I anſwer by making my choice unqueſtionably of the latter (and then I need not reply to all he after adds on the former head) reſolving, he well knows, that all the Apoſtles were inveſted by Chriſt with equal power of Juriſdiction. To this choice his onely reply is, Then what doth it concern our queſtion which is about Juriſdiction?] Let it then be remembred what the queſtion was, the equality of the Apoſtles, and I ſhall ſo far comply with his demands, as to add, equality of Juriſdiction. And to this ſenſe I ſtill think this paſſage might deſerve to be conſidered, though the word προεπεμψάνοι ſignify no more than priority of favour.

11. For thus the argument drawn from thence will lie. If among the Apoſtles, executing an act of power, ſuch as the conſtituting the Metropolitan of all Judæa, there was no πρωτιμία, taken notice of in any, no preference of one before another, but onely ſuch as belonged in common to three of them, and ſo was onely a priority of honour or dignity, from ſome eminent degree of Chriſt's favour, &c. in his life, no way of Juriſdiction, and that, whatever it was, in three, not in one, then it ſeems not probable that Peter, that was but one of theſe three, ſhould be the one ſupreme ruler of all the Apoſtles. Were this a bare negative argument, it might deſerve as much as I beſpake for it, viz. to be conſidered by him that had this concluſion in his eye. For although all precedence in πρωτ honour or dignity, do not infer preeminence of juriſdiction, yet ſurely preeminence of juriſdiction infers priority of dignity; and if it do ſo, then he that hath not ſo much as the latter, muſt certainly have none of the former, and ſo Peter though preferred before nine Apoſtles, yet two others of them, even when this preference is taken notice of, being joyned with him in this preference, and ſo equally dignified with him, he cannot be imagined to be ſuperiour in juriſdiction to all of them. If S. W. did not conſider this before, let him now reflect whoſe fault it was. If he did, why would he put this trope upon his reader with ſuch confidence, that unleſs πρωτιμία ſignified preeminence of Juriſdiction, it could not concern our queſtion?

12. After all this, he will endeavour to prove from this very teſtimony, St. Peter's ſupremacy: In (no leſs than) all probability, ſaith he, it makes rather for us] But how will this be rendred ſo all probable? Why, his argument is by asking: What ſtrange matter was it, or worth taking notice of, that they ſhould not contend for dignity about chuſing him, if they were all equal in chuſing him?] Here then is a pattern of S. W's faculty, which he will ſhew us, if but in triumph, when he profeſſes to have no need of it, and in compariſon with this, Dr. H. muſt be put in the freſh-man's gown; and hiſt out of the Schools, whilſt this great Maſter that reigns in, and gives law to that art, can out of any the moſt unimprovable materials, and at a time when he hath no kind of need, freely and ex abundanti deduce his concluſion; let him but charm the teſtimony that was aimed againſt him, and 'tis preſently tranſformed, and becomes uſefull to him. And firſt his asking what ſtrange, &c. implies that it is no ſtrange thing for equals not to contend, but much ſtranger for thoſe not to contend for priority, of whom one is acknowledged the ſuperiour inſtituted by Chriſt; Whereas the truth is, in this caſe to contend, is to rebell, and among honeſt heathens, much more diſciples of Chriſt, and Doctours of his Church, there can be no place for ſuch contention. 'Tis ſure leſs ſtrange for contention to ariſe among thoſe, of whom no one is by any law of God or man ſetled in authority over the reſt, the ſtate of equality being deemed the ſtate of common hoſtility, every man being more apt to challenge an appropriate right in that, which is equally his with all others, than in that, the propriety of which is legally veſted in another, and ſo cannot be pretended to by him, without violation of known right, 2. Clement's bare taking notice of their not contending (for he mentions it not with any wonder as a ſtrange matter, and things may by an Hiſtorian be taken notice of, or by another be related, which are not ſtrange) muſt with S. W. be a proof they were not equal, but one Superiour to the reſt. I ſhall then ask back again. Are all that do not contend, unequal? Of the twelve diſciples we reade expreſly but of two that contended, or pretended for ſuperiority above the reſt, doth it follow thence, that all the other ten were unequal? If this be the Idea of diſputing, I ſhall be content to be ſtill out of S. W's favour for being unable to attain to it.

13. But to mend the matter, he hath alſo transformed the teſtimony, and on the back of ἐπιδιάζεσθαι δόξης contending for dignity] inſerted [about chuſing him] as if the ſole poſſible matter of contention were who ſhould chuſe James, one alone, or all three, when the words are clear enough, without that inſertion, that they challenged not, contended not for the honour or dignity of Biſhop of Jeruſalem, one to have it before the other, but all three joyned together, as a council of Apoſtles, to chuſe a fourth, which was not an Apoſtle, James the Brother of the Lord, and that was it, to my underſtanding, which Clement thought fit to take notice of, yet not as any great novelty or ſtrange paſſage among Apoſtles, who were preſumable to doe all things to the beſt advantage of the Church, without conſidering their own dignity. Which whether it be not a greater intimation that that dignity of the Biſhop of Jeruſalem was an addition to that of an Apoſtle, than that Peter was ſupreme at Jeruſalem, over all the reſt of the Apoſtles, and over the very Biſhop of that city, I ſhall leave the Reader to judge for himſelf, it being no intereſt of mine to conclude it hence.

14. His ſucceſſes in this teſtimony, ſuch as they are, have ſo elevated him, that what remains, is but the object of his triumph and ſcorn; After this worthy teſtimony, ſaith he, comes hobbling in a ſcripture-proof, to make good all that went before, in this form. And ſo alſo in the place, Gal. c. 2, 9. James and Cephas and John are equally dignified by St. Paul, and have all there the ſtyle of δοκοῦντες στυλοι εἶναι ſeeming to be pillars] For the undoing of this, his firſt art is, after his manner formerly exemplified, to cut it into two. This teſtimony, ſaith he, hath two parts, as it is put by Mr. H. the firſt that they were equally dignified by St. Paul in the 9. v. the ſecond that they are all three called pillars.] But I that brought the teſtimony; may be allowed here to ſpeak for it, as the true mother did to Solomon for the child, that it may not be divided; I am ſure I meant it but for one, to this ſenſe, that as a token of their equal dignity, St. Paul gives them three the common title of δοκοῦντες εἶναι στυλοι, ſeeming to be pillars; and I doubt not but any impartial reader will acknowledge this the obvious ſenſe of the words, as they are put by Mr. H. What demonſtrative proof he can produce for the diſmembring, I ſhall not divine, but am ſure he hath not yet vouchſafed to aſſign any, beſide his own affirmation, which hath long agoe ceaſed to be ſo much as probably argumentative.

15. Yet from this onely way of evidence, the affirmation commences ground, and as great a weight of declamation built upon it, as upon any almoſt in the book: For there being no other note, ſaith he, in that place of their being equally dignified, ſave onely that theſe three are named together, ſtreightway the Dr. of Divinity is turned leveller, and ſhould he hap to find the King, and Tom Fool, and John a Noke's named together, he concludes them all equally dignified. Were I now of S. W's humour, I know not how I could reſiſt the temptation of entring the debate, whether it were not John an Okes which he hath put into another form, and then aggravating the dangerous errour of this miſnomer; but being otherwiſe diſpoſed, I ſhall leave this for no unconſiderable ingredient in his character, and not conſider the prodigies that would be conſequent to that concluſion, which is owned by none but his own fancy.

16. But then for that which he calls the ſecond part of the Teſtimony, that, ſaith he, is nonſenſe in Ela too, they are all called pillars, go, they are all equal, cryes the Dr. as if one pillar could not be higher than another.] And then thrice as much more ſatyr yet againſt the levelling logick, cities, common-wealths, horſes, books, noſes, mountains, ſtars, and all things elſe called in to teſtify againſt me.] But if he mark it, his pretenſions are ſomewhat more, than the poſſibility of one pillar being higher than another, will amount to: It is Peter's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, which alone will ſerve his turn, and that infers the ſubordination and ſubjection of all others, and ſhould it be yielded which he propoſes as poſſible, that one pillar ſhould be higher than another, and ſo one of theſe Apoſtles more dignified, yet this will not avail to his being the Prince of them which is the onely matter of our queſtion.

17. The force of the argument therefore ſtill remains, notwithſtanding this Reply, as far as ever it pretended, i. e. not to be apodictical, or demonſtratively to prove the equality, but ſo as might deſerve to be conſidered in conſent with what went before and after, the mention of the πρωτιμία preference, not in one but all three of them, and the ἰσοτιμία equality of dignity by the Fathers obſerved in all of them: Paul, ſay they, being equally and in the ſame manner dignified with Peter, which if James and John were not alſo, then Paul muſt be in like manner ſuperiour to them, which I think S. W. will not pretend for him, or if he doth, it will be ſome ſuch kind of ſuperiority (as that he laboured more abundantly than they all) which as it hath truth in relation to St. Peter as well as them, ſo either that, or the like to that, may without any damage to us be allowed St. Peter alſo.

18. Mean while, it may be conſiderable to others, though it will not to S. W. that when St. Paul compares himſelf with the moſt eminent Apoſtles, under a double phraſe, they that were accounted to be ſomething (i. e. ſaith Theophylact, μεγάλοι καὶ ἔξαρχοι great and principal Apoſtles) and that were accounted pillars, i. e. the principal parts, as being the ſupporters of the Church, he gives no leaſt mark of difference or preference to St. Peter, but puts them in the very ſame ſtyle of eminence, and that ſuch, that unleſs Peter, that is ſtyled a pillar with them, be alſo ſomewhat more than a pillar, it will gain S. W. nothing; and he can be nothing more in a building, i. e. the Church, unleſs it be a foundation or baſis of the pillar, as that is diſtinguiſht from it, and yet even that Title too is common to him with all other the Apoſtles, as hath elſewhere been manifeſted.

19. But 'tis poſſible his anſwer of one pillar being higher than another] may be aſſiſted by what follows, the diſtinction which he requires me to obſerve betwixt a community and equality; but I am not of his mind, when the ſubject of the diſcourſe is pillars, the principal parts of a building, it being evident that three Senatours do connotate an equality, though three men do not, and that whatſoever ſuperiority of degrees can be imagined among them, a ſupremacy of power cannot be imagined in any one of ſuch three. The like may be ſaid of abſolute Princes, ſuch onely being parallel to pillars, and in this ſenſe, if I had found the Lord Mayor of London, as he ſaith, and the Mayor of the meaneſt City together, and reſolved from their being both Mayors that the one was not ſubject to the other, I ſee not how I had miſtaken. The like I think of Common-wealths, which he alſo ſpecifies, which by being each ſupreme, are ſecured from being ſubject one to the other, though one may have the priority of dignity, and ſo he knows one Apoſtle is allowed to have for another, I ſhall make no ſcruple to take in all the reſt he is pleaſed to name Cities, horſes, books, noſes, mountains, ſtars, the inequality ſuppoſable betwixt any of which, will infer nothing proportionable to ſupreme Paſtourſhip, in any of them.

20. He ſees by this, that I may be a little excuſable, if I have not edified ſo much under his diſcipline, as he ſeems to have wiſhed, though he now deſpair; His anſwers muſt have more depth and ſolidity in them, or his Reader that is moſt favourable to his cauſe, will think him ſuborn'd to betray it, for what can leſs defend it, than ſo much of noiſe and oſtentation, and cavil, and ſo little force of true reaſon to juſtifie the one or make reparations for the other?

21. What

21. What he addes in reference to another paſſage of twelve foundations, &c. which he takes ſo indignly to be produced as a proof of equality, if he look on * Tr. of Schiſm, where 'tis produced, he ſhall find that it is not by me, as he pretends, brought as a proof on our ſide, but as an anſwer to the Romaniſts argument from the name Peter Πέτρος, a rock or foundation ſtone, undertaking to evacuate the ſupremacy pretended from thence (which it cannot miſs to doe, unleſs twelve be one) and onely adding ex abundanti, that other circumſtances belonging to that title, lying in common to all, are a prejudice (inſtead of a ſupport) to the Univerſal Paſtourſhip. And on this account I might with ſome juſtice of retortion arraign S. W's Logick, were it worth the pains, and were there not ſomething elſe culpable in every period. As it is, I have done with his ninth Section. * Ch. 4. ſect. 24. p. 90, 91.

SECT. X.

S. W's Proofs againſt evidence of Fact. James's precedence in the Council. S. W's ſincerity. James's pronouncing the ſentence, ἐγὼ κρίνω. Chryſoſtome's teſtimonies defended againſt S. W's exceptions. His citing of Dannæus. His inſertion of [onely.] My omiſſion of ἀπὸ νόμ. The emendation of ἐκ ἀποστόλ, ἀποστόλων. More teſtimonies. James his acting in the Council as the Biſhop and chief there. Heſychius Presbyter. Author de ætatibus Eccleſiæ. The Court of Paris.

1. THE tenth Section profeſſes to come to the point it ſelf concerning St. James, and is an inſtance of S. W's great conſtancy of mind, not to be moved out of his courſe by the importunity of any arguments. Elſe it is impoſſible to imagine, how this of St. James ſhould ſtill be the point between S. W. and me, when the Tr. of Sch. the ground of the debate, pretended no more of him, than that the Jews, Gal. 2. 9. being peculiarly Peter's Province, yet all the Jews were not ſo, the Jews in Judæa being all ſubjected to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which was James and not Peter. On this head, his being Biſhop there, it is as viſible as any line in any book, that all is ſpoken, which is added, of James in that place.

2. This being once miſtaken by the Diſarmer, endeavours were uſed to reduce him to a right underſtanding, and to mind him both from the plain words, and the evidence of my ſenſe, how impoſſible it was that this ſhould not be his miſunderſtanding. Yet after all this, and notice expreſly taken of it, he will adhere to his way, and pretends to give proofs, that I did intend that, which is as clear as the day I did not intend; This makes it ſuperfluous to give heed to his feigned reaſonings or probabilities, (which can never have the leaſt force againſt our ſenſes in a matter of fact) and ſo to debate this with him, though he ſhall ſtill pleaſe to call it ſaying and unſaying, and brand it twice in his Index for ſelf contradictions, pretended to be diſcovered, p. 263, 264. the pages wherein he manages this buſineſs.

3. But, in my anſwer, if he may be believed, I have ſpoild all, and denying to make St. James at Jeruſalem ſuperiour to St. Peter, p. 43. I go about to prove it in expreſs words, p. 45. That James in this Council was clearly ſuperiour to St. Peter, which is clearly contradictory. But there is no truth in the firſt part of this ſuggeſtion. That which I denyed was in expreſs terms, his being † ſimply ſuperiour to Peter, his ‖ priority of dignity or greater authority. That which I affirmed, and undertook to prove, was, that he had at the * Council at Jeruſalem (as in his own See) the principal place, even before Peter and John, and † in this Council was clearly ſuperiour to St. Peter. And theſe I hope are not thus contradictory; and then how can he ever again expect to be believed in his citation of expreſs words, with the greateſt confidence, to accumulate the greateſt weight of guilt, where there is not any colour of the leaſt? † p. 43. l. 12. ‖ L. 20. * P. 43. l. 15. 28. and p. 44. l. 4. † P. 44. l. 34.

4. So when he will out-face it, that principal with me founds no priority at all, 'tis manifeſt from his own acknowledgment it doth, viz. priority of place in his own See, elſe how could he believe himſelf, when he ſaid, I went about to infer that James in this Council was clearly ſuperiour to St. Peter. Did I endeavour to prove him clearly ſuperiour in the Council, and yet allow him no priority at all; What ſincerity is there in this zeal?

5. In reciting my pretences of teſtimonies for James having the principal place, the firſt, ſaith he, is, that he is named before Peter, and unleſs that conclude, their argument from Peter's being firſt named muſt be prejudiced,] and to this he anſwers 1. that their argument is drawn from his being conſtantly named firſt, and not onely once, which might happen without any great myſtery. 2. That their argument from πρῶτος Σίμων is that he is in theſe words expreſt to be firſt of the Apoſtles.] I anſwer, 1. that all that I pretended to prove, was his having the principal place at Jeruſalem or in the Council, or in his own city, which are all my words expreſly, and that in oppoſition to his having indefinitely or abſolutely the ſo much as principal place. 2. That the whole force of my teſtimony to prove that, was from his being firſt named in one place onely, Gal. 2. as that one place related to that Council, for why ſhould Peter that had elſewhere conſtantly the firſt place, and is ſtyled πρῶτος Σίμων, be at this time deprived of his precedence, but that it was in ſome alteration of circumſtances, viz. in his Metropolitical See, where the preference belonged to him? 3. I had thought that conſtancy had noted never failing; how then can the Argument for Peter's place, be drawn from the conſtantly being named, when at this time 'tis confeſt he is not firſt named? 4. Though the Argument from πρῶτος Σίμων be taken from his being expreſt to be firſt, yet as long as no other Primacy can be duly inferred from thence, but that which is collected alſo from his being firſt named, and which I acknowledge duely to be drawn from thence, I might be allowed to joyn theſe together, and if theſe were two arguments on St. Peter's ſide, the more to confirm that James was not ſuperiour to Peter, I had the more reaſon to take notice of it, that in the Council of Jeruſalem St. Paul names James firſt, and to conclude it probable, there was ſomewhat in the circumſtance of the time or place, that cauſed that variation.

6. My ſecond pretenſe of teſtimony for James's principal place in that Council, is from his giving the ſentence, v. 19. And his firſt exception againſt it and me, is very extraordinary, from our own tranſlation rendring the words, διὸ ἐγὼ κρίνω, wherefore my ſentence is, by this means making it onely his judgment in the matter, and yet, ſaith he, Dr. H. Tells us, he ſtill believes it ſignifies the ſentence.] And why ſhould I not thus tell him, that I ſtill believe that ſentence is ſentence; or what difference is there betwixt my ſaying, he gave the ſentence, and our tranſlation making him ſay, my ſentence is? Could any man doubt but it was his ſentence which he gave? Or is ſentence one thing in our tranſlatours words, and another in mine? 2. What difference is there betwixt ſentence and judgment in the matter? or what gained, by making it onely his judgment, unleſs that ſignifie the judgment onely of him, and not of others, or as in Sch. Diſar. he had ſaid (but now hath diſcreetly left out that word) his opinion onely, in either of which ſenſes as it would have no truth in it, and therefore cannot juſtly be affixt to our Engliſh tranſlation, ſo it was particularly prevented by me, profeſſing to
* Anſw. p. 45. pretend no more for James * than that the ſentence was pronounced by him, being agreed to by the reſt, and founded as a conciliarie ſentence ought, in the ſeeming good (which is more than his bare opinion) to the Holy Ghoſt and the Council.

7. But he proceeds to conſider the grounds of my belief.] Not, I hope, of my believing the word ſentence to ſignifie ſentence; 'Tis true I never did, and it were pity I ſhould trouble any man with producing my proofs, or grounds of that; but that ἐγὼ κρίνω, I judge, ſignifies, as our Engliſh tranſlatour ſaith (on my ſide, if he mark it, not on his) my ſentence is, not as he formerly would have it, my opinion, or judgment (in the ſenſe of opinion) in the matter.

8. But what are my Teſtimonies; or how doth he deal with them? When I had brought St. Chryſoſtome's ſenſe of the point before us, fully coming home to all I had ſaid, in four expreſſions of his, 1. That his ſpeaking laſt was founded in his being Biſhop, 2. That he decrees, ordains theſe things, making his ſentence a decree, 3. That he was intruſted with the principality, and that obſerved from his behaviour there, 4. That he ſpake more mildly, as beſt becoming him that was in great power or authority; Theſe, forſooth, muſt be four Teſtimonies, and if each of them taken ſingle, do not infer all, that I brought all of them to infer, then is the Doctour a moſt unfortunate gatherer of Teſtimonies.

9. To the firſt he asks, Could not he be Biſhop there and ſpeak laſt both without giving ſentence?] I anſwer, if he could, it was then well done of me to ſay, he added on v. 19, 20, 21. εἰκότως πάντα ἐπιτάττει, he rightly decrees, ordains theſe things, it being ſufficient that from the former words it appeared that his ſpeaking laſt was an indication of his Epiſcopal dignity in that City. But on this head he hits it with two queſtions, 1. Was there no worthier perſons preſent? 2. Did the thing concluded onely concern his See, or did it at all concern it, the Reſcript being directed to the Gentiles?] I anſwer to the firſt, that the Apoſtles were in ſome reſpect worthier perſons than James, which was none of the twelve, and therefore it was onely in his own See, that I pretend from St. Chryſoſtome, that he had the principal place: To the ſecond, that the Reſcript concluded and ſent to the Gentiles, was to allow them a liberty which the Jewiſh Chriſtians allowed them not, Act. 15. 1. and to repreſs theſe, or examine their pretenſions, the Council was aſſembled, v. 2. and ſo that was the obvious concernment of James his See in this matter.

10. But this is not all, for whilſt one piece of S. W. was a picking holes in this Teſtimony at home, and had done his part againſt it, the other is ſent to forage at the Stationers, and ſee what booty he could get there by turning to the place in Chryſoſtome; And then though he confeſs the firſt teſtimony is full and expreſs (which yet even now was nothing to the purpoſe) yet unfortunate man! ſaith he,
P. 265. l. 5. nothing will ſucceed with him, and the obſervation is made indefinitely, that when the Teſtimonies hap to be full and expreſs, then they come off worſt of all, which if it have truth, 'tis eaſily ſeen whoſe blame it is; ſure, not his that brought the proofs full and expreſs, but whoſe malignant eyes had the power of faſcinating and inchanting them.

11. And what is the matter after all this? Why, ſaith he, let him look into their own Edition of St. Chryſoſtome, and Dannæus his Notes, and he ſhall ſee what is become of his [therefore he ſpeaks laſt] upon which onely he builds, verba hæc, ſaith he, interpres non agnoſcit, the interpreter doth not acknowledge theſe words, neither truly do they ſeem to be fitly placed, for in regard he was a Biſhop he ought in that reſpect to ſpeak firſt not laſt] And then Io Pæan to S. W. who is thus got quit of an expreſs Teſtimony; Did he not well and truely foreſee that the Wits could doe wonders of this kind? But he is not the firſt that hath loſt the day after the Trophees are ſet up. Let him therefore now reckon his own infortunacies in ſtead of mine.

And 1. That there is no ſuch man as Dannæus that wrote notes on Sir H. Savile's, or the Eton Chryſoſtome, which he cites, is known to all men that ever lookt upon the Book; And if he look again or ask thoſe that are more skilfull in the point, and be told that his Printer may eaſily bear the blame of that (onely taking in his own eyes into part of it, that did not obſerve it, in gathering the Table of Errata) Donneus being eaſily miſtaken for Dannæus. Yet

2. Neither will that relieve him, for H. at the end of that note doth not ſtand for Andrew Downes, by any poſſible Cypher, but for another perſon not unknown to any that ever dealt in that edition of this Father.

3. That all that firſt part of the Teſtimony pretended, was the proving him Biſhop by his ſpeaking laſt, and if the ſame concluſion be in terms expreſt in that part of the Teſtimony, which the Interpreter and Annotatour, and S. W. all acknowledge, what have I loſt by all that he now pretends, if granted him? Did I infer any more from Chryſoſtome's obſervation of his ſpeaking laſt, than Chryſoſtome's concluſion of his being Biſhop there? This then being granted from half the words, I need not be ſolicitous for the reſt, that ſome body hath lurched from me.

But then 4. This Annotatour founds his note onely in the Interpreters not acknowledging theſe words [wherefore he ſpeaks laſt.] and I do not think it a ſafe courſe for any man to reform Originals by Tranſla-

Translations, without the consent of Manuscripts (which is not pretended here) or some weighty important reason, and the want of this at this time, nay the force of it to the contrary, makes me without any manner of scruple depart from the judgment of that my very Learned Friend M. J. H. in this matter, for nothing is more ordinary in voting in assemblies, than for the principal person to give his judgment last, and, if it be that of the major part, then τὸν κεῖνειν to decree or determine the question.

13. Now for the second part, ταῦτα ὅπτα δίδ, James ordains or decrees these things] which I thought did expresly prove, that James gave the sentence. To this he replies. As if, saith he, the decree were not manifestly made by all present, but by James onely.] But who bid him insert [onely] here? He knows neither I nor any of my interests, which are all well satisfied that the decree should be κοινὸν δόγμα made in common by all the Assembly, and onely conclude hence (what I cannot miss to obtain) that he gave the sentence, and did it as Bishop of Jerusalem, in which respect he had the principal place in that Assembly, though not simply or in other places, any so much as priority, in respect of Peter or John. Before he leaves this, he will be jealous, and ask a shrewd question, Why I leave out ἀπὸ τῦ νόμυ, from the law, which was immediately joyned in context with the former, thus he ordains those things out of the law? And I might ask him, why I should take it in, but that, as he doth not, so I know he cannot assign any reason for it; for what gain is it to his, or prejudice to my pretensions, that 'tis from the law that he makes his decree? Sure I never desired he should decree without or against law? But 2. it happens that St. Chrysostome furnishes me with a pregnant reason of my omission; Let S. W. look in the place, and he shall find him saying, That he duely decreed from the law that he might not seem to evacuate it, yet he leaves not them to hear these things from the Law, but from himself, saying, κεῖνω ἐγὼ, τετέςιν, ἐξ ἐμαυτῦ, ὐχ ὡδὶ τῦ νόμυ ἀκῦσαι, I judge or decree, i. e. from my self, not having heard from the Law, and concludes εἶτα λοιπὸν κοινὸν τὸ δόγμα γίνεσθω, then from thenceforth it becomes a common decree.

14. The third part of the Testimony he will needs set down more largely, and makes many lines of that which was most fully set down, as far as the Question was concerned, in these few words, setting down their εὐταξία, good order observed in their speaking; After Peter, saith he, Paul speaks, James forbears and interposes not, for he was intrusted with the principality. And by the more words he will set down, what shall he gain? Why, saith he, εὐταξία good order consisted in this, that they did not interrupt one another in speaking, not in this, that such an one spake first, this man second, another last.] And although I have more to say to him on this head, yet it will suffice, that I assure him, I never produced those words to prove James spake last (the second part of the Testimony having fully done that for me) or aimed at ought like that, when I specified the εὐταξία good order to be there observed in speaking, which that it was, appears by the plain words that follow, After Paul speaks—and then what if John speak not? the εὐταξία in speaking is for the orderly speaking of them that did speak, or that none that speak, speak disorderly; and though the Latine Interpreters bene composita omnia be but a paraphrase not rendering, and his paraphrases can expect no more respect from us, than S. W. would afford Ruffinus, when he rendred not, but plaied the Paraphrast, yet I may at this time yield him the advantage of it, for if in the Council all things were well composed or ordered, then so was their speaking, which was the special conciliary act. Mean while all that I aimed at in the words, was unquestionably deduced both from this, and the fourth, that James behaved himself as the decorum of the Bishop in his See required; and from that one clue, that part of the words which I brought must have the interpretation, which S. W. hath wholly mist, for lack of it; And first, he reads ὐκ ἀπεπιδὲ (corruptly, and against the light of an undeniable correction) James forbears and leaps not back, or, as he will render it, represseth himself and doth not dissent, without any propriety of sense to the Text of Scripture, or to the business in hand, as might easily be shewed, or even to the word ἀπεπιδὲν for dissenting, whereas the true reading directed to by γρ. in the margent (the note of necessary emendation, and not ἰσ. of conjecture) hath, ὐκ ὀπεπιδὲ, James forbears, and interposes not with any earnestness (so ὀπεπιδὲν is known to signifie, to break out violently on any, and is all one with his speaking more mildly, that follows l. 33. 2. He leaves out the [δὲ for] on which all the sense depends, James forbears, behaves himself mildly, uses no violence, for he was intrusted with the government, saith the Father, but he again from the Latine interpreter (which without all truth he after tells us, that my own side defer much to, but cannot pretend any one doth defer the least either in this or that place, or imagines it competent of it self to controll common sense, or to give law to the Greek) and this without all consideration or care of connexion, reading thus, he was intrusted with the principality, Bishoprick, and leaving no pretense of occasion to introduce it, and yet after all his prosperous endeavours (who now is the unfortunate man?) Yeilds me full as much, as I need crave from the words, that James was lookt upon in that Council as the principal person, for such must he needs be, that is intrusted with the principality.

15. Nay, lest these should conclude his prosperities, he will 3. (to avoid the force of what I aimed at, and the words clearly and solely import) have the mention of his principality import, that the charge he had, seemed to ingage him rather to favour the Jewish party, as if his being Bishop of those that taught false doctrine, and prest a yoke of bondage on those whom Christ had made free, could so much as seem to ingage him to promote there design, to favour dogmatizers, or indeed to doe any thing but repress them. Well may S. W. profess love to Greek learning, but 'tis certain he at this time will understand no more, if so much of a plain Testimony in Greek, than the corrupt Latine could help him to; where the want is, in the man, or in his awfull obedience to his Hypothesis, let himself Judge.

16. After this he hath one art more to assist this section, the leaving the fourth part of the Testimony (which was expres for James his being ἐν μεγάλῃ δυνασείᾳ, in great power, and accordingly behaving himself there) to be considered at a distance, by it self, in the next section, lest it should either lend, or borrow any assistance, from its neighbours; And because he hath done so, and hopes to gain such advantage by it, I shall also make some stay, e'er I proceed to it, and cast in a few more Testimonies,

if

6. My ſecond pretenſe of teſtimony for James's principal place in that Council, is from his giving the ſentence, v. 19. And his firſt exception againſt it and me, is very extraordinary, from our own tranſlation rendring the words, διὸ ἐγὼ κρίνω, wherefore my ſentence is, by this means making it onely his judgment in the matter, and yet, ſaith he, Dr. H. Tells us, he ſtill believes it ſignifies the ſentence.] And why ſhould I not thus tell him, that I ſtill believe that ſentence is ſentence; or what difference is there betwixt my ſaying, he gave the ſentence, and our tranſlation making him ſay, my ſentence is? Could any man doubt but it was his ſentence which he gave? Or is ſentence one thing in our tranſlatours words, and another in mine? 2. What difference is there betwixt ſentence and judgment in the matter? or what gained, by making it onely his judgment, unleſs that ſignifie the judgment onely of him, and not of others, or as in Sch. Diſar. he had ſaid (but now hath diſcreetly left out that word) his opinion onely, in either of which ſenſes as it would have no truth in it, and therefore cannot juſtly be affixt to our Engliſh tranſlation, ſo it was particularly prevented by me, profeſſing to
* Anſw. p. 45. pretend no more for James * than that the ſentence was pronounced by him, being agreed to by the reſt, and founded as a conciliarie ſentence ought, in the ſeeming good (which is more than his bare opinion) to the Holy Ghoſt and the Council.

7. But he proceeds to conſider the grounds of my belief.] Not, I hope, of my believing the word ſentence to ſignifie ſentence; 'Tis true I never did, and it were pity I ſhould trouble any man with producing my proofs, or grounds of that; but that ἐγὼ κρίνω, I judge, ſignifies, as our Engliſh tranſlatour ſaith (on my ſide, if he mark it, not on his) my ſentence is, not as he formerly would have it, my opinion, or judgment (in the ſenſe of opinion) in the matter.

8. But what are my Teſtimonies; or how doth he deal with them? When I had brought St. Chryſoſtome's ſenſe of the point before us, fully coming home to all I had ſaid, in four expreſſions of his, 1. That his ſpeaking laſt was founded in his being Biſhop, 2. That he decrees, ordains theſe things, making his ſentence a decree, 3. That he was intruſted with the principality, and that obſerved from his behaviour there, 4. That he ſpake more mildly, as beſt becoming him that was in great power or authority; Theſe, forſooth, muſt be four Teſtimonies, and if each of them taken ſingle, do not infer all, that I brought all of them to infer, then is the Doctour a moſt unfortunate gatherer of Teſtimonies.

9. To the firſt he asks, Could not he be Biſhop there and ſpeak laſt both without giving ſentence?] I anſwer, if he could, it was then well done of me to ſay, he added on v. 19, 20, 21. εἰκότως τοῦτο ἐπιτάττει, he rightly decrees, ordains theſe things, it being ſufficient that from the former words it appeared that his ſpeaking laſt was an indication of his Epiſcopal dignity in that City. But on this head he hits it with two queſtions, 1. Was there no worthier perſons preſent? 2. Did the thing concluded onely concern his See, or did it at all concern it, the Reſcript being directed to the Gentiles?] I anſwer to the firſt, that the Apoſtles were in ſome reſpect worthier perſons than James, which was none of the twelve, and therefore it was onely in his own See, that I pretend from St. Chryſoſtome, that he had the principal place: To the ſecond, that the Reſcript concluded and ſent to the Gentiles, was to allow them a liberty which the Jewiſh Chriſtians allowed them not, Act. 15. 1. and to repreſs theſe, or examine their pretenſions, the Council was aſſembled, v. 2. and ſo that was the obvious concernment of James his See in this matter.

10. But this is not all, for whilſt one piece of S. W. was a picking holes in this Teſtimony at home, and had done his part againſt it, the other is ſent to forage at the Stationers, and ſee what booty he could get there by turning to the place in Chryſoſtome; And then though he confeſs the firſt teſtimony is full and expreſs (which yet even now was nothing to the purpoſe) yet unfortunate man! ſaith he,
P. 265. l. 5. nothing will ſucceed with him, and the obſervation is made indefinitely, that when the Teſtimonies hap to be full and expreſs, then they come off worſt of all, which if it have truth, 'tis eaſily ſeen whoſe blame it is; ſure, not his that brought the proofs full and expreſs, but whoſe malignant eyes had the power of faſcinating and inchanting them.

11. And what is the matter after all this? Why, ſaith he, let him look into their own Edition of St. Chryſoſtome, and Dannæus his Notes, and he ſhall ſee what is become of his [therefore he ſpeaks laſt] upon which onely he builds, verba hæc, ſaith he, interpres non agnoſcit, the interpreter doth not acknowledge theſe words, neither truly do they ſeem to be fitly placed, for in regard he was a Biſhop he ought in that reſpect to ſpeak firſt not laſt] And then Io Pæan to S. W. who is thus got quit of an expreſs Teſtimony; Did he not well and truely foreſee that the Wits could doe wonders of this kind? But he is not the firſt that hath loſt the day after the Trophees are ſet up. Let him therefore now reckon his own infortunacies in ſtead of mine.

And 1. That there is no ſuch man as Dannæus that wrote notes on Sir H. Savile's, or the Eton Chryſoſtome, which he cites, is known to all men that ever lookt upon the Book; And if he look again or ask thoſe that are more skilfull in the point, and be told that his Printer may eaſily bear the blame of that (onely taking in his own eyes into part of it, that did not obſerve it, in gathering the Table of Errata) Donneus being eaſily miſtaken for Dannæus. Yet

2. Neither will that relieve him, for H. at the end of that note doth not ſtand for Andrew Downes, by any poſſible Cypher, but for another perſon not unknown to any that ever dealt in that edition of this Father.

3. That all that firſt part of the Teſtimony pretended, was the proving him Biſhop by his ſpeaking laſt, and if the ſame concluſion be in terms expreſt in that part of the Teſtimony, which the Interpreter and Annotatour, and S. W. all acknowledge, what have I loſt by all that he now pretends, if granted him? Did I infer any more from Chryſoſtome's obſervation of his ſpeaking laſt, than Chryſoſtome's concluſion of his being Biſhop there? This then being granted from half the words, I need not be ſolicitous for the reſt, that ſome body hath lurched from me.

But then 4. This Annotatour founds his note onely in the Interpreters not acknowledging theſe words [wherefore he ſpeaks laſt.] and I do not think it a ſafe courſe for any man to reform Originals by Tranſla-

Tranſlations, without the conſent of Manuſcripts (which is not pretended here) or ſome weighty important reaſon, and the want of this at this time, nay the force of it to the contrary, makes me without any manner of ſcruple depart from the judgment of that my very Learned Friend M. J. H. in this matter, for nothing is more ordinary in voting in aſſemblies, than for the principal perſon to give his judgment laſt, and, if it be that of the major part, then τοῦτο κεῖνειν to decree or determine the queſtion.

13. Now for the ſecond part, ταῦτα ἐπιτάσσει, James ordains or decrees theſe things] which I thought did expreſly prove, that James gave the ſentence. To this he replies. As if, ſaith he, the decree were not manifeſtly made by all preſent, but by James onely.] But who bid him inſert [onely] here? He knows neither I nor any of my intereſts, which are all well ſatisfied that the decree ſhould be κοινὸν δόγμα made in common by all the Aſſembly, and onely conclude hence (what I cannot miſs to obtain) that he gave the ſentence, and did it as Biſhop of Jeruſalem, in which reſpect he had the principal place in that Aſſembly, though not ſimply or in other places, any ſo much as priority, in reſpect of Peter or John. Before he leaves this, he will be jealous, and ask a ſhrewd queſtion, Why I leave out ἀπὸ τῦ νόμε, from the law, which was immediately joyned in context with the former, thus he ordains thoſe things out of the law? And I might ask him, why I ſhould take it in, but that, as he doth not, ſo I know he cannot aſſign any reaſon for it; for what gain is it to his, or prejudice to my pretenſions, that 'tis from the law that he makes his decree? Sure I never deſired he ſhould decree without or againſt law? But 2. it happens that St. Chryſoſtome furniſhes me with a pregnant reaſon of my omiſſion; Let S. W. look in the place, and he ſhall find him ſaying, That he duely decreed from the law that he might not ſeem to evacuate it, yet he leaves not them to hear theſe things from the Law, but from himſelf, ſaying, κεῖνω ἐγὼ, τετέκην, ὀξ ἐμαυτῦ, ὄκ ἀκῦσαι τῦ νόμε, I judge or decree, i. e. from my ſelf, not having heard from the Law, and concludes εἶτα λοιπὸν κοινὸν τὸ δόγμα γίνεται, then from thenceforth it becomes a common decree.

14. The third part of the Teſtimony he will needs ſet down more largely, and makes many lines of that which was moſt fully ſet down, as far as the Queſtion was concerned, in theſe few words, ſetting down their εὐταξία, good order obſerved in their ſpeaking; After Peter, ſaith he, Paul ſpeaks, James forbears and interpoſes not, for he was intruſted with the principality. And by the more words he will ſet down, what ſhall he gain? Why, ſaith he, εὐταξία good order conſiſted in this, that they did not interrupt one another in ſpeaking, not in this, that ſuch an one ſpake firſt, this man ſecond, another laſt.] And although I have more to ſay to him on this head, yet it will ſuffice, that I aſſure him, I never produced thoſe words to prove James ſpake laſt (the ſecond part of the Teſtimony having fully done that for me) or aimed at ought like that, when I ſpecified the εὐταξία good order to be there obſerved in ſpeaking, which that it was, appears by the plain words that follow, After Paul ſpeaks—and then what if John ſpeak not? the εὐταξία in ſpeaking is for the orderly ſpeaking of them that did ſpeak, or that none that ſpeak, ſpeak diſorderly; and though the Latine Interpreters bene compoſita omnia be but a paraphraſe not rendering, and his paraphraſes can expect no more reſpect from us, than S. W. would afford Ruffinus, when he rendred not, but plaied the Paraphraſt, yet I may at this time yield him the advantage of it, for if in the Council all things were well compoſed or ordered, then ſo was their ſpeaking, which was the ſpecial conciliary act. Mean while all that I aimed at in the words, was unqueſtionably deduced both from this, and the fourth, that James behaved himſelf as the decorum of the Biſhop in his See required; and from that one clue, that part of the words which I brought muſt have the interpretation, which S. W. hath wholly miſt, for lack of it; And firſt, he reads ὐκ ἀπεπηδᾷ (corruptly, and againſt the light of an undeniable correction) James forbears and leaps not back, or, as he will render it, repreſſeth himſelf and doth not diſſent, without any propriety of ſenſe to the Text of Scripture, or to the buſineſs in hand, as might eaſily be ſhewed, or even to the word ἀποπηδᾶν for diſſenting, whereas the true reading directed to by γρ. in the margent (the note of neceſſary emendation, and not ἰσ. of conjecture) hath, ὐκ ἐπιπηδᾷ, James forbears, and interpoſes not with any earneſtneſs (ſo ἐπιπηδᾶν is known to ſignifie, to break out violently on any, and is all one with his ſpeaking more mildly, that follows l. 33. 2. He leaves out the [τὸ for] on which all the ſenſe depends, James forbears, behaves himſelf mildly, uſes no violence, for he was intruſted with the government, ſaith the Father, but he again from the Latine interpreter (which without all truth he after tells us, that my own ſide defer much to, but cannot pretend any one doth defer the leaſt either in this or that place, or imagines it competent of it ſelf to controll common ſenſe, or to give law to the Greek) and this without all conſideration or care of connexion, reading thus, he was intruſted with the principality, Biſhoprick, and leaving no pretenſe of occaſion to introduce it, and yet after all his improſperous endeavours (who now is the unfortunate man?) Yeilds me full as much, as I need crave from the words, that James was lookt upon in that Council as the principal perſon, for ſuch muſt he needs be, that is intruſted with the principality.

15. Nay, leſt theſe ſhould conclude his improſperities, he will 3. (to avoid the force of what I aimed at, and the words clearly and ſolely import) have the mention of his principality import, that the charge he had, ſeemed to ingage him rather to favour the Jewiſh party, as if his being Biſhop of thoſe that taught falſe doctrine, and preſt a yoke of bondage on thoſe whom Chriſt had made free, could ſo much as ſeem to ingage him to promote there deſign, to favour dogmatizers, or indeed to doe any thing but repreſs them. Well may S. W. profeſs love to Greek learning, but 'tis certain he at this time will underſtand no more, if ſo much of a plain Teſtimony in Greek, than the corrupt Latine could help him to; where the want is, in the man, or in his awfull obedience to his Hypotheſis, let himſelf Judge.

16. After this he hath one art more to aſſiſt this ſection, the leaving the fourth part of the Teſtimony (which was expreſs for James his being ἐν μεγάλῃ δυνάμει, in great power, and accordingly behaving himſelf there) to be conſidered at a diſtance, by it ſelf, in the next ſection, leſt it ſhould either lend, or borrow any aſſiſtance, from its neighbours; And becauſe he hath done ſo, and hopes to gain ſuch advantage by it, I ſhall alſo make ſome ſtay, e'er I proceed to it, and caſt in a few more Teſtimonies,

if

if there can ſeem need, farther to confirm this truth, that James the Lord's Brother did act as the principal perſon in this Council, not as having any authority over the Apoſtles, or as ſimply Superiour to all, or any of them, or particularly to St. Peter, but that as Biſhop of Jeruſalem, this thus belonged to him in the Council there.

* Vid. Phot. Bib. p. 1525.

17. And firſt I refer him to the words of * Heſychius Presbyter of that See, Jeruſalem, who not onely ſtyles James the chief commander of new Jeruſalem, the leader of the Prieſts, the Chief Ruler, or Exarch of the Apoſtles (as was formerly cited in defence of Ruffinus) but alſo ὁ ἐν κεφαλαῖς κορυφαῖος, He that was the top or Crown or uppermoſt among the heads, ὁ ἐν λύχνοις ὑπερλάμπουλα, among the lamps one that had the ſupereminent luſtre, ὁ ἐν ἄστροις ὑπερφαίνουλα, he that over-ſhined among the ſtars (all ſtyles of eminence and priority, in reſpect of this is Metropolitical ſee, of the once whole Chriſtian word) Adding yet more expreſly, Πέτρος δημηγορεῖ, ἀλλ' Ἰάκωβος νομοθετεῖ, καὶ ὀλίγαι λέξεις τὸ τῆς ζητήσεως συνέσχλαν μέγεθος, ἐγὼ κείνω— Peter diſcourſes, but James gives the law, and a few words comprehended the greatneſs of the queſtion, I judge, ſaith he — I hope this is clear enough, till the wits come with their cloud to caſt over it, and deprive us of the words, or our underſtandings.

† c. 4.

18. So the forecited † Author de ætatibus Eccleſiæ, concluded from Clement's words, Quod Jacobus ſuper Apoſtolos accepit principatum, that James received a principality over the Apoſtles, being, ſaith he, made Biſhop of the Apoſtles, i. e. Superintendent; by all this meaning, I ſuppoſe, no more, than the laſt words incline theſe, Sedem Domini Jeſu ſuſcepit poſſidendam, that he took and poſſeſt the See of the Lord Jeſus, i. e. The Chriſtian Church of Jeruſalem.

‖ Art. 58.

19. I ſhall add onely one more at this time, the ‖ Article of the Court of Paris, in their Defence of the Liberties of the Gallicane Church, preſented to Lewis the Eleventh, requiring the Pope to follow Peter's example in remitting the ordinary juriſdiction to Biſhops, upon this acount, Nam cum Hieroſolymis quæſtio de legis obſervatione exorta eſſet, Petro tum præſente, Jacobus qui Hieroſolymorum Epiſcopus erat, ſententiam de ea re pronunciavit, For when at Jeruſalem a queſtion aroſe of the obſervation of the law, Peter being then preſent, James who was Biſhop of Jeruſalem pronounced the ſentence, citing from * Vincentius, that that cauſe could not, but by way of appeal, be transferred to any other, whether by ad alium he mean other perſon, or aſſembly rather of the Apoſtles, I here ſhall not need ſolicitouſly to inquire, taking leave to ſuppoſe, it could not well be to Peter alone, who was one of the perſons in this Council, and already concluded in the decree. Thus much, above my account, to this Section.

* Spec. Hiſt. c. 9.

SECT. XI.

St. James's ſuperiority in his See. Μεγάλη δυναστεία. A Biſhop depoſeable by a Council. Judæa was not St. Peter's Province. Abulenſis, and Eſtius of James's Preſiding in the Council. S. W's caſe of the Biſhop of Rocheſter and St. Peter, or the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. James giving the ſentence, the Reſcript grounded on his ſentence. The much diſputing, Act. XV. 7. The occaſion of St. Peter's ſpeech there.

1. HIs eleventh Section having ſingled out, and now gotten to it ſelf the fourth part of the Teſtimony from St. Chryſoſtome, we muſt attend, to ſee what work he will make with it. The Teſtimony is ὅπου δὲ ἂν χρὴ— for thus (ſpeaking of James) it behoves him that is in great authority, to leave the ſharper things to others, &c. Whence I inferred that Father to make James in this Council clearly Superiour to St. Peter. Onely let it be remembred, that I ſaid not indefinitely, or abſolutely, but with this expreſs reſtraint, in this Council, aſſembled at his Metropolitical See. Againſt this what hath he now to ſuggeſt? Why, 1. That I bring not theſe teſtimonies to prove greater power of any in this Council, but onely the principal place of James, and then what means the μεγάλη δυναστεία? Doth that ſignify greater place, as that is contradiſtinguiſht from greater power?] I anſwer, μεγάλη δυναστεία ſignifies the great authority which James had in this place, his peculiar See, and that devolves on him many privileges, among which one was, to have the principal place in a Council, held in that Metropolis, though in the preſence of the chief of the Apoſtles themſelves; and therefore from the μεγάλη δυναστεία I do infer (which is not by it to render) the Superiority of James in this Council. And this being ſo clear before as nothing could be more, let him now judge who was that forgot what he was about, as he ſaith, when he next proceeds to impugn my tenet, by ſuppoſing I meant his Superiority of power to † St. Peter, which is expreſly contrary to my oft repeated words, and ſo when he undertakes to combate that, he fights with his own phaſm onely, and ſo I muſt leave him for a while, whether to conquer it is indifferent to me, or to be defeated.

† p. 271.

2. But this ſecurity muſt not avail me to the gaining of a minutes reſt, for he preſently arreſts me, and adjures, or asks me on my conſcience, whether I do think that thoſe Apoſtles who had authority to conſtitute James Biſhop there, had not authority to remove him, if they ſaw it convenient? If they had, then they had authority ſuperiour to James in his own ſee.] To this adjuration, remembring our Saviour's obedience to the force of the like (though with this conſiderable difference, that that was from a lawfull Magiſtrate) Mat. xxvi. 63, 64. I ſhall not deny mine, that I doubt not, but upon ſuppoſition that James ſhould have deſerved it, the College of the Apoſtles, or thoſe three that were left in Jury and were a competent number to make a Council, and being thus qualified, elected and conſtituted James in this Metropolis, might in like manner have depoſed him; and thus I ſuppoſe a Council may depoſe a Pope on juſt cauſes. But how doth this infer that James had not the principal place, or was not Superiour to any of theſe ſingle, in this his See, any more than it would infer, that the Pope hath not the principal place in a Council at Rome?

3. If this will gain him nothing, then in ſomewhat a meeker ſtyle he would ask D. H. even on his own grounds, why Peter ſhould not be his Superiour ſtill, as well as St. Paul was yet Superiour to Timothy and Titus after they were fixt Biſhops, St. James being conſtituted Biſhop in Judæa, ſhewn to have been been St. Peter's province, such as he is pretended to have had, as well as the Gentiles, over which Timothy and Titus were constituted Bishops, were pretended to be St. Pauls?] To this question also I pay my obeisance, and answer according to those, on which he saith he proceeds, as my grounds; 1. That according to them, Judæa was not St. Peter's province, any more than the two other Apostles, St. John's and St. James's, all those three being by Clement affirmed to have constituted the Brother of the Lord Bishop there, as formerly was cited from Eusebius; And all antiquity, that speak of this point, agrees in this, that not Peter alone, but either Christ, or Christ and the Apostles in the plural, or the Apostles indefinitely, or those three Apostles, constituted him Bishop there. Testimonies of this he hath had in the * Tr. of Scb. Which both confirm the truth of it, and assure him that these were unquestionably my grounds. * p. 72.

4. And then he sees, what to think of the one foundation of his question, Judæa being shewn to be St. Peter's province, meaning his onely, and the no proportion also betwixt St. James at Jerusalem, in relation to St. Peter, and Titus or Timothy in respect of St. Paul. Had he gone, as he saith, according to my grounds, he had taken Euodius left at Antioch by St. Peter, and set him parallel to Titus at Crete; but then indeed, that had not been James at Jerusalem, and who can help it? This being premised, I can yet yield to him the utmost that his conclusion demands, viz. that Peter is still Superiour to him (speaking absolutely, as now he doth) having no farther at this or any time pretended for James his Superiority, than in his own See. And this answer will stand good, though he again, and again, if he please, dress up the same question in other words. Once more he will ask what those words of D. H. should signifie, Ans. p. 43. That in his See James was considered as Bishop, and so had the principal place even in Peter's presence?] I answer, it was there manifest, what they signified, viz. that as Bishop of that Metropolis he had the principal place in the Council celebrated there; and if this be strange to him, I refer him for more to his own Abulensis on Mat. c. 10. Qu. 38. And if he please, to Estius in Gal. 11. 6. Jacobum primo loco nominat, ob honorem Domini cujus erat frater, Et quia Hierosolymarum Episcopus erat ubi hæc gerebantur, St. Paul names James first, for the honour of the Lord whose brother he was, and because he was Bishop of Jerusalem where these things were acted. And thus, I take it, in Provincial or National Councils the Primate of the place ought to preside, though the Pope's Legate be there.

5. But what shall be replied to his endless trifling demands in this matter? First he will pitch on the Bishop of Rochester in England, first supposing the Apostles to have constituted him there, and then assembled themselves there in Council; must then, saith he, the honest Bishop of Rochester sit before St. Peter and the rest of the Apostles?] I shall ask him again, whether he expect to be answered in earnest? If not, I am not in the drolling humour; If he do, he must first explain himself farther, whether this supposed Council be a mere dioceſane, or no? If it be, it was somewhat ill ordered that the Apostles were supposed to convocate it, for in his own dioceſe it belongs sure to the supposed (as long as honest) Bishop of Rochester, to call it first, then to preside there, when 'tis called, who ever happen to be present there; the Court of Paris their reason being very good, when 'tis taken from St. Peter's own example, that all things of ordinary jurisdiction should be remitted to each Bishop in his Dioceſe, and such is the convoking and presiding in a Dioceſane Synod. But if the Council, he so wisely supposeth assembled at Rochester, be an Oecumenical Council, such as he may have heard of, once called at Nice, then as I think this is to be ruled by that example (the Bishop of Nice not presiding there, but the chief Bishop of the world, and in like manner not the honest Bishop of Rochester here) so I think he hath gained nothing to his pretension by this question.

6. What then will he obtain by the next, changing his supposition, or at least determining it to a National Council met at Rochester, and then asking whether the Bishop of Rochester ought not to give place to the Archbishop of Canterbury?] I answer, without all question he ought, the Archbishop of Canterbury being Primate of the Nation, from whence the Council National is convened, and the Metropolitane of Rochester, where the Council is met. But still this is as wide as ever from the case in hand, where neither the Bishop of Jerusalem is the mere Dioceſane Bishop, but the prime Metropolitane at least of all Judæa, if not of all Syria also; Nor Peter on the other side, the Archbishop there; and so still no part of proportion observed in these deep demands of his.

7. One question more he will yet ask, but by good luck, that being formerly proposed, as an Objection, is answered already when he was told, how St. James as Bishop of the Jewish Christians in Judæa, was concerned in the business of the Council. And having submitted to that impertinent task of answering all his Questions, I may now have leave to ask one, whether ranting and asking Questions be the new severe and rigorous mode of answering Books? If it be, S. W. shall have my vote for an able Controvertist.

8. But now he proceeds to my next Testimony, and there is some art in that transition, for by this means the Reader is obliged to believe, that this next is exactly on the same head with the former, and if it come not home to that, the Doctour is to blame, and so he here immediately resolves, and saith it makes neither for him nor against us.] But the Reader must remember, that by his own account there were but four Testimonies of his last batch, four parts of one, as I, that produced it, thought, but as he with greater authority resolved, four, and three of them were viewed in the last Section, and the fourth questioned, and interrogated at least in this; and yet now he insensibly glides into the next Testimony, and that being nothing to the former matter, is nothing to the purpose. The short is, I had said of James, he gives the sentence, and proved it from the words ἐγὼ κρίνω, I judge, Act. 15. 19. and upon his despising that proof in Schis. Disar. I gave him a farther account both of the use of the word in St. Paul for censures, 1 Cor. 5. 12. 13. 3. and then added St. Chrysostome's Scholion κρίνω ἐγὼ ἀντὶ τοῦ μετ' ἐξουσίας λέγω, I judge, in stead of, I say with power, or as other Copies reade, φησὶ καλῶς μετ' ἐξουσίας τὸ κρίνω ἐγὼ, he well saith, with power I judge. Now I appeal to any man, whether this do not make for me, as far as proving what I undertook to prove, can make for me, i. e. whether this do not prove that James gave the Sentence, which was all I went about to prove from it.

9. Yet this he would fain disprove, and to that end sets down other words of that Father, which he will believe are more largely the same thing, of which this is the breviate, and then having endeavoured to draw them to another sense, these must be so drawn in like manner. But 1. it falls out, that these words I have touched on before, and there is little reason to review them, any farther than to remind him, that the larger set of words had something I acknowledge parallel to these, viz. ταῦτα ἐπιτάττει, he enacts these things, but withall, reflects on some circumstances, which these do not; viz. his enacting from himself, and not citing it from the law; and so allowing them parallel where they are so, there arises no least appearance of necessity from thence, to presume them so, where they are not. 2. 'Tis observable, that there is little less than two large Folio pages in the Greek Chrysostome betwixt these two passages: The one p. 795. the other p. 797. and the distance well nigh as great in the words, there being little common between them. 3. The former that saith, he enacted it from himself not from the Law, is expressly designed to shew the connexion between v. 19. 20. I judge, and v. 21. where there is mention of Moses's Law; but the latter most manifestly respects the words I judge, as they stand by themselves, τί ἐστι κρίνω ἐγὼ, What is I judge? saith that Father, immediately answering, ἀντὶ τοῦ μετ' ἐξουσίας λέγω τοῦτο εἶναι, it is set, instead of, I say with power that this is.

* Anſ. p. 45. † P. 72. l. 15.

10. What follows in Reply to the * 12. Paragraph is a strange resolvedness not to see what is most evident. In the † Tr. of Sch. I mention James his giving the sentence, from Act. 15. 19. and add [upon which the Rescript is grounded, v. 22.] evidently meaning that the Rescript which is set down v. 22. &c. is (as to any man that reads it, will appear) grounded on James's sentence, not thinking it needfull to set down the words at length, and so shew, how one is grounded in the other (the thing being most evident in it self) but leaving this to every man's own eyes, by comparing his sentence, v. 19. and that Rescript, v. 22. &c. for as one was. That we trouble not them that from among the Gentiles are turned to God, but that we write unto them that they abstain from pollutions of Idols, &c. So in the other, It pleased the Apostles and Elders to send chosen men, and write by them, and this was the sum of that Letter, that it seemed good to the holy Ghost and to us to lay upon you no farther burthen, but to abstain. — This which was thus evident, he will not see, but first in the Disarmer saith, it is onely then, i. e. after St. Peter and St. Paul, Barnabas and James had spoken, it seemed good ------ and when I had endeavoured to remove that which seemed to me his misunderstanding, still he insists on his way, and resolves that if there were nothing in v. 22. signifying that the Rescript was founded on St. James his sentence, for which it was brought, then it is plain he neither misunderstands nor mistakes me, and then turns Preacher (I cannot say Saint) divides his Text, and runs on refuting my refutation most pleasantly. But this which he now insists on, is so strange a cavil, that I confess I could not before imagine it. If it were his wit then, and now but his memory, I must ask his pardon, that I did not think so ill of him before, as to suspect him of so very slight and groundless a cavil. But I rather incline to believe this, his present refuge, and so not his choice, but necessity. However it is, I have answered it already, viz. that all I designed to say, was that the Rescript mentioned, v. 22. &c. was grounded on the express words of St. James, I judge, &c. and so needed no proof that it did so; and so v. 22. was a bare reference to the place where the Rescript was to be found, and compared with James his decree, and this any man might have seen at first, if industrious mistaking were not the best way to lengthen seeming (and excuse the want of solid) answers.

11. When he reflects on his concluding in favour of Peter's authority from his speaking first, and charges me for not representing him in his own language, saying, in reason one should rather think, &c. nor thus much upon his bare speaking first, but that after such debate, &c. I answer, that his Books are too long for me to transcribe every word of them into mine (as I did the Cath. Gent. that was shorter) unless there were more weight in every word than I find there is in his Oratorious harangues, and he cannot pretend that this now insisted on, is more than so; however I was to presume that he that would reade my refutation, would first consider his plea, and then he was sure to lose nothing by my summary repetitions. Now for the [after such debate] which he complains to have been omitted, he will find it was not neglected in my answer, which gave the clear account of Peter's solemnly pronounced Oration, not onely or so much to interpose his judgment after such debate, as to give account of his action in preaching to Cornelius a Gentile, for which he had been accused, as was also Paul and Barnabas for more, for which reason these three begin to speak; the much disputing (which he calls debate precedent, v. 7. being in all probability the Judaizers accusing these Apostles for what they had done, which therefore they justifie by their Commission from heaven to doe it. And when S. W. now saith, That his preaching to the Gentiles was a thing already known to the Congregations, &c. and that that former knowledge was enough to satisfie such persons, he must remember what persons they were that were to be satisfied, even those that disputed, and those were the Judaizers that came down from Judæa to Antioch, v. 1. and arose and said it was needfull to circumcise them, v. 5. i. e. the converted Gentiles, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses, which because Peter had not done, it is plain they yet remained unsatisfied, and expresst their dissatisfaction by their disputing and contending with him now in the Council, v. 7. and to these is St. Peter's speech addrest, testifying it, as known by the rest of the Synod, that what he had done, he had done by God's direction and signal approbation, and then turning himself to the dissatisfied party, Now therefore why tempt ye God? which declares it to be still an Apology, i. e. a justification of his carriage, against the disputers or contenders for the circumcising of Proselytes.

12. He will now, I hope, see some reason, why his speaking first, should be thought to depend at this time upon the matter of his speech, the justifying himself against the Judaizers complaints, and dogmatizing, which was the occasion of the Synod, v. 1. and not from his greater authority; And what if St. Chrysostome on Act. 1. 15. say, he spake then as the first of the Quire, and as intrusted with the flock of God (both which Titles I acknowledge to belong to him) the circumstances of that being as distant from this action, as the places are, Acts the first, from Acts the fifteenth, which though they be, as he saith, in the very Treatise I build upon, viz. in that Father's Comments on the Acts, yet are they

as

as distant as almost two hundred pages could make them, and as Jerusalem's having and not having a Bishop, on which one difference, he knows, all this whole question dependeth.

SECT. XII.

St. Paul's independence. Distinctions without rendring the reason of them. Commission required for Supremacy as well as for power. How far Tradition is from proving St. Peter's Supremacy. Independence in the power after it was given. S. W's Objections answered from Philip the Deacon. Μηδὲν λοιμῶ. Ἰούνιος. St. Chrysostome's Panegyrick of St. Peter, and equally of St. Paul. Πολλὴν denotes no Universality. The Brother of the Lord none of the XII. St. Chrysostome's Testimony of Peter being Master of the world. Πρῶτος τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀνέστη. Πάντας ἐγκωμιάζει. S. W's unanswerable Testimony evacuated.

1. HIS twelfth Section concerns the pretended dependence of St. Paul on St. Peter, and having granted to the force of Gal. 1. that the conferring the honour of Apostle on St. Paul, was not dependent on St. Peter, he not onely denies absolutely that the dignity given was not inferiour, subordinate, and in that sense dependent on St. Peter, but reproaches me for saying he ought in reason to offer some proof for this, and then very good game is pretended to be yielded the Reader on this head, by comparing this to a dispute, Whether Logick be an art or a science, &c. But when this chase is at an end, I may demand either of him, or (by direction of his appeal) of the boys in the Schools also, whether when a distinction is given in answer to an argument, it be so unheard of an absurdity, to demand some either reason or proof of the distinction, when till that is rendred, the meaning of the Respondent is not fully understood. For sure all sort of words put in form of a distinction, are not presently intelligible sense, and two things that seem to be equally grounded, cannot really be distinguished, till the ground of their difference be pointed at, and either exemplified in some instance, or otherwise rendred probable. As in our present case, 'tis not easie to conceive, how the honour given can be dependent on St. Peter, when it was not conferred by him, or as he will phrase it, when the conferring it was not dependent on him.

2. In stead of making demand of such proof, it had been obvious enough to have insisted, that honour cannot depend on any, from whom it was not in some sense derived, and therefore there could be no ground of that distinction; and a groundless distinction is as fit to be hist out of the Schools as a non-pluss Opponent. But that way of triumphing, and hissing being left to boys, I thought one reasonable man treating with another, might have expected that usage, which belongs to reason, yet did I not with such confidence depend on it from S. W. but that I provided for the worst and unkindest returns, and accordingly this and a second being but prelusory, I added a third Rejoinder, proving from that Text before us, the thing which he so absolutely denied. Herein then did the utmost of my illogical absurdity consist; that I expected proof, i. e. reason from S. W. and that I made three Replies, when one would have served the turn, but as long as three are not less than one, and the demanding a proof of his Answer acknowledged not the force of it, I am still secure, my cause hath not suffered by this managery.

3. Having said this, I might pass over the two first, and proceed to the defence of my third answer, but that, in reply to my second. 1. he reproves my caution, in requiring that it appear as clearly that the same Christ that gave Paul this power, hath subjected it to St. Peter; 2. he undertakes to make it appear, and that as clearly as that Christ is God, viz. by the Testimony of the Catholick Church infallible, because ever built on the testification of a world of immediate Fathers and Pastours, who equally ascertain'd---- that Simon the first signified an efficacious primacy in the Church, as it did that the words, I and my Father are one, signifie an unity in divine nature.] To the first I reply, that I discern not, wherein the caution was unseasonable; for it being most evident, and by S. W. yielded, that Paul had this mission immediately from heaven, after Christ's ascension, What pretense can there be, that what was given him from heaven immediately, should after its being given, depend on any thing on earth, unless the same power that gave it, thus subjected it? and why should he that pretends this, be believed, unless he as clearly evidence the required subjection, as the Commissions immediate coming from heaven is evidenced? Suppose two men upon earth should each produce a Commission from a King for the raising a Regiment, or the like, and both proceed according to their Commission, can there be any pretense that one of these should claim dominion over the other, unless he have the like Commission for Commanding the other, that he had for raising his Regiment?

4. To the second, I shall make no doubt to stand to the first part of his issue, that if the testimony of the Catholick Church be proved to be as clear, that [first Simon] signifies an efficacious Primacy (which yet is as new a phrase to me, as singular Supremacy was to S. W. I wish he would bring as good authority for the one, as I did for the other; meanwhile I shall suppose he means by it Supremacy of Jurisdiction, or else still he saith nothing,) as that the text, I and my Father are one, and the like, signifies Christ to be God; he hath then overcome in this point. Herein then I shall spare him the pains of letting out his Anabaptist-teazer upon me (as he threatens, in case I deny what he yet confesses I grant) for so he make good his pretense of Catholick attestation, I demand no more to my utmost conviction: Onely it must be remembred, 1. That particular is not Universal; and 2. That Universal includes all times, as well as places; and 3. That the one thing that S. W. pretends to, the testification of his Fathers, and from thence concludes the testification of all ages foregoing. 1. Is not a world (as yet he here calls them) but onely a small piece of it, at the utmost but the Roman world, and yet not that neither, as hath largely been shewed; and 2. It is no sufficient proof, but extremely infirm and fallacious, to pretend the like teſtimony of the Apoſtles, and the Churches by them planted, for Peter's Supremacy, as not onely may be, but was in the firſt Council of Nice actually produced (as I have elſewhere ſhewed) for the concluding the equality and unity of the divine nature in the Father and Chriſt. When it is remembred how much hath been ſaid in anſwer to his grounds, in confirmation of all my preſent replies to his argument from tradition, I ſhall need add no more in this matter. And hereby appears what reaſon I had to ſay, 'tis certain it appears not, that St. Paul's power given him by Chriſt, was ſubjected to St. Peter; for there being but two ways imaginable by which it might appear, Scripture, and Tradition truly Catholick, the atteſtation of S. W's immediate Fathers and Paſtours, if it were, as it is not, granted him, is neither of theſe, and he hath no other medium but this, by which to pretend to them.

5. At length he comes to my third anſwer, prefacing it thus, he would ſeem at length for faſhion ſake, as it were, to touch the point.] The interpretation whereof is this, that when three anſwers were given, the two former but preluſory, the third directly to the point (the refuting his diſtinction, and ſo his anſwer, which was compriſed in that) the third of theſe, on which the whole weight was laid, ſhall yet be repreſented to the reader, as that which came in onely for faſhion ſake, and not ſo much neither, but onely ſeemingly, and this ſeemingneſs not to handle but onely to touch the point; and if I ſhould ask him for proof for any part of this, he is the anſwerer, and ſo is ſecured to ſay this, whether you will or no, and ſo any thing elſe at the ſame rate, and the freſh-men are at hand, and will hiſs you out of the Schools, if you queſtion, or ask proof of it. After this prologue; 'tis obvious to conjecture what uſage the teſtimony it ſelf ſhall meet with; What it is, I muſt firſt ſet down, Gal. 1. 17. St. Paul ſpeaks not of the conferring of the power upon him (that was in the foregoing verſes) but what he did after the receiving it: I conferred not, ſaith he, with fleſh and bloud, neither went I up to Jeruſalem to them that were Apoſtles before me, but— and all that I concluded from hence was, that this place belonging expreſly to the power after it was given, yet then he depended not on Peter, no way wanting him, nor his voice, ſaith Chryſoſtome, but being of equal dignity with him, to ſay no more.

6. On this he hath many arts of divertiſement to entertain his Reader, as 1. Obſerving that I am no larger in citing the words, and making invincible arguments upon them. To this I anſwer, that I thought the naming the place was ſufficient, to infer what I inferred, St. Paul's not depending on Peter in his power after it was given, and then the leſs I ſaid, with the intelligent reader it would be more effectual.

7. Secondly he obſerves, that there are two propoſitions, 1. That the place, Gal. 1. 17. belongs expreſly to the power after it was given, the other, yet then he depended not on him, and the ſecond left indifferent whether proved from the text or by my own affirmation.] I anſwer, that I acknowledge theſe are my two propoſitions, and that the firſt (but that is not the ſecond) hath no proof brought for it, but my own affirmation, the matter being viſible to any eye, that the 17th verſe is after the 15th, and ſo the donation of the power being mentioned, v. 15. that which is related. v. 17. is after it is given. The ſecond propoſition then was it, for the proof of which I produced that text, v. 17. and ſo there was no truth, or weight in that obſervation.

8. Thirdly he obſerves, that in that verſe there is no news of power, much leſs expreſly belonging to power.] I anſwer, that the Apoſtolical power is power, and the preaching the Goſpel was an exerciſe of that power, after it was given, and that verſe declares his non-dependence on Peter, or any other Apoſtle, in that, ſhewing that as ſoon as he had his miſſion from Chriſt, he was ſo far from ſo much as conſulting or receiving any directions from Peter, or doing any thing that might own any appearance of dependence on him, that he fell preſently to his work, the exerciſe of this power, without ever ſo much as taking notice of any other Apoſtle, ſaluting, or viſiting them.

9. Fourthly, ſaith he, how doth it appear that the power given was not dependent on St. Peter as an inferiour degree to a Superiour?] I anſwer; that depending onely on Chriſt's commiſſion (as it appears to have done, by his exerciſing it without any the leaſt addreſs to any elſe) it cannot depend on any other, and if it depend not on any other, then it depends not as an inferiour to a ſuperiour. We ſee the difference between Supreme independent, and Subordinate dependent governours, 1 Pet. 11. 13, 14. that the latter are ſent; i. e. Commiſſionated by the former; and Paul's not being ſent by St. Peter, but by Chriſt, is one great prejudice againſt the ſubordination; and his acting without any the leaſt reſpect to him, upon his own bottom, i. e. by the Commiſſion received onely from Chriſt, is another. 2. It appears by the teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtome, that both ſaith, he wanted him in nothing, and therefore could depend on him in nothing (becauſe he that depends, wants him that he depends on) and alſo that he was of equal dignity with him. Thus much for his ſet of Obſervations, by which his Reader was to be amuſed; with what weight of reaſon, he now ſees.

10. Meanwhile this confeſſion he yields to the force of this text, that having commiſſion immediately from Chriſt, he had authority to preach to other places without demanding firſt the other Apoſtles order, and approbation, yet not vouchſafing to ſhew us the reconcileableneſs hereof with his depending on Peter in his power, when it was given: Is not authority veſted in a perſon by Chriſt immediately, and that free to be exerciſed without demanding order or ſo much as approbation from (the text adds, without ſo much as conferring with, or viſiting) any other, an independent authority? Is not it, in the Romaniſts Logick, an argument of the Prelates acknowledgment of the Pope's power over him, that he fetcheth his Pall from him, or at leaſt ſeeks his approbation? And if he have no [leſs] obligation to that, ſhall he yet be dependent on him? He grants again, that if our Saviour command a thing, he may be obeyed without or againſt his Superiours command or prohibition. And what he ſaith he may, I ſuppoſe truth yields he muſt. And ſhall it not thence follow, that in that command, that perſon hath power and authority to doe that action, independent from the Superiour? What then ſhall be ſaid in caſe the commiſſion be given by Chriſt not onely for one action, but for an intire office? Is he not then in that office free to act Univerſally without, or contrary to any other's command? and if he be, is he in that whole office (not onely in conferring of it, but after it is given) dependent on any but on Christ?

in

11. But in oppoſition to all this, he next obſerves, that our Saviour could and did give immediate commands and commiſſions to perſons of ſeveral ranks, as to the Apoſtles and Diſciples to preach to the whole world, and to Philip the Deacon to go to convert the Eunuch, Act. 8. 26, 29. To this I anſwer, that it is one thing to ſpeak of ſeveral ranks inſtituted or ordained by Chriſt, another to ſpeak of ſeveral perſons of the ſame rank; had Peter been ordained by Chriſt an Apoſtle, and Paul a Diſciple onely, one of the ſeventy, I ſhould never have concluded his equality to Peter from his having, or exerciſing his commiſſion without him. But I take it for granted, that Paul was inſtituted by Chriſt to be an Apoſtle, as well as Peter, and from thence, and from the exerciſe of this, i. e. Apoſtolical power, without dependence from any, it is, that I conclude his equality. If then all that he ſaith of Apoſtles, and Diſciples, and Philip the Deacon, were granted, yet unleſs it be ſuppoſed that that one rank of Apoſtles contains in it ſeveral ranks, he will have gained nothing by his inſtances; for it is manifeſt that Paul was no other than an Apoſtle by Chriſt's immediate commiſſion. I ſhall make no queſtion, but Chriſt may doe that, which I ſee every Biſhop doe, give powers of ſeveral ranks to ſeveral perſons, and ſo ſend Apoſtles (twelve onely of them) with one ſort of power, and Diſciples to a greater number (that of ſeventy) with another inferiour ſort of power (whether onely temporary, on preſent purpoſes, as harbingers to go before his face, Luk. 10. 1. or perpetual, and ſuch wherein they were to be ſucceeded by the Presbyters in the Church, I ſhall not now diſpute.) But what is all this to thoſe that are commiſſionated by Chriſt with the ſame power, elevated to the ſame, i. e. to the Apoſtolical rank? And of this onely it is, he knows, that we now treat. He muſt therefore remember, that I infer not St. Paul's equality to St. Peter, from his receiving immediately a commiſſion from Chriſt, and acting by it; but from its being an Apoſtolical commiſſion, which he thus received, and exerciſed. And to this the inſtituting of Diſciples is no way parallel.

12. Much leſs the command whether of the Angel or Spirit (be it of Chriſt himſelf,) Act. 8. to go to convert the Eunuch; for 1. Philip was of a rank much lower than the Apoſtles, and not commiſſionated to this immediately by Chriſt, but by the Apoſtles in Council, Act. 6. and 2. This of the Spirit was but the directing him to one act of his office, the office being formerly given him by the Apoſtles, and impowering him for that, as for all other the like acts; and what proportion can this bear with St. Paul's Apoſtolical power? Let the Reader now judge, where the non-ſenſe lies, and whoſe are the ſly tricks, which he thinks fit to complain of in this matter.

13. He now comes to the view of St. Chryſoſtome's words forecited, and, after his wonted manner, takes them aſunder, and in one paragraph handles the μηδὲν Πέτρε δεόμενον, μηδὲ τ ἐκείνε φωνῆς, which he renders, not needing Peter nor his voice.] Of this he tells us the explication is already given in the paragraph foregoing, when yet he knows he had neither mentioned it, nor ſaid a word of it; and how little what he there ſaid, is applicable to the evacuating the force of it, I leave any man to conſider. All he now adds is, that whether by voice he mean commiſſion to preach, or inſtruction of doctrine, both which he yields he had from Chriſt immediately, yet he ſees not what follows hence neceſſarily for equality of power.] To this I anſwer, that the teſtimony being μηδὲν δεόμενον, he needed Peter in nothing, it muſt follow, that in nothing he depended on him, and conſequently not in power, and ſo was not ſubordinate to him, but αὐτοκέφαλον, acting merely by that power, which he had from Chriſt, without any relation to St. Peter, and ſo that St. Peter, that is pretended to be the Univerſal, was not yet St. Paul's Paſtour, which yet more undeniably appears by the other branch of the Teſtimony, ἀλλ' ἰσότιμον ὄν αὐτῷ, but was of equal dignity with him.

14. But to this part of that Father's words he at length proceeds, and on the ſame grounds of ſincerity, by which he uſeth to divide parts of the ſame Teſtimony, he now will join to this what St. Chryſoſtome there adds, πλέον δὲ οὐδὲν ἐρῶ τέως, for I will ſay no more, from which addition he makes no ſcruple to conclude, that in that place he ſpeaks not of power at all, upon this one medium, becauſe neither St. Chryſoſtome nor D. H. himſelf hold that St. Paul had greater power than St. Peter, and then without more adoe the Doctour hath quite diſanulled his own beſt Teſtimony.] But I am in no-wiſe convinced of that; for that more, which the Father's addition of [I will ſay no more] intimates, I never imagined to belong to more power, but to ſome circumſtances of advantage on St. Paul's ſide, his being called from heaven, and the like. It is not [he had equal, I will not ſay more power] but [he was equally dignified with him, for I will ſay nothing more] i. e. I will not, as I might, extend that compariſon to thoſe other circumſtances; and that is very reconcileable with the ἰσοτιμία ſignifying equality of power, for why may not the power be equal, though the other privileges be equal alſo, nay, perhaps though more may be ſaid of one than the other in matters not belonging to power? ſo nothing is there in that caprich of his.

15. Next then he refers to his former performances, having, he ſaith, already ſhewed that ἰσοτιμία ſignifies equal honour for the ſame efficacy of preaching, and in this place both it and the not needing St. Peter's voice, relate onely, ſaith he, to the ſufficiency of knowledge, making St. Peter's inſtructions needleſs, as appears by the words a little after, not as if St. Paul were to learn any thing of St. Peter: and to this he interprets St. Chryſoſtome's [I will ſay no more] many holding that St. Paul was higher in learning, and a greater Divine.] To this I anſwer.

1. That as he formerly attempted to take off the force of the ἰσοτιμία, and interpret it onely of the efficacy of his preaching, ſo I vindicated it to ſignifie equality of dignity, which was not ſuppoſable in him that was inferiour in power.

2. That with no better reaſon he hath here endeavoured to reduce it to ſufficiency of knowledge, which if it would ſatisfie that part of the phraſe which mentions his not needing Peter's voice, yet it cannot that other, which ſaith, he needed him in nothing.

3. The following mention of his learning nothing of him, eſpecially following at ſuch a diſtance, as it doth in that Father, hath no influence on the ἰσοτιμία equality of honour, or dignity, and if it may interpret the οὐδὲν πλέον I will say no more, yet ſtill their equal dignity is nevertheleſs the importance of the former, for though he will not compare their learning (that is all that can be concluded from the expreſſion; his ſaying nothing more, is his not extending the compariſon to other things, and equality may be the matter of compariſon, as well as preheminence) yet it is viſible he doth compare their τιμὴ honour or dignity, and ſaith they were equal in that, which yet they could not be, if one had greater power than the other.

16. And what if St. Ambroſe (or the Authour of the Comments on the Epiſtles under his name, ſay, "there was no neceſſity that he being elected by God, ſhould goe to thoſe that were Apoſtles "before him, ut aliquid fortè diſceret, that he might perhaps learn ſomewhat from them, becauſe "God revealed to him by his Son how he ſhould teach? What avails this to the Superiority of Peter's power? Doth the independence in point of learning, infer dependence in point of power? and why may not St. Chryſoſtome (that is not D. H.) be heeded as well as St. Ambroſe? and he underſtands it of equality of dignity: Or why may not both of them deſerve to be conſidered, the words fitly bearing both? and then St. Paul had no dependence on Peter either for power or learning, and that alſo St. Chryſoſtome alone ſaid, when he ſaid μηδὲν ἧττον αὐτοῦ, that he wanted him in nothing, which could have no truth, if being independent in point of learning, he were in power inferiour, and ſo dependent on him.

17. But he will have one endeavour more (conſcious of the inſufficiency of the former) before he leave this matter, he will oppoſe St. Chryſoſtome to St. Chryſoſtome; and firſt, he will be mercifull, then proceed to the method of ſevere demonſtrating from ſome paſſages of his. His mercy and great indulgence is ſhewed in not inſiſting on the Titles of honour given St. Peter by St. Chryſoſtome in the Panegyrick on Peter and Paul, the leader or captain of the Apoſtles, the beginning of the right faith, the great ἱεροφάντης of the Church, which he renders pronouncer of ſacred things in the Church, the Coryphæus or head of the Apoſtles, intruſted with the ſheepfold (adding his reaſon for this laſt, becauſe the word ποίμνη being a collective denotes an Univerſality.] To theſe named but not preſt Titles, I make this equal return, that the very Title of that oration on Peter and Paul, is an anſwer to all that is deducible from all theſe ſtyles, none of them aſcending higher than that of
* Tom. 5. p. 991. l. 40. κορυφαῖοι head of the Apoſtles, and this is given to them in common in the Title, * εἰς τοὺς κορυφαίους τῶν Ἀποστόλων, Πέτρον καὶ Παῦλον, On Peter and Paul the heads of the Apoſtles, from whence I conclude, that whatſoever was attributed to Peter in that Title, in that St. Paul was equal to him, and that confirms, not impugns that Father's affirmation of the ἰσοτιμία equality of honour, as I interpreted it. So
† P. 992. l. 8. in the Panegyrick they goe conjoyned, † τὼ κορυφαίω, the heads, with this addition equal to what before we had from him, Τί γὰρ Πέτρου μεῖζον, τί δὲ Παύλου ἴσον; what is greater than Peter, but what equal to Paul? which can no otherwiſe have truth in it, but that as in ſome reſpects thoſe two were equally above all others, ſo in ſome other reſpects Paul was ſuperiour to Peter (leaving no third caſe, eſpecially that of power, wherein Peter exceeded Paul.) So again, when he gives Peter one title of honour, καθηγητὴς the leader of the Apoſtles, he gives Paul another, abundantly provided to equal it, ὁ γνωριστὴς τῆς οἰκουμένης καὶ τῶν ἄνω δυνάμεων συμμέτοχος, the inſtructer of the world, and co-partner of the ſupernal powers. So when he ſtyles Peter the beginner of Orthodoxy, the great Hierophantes of the Church, &c. he ſubjoins Paul the great Preacher of truth, the glory of the world, the man in heaven, and angel on earth, the glory of the Church, &c. throughout that Panegyrick, joining them together in terms of equal power and
* L. 26. dignity, * the bleſſed twain intruſted with the ſouls of the whole world, † the yoked Oxen of the † L. 33. Church, ‖ the pillars of the Church, and great luminaries of the world, κρείττους ἀλλήλων, more excellent
‖ P. 993. l. 24. mutually the one than the other, better than all the Creation together: This may ſerve for a return of gratitude, for his mercy, in not preſſing theſe ſo many advantages, or, if he will not interpret it ſo, as an account to the Reader, why it was not his intereſt to preſs them, and what he hath gained by mentioning, without preſſing them, let him now judge.

18. As for that other paſſage formerly mentioned of the flock intruſted to Peter, from whence he is willing to conclude an Univerſality, I ſhall leave him to judge of the force of it, when, Act. 20. the Biſhops of Aſia are ſaid to be by the Holy Ghoſt made Biſhops of the flock; or when Chriſt ſaith he hath other ſheep which are not of this fold, which will competently infer, that there are particular ποίμναι ſheepfolds, and that every collective is not an Univerſal; if it were, the honeſt deſpiſeable Biſhop of Rocheſter, even now brought forth by S. W. muſt commence Univerſal Paſtour, for no doubt he is a Paſtour, and hath a ſheepfold belonging to him, and that ſheepfold is a collective, but I ſtill hope denotes not an Univerſality.

19. But let us leave theſe, which he will not, and proceed to thoſe, which he will preſs; The firſt he cites out of the 87th Homilie on St. John, Πῶς οὖν — If this be ſo, how then comes James to have the Epiſcopal ſeat of Jeruſalem? ὅτι τοῦτον — becauſe he ordained him (St. Peter) not Maſter of that ſeat but Maſter of the whole world.] To this I anſwer 1. that James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem is not Paul the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, of whom onely he knows we now ſpeak, and whoſe ἰσοτιμία equality of dignity with Peter I aſſert, as I never did of St. James abſolutely, but onely that in his own See he had the Superiority as Biſhop there. I well know that the Brother of the Lord was none of the primary A-
* Hiron. Comm. Iſai. poſtles, but onely ἐν δευτερείῳ in a ſecond rank, called the * thirteenth Apoſtle, and † κατ' μίμησιν τῶν δώδεκα, an Apoſtle by way of imitation of the twelve; and ſo I cannot wonder, that Peter was thought Superiour
† Euſeb. l. 1. c. 1. to him, being one of the three, who (he knows that I acknowledge) advanced him to the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem. With what leaſt degree of propriety, then, this teſtimony was ſet in his front, let him now judge. 2. That it is not imaginable he ſhould think it of any force againſt me, that of St. Peter it is ſaid by that Father, that he was ordained by Chriſt a Maſter of the world, when I know that Chriſt did in like manner ordain all the Apoſtles, of whom St. Peter was the prime. Have I not ex-
‖ Of Sch. p. 70. preſſly acknowledged, that ‖ the commiſſion was given by Chriſt to all the Apoſtles unlimitedly, and extending equally to the whole world? Did I not juſt now out of this Father, produce it, as one of St. Paul's titles, that he was γνωριστὴς οἰκουμένης, inſtructer of the world? I might have tranſlated it the whole world, as well as S. W. doth, for ſure οἰκουμένη the world is of the ſame latitude in both places, and ſo are the titles, inſtructer and teacher and Maſter, both which I ſhall allow to ſignifie, at leaſt to infer, Juriſdiction or Government, and the precept of μαθητεύσατε diſcipling all nations, Matt. 28. 19. and the whole world, Mar. 16. 15. being given to all the Apoſtles, it cannot be true of every of them, that he is by Chriſt inſtituted a διδάσκαλος a Maſter or teacher of the whole world in the full latitude. And then (without deſcending to any nicer examination of the place, which he ſeems to have expected) what hath S. W. gained by his firſt teſtimony?

whole

20. His ſecond teſtimony is from the comment on Act. 1. where ſaith he, about the election of a new Apoſtle he hath theſe words, εἰκότως ὁ πρῶτος τῷ πράγματι αὐθεντεῖ, ἅτε καὶ αὐτὸς πάντας ἐγχειρισθείς, with good reaſon doth the firſt (St. Peter) undertake the buſineſs with authority, as having them all delivered into his hand.] In this teſtimony I propoſe theſe few things to his calmer conſideration; 1. that it no way concerns the point in hand, St. Paul's equality with St. Peter; St. Paul was not an Apoſtle, Act. 1. and though Peter had ſome kind of Primacy among the twelve, yet St. Paul might be, and was made equal to him; 2. That if all were granted that the words, in his letting and rendring, infer, the gains would not be great to him; For conſidering what the πράγμα buſineſs or affair in hand was, the chuſing of an Apoſtle in Judas's place (and in that by lot, and after two were firſt named by the whole company, v. 23.) and that all that was to be done by them, was to pray, and then caſt lots, what can be pretended for St. Peter's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, or power over the Apoſtles, from this teſtimony, that ſaith, he undertook this buſineſs with authority? He might certainly have authority enough to propoſe, and carry on this buſineſs of the election by lot, without having the rule of the Apoſtles and all the world beſide. As for ἐγχειρισθεὶς πάντας, his having them all delivered into his hands, that is far from concluding him chief governour of all that were preſent; all the reſt of the Apoſtles, as S. W. ſaith, or any more than the Univerſal commiſſion to all the Apoſtles, together with Chriſt's having given him a ſpecial care of promoting the good of Chriſtians; and this is no interpretation of mine, but that which the Father's expreſs words confirm, rendring this as the reaſon of what he had ſaid, πρὸς ὃν αὐτὸν εἶπεν ὁ Χριστὸς— for Chriſt had ſaid to him, and thou when thou art converted ſtrengthen thy brethren, which was Chriſt's warning to him, to repair the fault of his denying him by future diligence in his ſervice; and then no doubt every other Apoſtle had the care of all committed and intruſted to him by Chriſt alſo, though Peter on this occaſion had a ſpecial warning to incite his zeal, and ſo became moſt forward in advancing this work.

21. But then 3. S. W. hath not done well to reade ὁ πρῶτος rendring it the firſt (St. Peter) when the Greek (which he profeſſeth to uſe) reads πρῶτος, without ὁ. And 4. when he renders [the firſt (St. Peter) doth undertake the buſineſs with authority] the Greek πρῶτος τῷ πράγματι αὐθεντεῖ, doth not neceſſarily import any more, than that, he firſt undertook it of himſelf, no man elſe putting him upon it, and that indeed is proper to the πρῶτος Σίμων, the Primacy, that is allowed Peter, according to that of the ſame authour * a little before, that as being firſt in dignity ἀεὶ πρώτης ἀξιοῖ τὸν λόγον he always ſpeaks firſt. * in v. 15.

22. But then 5. after all this, the Copies, which the learned Editour made uſe of, to reform the former corrupt Greek edition, have not any of theſe words πρῶτος τῷ πράγματι αὐθεντεῖ but onely thus much, as by the margin appears, εἰκότως, ὡς ἅτε αὐτὸς ἐγχειρισθείς, with good reaſon, ſeeing he was intruſted, for Chriſt ſaid unto him, and thou being converted ſtrengthen thy brethren; which as it is an evidence of the great truſt Chriſt repoſed in St. Peter, and of his dignity, if S. W. pleaſe, and forwardneſs before the reſt of the Apoſtles, ſo it is no intimation of his authority and juriſdiction over them. On this teſtimony then he had ſmall reaſon to rely, and perhaps he did not, expreſſing his confidence in it not ſimply, but in conjunction with, or as he ſaith after peruſal of the following Teſtimony.

23. To that then let us haſten (than which, ſaith he, 'tis impoſſible to find another more expreſs for this or any other point.] And where and what is this? Why, in the ſame place and on the ſame occaſion, Τί ἦν ἐλέσθαι [τὸν Πέτρον] αὐτὸν ὃν ἐνλῶ, καὶ πάνυ, ἀλλ' ἵνα μὴ δόξῃ χαρίζεσθαι, ὃ ποιεῖ, what then, was it not in Peter's power to elect him? Yes it was altogether in his power, but he does it not, leſt he might ſeem to doe it out of favour. Of this teſtimony he lets himſelf looſe to boaſt, and heighten the authority, and concludingneſs of it, nor, ſaith he, have we here any divers lections to diminiſh the authority of the words—] In return to which I may be allowed to ask, why he made not uſe of this boaſt and ovation, after his former teſtimony? Was it becauſe he ſaw the various lection in the margin which quite evacuated the force of it? I ſhall ſuppoſe it ſo, and acknowledge it an act of ſeaſonable (though neceſſary) prudence in him: But then is it not ſtrange, that his eyes ſhould ſo fail, as to permit the fixing this character ſo unſeaſonably to this, where the not ſingle, but double γρ or emendation in the margin hath utterly deprived him of it?

24. For there being two Manuſcripts, which were eſpecially made uſe of in recovering this piece upon the Acts, one out of New College Library in Oxford, the other Thuanus's, there are two emendations in this place, the one reads no more than thus τὸν ὃν, ἵνα γένηται; αὐτὸν ἐλέσθαι ὃν ἐνλῶ, ἵνα μὴ δόξῃ, χαρίζεσθαι. Why then doth he ſay, that he may be made? (i. e. as appears by the text, v. 22. That one muſt be made or ordained, a witneſs with us of the reſurrection) to which he anſwers, he might not chuſe him, that he might not ſeem to gratifie him. And then 'tis evident, what is the ſole importance of the Father's words, viz. that Matthias was not to be choſen to be an Apoſtle, but aſſumed ſome other way, that it might not be thought a gratifying him, or that out of favour he was preferred before others; to which purpoſe it follows in the next page, † This neither made thoſe that were choſen to be elevated (for they were called to dangers) nor thoſe that were not choſen, to grieve as diſhonoured; and again, he calls it a lot, ſhewing that all was of the grace and choice of God. † p. 625. l. 7.

25. And if by its being in the ſingular number it be affixed to St. Peter, and ſo ſeem to conclude ſomewhat peculiar of him from the reſt of the Apoſtles; I anſwer, that though they be not named, yet are they not thereby excluded: and 2. that this may reaſonably be granted, that Peter being the ſpeaker and chief of the Quire, the prime Apoſtle, what was meant of the whole College, is ſpoken in his perſon; Howſoever 3. the Father's reſolution being that he might not chuſe an Apoſtle, it were ſtrange if it ſhould be thence concluded, that he might, which alone is it that can pretend to ſupport S. W's concluſion from hence, that an act of the higheſt juriſdiction imaginable amongſt the Apoſtles, viz. the making a new Apoſtle, did here by that Father's Verdict belong to St. Peter: How truly let him now judge.

in

26. The other various reading lies nearer to the words by him produced thus, τὸ ἦν ἐλέσθαι [τὸν Πέτρον] αὐτὸν ἐκ ἐνῆν, ἐνῆν μὲν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔθελεν, ἵνα μὴ δόξῃ χαρίζεσθαι· What then? might not he (Peter) have choſen him? He might indeed, but he would not, that he might not ſeem to gratifie him; which if it ſhould be preferred, it will yet infer no more in reaſon than the former did, that the choice was to be made by God, not by men, leſt an humane choice might ſeem to have ſomewhat of favour in it; Whereas this was not to be lookt on as an advantage, but office of burthen and danger; as ſoon after he ſaith, τότε ἡ ὁπτασία ἦν, ὃ τιμὴ, ἀλλὰ προνοία τῶν ἀρχομένων, the advancement to the Apoſtleſhip was not a dignity, but a providence or procuration of them that were under them; So that the oppoſition apparently is to be ſet not betwixt Peter's chuſing, and the reſt of the Apoſtles chuſing, but betwixt humane and divine choice, there being place for favour, at leaſt for ſuſpicion of it in the former, not in the latter; and therefore without diſputing whether the Apoſtles might or had power to chuſe one into the void place or no, it is apparent they did not attempt it, but Peter making the propoſition of referring it to Lot, and ſo to God's choice, they onely naming two, on whom the Lots were to be caſt, it follows that they joyntly named two and prayed, and caſt lots, and ſo Matthias was choſen. And in this ſenſe, referring it to God's, not their own choice, this Scholion is a full and ſeaſonable interpretation of the γενέσθαι ἕνα, that one ſhould be made, as that is an indefinite word noting his being advanced to the Apoſtleſhip, but not ſpecifying the manner of it, whether by God or man, which therefore being an ambiguity, the note was to ſettle; that other Queſtion of Peter's abſolute or ſole power, either over the Apoſtles, or without their concurrence in this Election, being no-way pertinent or reducible to this matter.

27. That this not onely may be, but is and muſt be the meaning of the place, I propoſe this argument to confirm: Should the oppoſition be ſet betwixt Peter's doing it by his own ſole power, and doing it in conjunction with the Apoſtles, then where 'tis affirmed that he might but would not, or did not, it muſt be inferred that he did the other, i. e. that he with the Apoſtles choſe Matthias, which, ſaith S. W. is the "ordinary carriage of every prudent governour, leſt he ſhould be miſtaken "to doe it out of favour. Now it is certain this was not ſo, for neither he alone, nor he with the reſt, choſe Matthias, but it was done by lot, which devolves it not to their but God's choice. This therefore muſt be the meaning of the Father, if it be ſuppoſed to have any truth in it; Or if he ſhall imagine that it might refer to the chuſing of the two, which follows immediately, v. 23. firſt he muſt know that that is not the ἕνα γενέσθαι one being made or ordained, which is the particular to which this Scholion is affixt. 2. That that was not the choice, but onely preparative to it, and different from it, the choice being the falling of the lot on one of theſe; and that this was this Father's ſenſe of it, appears by this * farther declaration of it, ἐκ ἁπλῶς ὃ προτίθησι ἐκεῖνον— he doth not ſimply propoſe one ('tis it ſeems onely the Apoſtles propoſal, the choice being left to God) but ſhewing that he that is honoured by men, is oft poſtpoſed by God, they pray all of them, ſaying, Thou Lord, thou, not we, and ſeaſonably they call him the knower of hearts, for from this the Election was to be made, thus they ſaid confidently that by any means one muſt be made, and they ſaid not, it is neceſſary to chuſe, but do thou point out the choſen or whom thou haſt choſen, knowing that all was predetermined by God; and † again, ὅπου δ' ἑαυτὰς ἀξίους ἡγῶνται τοῦ διὰ ἑαυτῶν ἐκλέγεσθαί τινα, they did not yet count themſelves worthy that any ſhould be choſen by them (in a ſenſe parallel to what immediately attended S. W's teſtimony, πνεύματος ἅμα καὶ οὐ πάρεστι, he had not yet received the Holy Ghoſt) but deſire to know it by ſome ſign, i. e. by lot, and by this, ſaith he, filling up the number, he that was not choſen, did not grieve; and according to this, his ἤνεγκον. applies it ſelf, and inſiſts, ‖ Let us, ſaith he, imitate theſe, If thou believeſt it is God's choice, be not troubled or angry, for if thou art, 'tis againſt God, 'tis he that hath choſen.— All manifeſting the one undeniable importance of S. W's Teſtimony, that the Apoſtles might have choſen but did not, but referred the choice to God, who knew the hearts, and would not be partial; and though Peter be onely named in the place by him produced, he being the ſpeaker, and ſo ſpecified there, yet here they are put all together, not Peter alone, but Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles, and the oppoſition laid as between man and God, not as between Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles.

* P. 626. l. 9, &c.

† L. 16.

‖ L. 22.

28. And ſo much for S. W's undertaking Teſtimony, which notwithſtanding I may ſtill challenge ſome part of his belief, that I did not know and wilfully conceal St. Chryſoſtome's expreſs kindneſs to the Romaniſts intereſt, in this of the Supreme Univerſal Paſtourſhip of St. Peter. And ſo much for the twelfth Section.

SECT. XIII.

SECT. XIII.

St. Peter's Primacy in Cyprian's ſenſe. No power over the whole Church. St Cyprian's paſſage in his Book de Unitate Eccleſiæ, examined. Pamelius's and Eraſmus's Editions. Unity of the Church in Ariſtocracy. S. W's aids to help the place in Cyprian, examined. Primum elegit. Ἔφατο φησίν. The teſtimony from Anacletus's Epiſtles, the agreement of it with that of Cyprian de Unit. Parity of honour in all the Apoſtles. St. Jerom's words of Peter's Primacy.

1. HIS thirteenth Section is ſpent in a view of two teſtimonies, the one brought formerly by him out of S. Cyprian, the other by me out of the ſuppoſed Epiſtle of Anacletus taken into the Romaniſts Canon Law. The place in Cyprian, Ep. 71. lies thus, Quem quamvis primum Dominus elegerit, & ſuper eum ædificaverit Eccleſiam ſuam, tamen cum ſecum Paulus diſceptavit, non vendicavit ſibi aliquid inſolenter aut arroganter, aſſumpſit, ut diceret ſe Primatum tenere, & obtemperari à novellis & poſteris ſibi potius oportere, nec deſpexit Paulum quod Eccleſiæ prius perſecutor fuiſſet, ſed conſilium veritatis admiſit, i.e. Though our Lord choſe Peter firſt, and upon him built his Church, yet when Paul contended with him, he did not inſolently challenge any thing to himſelf, or arrogantly aſſume, ſo as to ſay he had the Primacy, and ſo ſhould rather be obeyed by new and late Apoſtles, nor did he deſpiſe Paul becauſe he had formerly beed a perſecutour of the Church, but admitted the counſel of truth. Whether this be not the literal rendring of the words, let the Reader judge.

2. Now when to this teſtimony I had formerly replied, that I never doubted of Peter's primacy in this ſenſe, as Cyprian ſpeaks of it (any more than of Chriſt's building his Church on him) yea had given him a teſtimony out of S. Ambroſe that avouched it, but onely I denyed that this primacy gave him power over St. Paul, S. W's rejoynder now is ſomewhat extraordinary, 1. That as he remembers ſuch a teſtimony out of St. Ambroſe, ſo he remembers alſo that I would not let it ſignifie St. Peter's primacy in any ſenſe over the whole Church, but over the Jews onely. 2. That he thanks me for granting here that I gave a teſtimony from St. Ambroſe which expreſſedly avowed St. Peter's primacy in any ſenſe over the Church. 3. That within eight lines I recall this again, and make the place ſignifie a limited and contradiſtinct Primacy, ſaying that by the words of St. Ambroſe St. Paul had a primacy over the Gentiles, as Peter among the Jews, and then my memory, and cauſe are both arraigned together.]

3. But there can be no need of any better memory, than God hath already given me, ſpeedily to diſinvolve this intricacy. The primacy I once gave St. Peter, I give him ſtill; but that is not a Supreme Monarchick power over the whole Church, but a Primacy of Order among the Apoſtles, and a limited Primacy of Juriſdiction and power over his Province. And then I may be allowed to ask, if not to wonder, who gave S. W. authority, from my acknowledging Peter's primacy in Cyprian's ſenſe, to require of me the acknowledgment of his Primacy over the whole Church, or the denyal of the like to St. Paul among the Gentiles? Was this St. Cyprian's ſenſe of St. Peter's primacy? I am ſure nothing like it, can be concluded from any words in the teſtimony before us, which ſay nothing of it, but that the Lord choſe him firſt, and built his Church upon him, and if that be to give him a Primacy in the Church thus founded, yet this is not a primacy over the whole Church; ſuch a primacy denotes power, and hath obedience relative to it, in the latter part of the Teſtimony (Primatum tenere & obtemperari —) and of ſuch, all that is here ſaid is, Non vendicavit aut aſſumpſit, he did not challenge or aſſume the having any ſuch over Paul, and ſo not over the whole Church. This is all that the words can avow, what violence ſoever he ſhall uſe to them to extort favourable (which if they be ſuch, will alſo prove contradictory) confeſſions.

4. Having therefore no need to make any farther returns in this matter, I ſhall gratifie S. W. with another place of this Father, which is thought by eminent Romaniſts to be moſt for his intereſt of any, in his Tract of Simplicity of Prelates againſt Novatian the Schiſmatick, to which title others add, De unitate Eccleſiæ. Here you ſhall have that Father ſpeaking of St. Peter in the higheſt of his dignity conferred on him by Chriſt, in Thou art Peter — and, I will give thee the Keys, and, Feed my ſheep, and concluding, if we may believe Pamelius's reading, that Chriſt built his Church ſuper illum unum, upon him ſingle, and delivered his Sheep to him to be fed, and conſtituted one Chair, and by his authority diſpoſed the Original of the ſame Unity beginning from one; and again, the beginning proceeds from Unity, the Primacy is given Peter that the Church of Chriſt may be ſhewn to be one, and the Chair one. All which if it were granted to be indeed that Father's words, yet ſtill how little it would tend to eſtabliſhing that holy Apoſtles Dominion (and Primacy in that ſenſe) over the whole Church, will appear by theſe expreſs paſſages intermixed with the former in the ſame Romaniſts reading, Apoſtolis omnibus poſt reſurrectionem ſuam parem poteſtatem tribuit — he gave after his Reſurrection to all the Apoſtles equal power, ſaying, As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, receive the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſins ye remit they ſhall be remitted. And hoc erant utique & cæteri Apoſtoli quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio præditi, & honoris & poteſtatis, the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, indued with equal conſortſhip or copartnerſhip of honour and power; and Paſtores ſunt omnes, ſed Grex unus oſtenditur, qui ab Apoſtolis omnibus unanimi conſenſione paſcatur, they are all Paſtours, but the Flock is ſhew'd to be one, which is fed by all the Apoſtles with Unanimous conſent. In which whole place as the unity of the Church againſt Novatian and all Schiſmaticks, is moſt vigorouſly aſſerted from the founding of the Church on Peter; as an Emblem, or Symbolical Declaration of Chriſt's command of peace and unity among all Chriſtians, ſo is this abundantly guarded (unleſs we will make the Holy Father contradict himſelf in the ſame period) from bringing in a Monarchick power into the Church, expreſly defined to be by many equals, and ſo Ariſtocratical.

5. But then if we ſhall take confidence to queſtion Pamelius's reading (for which his authorities are but weak, Aldus's Copy being the chief of his ſtrength, and no way fit to be preferr'd before the Frobenian Edition firſt prepared by Eraſmus * out of the moſt ancient Manuſcripts, and again more correctly publiſhed, and preſented to Cardinal Puccius) we ſhall then find a great part of this teſtimony vaniſhed, even all that belongs to the Primacy of Peter, the one Chair, the building the Church on ſingle Peter, and no more left, but what belongs to theſe two heads, the Unity of the Church (againſt Novatian pertinently), and the equality of the Apoſtles power and dignity, i. e. the Ariſtocratical, not Monarchick Government of the Church; for thus in the Froben Edition we reade, after the words of Scripture which Christ ſpake to Peter at ſeveral times, Quamvis Apoſtolis omnibus poſt reſurrectionem ſuam parem poteſtatem tribuat, & dicat, ſicut miſit me Pater—tamen ut unitatem manifeſtaret, unitatis ejuſdem originem ab uno incipientem ſua authoritate diſpoſuit. Hoc erant utique & cæteri Apoſtoli quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio præditi & honoris & poteſtatis, ſed exordium ab unitate proficiſcitur, ut Eccleſia una monſtretur, Quam unam Eccleſiam in Cantico—Though after his Reſurrection he gave to all the Apoſtles, equal power, and ſays, As my Father ſent me—yet that he might manifeſt the unity, by his authority, he diſpoſeth the Original of that Unity beginning from one, The reſt of the Apoſtles were the very ſame that Peter was, indued with equal copartnerſhip of honour and power, but the beginning proceeds from unity, that the Church may be ſhewed to be one, which Church the ſpirit in Chriſt's perſon deſcribes in the Canticles, My Dove is one, &c. This Unity of the Church he that holds not, doth he believe he holds the Faith? He that refuſes and reſiſts the Church, doth he believe that he is in the Church?

* Ex vetuſtiſſimis exemplaribus. Eraſm. Præf.

6. In this Period Pamelius inſerts theſe words, Qui Cathedram Petri ſuper quam Eccleſia fundata eſt, deſerit, that Chriſt founded the Church on St. Peter's chair, and making it all one to deſert St. Peter's chair, and the Church it ſelf; For which reading he pretends but one Manuſcript, and the reading of Gratian Diſt. 43. cap. Qui Cathedram. What authority that one Manuſcript may have, againſt the conſent of ſo many as have not theſe words, the impartial Reader, ſuch as Eraſmus was, will ſoon gueſs. As for the place in Gratian, though it be not Diſt. 43. the Reader will find it Diſt. 93. But with this Note in the Corpus Juris, ſet out by the command of Gregory the thirteenth, that ſo it is read in the Roman impreſſion of Cyprian, and that in the Vatican there being eight entire Copies of Cyprian, there is alſo one more, which hath onely ſome Opuſcula, and among them this Tract, and in that Copy and in another in the Monaſtery at Bononia theſe words are to be found, but it ſeems not in any of the eight intire books, and that is a competent prejudice againſt this inſertion; and yet ſuch is Pamelius's courage in the Pope's cauſe, non ſumus veriti, ſaith he, We feared not to inſert it into the Text.

7. In the ſame place it follows upon the Theme of Unity, that of all Men, the Biſhops that preſide in the Church eſpecially ought firmly to hold and defend the unity of the Church, that they may prove that Epiſcopacy it ſelf is one and undivided, preſently affirming Epiſcopatus unus eſt, cujus à ſingulis in ſolidum pars tenetur, that there is one Epiſcopacy, part of which is held by every Biſhop intirely, which ſtill infers the Ariſtocratick Government of the Church, wherein its unity conſiſts, not that it is ruled by one Biſhop, but by one Epiſcopacy, by one order of copartners, Apoſtles and Biſhops their Succeſſours, and not by one perſon, St. Peter, or his Succeſſour at Rome over the Succeſſours of all other the Apoſtles. This may ſerve for a δεῖξις, what is to be thought of this Father's ſenſe of St. Peter's primacy. And how poſſible it is, that other Fathers ſhould mean the ſame, who aſſert the ἰσοτιμία and ὁμοτιμία, equality and identity of honour betwixt the Apoſtles, I have lately ſhewed.

8. But the teſtimony of Cyprian having been once produced by S. W. it is not to be expected he ſhould ſo eaſily part with it, and therefore though it expreſly affirm of Peter, that he did not claim the Primacy, yet he will infer from the circumſtances, that it truely belonged to him; The circumſtances are in thoſe words, Non vindicavit ſibi aliquid inſolenter—He did not challenge any thing arrogantly, or aſſumed inſolently. Hence I thought it rather followed, that it had been inſolence and arrogance in him thus to have aſſumed or claimed the Primacy, and obedience from Paul; but he contends, that the words ſignifie onely in an inſolent and proud manner, expreſs'd by our Engliſh phraſe ſtanding on his point, which, ſaith he, well conſiſts with the truth of what he callenges, and right of what he aſſumes.] But to this I anſwer, that if it onely conſiſts with it, then it no way appears to infer it, and then S. W. that *. profeſſes to have brought this teſtimony to prove that Peter being higher in dignity, expreſs'd his greater humility in ſuffering ſo mildly the reprehenſions of an inferiour, was certainly ſtrangely miſtaken in producing it, for ſure it muſt doe much more than conſiſt with his Primacy, if it can prove his concluſion, which is founded in ſuppoſition of the Primacy, which will not be granted to that teſtimony, that doth not prove it.

* P. 292.

9. Many obſervations he is diligent to accumulate, no fewer than ſeven, and all ſcanty enough to help his underſtanding of the place to ſome leaſt probability; as 1. That it had been no ſuch great commendation of humility to ſay that St. Peter did not uſurpingly challenge what was not his right, &c.] But I anſwer, that the point which St. Cyprian had in hand to inforce by this teſtimony, was not the great humility of St. Peter, but the concord and patience of admonitions, which by ſtrict precept was exacted, and commanded to be among all Chriſtians, as appears by the words immediately following, documentum ſcil. nobis—giving us a document of concord and patience, that we ſhould not pertinaciouſly love our own (opinions or practices) but prefer thoſe things that are ſometimes profitably and ſalubriouſly ſuggeſted to us by our Brethren and Colleagues, if they be true, and according to Law; And again bringing St. Paul's example in another place, taking care for concord and peace; which leaves no place for S. W's deſcant, either of the humility, or the great commendation for it.

10. His ſecond obſervation is, that unleſs his ſenſe be accepted, we have quite loſt the adverſative ſenſe, for what ſpecial commendation would it be to ſay King James was King of England, yet he did not challenge to be Emperour of Germany?] I anſwer, the adverſative ſenſe evidently conſiſts in comparing him whom Chriſt had choſen firſt and built his Church on, with Paul that came after him, and newly into the Church, having formerly been a perſecutour of it; and this ſenſe is exactly maintained by my interpretation, and fully ſupports the Father's concluſion on it, for patience and concord among Chriſtians, for had St. Peter been, like other men, impatient and contentious, this had been ſufficient to have exaſperated the humour in him, that there were theſe grounds of inequality between him, and the other that took upon him to reprehend him.

11. His third is, that the words are, he challenged not any thing inſolently to himſelf, It had been, ſaith he, an hard caſe, if he could have challenged nothing at all to himſelf with truth, when the line before 'twas granted that our Lord choſe him to be firſt, and built his Church on him, with truth therefore he might have challenged that which out of modeſty he ſtood not inſolently upon] I anſwer, 1. That 'tis not his modeſty is commended (unleſs to doe nothing arrogantly be that vertue, as indeed in ſome ſenſe the Poet ſaith true, virtus eſt vitium fugere) but his patience of reprehenſions, and peaceableneſs, (as before I ſhewed) 2. that what is mentioned in the line before, his being choſen firſt by Chriſt, &c. he might with truth have challenged to himſelf, and therefore the [nonſibi aliquid inſolenter] muſt be underſtood not of his challenging ſo much, but no more than that, which is clearly expreſs'd by his not challenging an obedience from Paul as to his Primate, which not belonging to him duely, upon that account of his being choſen firſt, or of any privilege, that peculiarly belonged to him (St. Paul truely ſaying, 2. Cor. 11. 5. μηδὲν ὑστερηκέναι τῶν ὑπερλίαν Ἀποστόλων, that he was not a whit behind the very cheifeſt Apoſtles) this he did not (becauſe with juſtice he could not) aſſume to himſelf, though it was moſt true, that he was choſen firſt, and St. Paul long after him, this περιοχὴ or earlyer call being no competent medium to infer a Dominion over all others, that (though not by his miniſtery) came later into the Church.

but

12. His 4th obſervation being in part founded in my granting him a primacy in ſome ſenſe from this place, is eeked out by his rendring primum Dominus elegerit, by, our Lord choſe him to be firſt] But I anſwer, primum eligere, is to chuſe firſt, and ſo it muſt be here rendred, being oppoſed novellis & poſteris, to thoſe that were newly or after choſen, and called. In proportion to which, St. Peter's primacy is onely a primacy of order, but not the Primatus which is after ſpoken of, which had obedience belonging to it, for certainly, as was ſaid, the firſt choſen are not Rulers, on that one account, over all that come after them into the Church.

13. His fifth is, that the following words in the redditive part [and ought rather to be obeyed by later Apoſtles] muſt neceſſarily be true too] I anſwer that the whole ſeeming force of this obſervation depends on the ſuppoſed ſolidity and efficacy of the former, which being already ſuperſeded, this falls immediately under the ſame fate, and comes to nothing; and now, all that can follow from thoſe words muſt be judged of, and receive its neceſſary allay from the non arroganter aſſumpſit] foregoing immediately, and is evidently but this, either that he did not challenge any ſuch obedience, or that to have challenged it, had been arrogance in him, and I hope neither of theſe will infer it neceſſary that the obedience truely belonged to him; If it will, I know nothing that may not hope to infer any thing.

14. His ſixth increaſe of evidence comes in from the ſubſequent words, of his not objecting to St. Paul that he had been a perſecutour, ſince, ſaith S. W. he might with truth have ſaid ſo, but of his goodneſs would not] I anſwer, that though with truth Peter might have ſaid this, i. e. have barely affirmed that Paul had been a perſecutour, yet to have deſpiſed him, or reſiſted his reprehenſion on this account (which alone is the thing to which the Teſtimony refers) would have had as little ground of truth or juſtice, as of ſobriety, or Chriſtian temper in it. For what though he had once been a perſecutour, it is ſure he was now ſo far from ſuch, that he was a Prime Apoſtle, no way inferiour (if he may be believed) to the cheif of thoſe that had never been perſecutours, but Apoſtles from the beginning; to which purpoſe the Fathers ſolidly interpret Chriſt's words of ἔσχατοι πρῶτοι, the laſt ſhall be firſt] of this laſt in order of time, but in many other reſpects firſt Apoſtle. And then granting the paſt truth, yet with what fitneſs can he imagine St. Peter (or how without inſolence or arrogance?) to have made this return to his admonition? I doubt not but he might as juſtly have exacted an obedience, which was no-way due to him, as have objected a crime that was ſo long agoe waſh'd off, and repaired by abundant labouring in the Goſpel; But to have made ſo impertinent a return to a moſt ſeaſonable and charitable reprehenſion, there could be no leaſt Chriſtian juſtice or wiſdome, by which no doubt St. Peter's actions were to be guided, and then it boots not to conſider what truth there was in it.

15. His laſt (and ſtill neceſſary) reſerve is from the laſt words, his admitting the Counſel of Truth, an Encomium of St. Peter's candour, that when the thing objected was true, he maintained not his ſaying by authority, but made his height of dignity, there expreſs'd to be moſt eminent, ſtoop to the Sincere acceptation of Truth] But firſt there cannot be a groſſer begging the thing in debate, than the affirming St. Peter's height of dignity here expreſs'd, to be moſt eminent, when all that is ſaid towards this, is that Chriſt choſe him firſt and Paul after. For abſtracting from that priority of Time, what ſyllable is here of any dignity, much leſs of height of dignity, much leſs of eminent, which yet is much lower than moſt eminent height of that ſuppoſed dignity? And what may not he aſſume by degrees, that at one hauſt ſwallows down all this, without the leaſt liberty given him by that Father? Secondly, if even all this had been ſaid (as there is not a ſyllable whiſper'd) of St. Peter here, yet I diſcern not what ſpecial candour it had been in him to yield to Truth, or not to maintain his own ſaying (ſuppoſing it, as S. W. muſt, untrue) by Authority? Had it been a moſt laudable carriage in a Saint, and a Prime Apoſtle, not to inſiſt on an untruth and bear it out by his Authority? Is it an eminent vertue not to be eminently and irrationally vitious, not to perſiſt in ill, when charitatively reprehended for it? What meaſures of candour and moſt laudable hath he met with, what new refined or rather polluted Morals, fit onely to complete his other Novelties, his new way of managing Controverſies, his new method of rigorous demonſtration (the new Logick, that muſt ſuitably aſſiſt his as new Divinity) Thus much for that Teſtimony of St. Cyprian, which being, as was noted, S. W's firſt-born, and chief of his ſtrength, was to have his double portion of care and providence to maintain it, but being deſtitute of Natural Forces, hath untimely miſcarried for all that.

16. His next induſtry is laid out on a more hopeleſs, unimproveable piece, out of the ſuppoſititious Anacletus's Epiſtle, which being entr'd into their Canon-Law, I had reaſon to think ought to be of force againſt them, but if it ſhould be thought to contain any thing to our diſadvantage, can be of no efficacy to thoſe that look on it (he knows) as ſpurious and ſuppoſititious, having no character of antiquity to which it pretends. ſo that it is moſt viſible before we ſet out, that if this Bee bring any hony with it, we may ſafely claim the benefit of it, the ſting being diſabled to make any impreſſion upon us.

17. This being premiſed, I ſhall now ſet down the whole paſſage from the * Decrees. In novo Teſtamento poſt Chriſtum Dominum a Petro Sacerdotalis cœpit ordo, quia ipſi primo Pontificatus in Eccleſia Chriſti datus eſt, Domino dicente ad eum, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc ——— & tibi dabo claves, Hic ergo ligandi & ſolvendi poteſtatem primus accepit à Domino, primuſque ad fidem Populum virtute ſuæ prædicationis adduxit. Ceteri verò Apoſtoli cum eodem pari conſortio honorem & poteſtatem acceperunt, ipſumque Principem eorum eſſe voluerunt, qui etiam jubente Domino in toto Orbe diſperſi, Evangelium prædicarunt. In the New Teſtament, after our Lord Chriſt, the Sacerdotal Order began from Peter, becauſe the Pontificate in the Church of Chriſt was firſt given to him, the Lord ſaying to him, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, and the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it, and I will give thee the Keys of Heaven. He therefore firſt received from the * Diſt. 21. c. 2.

Lord the power of binding and loosing, and first brought the people to the Faith by the virtue of his Preaching. But the rest of the Apostles received honour and power with him in equal copartnership, and would have him their Prince, who also at Christ's command being dispersed over the whole world preached the Gospel.

18. Here one passage I acknowledge (as before I intimated) to be of an importance (at least if we believe the first appearance of it) contrary to our pretensions, when of the Apostles 'tis said they would have Peter to be their Prince] and of this I formerly said [where he read this I know not.] And this S. W. styles talking ridiculously, because Anacletus being ordained by S. Peter is not imaginable to have read but heard it, and that could be from none but Christ and his Apostles. But I must beseech him to believe, that as I cited not the Testimony from Anacletus, but from the Canon-law, as from Anacletus, i.e. from the Epistle then bearing his name, so by [he read this] I meant not Anacletus reading it (his Authority, if the writing were genuine, should have force with we, without a Voucher) but his reading it, whosoever he was that compiled that Epistle under Anacletus's name; The rest I thought I could give a probable account
* De unit. Eccl. of, whence it was derived, borrowed and lightly changed from the passage of * St. Cyprian, which I even now so largely produced and established from the Froben Edition, the rather because of the affinity it bears with this, which now we are come to, especially the parem potestatem, par Consortium honoris & potestatis there, compared with the cum eo pari consortio honorem & potestatem] here.

19. For as in this there was a perfect Conspiration, and the conclusion from thence indubitable, that the rest of the Apostles were by Christ endued with a copartnership of power, as well as honour with Peter, and a plain parity and equality in both; so this was no way reconcileable with the principality and dominion of Peter over all those who were thus equalled with him, unless this principality were supposed to be afterwards introduced, by some other means than by that of Christ's Institution. Accordingly this is the distinct importance of those words, ipsumque Principem eorum esse voluerunt, noting that they that were by Christ, in the words immediately precedent, constituted in equality of power and honour with him, were after by their own free act pleased to chuse him to be their Prince. The truth and authority of which narration I had reason to question, upon those interests, that lie common to S. W. and me, it being as contrary to his, as to my pretensions, that this Principality should proceed from the Apostles own act, and neither Scripture nor other ancient Record yielding the least favour or probability to it. For if he were after elected by the Apostles to be their Prince, then it must needs be granted, that he holds not that dignity by Christ's donation in Thou art Peter, or, I will give thee the Keys, or, Feed my Sheep, which, he knows, are the onely tenure by which he pretends the derivation of the Universal Pastourship, from Christ, and from no other Original, to St. Peter.

20. These words therefore being set aside, and by consent of parties removed out of the Testimony, or else so softned by some commodious interpretation of the word Principem (as that at the meetings and common transactions of the Apostles, Act. 1. and the like, Peter was allowed the first place, and the office of Speaker among them) that they may have some appearance or probability of Historical truth in them, all the rest of the words are perfectly home to our pretensions, and so ad homines to the Romanists that allow them so Primitive an Authority, as that of Anacletus, must needs be constringent and convincing, that though the Pontificate in the Christian Church was first given to St. Peter in the power of the Keys, and so the Sacerdotal or Episcopal Order began from him (Pontificate and Sacerdotal Order signifying the same thing, not as S. W. dreams, the same in order to the Christian Hierarchy, that Aaron was to the Levitical, for though Pontifex Maximus do, yet Pontificate, without that addition, simply taken, doth not signify that supreme dignity) and accordingly he was the first that preached and converted to the Faith after Christ's departure; yet the rest of the Apostles received from Christ the same honour and power that he did, and that cum eo pari consortio, in an equal Copartnership with him, which as it was all I endeavoured, so I cannot fail successfully to deduce hence, if plain words be but permitted to be intelligible by us.

21. For as for S. W's exceptions, 1. to me, that I never explicate nor apply the words. 2. to the words themselves, that they infer not their receiving parem honorem, equal honour and power; they are soon assoiled; the first by assuring him, that to me the matter appeared so manifest, that it could neither want nor receive benefit by any assistence of mine to explicate farther or apply it: the second, that their receiving honour and power pari consortio in equal (so sure par signifies, as our peer or Compeer, equality not likeness onely, and so I suppose he yields, when he renders parem honorem, equal honour, though he allow not this Testimony to infer it) I say their receiving power in equal copartnership with him, can signify no less than their receiving equal honour and power with him: for 1. how can the power be received in equal copartnership with him, if they were unequally, one in an higher, the rest in an inferiour subordinate degree, copartners in it? 2. By what rules of construction can pari consortio be fully rendred by likewise, or in like manner being his fellows, when consortium here used, unavoidably signifies the community of the sors or κλῆρος, whatsoever that is, and the parity of that, is the equality therein; and that being by the context limited to power and honour, must be an equality of power and honour.

22. If it were possible there should be any difficulty herein, the parallel phrases of St. Cyprian, used in the self-same matter, would establish the rendring beyond controll, who assures us, that our Saviour gave them (in the very words, which he averts) parem potestatem, which he (by rendring so, whilst here he rejects it) allows to signify equal power, and again, that the rest of the Apostles were endowed by him pari consortio honoris & potestatis, with an equal copartnership of honour and power, which is not capable of his evasion.

23. After this, being, I hope, conscious of the vanity of this Artifice, he relents, and is willing to goe a little farther, and grants that under the notion of Apostle each had a like consortship of honour and power, each being dignified with an unlimited Apostleship and Jurisdiction or power to preach; but then, speaking of the Apostolical College as a Community, and so requiring order of Government, we affirm, saith he, with St. Jerom, that Peter was supreme in that respect] But 1. why may not pari consortio, be yet rendred an equal as well as a like Consortship, unless by like he mean a like degree of it, and that is an equality, and all that I demand? 2. How doth it follow, that if we speak of Apostles, as of a College and Community, that Community requires Order of Government, meaning by that (as he must, if he mean any thing to his purpose) not onely a priority of place or order, which we allow St. Peter, but such a Supremacy, as includes the subjection of all the rest to some one of themselves? Must there needs be a Monarch over and above a President in every College or Community? and is there no such thing imaginable, or ever heard of, as an Aristocratick Government, wherein as one presides, so the Gubernative power is in all equally? These are rare pillars of support to an Utopian, 'tis pity they should so well fit the Papal Greatness. 3. Where doth St. Jerom say that St. Peter was supreme in that respect, i. e. Supreme Ruler of the College of the Apostles, (for if he say not that, his saying is of no weight) or with what confidence can he impose it on the Reader, without farther proof, than that S. W. saith that St. Jerom saith it? Is it a principle or common notion clear by its own light, that every thing is true, that S. W. affirms? or is it justly presumable, that the Reader knows that St. Jerom asserts Supremacy over the Apostles, when S. W. knows not, I must suppose, for else, being of such importance to him, he would vouchsafe to let us know, where he hath said it, or something else, from which he means to infer that conclusion.

over

24. To conclude this, I shall desire him to seek out the words, wherein St. Jerom avouches St. Peter's supremacy of power over the rest of that College, and if they be those, of * inter duodecim unus eligitur, ut capite constituto Schismatis tollatur occasio, To assign them such an understanding as may not contradict, or make nonsense of the words immediately precedent, and subsequent, and then to give the Reader account what advantages he hath gain'd by them. The words foregoing are there, At dicis super Petrum fundatur Ecclesia, licèt id ipsum in alio loco super omnes Apostolos fiat, & claves regni cœlorum accipiant, & ex æquo super eos Ecclesiæ fortitudo solidetur. Here we see, as the Church was in one Text founded on Peter, so it was in another upon all the Apostles, all receiving the Keys, and the strength of the Church established or solidated ex æquo equally upon them. And in the words a little after, the comparison being made, betwixt Peter and John, though in respect of Peter's Age he be said to be preferred before the rest, which was not fit for John who was so young, yet he resolves that John being an Apostle and Evangelist and Prophet, Petrus Apostolus tantum, Peter was onely an Apostle; Which how could he say with truth, and thereby cast the advantage on John's side, if there had been so great an addition of weight to be cast into St. Peter's balance, as was that of his supreme Jurisdiction over John and the whole College of the Apostles? If by both these circumstances of that Context, St. Peter's primacy be interpreted, the indifferent Reader will soon discern, though S. W. shall not, what little support St. Jerom hath afforded to his pretensions.

* Adverſ. Jovinian. l. 1. c. 14.

25. One fetch more he hath, that in this passage the words [cum eodem] appear by their placing to be better joined with acceperunt than with pari, and then the whole meaning shall be, acceperunt cum eodem, the rest of the Apostles received with him, i. e. at the same time he received it, in like consortship, i. e. of Apostleship, honour and power, which, saith he, was verified when he gave them their last mission, Going into all the world, preach the Gospel to every Creature] 'Tis a little strange to see what necessity, and a good Invention combined, are able to produce; but more so, that any man should hope to satisfie others with such thin colours, and conceits as these, taken merely from the placing of two such words in the period, which may vary their places oft, and yet signify the same thing.

26. I know the words, [cum eodem] may be joined either with the immediate Antecedent [cæteri Apostoli cum eodem] the rest of the Apostles with Peter, or with the immediate consequents [cum eodem pari consortio] in an equal consortship with him, and either of these are equally, if not more, probable, than what S. W. hath pitch'd on. But I shall not contend on such deep points as these, let but [pari consortio] signify equal consortship, and I demand no more; for then, they that receive at the same time with him honour and power in equal consortship, will not easily be imagined so unequal, as are that one Monarch, and all his Subjects.

27. I shall onely add, that whereas, to put off his Invention the better, he interprets their receiving power] of the Apostolical mission, Go preach the Gospel to every creature, 'tis evident by the Context, that the Authour there speaks of two things severally, the donation of the power of the Keys, and the preaching the Gospel, and in reference to St. Peter, the former he calls ligandi & solvendi potestatem, the power of binding and loosing; the latter he thus expresseth, Primus ad fidem populum virtute prædicationis suæ adduxit, he first brought the people to the Faith by virtue of his Preaching: and then again in reference to the rest of the Apostles, he severally mentions each, 1. their receiving honour and power, 2. their being dispersed and preaching the Gospel over all the world, which renders it unquestionable, that the honour and power, which they received in equal Consortship, was the power of binding and loosing, first given to Peter, and so not, as he would persuade, the mission to preach, given at once to all, Matth. 28. Whereas the power of the Keys was first promised to Peter, and after conferr'd on all in common, Matth. 18. which utterly ruins this artifice of his.

28. As for the other passages of that Epistle, which S. W. is pleased to tender, as evidences to shew him, as he saith, a plain Papist, he cannot imagine them of any force against me, who utterly reject the Epistles under Anacletus's name, as spurious, and supposititious, and onely urge so much against the Romanists, as they have admitted into the body of their Canon-law; citing it from thence, not from the Epistles, and so am not concern'd in what follows in the Epistles, not in the Decrees. And so still my solidness and sincerity, which he is here pleased to arraign, are neither of them prejudiced by my carriage in this matter.

29. I might here proceed, and add more by examining his notion of No-sense Dictionary Interpretations (by which he is willing to defame the literal rendring of plain Latine by as plain English) &c. but Declamations are not Argument, and so this shall suffice for his 13*th* Section.

Sect. XIV.

S. W's. frailneſs of memory. His accuſing falſely, and himſelf confeſſing the contrary to his ſuggeſtion. His evaſions examined. Expreſſneſs of Teſtimonies. Of Peter and Paul preaching promiſcuouſly at Antioch. All that I ſay, teſtified by Baronius.

1. HIS fourteenth Section ſets out with a defence of his ill memory, and an accuſation of mine, and withall of my anger, and paſſion in telling him of it. But the Reader ſhall judge who is the guilty perſon. In his Schiſ. Diſ. p. 62. he began with a piece of wit, I had ſaid, thus we know it was at Antioch (St. Paul formed a Church and left a Biſhop of Gentile, St. Peter of Jewiſh Chriſtians) and accordingly that Church in Ignatius is ſaid to be founded by both of them, &c. And he replies, His firſt teſtimony is his own knowledge, thus we know — but puts down no teſtimony at all to confirm the weaker one of his own We know] And having ſaid this, and ſo formerly concluded that ninth Section, he begins the tenth with theſe words, The next Teſtimony begins thus, Accordingly (i. e. to the Doctours own We know) in Ignatius, &c.] This I then took to be a manifeſt refuting of himſelf, and ſo in my anſwer took notice of it, as of a predominant fault in this Authour, that he bluſht not to deny what was ſo viſible to his own eyes, himſelf ſetting down two teſtimonies of that, of which he had ſo lately denied any. In doing ſo, I ſaid his memory was frail, But that was not the fault of which I accuſed him, but that which in my opinion was much greater (and his moſt frequent, railing, the blind to keep this from being deſcryed) and indeed what greater injuſtice can a Writer be guilty of, than to ſay that confidently of his Adverſary, which is ſo far removed from all appearance of truth, that himſelf affirms the contrary within few lines? And can there be a more undeniable inſtance of this, than that which is now before us; the ſame S. W. ſaying, My firſt Teſtimony is my own knowledge] which beſide that he knows 'tis no Teſtimony, by calling it my firſt, he intimates there is ſome ſecond following, and yet adding in the very next words, that I put down no Teſtimony at all to confirm my own, We know] and yet after this, himſelf confeſſing, that I add other Teſtimonies in this very matter, his words being expreſly theſe, The next Teſtimony begins thus — The matter lying thus between us, let the Reader now bring in the verdict, 1. Whether it was his ill memory that I accuſed as his predominant fault, or ſomewhat elſe, which requires a good, and is worſe than an ill memory; 2. whether he were not guilty of that, whereof I thus accuſed him; 3. whether it were contrary to Chriſtian meekneſs, or patience, or a ſymptome of any paſſion, to ſay he was guilty of that, which was ſo viſible.

2. Now to this, what reply doth he now make? Why he ſets down the words that paſs'd between us, and in paſſing, 1. he notes that I uſed the phraſe We know in the plural [We] as, ſaith he, became my authority; 2. he asks, What railing words I found which ſhould make me complain ſo hainouſly, 3. that if I mean ſuch things as I produced for teſtimonies, he ſet down indeed in the next Section not onely two but ten of them, but if I mean ſuch things as he expreſs'd himſelf to deny there, i. e. ſuch as did confirm my own We know, he ſtill avows that there is not one word among all the following teſtimonies, 4. that I muſt not tell him what I fanſie to be deduced thence, but what the Teſtimonies themſelves expreſs, the deductions being mine, the words onely the Teſtimonies; and then he returns to a challenge formerly made, and ſo traverſes the Stage, and goes out moſt pompouſly. But to theſe I anſwer in few words; to the firſt, that the word [We] is a note of plurality, as well as of authority, and ſignified there, that more than I knew that which I mention'd, even all that knew any thing of the ſtory of thoſe times in that place, Antioch, as hath formerly, and ſhall by and by more fully appear by his own Baronius. To the ſecond, that his railing was not the fault, which at that time I accuſed in him; He had been competently guilty of that in other places. At this time it was another fault of which I complained; but that there was any hainouſneſs in my complaining, I diſcern not, but ſuppoſe it was rather in the crime complained of. To the third, that it is undoubted that I who produced the Teſtimonies, and he which called them by that name [* His firſt Teſtimony, and, † The next Teſtimony] did both agree to mean ſuch as I produc'd for Teſtimonies; which whether they were produced or no, was the onely queſtion, not betwixt him and me ſo much, as betwixt him and himſelf, firſt denying I brought any, and then reciting and refuting my Teſtimonies, and now farther yielding that I brought not onely two but ten of them. As for the validity of them to confirm what they were brought to confirm, that was to be tried by his Anſwers, and my Replies, and then referred to the Reader's umpirage between us, and could not be thus early denied by S. W. before he had at all reflected on them, without the groſſeſt begging the queſtion, i. e. the greateſt fault that a Controvertiſt could be guilty of. So dexterous is S. W. in curing his own infirmities. To the fourth, that what a Teſtimony yields by firm unqueſtionable deduction, is truly and ſolidly proved by that Teſtimony, as well as what the words expreſs; and though the deductions be mine, yet if the things deduced be naturally derived from the Teſtimony, it is as certain that they were firſt in the Teſtimony, as that nothing can be truly brought from Rome, which was not there, or that nothing gives but what it firſt hath.

* Schiſ. Diſ. p. 62.
† P. 63.

3. I know the rules that the * Authour of the Dialogues is pleaſed to impoſe, 1. that the Catholicks diſpute not with Proteſtants from Scripture unleſs they promiſe to prove their poſition evidently and manifeſtly, 2. that they never undertake to convince their Adverſary out of Scripture, but content themſelves that the words inſiſted on may well bear that ſenſe which is in favour of them] and I acknowledge what he there adds, to have great truth in it [that this is more eaſie to perform] and in juſt proportion to theſe rules, I ſee he here exacts, that the Teſtimonies not onely infer, but expreſs my concluſion, i. e. aſſert it in the very terms, leaving no place for deductions, becauſe they are mine, not the Teſtimonies; But I then obſerved the onely reaſon of the Dialogiſts ſo great partiality, to be a preſumption, that the Catholick had Oral Tradition on his ſide, from whence he thought it unreaſonable to recede upon any though never ſo expreſs words of Scripture, becauſe they, ſaith he, have an aſſured ground of their faith, beſide the Bible, and which relies not on it] to which S. W. adds, that thoſe were the words but of dead men, and by being ſo, liable to be variouſly interpreted by wit. And though this be ſomewhat ſevere to the poor Proteſtant, and robs him either of the benefit of the Scripture, or of his own reaſon, and Logick in drawing any inferences from

* Ruſhw. Dial. 2. p. 128.
P. 129.

from it, yet I ſhould have hoped it could not thus much farther be extended, even to things ſo far removed from their Catholick Mother's Lectures to their Children, their Oral Tradition, as is the queſtion now before us, whether St. Paul at Antioch applied himſelf to the Gentiles, and formed them into a Church, and St. Peter in like manner to the Jews; for certainly no manner of Tradition being pretenſible to affirm contrary to me in this matter, deductions from ancient Teſtimonies (ſuperadded to the expreſs words of Scripture, both that Paul was Apoſtle of the Uncircumciſion and Peter of the Circumciſion, and that they both met at Antioch) may deſerve to be heard, though the expreſs words of the Teſtimonies be no more than theſe, that the Church at Antioch was founded by thoſe two Apoſtles; For how could they be founded by two diſtant Architects, as are the Apoſtle of the Jews, and the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, but by the Apoſtle of the Jews founding the Church of the Jews, and the Apoſtle of the Gentiles the Church of the Gentiles in that City?

4. In this caſe it is not enough to ſay, that the Teſtimonies do not expreſs this, for if from them alone, or from them compared with others, it may be regularly deduced, or if whatſoever evaſion S. W. can invent, ſhall be found abſolutely groundleſs, and improbable, and not onely ſo, but ſuperſeded alſo by other Teſtimonies, I then refer it to any Reader to judge, whether this be not a ſolid way of confirming my own, We know, by Teſtimonies, which is the utmoſt that S. W. denies me to have done, or could have confidence to exact from me.

5. After this preluſory προαιμιαλα, he proceeds to review his former Anſwer to the Teſtimonies, viz. that they proved no more but the founding the Church of Antioch by Peter and Paul, which, ſaith he, might be done by their promiſcuous endeavours, without diſtinction.] To which I having replied two things, 1. that if that were true, it prejudged Peter's ſingular juriſdiction, and joined Paul ſocially with him; 2. that another Teſtimony behind, removed this May-be, ſhewing the diſtinction of the Jewiſh and Gentile cœtus at Antioch; firſt he will quarrel my uſing the phraſe ſingular Juriſdiction, and then 2. changing this into higher authority, he is diſpleaſed, that I ſay it prejudices that ſtill, and that without any offer of reaſon, onely in ſcoff adds, that ſtill either part of the contradiction equally fits my concluding faculty; 3. from the example of Paul and Titus, he infers that the preaching promiſcuouſly to the Antiochians, doth not infer the no higher authority of Peter than Paul, and 4. that if by being joined ſocially, I mean that Paul was equal in authority, then the promiſcuous preaching cannot conclude it; But to theſe I anſwer, To the firſt, that ſingular Juriſdiction evidently ſignifies Monarchical, in oppoſition to Ariſtocratical Government, and ſo fully expreſſes S. W's pretenſion againſt ours. To the ſecond, that if his anſwer be ſuch as coheres not with other parts of his hypotheſis, in maintaining of which he was equally concerned, I might juſtly take notice of it, and think it a competent exception againſt his Anſwer; and that it was not, his ſcoff, and outcry [dull Ariſtotle, &c.] are no degree of proof. To his third, that it muſt be remembred, I ſpake of two Apoſtles, one of the Jewiſh, the other of the Gentile Chriſtians, and thoſe two ſent each immediately by Chriſt, and then ſuppoſing that they preached promiſcuouſly, how could I fail in concluding regularly, that they joined ſocially, and if ſo, then one acted not (and then was not) in ſubordination to the other, and then what elſe his higher authority is ſet to ſignify, I need not conſider. As for this inſtance of Paul and Titus, that cannot be pertinent, the one being viſibly impowered and commiſſionated by the other, and 2. not preaching promiſcuouſly neither, that I find, but one ſucceeding to the Province, when the other left it. To the fourth, that that is the ſame with the third, and requires no diſtinct anſwer, they that are συνωωξειδ joint or fellow-labourers in a work or office, 'tis viſible that one doth not rule, or lead the other.

6. Next he proceeds to my Teſtimony, which I ſaid would remove the Might-be, and ſhew that their preaching at Antioch was not promiſcuous; My Teſtimony was from Act. XV. 23. where by the inſcription of the Reſcript of the Council, the diſtinction of the Gentile and Jewiſh cœtus at Antioch was diſcernible, and that being ſo, I thought no man could doubt, but the Apoſtle of the Gentiles ſhould preſide in one, and the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion in the other, and that I hope is contrary to the promiſcuous preaching to them, which ſuppoſes them preached to, and ruled together by both as the ſame cœtus. Againſt this he hath nothing to object, but wonders what unſeen wires there are, that connect theſe together, the Reſcript was directed to the Gentiles not the Jews, Ergo, St. Peter and St. Paul did not preach promiſcuouſly. He now ſees the wires, and if it had been for his turn, he hath ſagacity enough to have deſcried them before, without extraordinary Revelations.

7. One ſeeming objection he offers againſt this, that the Reſcript was ſent to them in the name of Saint Peter as well as St. Paul, and therefore if it intimate either, it is their promiſcuous Juriſdiction over the Gentiles] To this I anſwer, that as my argument was taken onely from conſideration of them to whom the decree was ſent, and pretended to prove from thence the diſtinction of the cœtus, ſo the conſideration of the perſons from whom it came, though it pretend not to prove, yet it no way prejudiceth my concluſion, whether to the diſtinction of the cœtus, or the no promiſcuous preaching of thoſe Apoſtles, which I infer from thence. For though ſeveral Apoſtles preſide ſeverally in ſeveral cœtus, yet a Council of them united hath power over all, as an Univerſal Council hath an Univerſal Juriſdiction.

8. As for the ſecond Teſtimony which he ſaith he hath ſhew'd Sect. 7. to be from Pelagius, I have there I hope given it a ſatisfactory anſwer, to which I refer him Sect. VII. of this Chapter. And for the concluſion thence deduced, when it is rightly ſet, thus [the Jewiſh and Gentile cœtus at Antioch ſeorſim habebantur, and they of the Jews were not mingled with them of the Gentiles, therefore they were ſeverally preached to, and ruled, and not promiſcuouſly] I ſhall now refer to the Reader to judge, whether it be inferred by due connexion of terms or no, and in giving his verdict, let him, if he pleaſe, conſult the Romaniſts Oracle Baronius, Ann. 45. n. 13, 14. and then queſtion if he can, whether, Euodius being created by Paul Biſhop of Antioch, and Ignatius by Peter, not one after another, but both together, and both of them thus preſiding in the ſeveral cœtus's, as long as the diviſion laſted betwixt Jews and Gentiles, (of all which that great Cardinal aſſures him) there can be any farther queſtion betwixt S. W. and me in this matter, but what that Cardinal ſhall be concerned in, as deeply as I. And ſo much, or ſo little rather, was proportionable to the merits and weight of his 14*th Section*.

SECT.

SECT. XV.

Peter's withdrawing from all Communion with the Gentile Christians, Gal. 2. ὑπέστειλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν. Gentile diet. Of the Samaritans, whether Jews or Heathens. Abstinence from their conversation as from Heathens. S. W's mistakes concerning them. Of no Communion with Gentiles. By what Law 'twas interdicted the Jews. (Two sorts of Proselytes.) Decrees of the Sanhedrim against it. Παρίνομον, though not against Original Laws of God. The Original of Excommunications among the Jews under captivity founded in the Ordinances of not mixing with the Heathen. Ἀμιξία κοινῶν. 2 Mac. XIV. 38. ἡδὺ παρίνομοι, χθὲς ἐπιμιξίας. Μὴ μιαίνων, Jo. XVIII. Legates to the Romans and Spartans. Making Proselytes. Nidui. Peter's not daring to preach to Cornelius. S. W's objections answered. St. Peter's action, Gal. 2. 21. freed from Schism. Justin's opinion of the Jewish Christians that refused the communion of the Gentile Christians. S. W's interpretation of ἀθέμιτον, and confession of their casuists.

1. HIS fifteenth is very long, and vehement in proposing, and pursuing, as the utmost absurdity, this passage of mine, in the Tract of Schism, (and my defence of it in the Reply) that Peter and all the Jewish Proselytes, Gal. II. 21. withdrew from all communion and society with the Gentile Christians, largely heaping up passages of Scripture (it is not amiss to observe that such wordish Testimonies are sometimes considered by S. W.) to prove that the Jews frequently conversed with Gentiles. For the clearing of this whole matter (at first incidentally touched, and now not to be inlarged into a Volume, especially unless it had more influence on the main Controversie) I shall briefly recite what hath hitherto pass'd in this business, and vindicate that, against his contrary pretensions, and having pointed out the ground of his mistake, leave him to salve the antinomyes, which his own fancy hath suggested, to his great disquiet and perturbation.

2. When the Catholick Gentleman replyed that the Text, Gal. 2. 21. expressed no more than that he withdrew from eating with them, i. e. keeping the Gentile diet. I answered, 1. that by the same reason that they would not eat with the Gentiles, lest they should offend the Jewish Law, they must be supposed to abstain from all other Communion with them, because it was equally against the Jewish Law, to converse with a Gentile, citing that of Joh. 4. of the Jews having no dealing with Samaritans, and concluding that (by parity of reason) Peter abstain'd from all those other ways of converse and communion with the Gentiles, which the Jews thought as unlawfull as eating with them, adding, that it was plain by Acts X. 12. that preaching to a Gentile was as unlawfull, according to Jewish Principles, as eating unclean meat, or Gentile diet, and that till Peter received his Vision of the Sheet, he deem'd it unlawfull, and tells them of it, as of a known thing, vers. 28. that it was ἀθέμιτον, unlawfull for a Jew κολλᾶσθαι ἢ προσέρχεσθαι, to keep company, or come in to one of another Nation, which comprehends all other communion, as well as that of the Gentile diet.] This I thought might have removed, if not prevented S. W's fierce displeasure. But it falls out much otherwise.

3. And first I am accused of falsifying Scripture, and the Page 307. wherein this Section begins, referred to in the Index for that discovery. And what is the falsification? Why, saith he, the citing the place expresly for the word All, and affirming it was read there.] But there is no truth in this, I never affirmed that the word all was read in that place, but on the contrary, in the citation, that word was in a Letter different from that whereby a citation is signified, which absolutely precluded this Jealousie. I said indeed that Peter and all the Jewish Proselytes withdrew from all communion and society with the Gentile Christians, but I said not that these are all the expres's words of Scripture, but that we reade the thing, Gal. II. 12. and so still I suppose we do in those words, ὑπέστειλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἑαυτὸν φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing those of the circumcision; For if the with-drawing be, as he would have it, interpreted onely in relation to eating with them, immediately foregoing, then that infers, that they thus withdrew, and did not so much as συνεσθίειν, eat with them; which if we may interpret by μηδὲ συνεσθίειν, with such an one no not to eat, 1 Cor. V. 11. that alone will amount to the withdrawing from all communion, noted there by the μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, v. 9. and 11. not to be mingled, or keep company with them, this of eating with others, being one of the lowest degrees of familiarity, which when it was either interdicted, or voluntarily abstain'd from, it cannot reasonably be believed, that other nearer degrees of approach were allowed, or used. But if the ὑπέστειλε, withdrawing, should not be thus largely interpretable, as to yield this, Yet the ἀφώριζεν which is added to that, and put indefinitely without any restriction, is the word frequently used for separating from all other communion; and that it must be so understood here, appears by the motive, which incited him to it, the fear of the Jews, viz. those which came from Jerusalem, and still adhered to the Mosaical Law, the fear, saith St. Chrysostome, of scandalizing them and causing them to forsake Christianity, which motive equally extended to all other communion with Gentiles (and not onely in the Gentile diet) they counting all such unlawfull, as hath been shewed. Nay 'tis observable that the Gentile diet being but of the nature of things strangled, and bloud, and εἰδωλόθυτα, from which the Council at Jerusalem had allowed the Gentiles to abstain, 'tis not imaginable that St. Paul should so strenuously oppose the withdrawing from that in Peter, and his Jewish Christians, nor consequently, that this was all that they withdrew from. I shall conclude this with the expression of their own * Baronius, who useth a phrase of that indefinite extent, which contains little less than mine, and if not fully as much, yet much more than his of the Gentile diet onely, that, saith he, he began Judaicos servare ritus, segregans se à Gentilibus, to keep the Jewish rites, separating himself from the Gentiles, whether persons, or rites, let him determine; for if it be rites onely, that is more than the Gentile diet, which is but one rite at most, but if it be from their persons, that is withdrawing from all communion with them, unless he can be supposed to communicate with them, from whom he so separates, as not so much as to eat with them.

* An. 51. n. 45.

4. His next Impression is against my producing that Text of the Jews having no dealing with the Samaritans. The question, saith he, is of the Gentiles, the Samaritans were not perfectly such, nor yet perfectly perfectly aliens from Moſes's Law, but obſtinate ſchiſmaticks and hereticks, whoſe converſation by conſequence they deem'd more contagious than of pure Heathens.] But I muſt firſt demand of this ſevere Controvertiſt, what he means by a Jew and a Gentile, that, he ſaith, the Samaritans were not perfectly Gentiles. Our Proteſtant Dictionaries have always by the word Jew underſtood one of the Poſterity of Jacob, and by Gentiles all other of what Nation ſoever, yea though they had undertaken the Jewiſh Religion either in whole or in part, for ſuch were Gentile Proſelytes, not Jews, I hope, but Gentiles ſtill, though Proſelytes of the Jews. Thus then it is beyond all queſtion, that the Generality of the Samaritans were perfectly Gentiles, being of the Race of thoſe that were tranſplanted thither from Aſſyria, 2 King. XVII. 24. (called thence * Cuthæi, Cuthites, from Cuthah, a chief place there, from whence a part of this Colony came) and inſtead of the Children of Iſrael, ſaith the Text, poſſeſſed Samaria, and dwelt in the Cities thereof. It is indeed Joſephus's obſervation of them, that when the Jews are proſperous, and any thing to be gotten by it, ὅταν ἢ φέρειν αὐτοὺς λαμπρὰν εἰδῶσιν ἐν τύχῃ, when they ſee any ſplendid condition by fortune befalling the Jews, † ἐξαίφνης ἐπιπηδῶσιν αὐτῶν τῇ κοινωνίᾳ, they preſently leap into their Kindred, fetching their Genealogies from the Sons of Joſeph, Ephraim and Manaſſes; and ſo in Alexander's time, * ἔγνωσαν αὐτοὺς Ἰουδαίους ὁμολογεῖν, they profeſs'd themſelves Jews; but † he tells us alſo, ἐν μὲν δὲ συμφοραῖς ὄντας Ἰουδαίους ἀρνεῖσθαι σφᾶς, ὁμολογοῦντες τῷ ἀληθεῖ, When the Jews are under afflictions, they then renounce all Relations of Kindred to them, and in ſo doing confeſs the truth, and therefore though to get off the ſeventh years tribute, they tell * Alexander they were Hebrews, yet when he asked them whether they were Jews, they confeſs'd they were not. And accordingly our Saviour, that confines the Preaching of the Twelve, Mat. X. to the Houſe of Iſrael, forbids expreſly both the Gentiles in general, and in ſpecial the Cities of the Samaritans, verſ 5. How then could S. W. imagine I had miſtaken in calling theſe Gentiles, or that himſelf ſpake intelligible ſenſe, in ſaying they were not perfectly ſuch. Did he think them of a mix'd Race, begotten of one Gentile, another Jewiſh Parent? how could that be? when the Jews, which, according to the Teſtimony, οὐ συγχέων), had no dealings, cannot be imagined to have uſed the freedom of marriages with them. 'Tis true indeed Manaſſes brother to Jaddus the High-prieſt married Sanballet's daughter a little before Alexander's time, and ſome others of them were engaged in the like; but ſtill theſe were look'd on as moſt unlawfull, and as the cauſe of their Captivities, ſaith Joſephus, in the forecited place; and nothing is more obvious to reflect on, in this matter, than the ſolemn humiliation in Ezra's time for this great ſin of marrying, and not ſeparating themſelves from the People of the Land, Ezr. IX.

* Κυθαῖοι, ἐξ ὧν καὶ οἱ Σαμαρεῖς εἰσι. Joſeph. ἀρχαιολ. βιβ. ια. κεφ. ζ.
† Ἀρχαιολ. βιβ. ια. κεφ. η. P. 344.
* Ibid.
† Ibid.
* Ibid.

5. Neither may I think that in theſe words he had reſpect to their Religion. 1. Becauſe he mentions that in the next words, [nor yet perfectly Aliens from Moſes's Law] and ſecondly becauſe their Religion is perfectly deſcribed, 2 King. XIX. to be the retaining their own Idol Gods, Succoth Benoth, and Nergal and Aſhima, and onely taking in the Worſhip of the God of the Land (as of a Topical Deity) fit for the loweſt of the People, to be the Prieſts of; and, ſaith that Authour, to this Day, they fear not the Lord, neither doe they after their Ordinances, &c. v. 34. and v. 41. they ſerved their Graven Images, both their children and their childrens children, unto this day; And although after this I ſuppoſe they might be refined, yet ſtill our Saviour tells them expreſly, they worſhip they know not what, Jo. IV. 22. which differs little from the character which St. Paul gives the Athenians, Act. XVII. 23. in relation to their Altar to the unknown God, that God whom ye ignorantly worſhip, &c. and accordingly Epiphanius in his Catalogue of Hereticks, ſets down the Samaritans in the ſame rank with the Stoicks, Platonicks, Pythagoreans, Epicureans, as the ſeventh hereſie ἀπὸ τῶ Ἑλληνισμῶ from Greciſm or Gentiliſm, as that is oppoſed to Ἰουδαισμὸς, Judaiſm, which, after the four ſects of Samaritans, he proceeds to: Thirdly, becauſe the account which Joſephus gives of this whole matter about the times of Alexander, and ſo not long before Chriſt, well agrees with this. * When Manaſſes had marryed Sanballet the Governour of Samaria his daughter, and † the Elders of Jeruſalem made an inſurrection againſt him, looking on it as a foundation of impiety, and tranſgreſſing their Law, that others would imitate, he expreſſeth it by τοῖς πρὸς τοὺ ἀλλοφύλους αὐτοῖς κοινωνίας ἀρχὼ τῶτο ἔσεσθαι, that it would be the beginning of a Communion with Aliens, i. e. with Gentiles, which makes it evident that the Samaritans were looked on as Gentiles. And accordingly they required Manaſſes either to leave his Wife, or not to approach the Altar, and his Brother drove him from the Altar. Hereupon Manaſſes goes to his Father-in-law, tells him, he loves his Wife well, but will not loſe the Prieſthood for her; Sanballet tells him he ſhall be ſo far from loſing his Prieſthood, that he will give him the High-prieſthood, hereupon he builds a Temple on Mount-Gerizim, like to that at Jeruſalem, and there ſets up Manaſſes High-prieſt, and all the Jews that were ingaged in the like Marriages, ἀφίσατο, apoſtatized to Manaſſes, and accordingly when Alexander came to Sichem the Metropolis of Samaria, where theſe Jews dwelt, he tells us, it was inhabited by thoſe who had Apoſtatized from the Jewiſh Nation, (κατῳκισμένον ὑπὸ τῶ Ἰουδαίων, ἐθνῶς) the breaking off from the Jews, in two ſo eminent parts of their Religion (that of ſeparating themſelves from ſtrange women, and Worſhipping in no other Temple than that of Jeruſalem) beſide the invaſion of the High Prieſthood, and aſſociating with him, that did ſo, was even in theſe Jews a pitch above Schiſm, Apoſtaſie from the Jewiſh Religion, whilſt the generality of that people were Heathens ſtill, and ſo look'd upon by the Jews at that time, elſe it would not have been ſuch an intolerable crime for the Jews to have marryed with them. Fourthly, becauſe, ſuppoſing ſome of them Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion in ſome things not in all, yet they that are ſuch, are Gentile Worſhippers, and ſo as was ſaid, not Jews, but as perfectly Gentiles ſtill, as thoſe with whom they were not allowed free converſe.

* Joſephus, Αρχ. βιβ. ια. κεφ. ζ.
† κεφ. η.

6. What then could he mean by that phraſe [not perfectly ſuch?] Or what confidence hath he in his next ſubtilty, that they being Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, their Converſation was by conſequence more contagious than pure Heathens? When yet 1. their Schiſm in Worſhipping in Mount Gerizim is interpreted by * Epiphanius to be Idolatry, διὰ τὸ ἀποκεκρύφθαι, &c. becauſe the Idols of the four Nations were hid in that Mountain, to which he applies the words of Scripture, which he ſaith could not lie, that they remain'd to that day doing the Law, and worſhipping their own Idols; and 2. 'tis certain, that though the Fathers make uſe of them as an inſtance of Schiſmaticks, meaning, I ſuppoſe, Manaſſes and thoſe Jews amongſt them, that inhabited Sichem, and judging by the material act, ſetting High-prieſt againſt High-Prieſt, Altar againſt Altar, Mount Gerizim againſt Jeruſalem;

* Lib. I. αἱρ. θ.

Jeruſalem; yet the Generality of Samaritans were not Jews, and the few that were, were more than Schiſmatical Jews, for though any ſtranger upon accepting the whole Law, became a Proſelyte, and ſo was part of the Jewiſh Community, yet the Samaritans failing in a material article of belief, were never admitted into the ſociety of that Church, and the Jewiſh Inhabitants that had, were now plainly Apoſtatized from it, and though the Pentateuch were accepted among them, and tranſlated, yet the Prophets, and reſt of Scripture, were ſtill rejected. And therefore it will be no rarity to him that ſhall look into the Jewiſh Learning, to meet with Anathema's againſt him that ſhall eat the bread of the Cuthæans, aſſociate thus familiarly with them, particularly in the תולדות ישו, where is a large deſcription of their Excommunication, with CCC. Prieſts, CCC Trumpets, and CCC Books of the Law, with ſeveral other circumſtances. And it is the obſervation of a † learned and ſober Jew, that the Jews left off the uſe of the Samaritan character, which was the old Hebrew, and took up the Rabbinical (lightly changed from the ancient Aſſyrian form) in its ſtead, that there might not be כלטה, &c. agreement or communion in the kind of writing, betwixt them and the Samaritan.

† R. Tanchum.

7. And yet thirdly, if it were granted, that they were onely Schiſmaticks and hereticks, and not Heathens, yet nothing is more known than that the Jews were moſt frequently contaminated by the Heathens, being mingled among them and learning their works, Pſal. 106. v. 35. drawn away by the bait of Luſt, &c. into the utmoſt abominations of Idol-worſhip, and were therefore moſt carefully guarded from that danger both by the Laws of God, and by ſome more, of the Sanedrim's impoſition, when yet of the many Sects and Hereſies, that were among themſelves (the Phariſees name expreſly ſignifying Schiſm and ſeparation, from the * vulgar, or unlearned and the Saducees being groſly heretical, in denying the Reſurrection, and Angels and Spirits) 'tis evident, that there were no ſuch prohibitions of commerce with them.

* קרושה יתירה, &c. This is ſuperabundant ſanctity, that a man ſeparate himſelf from the vulgar (the people which know not the Law is accurſed, Jo. 7. 49.) nor touch them, nor eat nor drink with them; Maimon. Yad. tract. Tumath. Ocelim. cap. ult. See him again tr. Ab. Hattum. cap. 13. § 8. the Phariſees, ſaith he, are wont to goe at the ſides of the ways, that they be not polluted with the touch of the עמי הארץ Plebeians.

8. I ſhall conclude this, as it relates peculiarly to the Samaritans, by demanding, whether indeed he believ'd himſelf, and thought it appliable to this matter, when he made this obſervation, diſtinguiſhing betwixt Samaritans and Heathens, , and yielding the Jewiſh reſtraint to be greater from the Samaritans, than from the Heathens? If ſo, how comes he to find as full proofs for the Apoſtles, preaching to the Samaritans, as to the Gentiles, in the proceſs of his refutation? for that is evidently to equal them in this matter, and ſo St. Cyprian, Ep. 76. looking on them as Schiſmaticks, and obſerving our Lord's prohibition of going to them, oſtendit, ſaith he, Schiſmaticos Gentilibus adæquari, he ſhews that Schiſmaticks are equalled to Gentiles, and ſo certainly πγκεᾶσθω in one place, is all one with κολλᾶσθω in the other, and ſignifies all manner of Converſe, I ſaid not all traffick (for that the Jews allowed, to buy of them, &c.) but all communion and ſociety, mutual kindneſſes, and eſpecially communion in ſacris. And ſo ſtill what I concluded from their no dealing with the Samaritans, and took liberty to apply to the Gentiles, was not with any reaſon to have provoked ſo much either of contempt or indignation in our Controvertiſt. The advantage, at this time, lay viſibly on the Samaritans ſide; for when Peter and John and Philip, Act. VIII. converſed freely with the Samaritans, in communicating the Goſpel to them, 'tis not without a particular licence, and Viſion from God, that Peter preacheth to a Gentile, Act. X. and yet is called in queſtion for that, and not the former, by the converted Jews. Thus happy is S. W. in all his quaint obſervations, and anſwers, and deſigned fruſtrations to the expreſs words of Scripture.

9. Next, he comes to my proofs, that concerned the Gentiles, and though they were moſt expreſs, that preaching to a Gentile (which was the looſeſt degree of Communion) was according to the Jewiſh Principles as unlawfull as eating any unclean meat, (which I inferr'd from Peter's Viſion, Act. X. 12. where one was repreſented by the other) and that Peter himſelf profeſſes, v. 28. that it was unlawfull for a Jew to keep company, or come to one of another Nation, κολλᾶσθαι ἢ προσερχεσθαι, which includes all Communion and not onely that of the Gentile diet; yet this muſt be paradigmatized, and, his Reader here be adviſed to learn a pattern of the Proteſtant manner of writing, which is, ſaith he, to lay the whole force of their proof upon any harſh ſounding Text, and ſomething difficult to explicate, though they know there are a thouſand other Texts expreſly againſt their pretenſe from that one.] But to this I anſwer, 1. that this is a much better indication, I ſay not of all Romaniſts, but of S. W. my preſent adverſaries temper, who, if any thing be proved by deduction from Scripture, and not from expreſs words, conjures his Catholick Client, not to heed it at all, but to exact expreſs words, and at another time, when the words are moſt expreſs, then to call it an harſh ſounding Text, and ſomething difficult to be explicated, when yet there is not the leaſt appearance of difficulty in it, ſave onely that it is unreconcileably contrary to his pretenſions: Whether this be not fitter for the impartial Readers obſervation, than what he here ſuggeſts to them, let who will judge.

10. Secondly, when he ſaith, I know in my Conſcience there are a thouſand Texts expreſly againſt my pretenſe from this one, I that have read over the places, which he heaps up afterwards, can yet truely ſay, I believe in my Conſcience, there is not one either recited, or omitted by him, contrary to that which I pretend from this one. Nay 3. if need were, I could produce divers others, which, though not ſo expreſly, yet by neceſſary deduction muſt conclude the very ſame which I conclude from this one. And 4. the Fathers of the Church, (I ſhall give him a taſte by and by) have, as largely as I, made this deduction from thence, viz. that in thoſe times whereof we ſpeak, the Jews accounted all communion with the heathen, and not onely that in the Gentile diet, utterly unlawfull, and might not by their Law converſe familiarly with them.

11. I ſuppoſe, I ſee from whence S. W's miſtake (for I do not eſteem this a willfull errour) proceeds, and therefore I now add expreſly (what before was ſufficiently intimated) the mention of the times, whereof we ſpeak, i. e. to which the paſſages in the Goſpels and Acts and Epiſtles were limited, which being briefly noted, I ſhall farther trouble him, but with theſe two vulgar obſervations. Firſt, that many many of other Nations through all times embraced the Religion of the Jews, either in whole or in part; they that embraced it wholly, and in token of it, were baptized and circumcised, were called their גרי צדק, Proselytes of righteousness, and גרי ברית, Proselytes of the Covenant, and of such an one * Justin Martyr (from Ex. XII. 48.) tells us, προσήλυτος περιτμόμενος ὅταν ὡς αὐτόχθων, The circumcised Proselyte is as one that was born in the Land, and with such an one (called προσελθὼν προσήλυτος, Ex. XII. 49.) they might as familiarly converse as with their Native brethren. Of these therefore I spake not, nor, I suppose, can be imagined to have spoken. * Dial. cum Tryph. i. p. 273.

12. But others there were which accepted but part of the Jewish Law, that which was not Originally Jewish, the seven precepts of the Sons of Adam and Noah, and such an one had some degree of admission among them, so far as to be called גר שער a Proselyte or stranger of the Gates, Deut. XIV. 29. גר חושב, a stranger inhabiting among them; by the Chaldee, Deut. XIV. 21. תותב ערל an uncircumcised inhabitant. But of these it is observable, that when the Jews were carryed into Captivity, and when afterward they lived under the Roman Yoke, and so were not able to keep their Proselytes within their prescribed rules, having no coercive Jurisdiction over them, their Wise-men or Rulers conciliarly determined, that the Native Jews should abstain from familiar converse and communion with them, in like manner, though not with the same detestation, and degree of aversion, as from all other Gentiles.

13. Hence is that known distinction in the Temple, betwixt the Inner and the Outer Court, the latter call'd the Court of the Gentiles, divided by a low wall from the other, (to which St. Paul refers, in his μεσότοιχον φραγμοῦ, half wall of partition, Ep. II. 14.) on which, saith Josephus, was inscribed μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς ἰέναι, that no Alien might enter the Inner Court. That this was any Original Law given by God to Moses, I do not pretend, but a latter Law of the Rulers of this people, under captivity, &c. So Maimonides, Holach, Isuribia, Ch. IV. הגוים, &c. the Gentiles, saith he, are not obliged by the Laws of the woman in uncleanness, of a Flux, or Childbirth, וחכמים גזרו על כל הגוים, &c. but the Wise-men have decreed all Gentiles male as well as female, to be as if they had a constant Flux of bloud, &c. i. e. though by force of the Law of God by Moses they were not, yet by the latter Laws of their Sanhedrim they were to obstain precisely from familiar converse with Gentiles. To the same purpose the Misna, tit. nidda, c. IV. and this Decree seems to be made in the times of the Hasmonæi, for in Gemara Babylon. upon the title Aboda Zara, † cap. 2. 'tis said, that they decreed every Heathen woman should be esteemed menstruous, i. e. unclean, and not to be touched by a Jew. But though this were no Original Law of God, yet that derogates not from the obligingness of it to the Jews, our Saviour telling us, that what the Scribes and Pharisees (these Wise-men of theirs) sitting in Moses's Chair, command, obedience is due to them therein, Mat. XXIII. 2. And so these Laws of their Wise-men, by force of God's Law for obeying their Rulers, Deut. 17. 11. obtained so full authority, that according to Jewish Principles, abstracted from Christian liberty, it was not lawfull to disobey them; and therefore as * St. Chrysostome, speaking of the Samaritan woman, saith, that she looked on Christ's speaking to her, as τὸ μὴ κατὰ νόμον γινόμενον, that which was not according to Law, and again, Νόμος οὐκ ἐπιτρέπουτος, that the Law permitted it not, adding presently, τοιαύτας παρατηρήσεις, such observances, shewing that by Law before, he meant these Ordinances of the Jews own making, so, the same Father, speaking of Cornelius the Proselyte, to whom Peter's Vision appertained, hath first these words, † Ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὐδὲ ἀκροβυστος, οὐδὲν κοινὸν εἶχε πρὸς Ἰουδαίους, he was uncircumcised, he had no thing common (no communion) with the Jews; then, that had not Peter received that Vision, * they would have accused him ὡς παραβάτης, as a transgressour of their Law, and † after, ὁ Θεὸς τοῦτο ἐκέλευσε παρανόμου εἶναι κολλᾶσθαι, &c. God, saith Peter, hath commanded that it be a transgression of the Law, to be joyned in close converse, or go in to an Alien; and again, οὐ μόνον οὐ κολλᾶσθαι ἀλλ' οὐδὲ παρελθεῖν ἔξον φησι, he saith, 'Tis unlawfull not onely to cleave to, or be joyned in close converse, but even to go in to him. * Tom. 2. p. 680. lib. 32. † Tom. 4. p. 738. lib. 6. * Ib. l. 7. † P. 742. l. 26.

14. To clear this yet farther, it is to be remembred, that the Excommunications, so famously known among the Jews, and from thence translated by Christ to Christianity, did not yet stand by Moses's Law, nor were they Originally in use among them, or as long as they continued in their own Nation; * Elias Ben Moseh a Carean or Scripturian Jew (and so none of their Traditionals) out of Rabbi Benjamin Ben Moseh sets down the institution of it, with relation to the time of the Captivity, בי מי שנרשע, &c. If any be defiled by greater sins, for which in time of Captivity, we cannot exercise Judgments, he must by penance reconcile himself, and undertake to mend; but if he do not, we put him under Cherem, and separate him from us, according to that of Ezra 10. 8. he shall be separated from the Congregation of the Captivity, or of those that have been carryed away: And so that Elias Ben Moseh himself adds, it was, saith he, convenient and necessary בומן תגלות in the time of the Captivity, that if any obeyed not the words of the Law, or the Wise-men, he should be put under Cherem and Nidui, and separated from the Congregation of Israel, by the Decree of the Wise-men, &c. and the whole Congregation received the Decree of the Wise-men, to be in force וומן הזה, at that, or any such time (as that of the Captivity, when they had not power of life and death over their people) to all ages. Thus † Josephus having described their Excommunication by ἐκβάλλεσι τῆς τάγματος, casting them out of the Camp or Congregation, adds, τοῖς δὲ ὅρκοις καὶ τοῖς ἔθεσιν ἐνδεδεμένος, he that is bound by those Oaths (or Anathema's) and Customes or rites, &c. i. e. by those degrees of Excommunication customarily brought in among them in those latter times; which therefore we reade of in Ezra, and after him frequently in the Apocrypha, and the Gospels, but not before the time of the Captivity. * Tract. de Sabbatho. † Captiv. l. 2. Cap. 12.

15. Now that what is thus evident of their Excommunications or Censures upon their own Members in case of offence, is founded on supposition of their Ordinances against mixing or familiarly conversing with Heathens, the very form in the Gospel makes evident, where, of the Offender it is said, upon his obstinacy, Let him be to thee as an Heathen or Publican, which could have no applyableness to that matter, if their Law did not prescribe the same separation from each of those, which their Censures inflicted as a punishment on obstinate Offenders.

16. Of Publicans it is frequently express'd in the Gospels, that the Jews censured our Saviour for conversing with them; Why eateth your Master with Publicans, &c. which cannot with any probability belong to the Gentile diet, for the Publicans being Jews by birth, as Matthew and Zacheus, though by the necessity of their employment they had to doe with the Romans, who employ'd them to gather toll, yet had no such necessity to forsake at home the rites of their Religion; And yet this very mixing with Heathens made them detestable, and as unfit for a Jew to converse with, as the Heathens were, which ſtill ſets it beyond diſpute, that the Heathens were not to be mix'd with.

17. The like analogy between their dealing with Offenders and with Heathens we find in the Books of the Maccabees; for as in that which is call'd the third Book in our Greek Bibles, the puniſhment of Excommunication inflicted on the ὑποχωρήντας, Apoſtates, is deſcribed by τὸ σωμαι ασεχθῆς καὶ ἐυχρησίας ἐτέρου, they deprived them of common converſation and receiving benefit by them, ſo 2 Maccab. XIV. 38. 'tis ſaid of Razis an eminent Jew, ὧ γὰρ ἐν τοῖς ἔμπροσθεν χρόνοις τὸ ἀμιξίας κεῖσιν, εἰσηνηγμένος Ἰουδαισμὸς, which I ſee to be variouſly interpreted, but I think can ſignify no other, than that in former times (thoſe of Antiochus Epiphanes, called χρόνοι ὁπλιμξίας, v. 3. the times of mingling themſelves, becauſe ſo many Jews offended againſt the Law in mingling with the Gentiles) he brought in the Ordinance of Judaiſm, of not mixing, or, which is all one, of not mixing of Judaiſm, as that ſignifies the Judaical Law of not mixing with the Gentiles, whereby (it is there ſaid that) he ventur'd his body and life for Judaiſm, i.e. to preſerve that Law inviolate among the Jews of not mixing with Heathens.

18. So when 1 Mac. 1. 11. in Antiochus's days we are told, there went out of Iſrael ſome which perſwaded many, ſaying, Let us go and covenant Covenants with the Nations round about us, for ἀφ' ἧς ἐχωρίσθημεν ἀπ' αὐτῶν, from the time we have been ſeparated from them, many evils have found us; this is an evidence, that there was a ſpace foregoing, wherein the Jews had been ſeparated from the Gentiles; and that it was not imputable to any thing elſe, but to their Laws that required it, appears from the character ſet on thoſe men that invited others to violate it, they are υἱοὶ παράνομοι, tranſgreſſing wicked men, acting contrary to their Laws, which could not be, had not the Laws of the Jews at that time been utterly againſt this covenanting with the Heathens, i.e. this free unreſtrained converſe with them, which fully explains to us the meaning of the χείνῳ ὁπλιμξίας, and ἀμιξία, the former in theſe times of Antiochus, as was ſaid, the latter, before them, and after again, when Razis, and ſuch as he, that were zealous for Judaiſm, reſiſted the torrent, and reduced them.

19. That this was the meaning of the Jews not going into the Prætorium, Joh. 18. 28. that they might not be under the ſame roof with the Roman Souldiers, μὴ μιανθῶσιν, leſt they ſhould be defiled, is an ordinary obſervation, but this ſtill to be underſtood in relation to thoſe times, and the decree of their Rulers, not as any Original Law of God; which having thus largely ſhewed, it already appears, how little I am in S. W's hundred, yea thouſand Texts, which he deems ſo contrary to my pretenſions, when my pretenſions of the ἀμιξία, commencing from the time of the Captivity, and by force of their power to make Laws, as they ſhould ſee fit for their preſent occaſions, and not from any expreſs Law of God by Moſes, or from the beginning of Judaiſm, have evidently prevented all the proofs, which he hath brought from the practice of the Jews in more ancient times, from Leviticus, from Joſhua, from David, Solomon, Elias, Elizeus, and the like; for to all theſe the anſwer is, that the Jews Ordinance of ἀμιξία came in after theſe times, being no part of Moſes's Law, but of a much later date under the Captivity. As for the Embaſſy and League with the Romans, (which indeed belong to the times I ſpake of) 1 Mac. 8. and ſo with the Spartans, cap. 12. theſe cannot prejudice our preſent hypotheſis, which pretends not any neceſſity, that the diſtreſſed Jews ſhould profeſs hoſtility, and defiance to all other Kingdoms in the world, but willingly yields, that they might, by the conſent of their Governours, make peace (as well as wage war) συμμαχίαν καὶ εἰρήνην, ſaith the Text, a League of peace and amity, and in order to that, ſend Legates, and thoſe Legates converſe with Romans, and negotiate the affair for which they were ſent, which being all that S. W. pretends, is moſt willingly granted him.

20. What he adds of their converſing with the Gentiles in Captivity, and that we do not hear of any expreſſion of abominating their civil ſociety with them, or that they broke Moſes's Law by ſo doing, or any one put to death on that ſcore] is ſoon anſwered, 1. That I pretend not the No-communion to ſtand by Moſes's Law. 2. That when they were carried out of their own Country, the Capital power (and ſo the putting to death he ſpeaks of) was taken out of their hands, and to repair that defect, their Excommunications brought in. 3. That though S. W. have not heard of them, there were Decrees made by their Æchmalotarchæ, their Governours in time of the Captivity, reſtraining them from familiar converſe with the Gentiles, among whom they were forced to live.

21. But may it not ſtill be of force againſt us, what he addeth of the lawfulneſs of making Proſelytes, and from our Saviour's words, that the Phariſees compaſs Sea and Land to make one Proſelyte, which, ſaith he, could not be without converſation and preaching] I anſwer, I think it is not of any force againſt what hath been thus far eſtabliſhed: The compaſſing Sea and Land being a Proverbial ſpeech, to expreſs great diligence, the ſame that the Merchant uſes to fetch home his Jewels and wealth, and ſo the plain meaning of that place being this, that when a Gentile deſired to undertake the Religion of the Jews, the Phariſees were extremely zealous to gain him to their whole Law, to be a Proſelyte of the Covenant, to be circumciſed, and receive all their Ordinances, and not onely ſo, but to raiſe him yet farther to their Sect, which was the moſt exact in Traditional obſervations of any: In order to either of which, there is no doubt, they were thus far allowed, by their χρίσις ἀμιξίας, Ordinance of ſeparation, to converſe with him, as to reveal their Doctrine, tell him all the Precepts of the Law, and inforce it on him by their moſt powerfull arguments, as a Catechiſt in the Church may and ought to reveal to the Catechumenus the terms of the Chriſtian Covenant, and prepare him for Baptiſm: though as till the one be baptized, he is not capable of the Communion of the πιστοὶ or faithfull, ſo the other, till he were circumciſed, though he were a Proſelyte of the Gate, or in part, yet the Jews, even thoſe that took pains to convert him, were to keep their diſtance from him, not to communicate with him in ſacris, in the ſame Court of the Temple, but the Proſelyte to keep to the Atrium Gentilium, as was ſaid. An image of which we have alſo in their cenſures againſt Natives, there being divers degrees of their Excommunication, and the Nidui ſeparating but for four paces, and the like; which was as much ſhort of the Cherem or Anathema, as the uſage of the Proſelytes of the Gates differed from that of thoſe Gentiles, which were not Proſelytes, or Candidates of any degree of it.

22. And if it be now demanded, why then it ſhould not be lawfull for Peter by their Ordinances to go in to Cornelius, who was a Proſelyte of the Gates, the anſwer is, that Cornelius's deſign was not to gain Circumciſion, but to be taught Chriſtianity, and baptized, &c. without being circumciſed, which required quired that near converſe and communion from Peter, expreſs'd by συναναστρεφεσθαι, &c. which the Jewiſh Laws allowed not, any more than eating with the Gentiles, and therefore Peter deemed it not lawfull by their Laws to take that liberty, till the Viſion from Heaven gave him Authority for it.

23. In the top of the 312. Page, reciting my tenet of the Jews at Antioch, he ſaith it is, that they had no communion at all, no not even civil converſation with the Gentiles their fellow Chriſtians] but he cannot believe theſe are the expreſſions of my tenet, or any words of mine; I ſaid they withdrew from all communion, and not onely from the Gentile diet; but any man elſe would have underſtood the All communion, either by the oppoſition to that one ſort, of Gentile diet, or at leaſt by the whole diſcourſe, which was withholding or abſtaining from ſociety in ſacris (as communion in the Eccleſiaſtical ſtyle particularly ſignifies) And in this laſt caſe I pray, doth not S. W. withdraw from all communion with the Doctour, to whom yet he profeſſeth himſelf ready to perform much civility? I never doubted but a Jew of the ſtricteſt ſtrain might have ſome kind of civil converſation with Gentiles, might buy of them, and the like, the Interdict lying onely againſt interchangeable courteſies, and familiar converſe: And for the Judaizers at Antioch, if they be yielded to have withheld themſelves from the Gentile Cœtus, and performed their Offices ſeorſim, apart, this is all that my pretenſions aſpired to; for then Paul and Peter had their diſtinct Cœtus, and the Gentiles were no part of Peter's Province, which is the principal concluſion to be made good, againſt S. W. and the abſtaining was not onely from the Gentile diet, which was the leſs principal.

24. But if all theſe objections have been found light, yet may not his next impreſſion be more fortunate? viz. that this being ſo long after Peter's Viſion, and the declaration of it, and the ſatisfaction of thoſe that had been ſcandalized at it, Act. XI. 18. put caſe it had been forbidden by Moſes's Law, yet what likelihood was there, that the apprehenſion of that unlawfulneſs ſhould ſtill continue?] I anſwer, 1. many things come to paſs that are not likely; 2. many things are likely in themſelves, and the circumſtances belonging to them, which to him who diſcerns not thoſe circumſtances, have another appearance. 3. That ſome mens prejudices, and favour to their own Hypotheſis, may confirm them in their old, and render them obſtinate to any contrary apprehenſions, how convincingly ſoever propoſed to them. An inſtance of which we have now before us, that when he himſelf confeſſes that Peter withdrew from eating with the Gentile Chriſtians, for fear of the Jews that came from Jeruſalem, he can yet think it improbable that Peter's Viſion ſhould not e'er this have given all men ſatisfaction, when yet the very Viſion it ſelf was in thoſe words, ariſe Peter, kill and eat, and call not that common which God hath cleanſed, though that were the very Gentile diet, which now he ſuppoſeth him to abſtain from, on this one motive of the Jewiſh Chriſtians diſſatisfaction. 'Tis true, when he declared his Viſion, Act. XI. the Jews then preſent were convinced by it, ſo far as to acknowledge that God had to the Gentiles granted repentance to life; yet 'tis as plain after this, (and the occaſion of the great Council at Jeruſalem, Act. 15.) that there came certain men from Judæa, which taught the brethren, and ſaid, except ye be circumciſed, ye cannot be ſaved, which is expreſly contrary to theſe uncircumciſed Gentiles (ſuch as Cornelius was) having repentance unto life. And 'tis no leſs manifeſt, that when Paul came to Jeruſalem, and declared his ſucceſſes among the Gentiles, and gave ample ſatisfaction to James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and the Text adds, when they heard it, they glorified God, v. 20. yet in the ſame verſe, that good Biſhop tells him, Thou ſeeſt how many thouſand Jews there are that believe, and are zealous of the Law, who, it ſeems were ſcandalized at Paul, that he taught the Jews that were among the Gentiles, not to circumciſe their children, and ſo to forſake Moſes's Law, and not onely ſo, but μηδὲ τοις ἔθεσι περιπατεῖν, not to walk in the Cuſtoms or Ordinances, which evidently belongs to the point in hand, and makes it ſtill more than probable, that the Jewiſh Chriſtians of Jeruſalem, the very men ſpoken of, Gal. 2. 12. were not ſatisfied of the lawfulneſs of forſaking either Moſes's Law, or the Judaical Ordinances (of which this of the ἀκροβυστία was one) thus long after Peter's Viſion, and the declaration of it. How much labour it coſt St. Paul, both in his preaching, and his Epiſtles, to infuſe the truer and more Chriſtian apprehenſions, and what perſecutions it brought him, is too much known to them that have read the New Teſtament, (without the Folio-Annotations he ſcoffs at) to be ignorant of.

25. But unleſs I can give him a reaſon, why thoſe at Antioch ſhould be more unreaſonable than thoſe, Act. XI. at Jeruſalem, I am ſtill a loſt man after all this. But I ſhall hope that others will think it poſſible, that ſome tempers are more hardly ſatisfied with reaſon, than others, and if I ſhall pitch on S. W. himſelf, as an inſtance of it, I ſhall not fear to be refuted by any impartial Umpirage.

26. Once more, the Church of Jeruſalem, ſaith he, before this, heard of the preaching to the Gentiles, and Act. XI. 22. ſent Barnabas to Antioch for the ſame end] But I conceive there is a wide difference betwixt the Church at Jeruſalem, as that ſignifies the Biſhop James, and ſuch as he was (the ſame I ſay of Philip preaching in Samaria, which he after mentions, and why not Chriſt to the woman, and Paul to the Heathen world?) and the many thouſand Judaizers, ſuch as that good Biſhop tells St. Paul of, after this, for that theſe ſtill remain'd unſatisfied, muſt be as certain as the Authority of that Book can make any thing.

27. Another little probability he would glean from the diſtance between the time of St. Peter's Viſion, and that referr'd to Act. XI. ſufficient, ſaith he, to let the Jews in the ſame City know, that the Gentiles might be convers'd with] But he is diſcernible to be drawn low, that catches at ſuch colours as theſe, all force of which is ſo eaſily avoided, and retorted againſt himſelf, for the longer this was after St. Peter's Viſion, the more time had the Judaizers to ſow their Tares, as well as the force of his Viſion to prevail; which the longer it was paſt, the more apt it was to be forgotten by them, that had not the inclination to be convinced with it.

28. But now this batch of objections is over, there is a freſh maſs behind, for, ſaith he, if nothing elſe could bridle Dr. H. from ſuch extravagancy of inſincerity and weakneſs, yet I wonder much his own words could not curb him] and then without more adoe is enter'd into the Index the Doctour's contradicting himſelf and common ſenſe both at once, p. 314, 315. But whence came all this ruefull Tragedy, and wonderment, of extravagancy, of inſincerity, &c. that thus tranſported S. W? why, it ſeems, I ſaid, that we reade of St. Peter and the Jewiſh Proſelytes, that they withdrew from all communion and ſociety with the Gentile Chriſtians.] But is this to contradict my ſelf and common ſenſe? I more wonder where I ever ſaid or dream'd the contrary to this. Is not this the ſaying that I have been arraign'd for, all this while? and if I have elſewhere contradicted it, why might not that have atoned S. W's rigid diſpleaſure, and ſav'd me ſo many pages in defending it? But the trick is yet behind, For, ſaith he, if they withdrew from all communion, and ſociety, I ſuppoſe they had, and uſed formerly, both communion and ſociety with them, elſe how could they be ſaid to withdraw from it] I anſwer, that if by both communion and ſociety] he mean onely ſome ſociety, I grant his Concluſion; but if he mean all ſort of communion and ſociety, I deny his conſequence, and render my reaſon for it, becauſe they that hold but one part of external ſociety with others, if now they ſhall withdraw from that, may fitly be ſaid to withdraw from all, becauſe in this caſe there is none left, from which they have not withdrawn: Thus in the inſtance before us, the Jewiſh Chriſtians at Antioch uſed ſome ſociety before, viz. that of eating, with the Gentile Chriſtians, v. 12. but kept their Cœtus apart (as not onely I, and his ſuppoſed Pelagius, but, as hath been ſhew'd him, his own Baronius may advertiſe him) but now Peter, and, I ſuppoſe, his Jewiſh Cœtus there, withdrew even from this, and ſo conſequently from all communion and ſociety with them. S.W. will eaſily underſtand this by a parallel; the Romaniſts and the Proteſtants in London keep their Aſſemblies apart, but are content without all ſcruple to eat together; ſuppoſe now ſome rigid Romaniſt, ſuch as profeſſes himſelf bound to make all that

* Sch. diſp. p. 18. a Proteſtant ſaith Non-ſenſical, and yet * will ſhew as much civility, be as ready to ſerve one of them as he would any Gentleman in England, ſuppoſe, I ſay, this man ſhould advance, as he may, when his zeal is turgent, or the Pope commands, ſo much higher, as to abhor the very eating with a Proteſtant, might not I then ſay, he withdraws from all communion with Proteſtants, without ſuppoſing that he had, and uſed all formerly? He ſees then, our Phænomena ſtill ſalved, and no ſuch ſelf-contradiction, as he and his Index informed the Reader of.

29. His laſt and eagerſt rebuke, is, that I make St. Peter and his Proſelytes Schiſmaticks] and a loud clamour is rais'd on that Theme. And when I thought I had prevented that, as far as St. Peter was concerned in it, by telling him the reſolution of St. Chryſoſtome and the Greek Commentatours, that, what he did at that time, was but an οἰκονομία or act of prudent managery deſigned by agreement betwixt him and St. Paul, to reduce the Judaizers from their errours, this anſwer he ſees, yet forbids me to make any uſe of it, ſince the breaking of all communion with another Church is the extern act of Schiſm, and ſo not juſtifiable (by the Doctour's Confeſſion elſewhere) by any cauſe or motives.] But to this the anſwer is brief, 1. that he did not ſo ſincerely, as he would ſeem, and is obliged, who complains of inſincerity in others, to change my words, and for [withdrawing from all communion] to inſert [breaking all communion] to which my hypotheſis is no-way liable.

30. I ſuppoſe two diſtinct Cœtus at Antioch, as he very well knows, one of Jews, the other of Gentiles, and no more a Schiſm in this, than in two diſtinct Churches of different Nations now-a-days, which have no dependance or ſubordination the one to the other, but each enjoy their own Ceremonies and Communion apart, yet as members of the Catholick Church of Chriſt. And if this be no Schiſm, as ſure there is not the leaſt appearance of any, then how is St. Peter become a Schiſmatick, or what communion doth he break by my hypotheſis? Is it becauſe I ſay he withdraws from all communion? I have formerly ſhew'd, that in this there was nothing new, or over and above the diſtinct Cœtus, (wherein there was no Schiſm) ſave onely the leaving to eat (which I ſuppoſe alſo includes free converſing) with the Gentiles: And 1. that is but a civil thing, and ſo no matter of Schiſm. And 2. S.W. that acknowledges he withdrew from the Gentile diet, if there be Schiſm in that, is himſelf moſt guilty of that which he chargeth on me, i. e. of making Saint Peter a Schiſmatick. And indeed 3. the Text of Scripture cannot be denied to ſay expreſly, that he withdrew from eating with the Gentiles, and therefore if that be to break communion, and to break communion be to be a Schiſmatick, 'tis the Scripture not I, nor S.W. that makes St. Peter a Schiſmatick. Wherein then doth my Hypotheſis involve St. Peter in the leaſt ſhare of guilt, which ſuppoſes no more than this, that the Cœtus being kept apart, from the firſt planting of the Goſpel betwixt the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians at Antioch, onely the Apoſtle of the one, and, I ſuppoſe his Cœtus alſo, freely eating and converſing with the other, upon the coming of the Judaizers from Jeruſalem, they intermitted at that time, or retrenched themſelves the uſe of that liberty, withdrew from eating with the Gentiles, becauſe they knew this would be matter of ſcandal, and avert the Judaizers, who counted it unlawfull to have any familiar converſe with Gentiles.

31. The utmoſt that is imaginable to be objected to St. Peter in this point, muſt be made up of theſe two new hypotheſes. 1. That the Judaizers from Jeruſalem, that would have no communion with the Gentiles, were Schiſmaticks; and 2. that they which for fear of ſcandalizing them, withdrew from eating with the Gentiles, complied with Schiſmaticks. But herein whatſoever mine opinion is, S.W. cannot charge me, 1. becauſe I have not yet ſaid any thing of it; 2. becauſe his hypotheſis yielding that he withdrew from eating with Gentiles, is as liable to this as mine; and 3. becauſe I ſuppoſe the reverence to the Judaical Law ſprang from ſuch an Original, that it rendred it more pardonable at that time, to adhere to it, and on that account to abſtain (as upon obligation of Conſcience) from the ſociety of Gentiles, than it can be now for any Chriſtian member of the Catholick Church to abſtain from Communion
* Dial. cum Tryphon. p. 265. with any other. Thus I am ſure Juſtin Martyr determines it for Circumciſion it ſelf, and the * τὰ διαταχθέντα, the Judaical Ordinances, that he that believes Jeſus to be the Meſſias, and obeys him, and yet βιάλῃ τοῦτα φυλάσσειν, will obſerve and retain theſe, ſhall be ſaved, unleſs he be vehement in perſuading others, and ſay they cannot be ſaved unleſs they obſerve them; which if it be not for the advantage of theſe Judaizers, ſuppoſing them ſuch as thoſe that are mentioned, Act. XV. 1. (and perhaps as little for the bitter, unreconcileable, cenſorious Romaniſt now-a-days) yet I ſhall yield ſo much to S.W's judgment, that now after the Council, it is not certain that theſe are ſuch. And then it is not amiſs to remember, that in the firſt times, it was unqueſtionably lawfull for an Apoſtle to comply with the Jews, that were zealous of their Law, and to uſe, or not to uſe their obſervances, ſuch as that of not eating with Gentiles.

32. This is frequently exemplified in that very St. Paul, who became as a Jew to the Jews, 1 Cor. IX. 20. purified himſelf at Jeruſalem, Act. XXI. circumciſed Timothy, Act. XVI. performed the Ceremonies of the Nazarites Vow at Cenchrea, Act. XVIII. and yet at other times freely made uſe of his Chriſtian Liberty, and all to the ſame end, that he might gain the more, which was ſurely an act of the greateſt Charity, and ſo of utmoſt diſtance from Schiſm.

33. If this be not rejected, he will ſoon ſee through his own anſwer, which he offers to St. Peter's words, of the ἀθέμιτον κολλᾶσθαι ἢ ἐφοδιάζεσθαι, unlawfulneſs of being joined or going in to an Alien, though a

Proſelyte

Proselyte of the Gates; and how far his haste, or want of observation missed him, in not seeing a middle betwixt the Law of Moses, and the Traditions of the Scribes such as Christ rebuked, when yet to the Decrees of their Sanedrim, which are a third thing, different from both these, God himself by Moses in Deuteronomy had commanded obedience, and so had Christ also; and accordingly St. Chrysostome saith of this very Ordinance before us, ὁ Θεὸς ἐνεδείξατο, God had commanded it, though not by Moses, to be παρὰ νόμον, against Law, to be joined with them.

34. But 'tis worth observing, what passion, or prejudice, or resolution to adhere to his own notions, in opposition to expres words of Scripture, can doe. He had resolved it lawfull by the Jewish Law at that time, to converse and associate with Gentiles; and when St. Peter assures him, as of a known thing, that it was ἀθέμιτον, which no Author, or Dictionary in the world could incline him to interpret of any thing, but simply unlawfull, he will yet, rather than leave his hold, construe it not unlawfull, but what their Teachers and Doctours, who governed their Conscience, bore them in hand was unlawfull, exemplifying this by those things, which the Romanist Doctours and Casuists judge to be unlawfull, which are not found forbidden by Christ's Law; Which may serve to perfect our information in that, which Les Provinciales, or the mystery of Jesuitism hath told us of, but withall confin'd to that one Order, that their Doctours and Casuists have not set up Christ's Law for the umpire of their Controversies, but their own probable, oft most improbable opinions; and that as the Jesuits have been popular Confessours, carefull to send no man away melancholy, and so have made many more things lawfull, than Christ left, so others have chosen to deviate on the other side, and, if their Advocate S. W. may be believed, have judged those things unlawfull, which Christ's Law hath not forbidden; which if it be true, must conclude that they are dangerous Dogmatizers, but gives no least satisfaction to the Argument, or aid to S. W's pretensions.

35. Thus much, (and it is a little strange that thus much should by our Controvertist's dexterous industries be rendred necessary) for that small proposition of St. Peter, and his Jewish Proselytes, Gal. 2. withdrawing from all communion and society with the Gentile Christians. If nothing else be gained by it, this piece of observation may, that S. W. was made on purpose to multiply, and perpetuate controversies.

SECT. XVI.

Of the first Bishops of Antioch. The Expedient for reconciling the seeming difference among Authours, about Euodius and Ignatius. A pretended falsification of the Writer of the Constitutions, cleared. Baronius's accordance with me in every part of it, and in my conclusion of the disparate Cœtus from it. No promiscuous ruling of Bishops. What authority belongs to the Constitutions. Proving of Testimonies.

1. HIS sixteenth Section sets out with a very fierce and bloudy resolution to make D. H. the most wilfull self-condemned falsifyer, and agreeably the three pages, 319, 320, 321. are referred to in the Index to discover a voluntary and shamefull falsification left undefended. But with what truth this (and the four sage Observations of this Section laid out on this feat) is suggested, the Reader will easily be informed.

2. In the Tract of Schism I had spoken of the disparate, and not subordinate Churches of Jewish and Gentile Christians at Antioch, and added, that according to this condition of disparate, &c. it is, that the Writer of the Apostolical Constitutions, tells us, that Euodius and Ignatius at the same time sate Bishops of Antioch, one succeeding St. Peter, the other St. Paul, one in the Jewish, the other in the Gentile Congregation, and so continued a while, till both the Churches joined, and united together, under Ignatius, who therefore as by Origen and Eusebius he is called the second, so by St. Jerom is called the third Bishop of Antioch, and yet by Athanasius said to be constituted Bishop after the Apostles, and by Chrysostome, that the Apostles hands were laid on him, whilst yet Theodoret affirms him to have received the Archisacerdotal Honour from the hands of St. Peter.] That in these relations there was some seeming difficulty and unreconcileableness, I thought was visible to all, (and therefore no great mastery in S. W. now to discover that) yet had I no reason to suspect the Truth of any one of these relations, and therefore deem'd it necessary to pitch on such an Expedient, as might reconcile all these; and that was briefly this, that as these two Apostles, Peter and Paul, had their different Cœtus at Antioch, the one among the Jewish, the other among the Gentile Christians, so they severally constituted Bishops at their parting thence, Peter, Euodius, and Paul, Ignatius, who continuing together for some time, and at length Euodius dying, and the partition between the Jewish and Gentile Christians being now removed there, St. Peter committed the Jewish portion also, and so the entire flock of that great City, to the Bishop of the Gentile part, Ignatius.

3. That those ancient Writers should mistake, or really contradict one another, in a thing of so recent memory, so easily refutable out of the Records of so famous a City, without any probable motive to seduce, or bait to tempt them out of their way, I thought no man would be so vain as to imagine, and therefore expected not to be reproach'd for offering an easie, obvious clue to extricate this intanglement, and to vindicate the truth of every of the relations; and supposing onely what my hypothesis offers, of the disparate Cœtus, the way was most facile and open, and no difficulty to conceive Euodius and Ignatius Bishops there at the same time, one on the Jewish, the other on the Gentile part, and so either or both of these μετὰ τοὺς Ἀποστόλους, after the Apostles, in the plural, one succeeding one, the other the other Apostle, and as obvious withall to discern Ignatius constituted by Peter in one Authour, who had formerly been ordained by Paul in another, and is therefore said to be ordained by both in a third, and in one respect to be the second Bishop there, as immediately succeeding Paul, and yet in another the third, as succeeding Euodius who succeeded Peter.

4. This being, as I had thought, perspicuously, though (as became a πάρεργον) succinctly set down in the Tract of Schism, all that the Catholick Gentleman returned, was his fastidious scoff, [Upon this wisely laid ground, saith he, he would persuade us, followed the division of the Bishopricks at Antioch, &c.]

And

And ſo having in him no more to reply to, but that which ought to be his own ſhame, his deriding of that which was ſo neceſſary to the underſtanding the Records of the Church, and which he did not, could not attempt to refute, or render improbable, (acknowledging, at leaſt not denying the diviſion of the Biſhopricks, but rejecting this moſt obvious and expedite, without rendring any other account or reaſon for it) I yet in the Reply pointed at the force of the fore-mention'd Teſtimonies, (which ſignified not ſo much ſeverally, as jointly, and received their greateſt force from that whereof he accuſes them, their ſeeming contradiction) and added ſome more to confirm the ſame, 1. ſhewing from Suidas that Peter ordained Euodius, and 2. ſetting down the place in the Conſtitutions, but citing no more from it, than that Ignatius was ordained by Paul. 3. From the unprinted Acts of Ignatius, and the compilement of Metaphraſtes, evidencing that Ignatius ſucceeded Euodius, and Euodius Peter. 4. From Pope Felix III. agreeing with Theodoret, that Ignatius was ordained by Peter, and laſtly from Johannes Malela, (known by the name of Antiochenus, and therefore probably acquainted with the Annals, and particular tranſactions of that City, and his name and authority no prodigy among Scholars, though, which was not my fault, S. W. have not formerly heard of him) that it was a time, when Peter paſs'd by Antioch in his way to Rome, that the Biſhop Euodius happened to die, and Ignatius was ſettled in his Throne by him. Which as it was eaſily interpretable, and intelligible, according to the hypotheſis of the diſparate Cœtus, at length united, and governed together by Ignatius, (for then Ignatius having ſate together with Euodius for ſome time, being ordained by Paul, as Euodius by Peter, might afterward ſucceed Euodius by St. Peter's appointment, and be Biſhop, and in the latter ſtyle, Patriarch over all the Chriſtians at Antioch, Jews, and Gentiles alſo, and then St. Chryſoſtome's words would be exactly true, that the hands of the Apoſtles, in the plural, St. Peter's as well as St. Paul's, had been laid on him, not at the ſame but at divers times,) ſo it could not be underſtood, but by this way, without expreſs contradicting thoſe that make Ignatius Paul's, and Euodius Peter's immediate Succeſſour, and thoſe again that ſay Paul laid his hands on Ignatius, which he did not at that time, being not then upon the place, when Peter ordain'd him.

5. This being thus clear, and no place left for any appearance to the contrary, but from S. W's excellent quality of ſowing of teeth in every field, from whence contentions and contradictions are obliged to ſpring up among thoſe, that, till he came, had lived very amicably together, I ſhall not think fit to recount particularly the arts, by which he hath, as he hopes, engaged them in eternal feuds; he that will not accept of the one way of reconciling diſtant Relations, need no more gifts, but that one of imperſuaſible obſtinacy, to perfect ſuch an enterprize to his own ſatisfaction, and that is all I ſhall need to add, to what hath been already ſaid, in return to all his queint obſervations on this Section. Onely the voluntary and ſhamefull falſification, which was to be inferr'd by this medium, the cloud which his obſervations ſhould caſt before the Reader's eyes (of which he will perſuade him, firſt that it is a falſification, and then, that it remains undefended) muſt, to avoid his noiſes, be now briefly accounted for.

6. That it was not before defended, to be no falſification, the reaſon is plain, becauſe having in the Reply to the Catholick Gentleman ſaid that, which I verily thought had prevented, and ſo would competently cure all miſunderſtandings in that buſineſs of Euodius and Ignatius, in the anſwer to Sch. Diſar. I choſe rather to refer to what was there ſaid, than to enter into a particular ſurvey of all, or any of his exceptions, which were by that Reply, that he pretended not to have yet ſeen, ſufficiently foreſtall'd. And had it been his intereſt either to ſee himſelf, or to leave his Reader the free uſe of his Eyes, I am ſtill of opinion, that ſhorteſt would have been my fulleſt way of Return to him.

7. But now that his clamours are repeated, and may in time ring ſo long in his own ears, till he believe they have ſome ſolidity of Truth under them, I ſhall no longer defer to ſecure him from the ſnares, he is willing to be caught in, and aſſure him, that as I ſet down no place in the Tract of Sch. ſo I ſet down no words from the Writer of the Conſtitutions, (what he would conclude from the tranſlation letter is vain, the ſame every-where belonging, as to proper names, ſo to words that have the ſpecial influence on the matter in hand, ſuch as the word [ſame] in that place) I onely recited a ſenſe, which I knew was deducible from thence, viz. that both Euodius and Ignatius ſate Biſhops of Antioch at the ſame time, one ſucceeding St. Peter, the other St. Paul, which being interpreted of the Jewiſh and Gentile Cœtus, (for elſe there muſt be two Biſhops in the ſame City, which in no other caſe but this, is own'd by ancient Records) would infer two diſparate and not ſubordinate Churches at Antioch, for ſome time; which being my concluſion, was, I thought, and muſt ſtill think, competently concluded thence, though neither the premiſſes nor the Concluſion were in terminis to be found in (as I did not cite them from) thoſe Conſtitutions.

8. I ſhall labour to enlighten him by a parallel; ſuppoſe I ſhould now addreſs my ſpeech to a Catechumenus, and ſay, with one of his Romiſh Mothers, that Moſes tells us ſix thouſand years ſince, that the Omnipotent Creatour formed a world of Creatures, Angels and Men, &c. and ſhould cite neither Book, Chapter nor Verſe, (as I ſuppoſe his Oral Traditours do not) and ſuppoſe S. W. ſhould over-hear this Lecture, would he preſently draw up his action againſt me for a voluntary, notorious falſification, and aſſure the Catechumenus that I conceal'd the place, becauſe I knew there was no ſuch word there, and then make all this manifeſt by referring the Reader to Gen. 1. 1. where the words are onely theſe, In the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth, no mention of ſix thouſand years, of Omnipotent, of World, of Angels, &c. Would not this be ſome ſurprize to him that had not been very familiarly acquainted with the practices of common Barreters, or the diſputes of ſuch Controvertiſts as S. W? and yet this is the very proportion of his preſent dealing.

* Reply, p. 63. 9. The words in the Conſtitutions, to which I related (without citing them then) I * after cited in part (before the birth of his Sch. Diſ.) from l. VII. c. 47. Ἰγνάτιος ὑπὸ Παύλου, at Antioch Euodius was ordain'd by Peter, and Ignatius by Paul] Is there then 1. any difficulty from hence to conclude, that the Ordination of each of theſe was to the office of Biſhop? I ſuppoſe he will make a ſhift to acknowledge that; and if ſo, then 2. either they were Biſhops there at the ſame time with Peter, and Paul, (and then there were at once four Biſhops of that City, and that is four Heads) or elſe they ſucceeded them, which therefore will not be his intereſt to deny. And if they ſucceeded them, then 3. they came to thoſe Sees, when thoſe Apoſtles departed thence; if ſo, then 4. either Paul ſtaid there ſo long after Peter, that Euodius was dead, before his departing, (which is againſt all Annals) or elſe Ignatius who ſucceeded Paul, and Euodius who ſucceeded Peter, muſt ſit at the ſame time Biſhops at Antioch; and if they did ſo, then 5. there were two diſparate Cœtus at Antioch, which was the thing I was to demonſtrate hence, and ſo neither premiſſes, nor Concluſion have failed me, nor have I need of the leaſt falſification to aſſiſt the words, which S. W. himſelf reads in the Conſtitutions, to infer the utmoſt I pretend, or need to draw from them.

Euodius

10. And herein I have yet ſome confidence to give this very S.W. full ſatisfaction, having a medium of conviction at hand, which his moſt obſtinate ἀναπολογία cannot reſiſt, or queſtion the force of, the Teſtimony of his own * Baronius in theſe words, Hoc eodem anno Euodio Epiſcopo Antiocheno ex hac vita ſublato, ſubrogatur qui aliquando Collega fuit, Ignatius. In the year of Chriſt 71. (a competent ſpace after Paul's leaving Antioch) Euodius Biſhop of Antioch dying, Ignatius is ſurrogated in his ſtead, who had ſome time ſate his Collegue. In which relation, though I cannot conſent to the exactneſs of his Chronology, which placeth this two years after Peter's death, when the Ancients agree in the contrary, that Peter's hands were impoſed on Ignatius, yet the variation is but of a few years from Malela's account, who ſets it at the time, of Peter's going to Rome, which was ſoon attended with his Martyrdom. Meanwhile the Cardinal is clear for Ignatius having ſometime ſate Collegue with Euodius, (which is all I pretend from him) referring us, for the difference among Writers, whether Euodius or Ignatius ſucceeded Peter, to what he had formerly ſaid in that point. What that was, I have alſo formerly more than intimated, but ſhall (to overcome S. W's reſolved Scepticiſm) again recite from that † Cardinal, Legimus apud Clementis Conſtitutiones, quibus interdum uſi ſunt viri ſanctiſſimi, nec non eruditiſſimi, Antiochenæ Eccleſiæ à Petro Euodium, à Paulo verò Ignatium creatos eſſe Epiſcopos, nec ſane unum poſt alium, ut de cæteris ibi dicitur, ſed ſimul. We reade in Clement's Conſtitutions which moſt holy and learned men have ſometimes uſed, that Euodius was by Peter, and Ignatius by Paul created Biſhop of the Church at Antioch, and not one of them after the other, as of the reſt it is there ſaid, but together. What can be more manifeſt to every particle of that I pretended from theſe Conſtitutions? I had ſaid, that Writer tells us, that Euodius and Ignatius at the ſame time ſate Biſhops at Antioch, and he agreeing with me in all, particularly by the [ſimul (and Collega) nec unus poſt alium, at the ſame time (his Collegue) and not one after another] hath ſomewhat exceeded me, in ſaying expreſly Legimus, We reade, and citing l. 7. c. 46. (I ſuppoſe the Printer ſhould have ſet 47.) in the margent, when yet, alas, none of theſe ſyllables are to be read there.

* An. 71. n. XL.

† An. 45. n. XIV.

11. And then what a voluntary, ſhamefull, undefenſible falſificatour muſt this great Cardinal be recorded to be in the back ſide of S. W's Diptycks (and that were a crime much above the pitch of calumniating a Proteſtant, even rendring him κατήγορον τῶν ἀδελφῶν, an accuſer of his own Brethren, or rather Fathers, ſhould he be guilty of it) or elſe what a partial indefenſible Judge is our S. W. which can ſolemnly charge that on me, for a wilfull and ſhamefull forgery, which another might have ſaid (and yet alſo have profeſs'd to ſpeak truth as demurely as I ever did) without his leaſt diſpleaſure?

12. And as that Cardinal hath fully own'd my premiſſes in this particu'ar, ſo doth he my Concluſion derived thence alſo, telling us that their ſitting together was at that time when a diſſention aroſe between the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians, during which ſpace, this remedy was uſed, ut uterque ſederet, that two Biſhops ſhould be in the ſame City, one preſiding over the Jews, the other over the Gentile Chriſtians. What reparations he will make this great Cardinal, whom he hath thus branded and wounded through the Doctour's ſides, I now leave him to conſider at his beſt leiſure; and having no kind of concernment in the reſt of the Exaggerations of this Section, farther than I have already given evident grounds of anſwering them, by ſhewing the way of reconciling all ſeeming contradictions, I haſten to take my leave of it, onely minding him of theſe few things by way of ſtricture, 1. That there is a wide difference betwixt two Preachers aſſigning themſelves, two halfs of a City for the convenience of their Auditours, which he here fanſies, and two Biſhops preſiding in the ſame City, which our Teſtimonies expreſs, the former always frequent, and every day exemplified in greater Towns and Cities, the latter never allowed, or heard of among Catholicks, but in this one caſe of the Jewiſh and Gentile Cœtus in the ſame City, (and ſo there is no place for his old trick repair'd to afreſh, of promiſcuous preaching, and prudent managery, for two Biſhops in the ſame City ruled not promiſcuouſly, though two Presbyters might preach ſo) 2. That my Argument being at this time founded in the ſeeming contradictions of the Ancients, 'twere ſtrange if that very thing ſhould be a valid objection againſt me, who have ſhew'd the one way of reconciling them all, particularly of according Theodoret and Malela, with the Writer of the Conſtitutions, on which he moſt inſiſts.) 3. That though we think the Conſtitutions were not written, as they ſeem to pretend, by the Apoſtles, yet we acknowledge them an ancient piece, and in matter of hiſtory (ſo eaſie to be compared with the Records of each City, and to be refuted and ſhamed, and ſo their diſguiſe to be utterly loſt, ſhould they thus falſifie) we allow them with Baronius that conſideration, which, he ſaith, holy and learned men have yielded them. 4. That it is a method, I think, not exemplified, which he is pleaſed to impoſe on me, * firſt to prove the neceſſity of each Teſtimonies being true, before I found any Argument in reconciling them; whereas I had always been taught, that he that produces Teſtimonies, preſumes, and is not to prove their Truth, for if that be otherwiſe done, he hath no need of, or benefit by the teſtimonies; If he clear their conſonancy one with another, and their propriety ſingly, or in conſort, to induce his concluſion, no more can be required of him. 5. That the one thing, which in order to reconciling the difference was obſervable from Malela, he is not pleaſed to take notice of, the circumſtance of time, when Peter ordain'd Ignatius, viz. at his paſſing by Antioch to Rome, which muſt needs be after the time of Paul's leaving him his Succeſſour there, or his ſuppoſed ſitting, or Collegueſhip with Euodius, which Baronius as well as the Authour of the Conſtitutions yields us, and ſo an account of both Apoſtles impoſing their hands on him (at ſeveral times,) which Chryſoſtome had told us, which being adverted, removes all the feigned difference with the Conſtitutions, which he ſo triumphs in. Laſtly, that when he complains * I have produced never a teſtimony, which ſaith Euodius was conſtituted by Paul over the Gentiles] he diſcovers, that he knows not at all, or elſe adverts not to the common Terms of the Debate, for I pretend not, that either Euodius was not at all over the Gentiles, or Conſtituted by St. Paul, but (directly the contrary to both theſe) by Peter over the Jews, and that I have ſufficiently teſtified; and ſo I leave him to Philoſophize of Stocks and Scyons, which are his well choſen, more ſafe, and more innocent divertiſement.

* P. 325.

* P. 328. l. 13.

SECT. XVII.

Deduction from Teſtimonies without expreſs terms. Peter and Paul Founders, and Biſhops of Rome. But one Biſhop in a City, ſave in this caſe of Jewiſh and Gentile Cœtus. Of the firſt Biſhops of Rome. Epiphanius's words of them. St. Jerom's, Baronius's. Gentium Eccleſia in Proſper. Nothing but expreſs words allowed by S. W. Generalis Eccleſia explicative of Gentium. S. W's dealings. Short work with his XVIII. Section.

1. IN his ſeventeenth Section he takes a view of his great and ſucceſsfull performances in Sch. Diſ. againſt the ſix Teſtimonies, brought by me, ſaith he, to prove that St. Peter was over Jews onely at Rome, and St. Paul over Gentiles. And aſſuring himſelf, that he had brought an unanſwerable charge againſt me, that none of them had a word to my purpoſe, &c. he hath now nothing to doe, but to diſplay his Banner, and to triumph in his paſt feats, ſince, nothing is returned to his Exceptions in my Anſwer, but by reference to my Reply to the Cath. Gent. nothing found there, but in Sect. 7. par. 6. (for which I confeſs to him that the Printer had miſtakingly ſet c. 9.) and, ſaith he, nothing there, but the enumerating thoſe teſtimonies again, and my Concluſion, that ſure there can be no need of farther proofs, or teſtimonies from antiquity in this matter. On which temptation, his wit, getting the advantage and reins of his Judgment, lets flie upon the word [ſure] firſt in great ſeverity 'tis a bold-faced word, then, being in better humour, 'tis a ſure Card, and that exemplifyed by the Ace of Trumps, and ſtreight, 'tis transformed, and appears again in a more ſanctified ſhape, the ſure nail ſpoken of by Salomon.

2. To all this I anſwer, 1. That I have no kind of Reply to his wit-part; my faculties, he oft tells me, lye the dryer way; However, he hath had the comfort to hear it repeated, let that ſuffice him. 2. That thoſe ſix teſtimonies were not ſo much brought to prove any new Theſis, as to exemplifie in Rome alſo, what was before ſufficiently proved in general, and exemplified in Antioch, and therefore if there had been ſome defect in the Evidence, that might be repair'd by the analogy held between Rome and the former paſſages. 3. That the Diſarmer, having barely repeated thoſe ſix teſtimonies, and then told the Reader they came not home to the evidencing of the buſineſs of excluſive juriſdictions, becauſe they had no reſtrictive terms, ſuch as onely, ſolely, alone, to none elſe, I did till now really think, that no farther Reply was neceſſary, there being no ſuch Law impoſed on Teſtimony-evidences or probations, that the Authorities cited ſhould have the concluſion in terminis, it being ſufficient, if by deduction it were duely inferred from them; And I cannot but wonder, that he that ſo much prefers the Oral Tradition of the Catholick Mothers, before any kind of Scripture, upon this chief reaſon of the Apologiſt, becauſe the Mothers deliver their Propoſition in words many ways varied, and ſo write the inerrable ſenſe in their childrens hearts, cannot allow any Teſtimony, but what expreſſes the words, wherein the Concluſion is propoſed; Are there no ſuch things as equivalence or deduction? If I have deduced any thing from Teſtimonies, which either ſeverally, or joyntly they are not able to afford, I ſhall be content to undergoe S. W's ſevereſt diſpleaſures, but I may ſtill hope, this is not my guilt at this time.

3. The immediate Concluſion that I was then to infer, was the diſtinction of the Jewiſh and Gentile Cœtus at Rome, ſeverally governed by Peter and Paul, and Biſhops after them aſſign'd by each; And this is regularly deducible in all the parts, by all, though not in each, by every of the Teſtimonies. Thoſe of them that Record Peter and Paul to have been both Founders of the Church of Rome, in the latitude, being added to what was before proved, (and now vindicated) will be acknowledged to have ſome force in them; for ſuppoſing 1. what no man can, and S.W. doth not doubt, that Rome was made up of Jews and Gentiles. 2. The teſtimony of Scripture being plain, that one of theſe was Apoſtle of the Jews, and the other of the Gentiles; and 3. that before this, they had joyn'd hands of fellowſhip, the one to go to the Jews, the other to the Gentiles; this will be a good foundation of this proof, and Irenæus, and Epiphanius, and Euſebius, and Gaius, and Dionyſius, and Proſper, and the very Seal of the Popes, teſtifie this; the five former in terminis, and the laſt by intimation; for why ſhould St. Paul's image be joyn'd with St. Peter's in their Seal (yea and allowed the nobler place,) but that he had the honour of founding the Church among them, and was either in that, or ſome other reſpect, the more honourable perſon of the two?

4. But then thoſe that make theſe two Apoſtles and Founders, to be alſo two Biſhops in this Church, (which is the expreſs affirmation of Epiphanius) ſay enough to perfect the Evidence. For how can one City admit of two Biſhops (each of which is a ſingular Governour in his Cœtus, be it leſs or greater, and acts not in parity, or promiſcuouſly with any other, which is S.W's αἰτον ψευδος, principal miſtake) ſave onely in reſpect of theſe diſparate Cœtus, which do as it were divide the City into two Cities, the one Rome into
* Ti. 4. p. 5. lin. the Jewiſh, and Gentile Inhabitants thereof? It is * St. Chryſoſtome's queſtion, belonging to thoſe firſt times (not to that place, but to Philippi, of St. Paul's Plantation) τί τοῦτο; μιᾶς πόλεως πολλοὶ Ἐπίσκοποι ἦσαν; What is this? Were there many Biſhops of one City? and he anſwers it, οὐδαμῶς, No by no means: and ſo, from his ſenſe, the Scholiaſts on the Epiſtle to Titus, c. 1. 5. reſolve it the Apoſtles appoint-† Theophyl. in Ep. pag. 643. ment, † ἐκέλευε πόλιν ἔχειν ἴδιον ποιμένα, that every City ſhould have their proper Paſtour or Biſhop, and that ἄλλος ἄλλο μέρος τῆς οἰκουμένης διανέμηται, in the diſtribution of the world, one had one part of it, another another; and never any news of two Biſhops in one City, but when the City was thus divided into two Cœtus; nor this, but when there was this reaſon for it, the inveterate partition between Jews and Gentiles, which being ſuch as could have no place in any other circumſtances, cannot reaſonably be extended to any other; And this was the very reaſon, why I placed ſo much weight in Epiphanius's words, that they were not onely Apoſtles but Biſhops at Rome, for that abſolutely precluded the evaſion of promiſcuous preaching, on which now he wholly depends, but can do ſo no longer, when he ſees, 'twas not onely in preaching, but ruling, as Biſhops, on which my Argument proceeded, and ſuch, with all but Presbyterians, are ſingle perſons in every Cœtus.

5. Then as theſe Biſhops had their ſeveral Deacons, St. Paul Linus, and St. Peter Cletus and Clemens, of which Ignatius their Contemporary aſſures us, ſo when theſe are found to ſucceed them in the Biſhops Chair, and ancient Writers affirm, ſome, that Linus was the firſt Biſhop, after the Apoſtles, ſome that

Cletus,

Cletus, ſome that Clemens, and we have no reaſon to prejudge the Truth of any of their affirmations, I leave the impartial Reader to judge between S. W. and me, whether there be any ſo fit an Expedient to compoſe this difference, as that which bears proportion with what was formerly ſaid of Euodius, and Ignatius at Antioch, (confirmed then by the ſuffrage of their own Baronius) that Linus the Deacon of Paul ſucceeded him, and Cletus was ordained by Peter, and on his death Clement St. Peter's other Deacon; and then, whether there can be any ground of queſtioning, but that theſe were in their ſeveral Cœtus, Linus in the Gentile, Cletus and Clemens in the Jewiſh part, and conſequently whether there be any the minuteſt part of my Concluſion, which is not inferred from my Teſtimonies.

6. To this laſt particular, the novelty whereof renders it moſt queſtionable, I deſire the words of Epiphanius, ſet down in the fourth Section of this Chapter, may be accommodated, where Succeſſion of Biſhops at Rome is thus deſcribed, Peter and Paul, Linus and Cletus, Clemens, &c. And then as there can be no queſtion, but the two firſt, Peter and Paul ſate together, becauſe died together, and ſucceeded not one the other, ſo it will be very obvious to marſhall the other three with reſpect to this pattern, the two former Linus and Cletus ſitting together, Cletus or Anacletus ſucceeding Peter, whoſe Deacon he was, and Linus ſucceeding Paul, having been his Deacon, and Clemens ſucceeding Cletus, andout-living Linus, under whom alſo both parts, Jews and Gentiles, at length were joyned, and then Evariſtus, &c. in a continued ſeries of ſucceſſion one after another.

7. Thus when St. * Jerom places Clemens quartum poſt Petrum Romanum Epiſcopum, the fourth Biſhop after Peter, allowing Linus the ſecond and Cletus the third place, he adds, Plerique Latinorum ſecundum poſt Petrum Apoſtolum putant fuiſſe Clementem, that the Latines do moſt of them think that Clement was the ſecond after Peter, which two opinions cannot rationally be reconciled, without the way I point at, nor yet with any reaſon the truth of either of them queſtioned; not Jerom's, who, it ſeems, had ſo much for his, as with him out-weighed the affirmation of the greateſt part of the Latines; not the Latines who were certainly the moſt competent teſtifyers in this matter ſo lately acted among them, eſpecially when the ſame St. Jerom * elſewhere affirms, that Clement an Apoſtolical perſon, poſt Petrum Romanam rexit Eccleſiam, governed the Roman Church after Peter, (meaning, I ſuppoſe, immediately after his death) and ſo many others alſo; which makes me remember one paſſage in Baronius, who though he never conquered the Difficulty of the Succeſſion of theſe firſt Biſhops of Rome, yet ſeems to have miſs'd it very narrowly, for having, as was ſhewed from him in the laſt Section, clear'd it at Antioch, that after Peter and Paul, Euodius and Ignatius ſate Biſhops together, till the coaleſcence of the two Cœtus, and then Ignatius yielded all to Euodius, adds in a Parentheſis, ut Clemens Lino, as Clemens had done to Linus; which if he did, then before that, Linus and Clemens ſate together, which is all that can be incumbent on me to prove in this matter, and cannot now be denyed me, without contradicting his own Baronius, a ſecond time, in ſo ſhort a compaſs; Thus much in general to his ſuggeſtions againſt the evidence of my Teſtimonies.

* De ſcrip. Eccl. in Clem. c. 15.

* In Iſ. 52. ult. to. 4. p. 170.

8. But out of the whole quarry he ſingles out his choſen particular, that of Proſper, which he reſolves to gorge himſelf upon. And when I had tranſlated Gentium Eccleſiam there, the Church of the Nations, and S. W. had reſolved it muſt be the Church of the Gentiles, and on my ſide it was urged, that Jeruſalem, and John's Jewiſh Converts were contained in that phraſe, and ſo it could not be the Gentiles, in oppoſition to the Jews, but Nations that comprehended both Jews and Gentiles, 'tis a little remarkable how S. W. hath behaved himſelf; 1. He ſaith, the grounds of my aſſurance are found onely in my own ſayings, and no where in any teſtimony. 2. That if I can ſhew him any word in any teſtimony yet produced, which expreſſes that James preach'd to Jews onely in Jeruſalem, or John to Jews onely in Epheſus, he will pardon me the anſwering this whole Book, and then follows ſcoffing, and railing, and nothing elſe for many lines together to the end of the Paragraph.

9. To all which, becauſe no other anſwer can be due, I annex onely my Obſervations, 1. That what is not in expreſs terms affirmed in a Teſtimony, is not, by S. W's Logick, and methods of waging Controverſies, to be found in it; and then the creation of the World is not to be found in Gen. 1. 1. becauſe there is not the term [World] but onely the Heaven and the Earth, and then the Controvertiſt muſt make no uſe of his reaſon to deduce the moſt unavoidable conſequences, but onely of his Eyes to judge of Words and Syllables, (the reaſon, I muſt ſuppoſe, that a * while ſince he told me, I ſhould have ſaid his miſreadings, when I ſaid his miſunderſtandings, it being unimaginable, it ſeems, for him to underſtand any thing, but what he reads, i. e. to deduce or conclude any thing from words, but the words themſelves) This is beſt exemplified in the matter now before us; I proved that Gentes muſt in this place ſignifie Nations, Jewiſh and other, and not Gentiles excluſively to Jews, becauſe Jeruſalem is expreſly named in the Teſtimony, and Jews intimated in another paſſage of it, and thence I ſaid, theſe Nations are ſure of Jews as well as Gentiles; and yet ſaith he, there are no grounds of my aſſurance in any Teſtimony] Is not Jeruſalem in this Teſtimony, a ground to conclude, that Gentes compriſe Judæa, of which that was the Metropolis, and ſo cannot be rendred Gentiles, in oppoſition to them; or can any thing be concluded from another, if this be not? And yet it falls out, that the Context in that Writer makes it yet more undenyable, if it be poſſible: for if the Reader conſult the † place, he ſhall find theſe words immediately ſubſequent, Huic generali Eccleſiæ communicans Chriſtianus eſt Catholicus, with this General Church he that communicates is a Catholick, by which 'tis evident, that Gentium Eccleſia, is Generalis Eccleſia, the General or Univerſal Church, which it cannot be, unleſs it contain the Jewiſh as well as the Gentile Chriſtians, and ſo be rendred the Church of the Nations indefinitely, i. e. of all Nations.

* P. 320.

† Proſper de pro. & præd. Dim. Temp. c. 5. p. 159.

10. My ſecond Obſervation is, that when the matter is ſo evident, as that nothing can be more, till Jeruſalem be removed out of Judæa, or James ceaſe to be Biſhop of the Jews, yet S. W. can ſcoff, and vapour, and make his challenge, fixing on that, on which I do not at all fix my Argument, or Interpretation, and yet tell the Reader with full confidence, that on it alone I build it. Can the bounds of ſincerity or ingenuity be more tranſgreſs'd, than by thus doing? Or can any thing be more manifeſt, than that de doeth thus? I infer the neceſſity of my Interpretation of Gentes, ſo as it might contain Jews, from two mentions in the paſſage, one of James at Jeruſalem, the other of John at Epheſus, becauſe Jeruſalem was in Judæa, and John's Converts at Epheſus were Jews. He aſſures the Reader I build upon two other things alone, viz. That St. James preach'd to Jews onely in Jeruſalem, and St. John to Jews onely in Epheſus. How ſeaſonable it was in this ſame period to tell the Reader, that it will not onely be laborious and ſhame- full, but impossible satisfactorily to answer his Book, and then to accuse of vanity and open cowardice, will be judged by those that have heard how necessary Ingredients diversion and calumny and seeming invitation are in an S. W. Controvertist.

11. My last Observation is, that against a matter thus evident, and undeniable, he will propose five Objections, i. e. so many Arguments against that which is most manifest to common sense, and then assure the Reader, that this process of mine is made up of such Gotham-absurdities and weak impertinences in a Doctour of Divinity, that 'tis most wearisome to him to stand laying them open. What the Arguments are, I leave the Reader to survey in his * two Pages; and if he can but tell three, I shall adventure on his abilities to answer them. And the like I say, of the business of the Pope's Seals, on which his whole eighteenth Section is spent, which is so evidently set down, and fully vindicated in the † Answer to Sch. Dis. shewing of what it was a proof, and with what it was set in agreement and consonancy onely, and now again in this Sect. n. 3. and the severals by me supposed, and by him denied, so largely vindicated in the former part of this Discourse, that I must not increase the bulk of that which is too big already, more particularly to reflect on it. And so for once I shut up these two Sections together, onely minding him, that my whole process (of which the ἰσοτιμία of Peter and Paul is one part, and perfectly exclusive of subordination) hath prevented all that here he objects to it.

* P. 132, 133.

† Ch. III. Sect. n. 1, 2.

SECT. XVIII.

S. W's challenge. Transforming of words. Difficulty of understanding what is most plain. My weariness of Controversie with what truth pretended. Express words unduly exacted. S. W's instances of more Bishops in one City. Onely in a Schism at Antioch. Pope Damasus's acknowledging Paulinus, when all the East were for Flavianus. S. W's charges cleared. The no efficacy of a May-be in matter of Fact.

1. HIS nineteenth Section reflects on the famous challenge once made by S. W. about the word Onely, and there is but little that falls in upon that occasion, which hath not been punctually spoken to already; yet that he may not think one of his most eminent prizes utterly neglected, I shall give some account of it.

2. And first, the occasion of it offers it self to consideration, which was onely this; In the Tract of Sch. having spoken of St. Peter and St. Paul, and found in ancient Records, that they were both of them Bishops of Antioch, and both of Rome, and shewed how this was to be understood, by the distinction of Cœtus of Jewish and Gentile Christians, in both those Cities, I said [And all this very agreeable to the Story of Scripture, which as (according to the brevity of the Relations there made) it onely sets down St. Peter to be the Apostle of the Circumcision (and of his being so at Rome we make no question) so it affirms of St. Paul, that he preach'd at Rome in his own hired house, receiving them which came to him, Act. 28. 30. which will most fitly be applied to the Gentiles of that City, the Jews having solemnly departed from him, v. 29.] In this passage, before we advance farther toward the triumphant Challenge, I must appeal to all mankind (excepting onely S. W.) 1. Whether I am not the most competent testifier of the meaning of my own words; and 2. whether any more obvious sense of this passage (as far as the word [onely] is concerned) can be imagined, than this, that the Scripture making very brief narrations of St. Peter's story, sets down no more of it in relation to our present matter, than that he was the Apostle of the Circumcision, not telling us particularly of his preaching to the Jewish Cœtus at Rome, &c.

3. That this was my meaning, and nothing but this, I am sure I know, as much as any man can the thoughts of his own heart, and 'tis impossible he should have any tolerable colour of probability to excuse his questioning it; and whether any other meaning could fit the circumstances so readily as this, let any that understands English, judge between us. Yet did S. W. (such is his acumen or candour) miss what was thus obvious, and instead of it, produced two other meanings of the word [onely] 1. That Peter is onely set down as Apostle of the Circumcision, exclusively to James and John.] 2. That he was Apostle of the Circumcision onely. For the former of these, 1. It cannot without violence be drawn out of the words [It onely sets down St. Peter to be Apostle of the Circumcision] not [it sets St. Peter onely] 2. the sense by him imposed, is expressly contradictory to Scripture, to my own words, that James and John were assigned the Jews for their Province, (the one in Judæa, the other in Asia) as well as St. Peter, and to the Interest of my whole Process in this very Controversie. And not onely so, but when he was told of this in Answ. to Sch. Disar. he still adheres, and 1. avers that he enumerated as many Interpretations of the word [onely] as were obvious, 2. that this which I repeated to him was impossible for S. W. to imagine, 3. he offers proofs, that it could not be thought to mean thus, 4. he makes a shift to mistake also the words of my Answer, wherein I explicate them, and because I say the [onely] was set in opposition to the Scriptures making more particular Relation of St. Peter's preaching to the Jewish Cœtus at Rome, he will understand me to say, that the Scripture did make some particular Relation of this matter, when 'tis evident the more particular Relations signify more particular, than that forementioned being Apostle of the Circumcision, and nothing else. 5. He challenges my Conscience, that I cannot be ignorant, that I contradict my self frequently and purposely, and so hath left no round in the Climax of most uncharitable, temptationless Contumely, to which he hath not ascended, rather than he will open his eyes to the cleerest light, or be induced to acknowledge what is most visible to any that shall but have the patience to examine it.

4. As for the second imposed sense, that he was Apostle of the Circumcision onely] that was as far removed from my meaning or words, which were [It onely sets down St. Peter to be the Apostle of the Circumcision,] and he feigns them to have been [of the Circumcision onely.] What can be distorting and deforming of plain words, if this be not? Yet did this No-occasion serve his turn to renew his Challenge, which he confesses he had made twice before (and so might the better have spared the third time, till he saw the success of the former) and being told how unseasonably it was founded, he now replies no word to that, but triumphs in my acceptance of it, upon so tempting an hope as to be at an end of Controversie, verſie, and 1. he dares ſay that I repent I ever medled with it, 2. I ſee my ſelf anſwered, and unable to reply, and then 3. with great exaggeration of words he perſuades the Reader, that I am now bound to ſhew in my Teſtimonies ſome one expreſs reſtrictive word, or excluſive particle, as onely, ſolely, alone, or ſuch like, and becauſe I do not ſo, but infer my Concluſion from three Teſtimonies, his Reader and he know what to think of me, that hazard my Reader's ſalvation on my own bare unauthorized ſayings, and unwarrantable imaginations.

5. To all this I ſhall give him my brief Replies. 1. That though I ſhould be glad to be at an end of Controverſie, when contumely and diſtortion of words, and cauſeleſs cavils are the onely weapons of managing it againſt me, and on that account ſhould not be ſorry to be at an end of this preſent Rejoinder, yet none of theſe inconvenient Attendants of my writing the Tr. of Sch. give me any inclination to repent the writing of it, nor have they diſcouraged me from proceeding to add to a Tract of Fundamentals, a third of Hereſie, on all theſe moſt comprehenſive heads (as before in that of Infallibility) to vindicate our diſtreſſed Church, and approve the temper of it to all lovers of Antiquity, and leave inexcuſable thoſe, that will paſſionately and imperſuaſibly adhere to the Novelty of Oral Traditions of their preſent Church, and caſt out all that adhere to Vincentius's rule of maintaining Catholick Communion. And indeed though I ſhould be very ſorry to have the leaſt controverſie with any but the paſſionate and unreconcileable, and ſhall endeavour to preſerve charity even to them, that have none for others, yet I confeſs not to diſcern the profit of waging Controverſies with ſuch, ſave onely to preſerve others from being deceived by their ſubtilties, or out-faced by their Confidences, or overcome by their noiſes, in charity to whom, I ſhall not be wearied with the length of ſuch tasks as theſe, till I have ſome grounds of hope that they may be ſpared with ſafety.

6. Secondly, when he ſaith I ſee my ſelf anſwered and unable to reply,] he muſt needs be able to aſſure himſelf, that he ſpake with no leaſt ſemblance of truth or modeſty. For when could I be conceived to ſee this? before, or ſince the publiſhing of the Diſpatcher? If before, then 'tis evident that the two onely Anſwers which had been given me by the Catholick Gent. and the Diſarmer, as they were ſeen, ſo they were actually replied to by me; with what Truth then (laying his modeſty aſide) could I be ſaid to ſee my ſelf unable to reply to theſe Anſwers? If ſince, then 1. that ſight could not ſuggeſt to me thoſe words of the tempting hope to be at an end of Controverſies, to which he affixes his confident aſſertion, that I repent I ever medled, &c. for this were for me to divine what he would write, and for him to have ſearched my heart, and found there this piece of augury. And 2. it doth now as much appear, that I have been able to reply, as that he hath written what I reply to; for as to the ſatisfactorineſs of either, that muſt be no more boaſted of by him, than it is preſumed by me, but equally left to the Reader's umpirage, and cannot be otherwiſe, without the groſſeſt begging at once the whole queſtion.

7. Thirdly, it is his great miſtake, if not worſe, to perſuade himſelf, or think fit to perſuade others, that I am now bound to ſhew in my Teſtimonies, ſome one expreſs word or particle, as ſolely, onely, or alone, or the like, not contenting himſelf with any thing elſe. What I undertook, is not to be judged by the terms of his challenge, but by my return to it, and that * was, to offer to his review the Teſtimony from St. Paul and from Epiphanius, the firſt affirming the agreement, betwixt thoſe two Apoſtles, one to execute his office among the Gentiles, the other among the Jews, and the ſecond, that in Rome they were both Biſhops, and from thence by force of a third (that the Cœtus of the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians were kept apart and not mingled) to infer this Concluſion, that St. Peter's Juriſdiction at Rome was reſtrained to the Jews onely, and excluſively to the Gentiles. This then, and evidently no more, was the ſum of my undertaking, to infer my Concluſion from thoſe ſeverals compared together, not to ſhew thoſe expreſs words or ſyllables, which now he calls for; And if I have not fail'd in my deduction, (which formerly hath, and muſt by and by, it ſeems, be again debated) there can be no more incumbent on me by my engagement. The reaſonableneſs of this, hath oft been inſiſted on, and need no farther be confirmed; elſe I might ask him, whether to prove that Rehoboam was King over Judah onely, excluſively to Iſrael, it were not ſufficient to cite 1 King. XII. 16, 17. where yet there is none of thoſe expreſs terms to be found, onely, alone, or ſolely, or the like? Or again, whether the Nicene Fathers might not conclude the conſubſtantiality from the Scripture without finding that word or ſyllables expreſs'd there; in brief, whether it be not as warrantable to conclude from premiſſes, as to tranſcribe words, and if, as the † Apologiſt ſaid, the ſame meaning be explicable by hundreds of different expreſſions, what Law can interdict me from the uſe of Ninety nine, and confine me to ſome one of thoſe hundred, that my Adverſary ſees is not in my Teſtimonies, and therefore chuſes it out for me. And to ſay 'tis but a moſt facile thing that he demands, and ask what can be eaſier than to ſhew onely, ſolely, alone, or the like, expreſſed in a Teſtimony, when the Teſtimonies being already produced, his eyes may have aſſured him, there is none ſuch there, is indeed a rare way to inhance the glories of his Victories, but withall to make no difference betwixt facile and impoſſible, it being moſt impoſſible that any ſyllable ſhould by any Limbeck be extracted out of a Teſtimony, which is not in it, unleſs what is wanting in the letter, may be allowed to be made up by deduction or equivalence, which being denied by this rigorous Controvertiſt, it remains, that no man muſt prove by Teſtimony what he hath not tranſcribed from it, a Decree to be added to Draco's Laws, at S. W's review and new Edition of them; which being accepted by the reſt of Mankind, he will then hope, though till then he cannot, to maintain his Univerſal Paſtourſhip (which yet is as little expreſs'd in the words from which he intends to deduce them) and triumph in Controverſie.

* Anſw. p. 50.

† P. 81.

8. But 1. the Teſtimonies, he ſaith, have been anſwered over and over; and I ſay, they have now, after all his Anſwers, been defended to infer what I conclude from them. 2. He complains that there is an Ellipſis in the firſt of them; and I anſwer, that no obligation lay on me to uſe no Text of Scripture, that had an Ellipſis in it; mean while I ſupplied the Ellipſis ſo, as he cannot, I am ſure doth not, complain of any fault in that; 3. he ſaith the whole force of the ſecond lies in the word Biſhops, and wonders why I ſay Peter and Paul were the ſame perſons both Apoſtles and Biſhops; I anſwer, I ſaid the ſame perſons were both, that he might not think the words imported no more, than that one was the Apoſtle of Rome, the other the Biſhop, as were Paul and Timothy at Epheſus, and ſo one under another, but both Apoſtles there, and both Biſhops of that City, which could not be, unleſs there were ſeveral diſparate, co-ordinate, not ſubordinate Cœtus there; nor ſo neither, unleſs on this account, that one conſiſted of Jewiſh, the other of Gentile Christians, which being kept severally, one from the other, under their several Bishops, it was consequent, that he that was Bishop of the one Cœtus, was Bishop of that onely, and so exclusively to the other. 4. He saith again, that the third Testimony was borrowed from the Arch-heretick Pelagius, and I have already told him, 1. That this is affirmed without a Constat, and may as reasonably be denied; and however, 2. that this is no part of Pelagius's heresie, but a plain matter of fact, far removed from any of his Interests, wherein therefore he may be as competent a Testifier, as any other; and lastly, that their own Baronius hath been now produced to testify it as well as he. 5. He saith, the Testimony from Pelagius hath not a word of exclusion of the Jewish Cœtus at Rome, much less that the Apostles were exclusively over these two Cœtus; I answer, that because it hath not, therefore I make use of Epiphanius's affirmation, that there were two Bishops there, as my proof of this, and demand, why I may not as reasonably make that conclusion as applicable to Rome, as their own Baronius upon the same medium concludes it of Antioch, if not of Rome also? 6. That I have no reason to think that all the Jews of the dispersion were so zealous, since Act. 13. 42. both Jews and Gentiles were together, when St. Paul preached at Antioch of Pisidia, and most expresly, Act. 14. 1.] I answer, 1. that by affirming it was thus at Rome, I am no way obliged to affirm it was thus every-where else; nor do I prove it was thus at Rome, by any such medium, but by the Analogy between the two Bishops at Rome, with the like at Antioch, acknowledged to have been on this occasion, and by the agreement between these two Apostles, one to go to Jews, the other to Gentiles, dated after these instances of his, yet before their going to Rome; yet 2. his instances have little of pertinency in them, the Gentiles, Act. XIII. 42. being evidently Proselytes of the Jews, who might, no doubt, if but Proselytes of their Gates, come into their Synagogue with some such distinction as there was betwixt the two Courts of the Temple, the one for the Jews, the other for the Gentiles, and there is nothing in the Jewish zeal, by my hypothesis, contrary to that. The same is evident of the Greeks, Ch. XIV. 1. that were Proselytes of the Jews also; Nor indeed 3. doth the instance of Jews and Gentile Proselytes unconverted, as these were, at all belong to this matter, the difference I speak of, being founded in their receiving the Gospel, for then the question arose, whether the Gentile Believers should be bound to be circumcised or no, Act. XV. 1. and then the difficulty of conversing freely with the uncircumcised (which caused the different Cœtus we speak of) for which there was no occasion before the Conversion to the Faith, the Jews knowing well enough, and observing their appointed distances with the Gentiles, whether Proselytes or not.

9. At length he will consider of proofs taken from the two Bishops in one City, and will give me an instance sufficient to destroy my universal position: And what is that? Why Meletius and Paulinus, Paulinus and Flavianus, Flavianus and Evagrius, who successively two together Bishops of Antioch.] But I wonder he went so far from home as Antioch, for such a rarity as this; he might as well have given us two or three Bishops of Rome, sitting together in the time of Schism. For, that thus it was at Antioch, I shall need no scruing deductions, (as he calls them) his own Baronius shall decide it betwixt us, * Cum scissa est Schismate Ecclesia Antiochena, When the Church of Antioch was cut asunder by a Schism, speaking of this of Paulinus and Meletius. Nay it was kindly done of S. W. that he named us but two Bishops at that time at Antioch, it being certain, that there were † three, Euzojus the Arian, Meletius that had been elected by the Arians, and followed by those that had been baptized by Arians; and Paulinus, that had never been thus polluted, yet was too hastily ordained by Lucifer Calaritanus, without the consent of those which were to be satisfied in it. That this Schismatical Division continued 85 years, he * elsewhere tells him out of Theodoret, lib. 3. c. 5. though he doth more than once, upon good reasons, deny that Schism to last so many years as Theodoret assigns to it. I need add no more of what is thus obvious to every eye.

* An. 372. n. XLVII.

† Id. An. 362. n. CLXXX.

* Ib. n. CCXIV.

10. But as long as the Cœtus of Jewish and Gentile Christians under Peter and Paul, Linus and Clemens are not thus stigmatized by S. W. (as I presume they are not) I shall hope that this example of his will not be thought pertinent, or parallel to the present case, or prejudicial to my conclusion, till I shall give him some reason to think it my opinion, that in case of Schism, there were never two Bishops in one City. As yet I have found no need of such refuges, and I assure my self I shall not, and therefore may be allowed to conclude, that my Conclusion from the two Bishops at once, stands unshaken, and that S. W. hath no other instances, but what are of this kind, else sure he would not have opposed my Conclusion on such grounds as these, especially considering how little it is for the present Romanists interest to have it remembred, that when Pope Damasus, and his Western Bishops acknowledged Paulinus, and wrote ὡς Ἐπισκόπῳ Ἀντιοχείας συνήθεις Ἱστολὰς ἂς συνοδικὰς καλῶν, Customary, which they called Synodical Letters to him as to the Bishop of Antioch, and as for Diodorus and Acacius, which had ordained Flavianus, ἀκοινωνήτους εἶχον, they refused communion with them, as * Sozomen tells us, yet all the East, saith † Baronius, and the Council of Constantinople (which I suppose, by τοὺς Δυτικοὺς, the Western partition, Can. 5. meant those of Paulinus's part) were for Flavianus, Meletius's successour, against Paulinus, asserting him to be the true Bishop, and the Pope was fain to bear this, and not to send out his Bulls of Excommunication against the followers of Flavianus. I might add much more, but this shall serve at this time (extra Orbitam) for S. W's seasonable instance of the more Bishops in one City, viz. in time of notorious Schism, which if the Reader will not take for a parallel to Peter and Paul their being both Bishops of Rome, our Controvertist must be very unfortunate, having no more variety to furnish him with.

* Lib. VII. c. 2.

† An. 381. n. XCVII.

11. 'Tis now his turn to deride, instead of answering, my proof of my Conclusion, when I say, that if there were two such Cœtus, then they that were of one Cœtus under one Bishop, were not of the other Cœtus, under the other Bishop. 'Tis evident, saith he, by the light of nature, that one is not another, and needed no proofs.] I reply, that if it needed no proofs, then I may be afforded my Conclusion without them, and I shall as willingly hold the Truth of it, by the force of the light of nature, as of the Testimonies; but still hope, that two proofs more than needed, will not topple over into none at all, or provoke S. W. so far, as to resist the light of nature, rather than yield any thing to me. Yet to see, this candid Controvertist having granted what I say to the light of nature, first refutes as solemnly my proofs of this, as of any thing that he most denies; and 2. tells me of one of my Testimonies, that 'tis the onely prop of my cause in this point: which was some surprize to me, when he had so lately mentioned my double proof, and the light of nature tells me also, that one is but one, and so not the onely prop, when there is another by it. And 3. for my other proof, viz. because no Bishop was to meddle in another's Province, he saith, ſaith, till the Teſtimony of Pelagius be made authentick, it toucheth him not, for till then it is not proved theſe two Apoſtles had two diſtinct Provinces,] whereas it is manifeſt that diſtinct Provinces are relative to diſtinct Biſhops, and Epiphanius, that had teſtified Peter and Paul to be both Biſhops of Rome, muſt needs authentickly teſtify them to be diſtinct Biſhops, though he doth no more expreſly uſe the word diſtinct, than he doth the reſtrictive, or excluſive, onely, which even now I was challenged about.

12. This being done, he reflects on what I added to prevent his one poſſible anſwer, of Peter's being not co-ordinate, but Primate in reſpect of Paul, to which I oppoſed what before I had ſhewed of Paul's independency from him, and primacy among the Gentiles. This he ſaith is to the queſtion, and replies, by referring to his former Anſwers, Sect. 7. and ſo do I to my preſent returns to that, and the reſt of his former Sections, where it is viſible how far it was from the leaſt falſification in me, when I pretended to have ſhewed from Scripture and Antiquity, that St. Paul had the Primacy among the Gentiles, as Peter among the Jews. This he here ſtyles a flat falſification, and improves it in his Index into falſifications of St. Ambroſe, (in the plural) reiterated and ſhamefully applied to mine own advantage, whereas it is expreſly for him.] To this I muſt make ſome reply, 1. That there was no neceſſity, that what I ſay was ſhewed from Scripture and Antiquity, ſhould be founded in St. Ambroſe onely; yet can I not doubt, but out of the words recited from that one Father, my Concluſion will be inferred, when the former part, that of Paul's primacy in founding the Churches of the Gentiles, is the expreſs words of the Teſtimony, and might competently conclude Peter's primacy to the founding the Church indefinitely, not to belong to all, but onely the Jewiſh Church, to whom the Goſpel was firſt to be preached; or if it did not, yet the addition of plena authoritas Petro data in Judaiſmi prædicatione, & Pauli perfecta authoritas in prædicatione Gentium, the full authority given Peter in preaching to the Jews, and Paul's perfect authority in preaching to the Gentiles, muſt neceſſarily enforce it, and ſo conclude S. W. all this while to have drawn his own character, cauſeleſly accuſing me of his own crimes.

13. Once more, when to his one inſtance of Peter's preaching to Cornelius a Gentile, I anſwered, that this was not at Rome, but long before the agreement between the Apoſtles, and though it may be, he converted ſome other ſuch, yet this was nothing to the matter of Juriſdiction, and withall but a whimpering may-be, in his language, he replies, 1. That this is my oft affected miſtake, that he is to argue and prove, who undertook to anſwer. 2. That my words confute almoſt all my third Chapter, which concerning juriſdiction, runs almoſt upon nothing elſe, but preaching and converſion, 3. That juriſdiction is nothing to our queſtion, unleſs I firſt evidence its equality with the pretended higheſt] To theſe I anſwer, 1. That I expect not S. W. ſhould be ſuch a worker of wonders, as to prove all that he hath the confidence to ſay, and therefore ſhall here promiſe him once for all, not to exact it of him: Onely he having out of his great liberality inſtanced in Cornelius, and received anſwer that that was nothing contrary to me, I thought the bare poſſibility, that there might be ſome other ſuch inſtance, would have no force in it, the reaſon being evident, becauſe this which was produced, was ſhewn to have none. And although the ſhewing that the contrary may-be, is oppoſed, and ſo ſufficiently reſponſive to the pretending it muſt be, ſpeaking of demonſtrative evidences, yet there is not the like reaſon in matters of fact, depending wholly on proofs from Teſtimonies, in which caſe what doth not appear ſo much as by intimation, cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be; If it may, the dream of Adam's firſt Wife Lilis, nay, the whole hypotheſis of the Pre-adamites, will not be ſo wildly and utterly irrational and indefenſible, as we take it to be, there being no repugnance in the terms (and ſo a whimpering may-be) that there ſhould have been a race of men before Adam and Eve, which yet are the firſt we reade of, and from thence believe the firſt of mankind created by God. However the other anſwer, to which this was added, will not, I hope, be enervated by this addition, and then that will ſerve to repell his firſt cavil.

14. Secondly then for preaching and converſion, that that is not juriſdiction, but differs from it, as it is evident in it ſelf, ſo it is not contrary to my third Chapter, where though in the way to ruling and juriſdicti- I inſiſt on the preaching-aſſignations and Provinces of the Apoſtles, yet it is evident my argument againſt the Univerſal Paſtourſhip is founded, not in St. Paul's or Jame's or John's preaching or converting alone, but in their * forming their Converts into a Church, leaving them to be governed by Biſhops of their own aſſignations, which cannot have place in ſuch a ſingular caſe, as was Cornelius's being ſent to Peter by Chriſt to be taught the way of the Goſpel by him. * Of Sch. p. 76. l. 9.

15. Laſtly, If by S. W's allowance, Juriſdiction may be then to our queſtion, when it is ſhewed in Paul to be equal to the pretended higheſt, I ſhall then be competently ſecured to have aſſumed nothing irregularly at this time; The very laſt thing that we paſs'd, and have again here vindicated, being the Independency of Paul from Peter, and his perfect authority and primacy among the Gentiles, concludes the deſired equality.

SECT. XIX.

Aſſuming by probabilities without Teſtimonies. Obſervations on S. W*'s probabilities. The Jews ſolemn departing from St.* Paul, Act. XXVIII. Ἐπίδοντι, V. 24. S. W*'s miſtakes.*

1. THE twentieth Section is at ſo great leiſure as to go three ſides out of his way, before he returns to anſwer my Teſtimonies (his buſineſs in hand) pretending to give ſome probable account of the two Biſhops in one City, which he calls conſidering what was likely to happen out of the nature of the thing it ſelf, joined with the prudence of the Apoſtles;] And the ſum of it is, that what ſeemed moſt to S. W's intereſt, that and nothing elſe could be prudent for the Apoſtles to doe, and being the Diſciple of the Apologiſt, who † pronounces of his connatural way of Oral Tradition, that if God had not already taken it, certainly he ſhould have done it, we are beholden to him, that he hath not with as reſolute and pious a confidence pronounced in like manner of the Spirit-confirmed Twelve, as he ſtyles them; But having oft obſerved the no-probability of arguments merely probable againſt Teſtimonies of fact, and withall reflecting on S. W's performances formerly, where we have not found ſo much as a probability in thoſe grounds of his, that aſſumed to be moſt demonſtrative, and ſo concluding from one of theſe in theſi, what the other makes vehemently credible in hypotheſi, that what is by likelihood aſſumed without, or againſt Teſtimonies, is moſt † P. 13.

imper-

impertinently weak and unſignificant, I might leave it to the Reader, on his ſurvey, to judge, whether S. W's cauſe deſtituted him, or he his cauſe, and not offer any Antidote to ſo feeble a Poiſon as here his Topical faculties have mixed.

2. But to pay our Controvertiſt all manner of imaginable reſpect, I ſhall very briefly attend him here alſo, and obſerve, 1. That when from all hiſtories his own † Baronius tells us, that the Apoſtles diviſerunt ſibi ad quas ſinguli proficiſcerentur Orbis Terræ Provincias, divided to themſelves the Provinces of the World, to which they ſhould goe, and adds, hæc eadem omnia ſpiritus ſancti ſpeciali inſtinctu eſſe peracta, that by the ſpecial inſtinct of the ſpirit (whether by an Angel, as he after ſaith, or by ſome other divine way) all this was done, yet S. W. can diſcern no ſuch matter probable, but denying their Prophetical foreſight what place or time for the future would be always moſt convenient, leaves them, for their when and where, to govern themſelves by that high prudence rain'd down on them (whether in the ſhowre of ſound as of wind, or of tongues as of fire, he hath not determined) at Pentecoſt. 2. That ſpeaking of the Twelve, and ſaying that moſt linger'd in Judæa, &c. among the reſt he will particularize in two, and thoſe are St. Peter and St. Paul, yet I diſcern not, either the great probability that St. Paul ſhould with any other but S. W. go for one of the Twelve, or that he ſhould be an inſtance of lingring in Judæa, till occaſional circumſtances, together with the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt ('tis well that may now be taken in, to join with occaſional Circumſtances) diſpers'd them, or that the direction of St. Peter and St. Paul to Rome ſhould be the firſt thing taken notice of, after the diſperſion of the Twelve. 3. That he takes pains to prove that the Apoſtles did not hazard at Rome, the yet weak and ſlenderly moved Souls by ſeeming to neglect them, and ſending them away one to another, whereas my ſuppoſition is, that the Jews rejected St. Paul (not St. Paul the Jews) at his firſt coming, and departed from him, and then he turned to the Gentiles, and by ſo doing, did more aſcertain the Jews not to apply themſelves to him, and then how could he turn them from him? or how could any dream of his ſeeming neglects, or ſending them to another? What then 4. follows in his caſe put, of the multitudes of Gentiles under St. Peter ſhifting ſides, and running to St. Paul, and the Jewiſh from St. Paul to Peter, is a rare fabrick of Chimera's, to be added to the foot of his fifth fore-going Section, and exemplify the faculties of a new-faſhion'd probable Doctour, what they may advance to, when in a good cauſe they are improved carefully. Laſtly, that when he hath managed his liberty (of ſuppoſing what he will) to his own hearts deſire, he reſolves that Peter and Paul continued at Rome their diſtinctive way till their death, either of them immediate Biſhops over ſeveral particular Flocks, which notwithſtanding, one may be ſuperiour, he ſaith, in authority to the other, as an Archbiſhop or Primate to a Biſhop] To which if I return my bare reference to the Teſtimonies for their ἰσοτιμία (and St. Paul's being no-way inferiour to the chiefeſt Apoſtles) which have now been vindicated againſt all his exceptions, and even the equality of all the Apoſtles ſhew'd to be the Doctrine of a competent number of Fathers, yea and later Romaniſts alſo, I ſhall then ſuppoſe S. W's probabilities will have no great efficacy of conviction on any, and ſo I leave them.

† An. 44. n. XX.

3. Being thus ſtock'd and furniſh'd with a fair proviſion of (to him ſeeming) probabilities, he advances to the aſſault of another Teſtimony, fixing his ἔλεγχος to that paſſage in the Tract of Schiſm, when I ſaid of Paul's preaching in his hired houſe, Act. XXVIII. 30. that the Jews had ſolemnly departed from him, v. 29. And on review of what had paſs'd in the Diſar. and my Anſwer to him, he attaches me for putting the word ſolemnly, which I acknowledge is not found in the Text, in the ſame letter with departed, which is found there, immediately citing, v. 29.] I anſwer, that neither one nor other were put in the letter, which is the mark of a citation, and ſo, by his favour, I am demonſtrably cleared from that which was before my charge, and conſequently ſecure from all other in this matter, it being free for me not to cite the word from the Text, which was there, as long as I cited nothing from it which was not there. As for the citation of v. 29. that I ſhall hope was no enormity, or unſincerity, it being lawfull to cite ſenſes as well as words, the Doctrine of the Trinity from Joh. XIV. 26. where yet the word is not to be met with, and that this ſenſe was to be afforded by that Verſe, as it ſtood in conjunction with the former Verſes, and was interpreted by them, I thought I had ſufficiently manifeſted, for as v. 29. the Jews departing is expreſs'd, ſo before, v. 25. it is with this addition, they departed after St. Paul had ſpoken one word, well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt by Iſaias — ſaying, Go unto this people and ſay, Hearing ye ſhall hear and not underſtand, for the heart of this people is waxed groß, &c. From hence I infer, That departing, which was interpreted by St. Paul, to be an act of the greateſt obſtinacy, and obduration, I might juſtly ſtyle a departing ſolemnly, But ſuch was the Jews departing, mentioned, v. 29. Therefore —

4. And I hope this account will be ſufficient to his weighty queſtion that here follows, what this is to the pretence that their ſolemn departure was found, v. 29.] for if their departure were found there, and that departure otherwiſe appear to be ſolemn, then their ſolemn departure is found there, though the word [ſolemn] was not.

5. But, ſaith he, he denied not the ſolemnity of reprehenſion expreſs'd to the unbelieving Jews in other Verſes] I anſwer that I am ſo far from ſaying he did, that I never applied the ſolemneſs to Paul's reprehenſion of the Jews, but onely to the Jews departing from Paul, which might have been diſtinguiſhed, if he had pleaſed.

6. But, ſaith he, reade the place, and we find not a word of reſolution in them to come no more] I anſwer, that if Paul were a competent Judge with him, this would without ſo much difficulty be found: For doth not cloſing their eyes, leſt they ſhould ſee, hear, underſtand, be converted, and healed, ſignify this reſolution of coming no more, to that end, to which he preached, their Converſion? And did not St. Paul diſcern this in them, when he pronounced it of them? If by coming again, he mean coming to catch, or cavil, or calumniate (as ſome men come to anſwer Books) or even to ſtone him, I have no neceſſity of denying that, whenſoever S. W. ſhall turn Augur, and affirm it.

7. Once more, Dr. H. ſhould have ſhewed, ſaith he, that St. Paul reſolved not to preach to them whereſoever he found them in other places.] I anſwer, that by other places I muſt ſuppoſe he means (if any thing to the preſent purpoſe) other places in Rome, whereof we now ſpeak; and then 1. I have little need to prove that Paul made any ſuch reſolution, for if they came not to him to hear, but cloſed their eyes againſt this light, they are ſecured from being his Converts, without any intervenient reſolution of his not to ſpeak to them; for how could Paul in his hired houſe, preach to them that came not to him? Yet 2. the Text is plain enough, when he proclaims to them, v. 28. Be it known unto you that the ſalvation of God is ſent to the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. For let it now be conſidered on theſe premiſſes, who they are of whom St. Paul's Cœtus at Rome is by S. W. ſuppoſeable to be congregated? Can it be Jews and Gentiles promiſcuouſly, or any other but Gentiles onely? When the Jews cloſe their eyes, &c. and depart, and when the Goſpel is by him preached to the Gentiles, and they do hear it: Remembring ſtill, that in other places the Jewiſh would not conſort with Gentile Chriſtians, and that as Peter was the Apoſtle of the Jews in other places, and Paul of the Gentiles, ſo they were both Biſhops at Rome, and continued their diſtinctive way untill their death, by S. W's own * confeſſion. * P. 358.

not

8. But, ſaith he, ſome of the Jews believed, v. 24. there is therefore no ground of any ſolemnity of departure in order to them, and therefore the words cited from St. Chryſoſtome in my Anſwer, are not appliable to them.] I might anſwer, that when it is ſaid of ſome, v. 24. that ἐπείθοντο τοῖς λεγομένοις, they believed, or were perſwaded by the things, which were ſpoken, there is no neceſſity this ſhould be interpreted of their receiving the Chriſtian Faith, there being many things ſuppoſeable to be ſaid to them by him, concerning his appeal to Cæſar, and the reaſon of his bonds, the common hope of all Jews, and laſtly concerning Jeſus out of the Law, and the Prophets. But granting, as I have done, that their believing was receiving the Faith of Chriſt, yet 'tis no news to hear of ſome that with joy receive, and preſently are ſcandalized, and leave it again; and the ſame we have reaſon to conceive of thoſe, which, though they were perſwaded, and yielded belief to what he ſaid, yet upon debate with the others, diſagreement ariſing, they all forſook Paul and departed, they, of whom it was ſaid, ἐπείθοντο λεγομένοις, they were perſwaded by what he ſaid, as well as others. This is manifeſt by the words of the ſacred Text, (not of St. Chryſoſtome) ἀσύμφωνοι ὄντες ἀπελύοντο, they being not agreed departed; who are theſe that were not agreed? Certainly both parties, the πεισθόμενοι and ἀπιστοῦντες, they that were perſwaded or believed, and the disbelieving: and therefore of both theſe it is evident, that they departed, and ſo to all in common St. Paul addreſſes himſelf in the words of the Prophet, and, if it be marked, the cloſing the eyes, and that meant by the ſtyle, ſeeing they ſee not, i. e. the obſtinacy, is as applyable to them that were perſwaded, and yet departed, either for fear of offending, or diſſenting from their fellows, as to any other; nay with more propriety to theſe, than others, for theſe peculiarly ſeeing ſee not, i. e. do not ſo far make uſe of their ſight (though they ſee) as to be converted and healed by it; and ſo ſtill St. Chryſoſtome's words may comprize them all at the time of their departing (for it ſeems none adhered to, or continued with him, and the Gentiles hearing is expreſly oppoſed to not hearing μὴ πιστεύοντες ἀνεχώρουν, not believing they departed, for elſe how can that interpret ἀσύμφωνοι, thoſe that agreed not, which comprehends all? and ſo the other words of his, πρὸς ἐκείνους ταῦτα εἰρῆσθαι ἀπιστήσαντας, thoſe words of Scripture were ſaid to them when they believed not, being ſaid to them all in common.

9. But he hath yet more to object on this point, that it was poſſible for them to return after ſuch a diſmiſſion, or for Paul to apply himſelf again to them, that the Text ſaith nothing to the contrary, that he had formerly cited the Apoſtles ſhaking off the duſt of their feet, Act. XIII. 51. departing more ſolemnly, and yet they after preached many times to the Jews, and on this occaſion my accuteneſs is arraigned for taking it, as if he expected the ſhaking off the duſt of their ſhooes at Rome alſo] To all this I anſwer, and firſt to the rebuke, which how ſeaſonable it was, let him now judge. I ſpake of the Jews ſolemnly departing from Paul, v. 29. And the † Diſarmers anſwer is of Paul's departing from the Jews more ſolemnly (where, I beſeech him, was the pertinency of that anſwer? (To this I ‖ replied, And what if he did not ſhake off the duſt of his ſhooes againſt them? That was the ceremony of his departing from them, and that, when he meant to leave their City, but I ſpeak of the ſolemnity of their departing from him. This, if he pleaſe to reflect, was my anſwer, and I hope as ſeaſonable and pertinent, as his had been the contrary. And if I conſidered his impertinencies ſo much, as to hope above hope, that there was ſome latent force in them, and therefore took care alſo to ſuperſede whatſoever was but thus remotely poſſible, and ſo gave him my reaſon why St. Paul did not here at Rome ſhake off the duſt of his feet againſt them, I wonder who was injured by, or had reaſon to complain of it. Let him firſt reply ſolidly to my whole Anſwer (of which he hath not touched a third part) and I ſhall give him free leave to add as much more as he ſhall think fit. † P. 74. ‖ Anſw. p. 52.

10. Secondly, when he talks ſtill of the poſſibility of their returning after ſuch a diſmiſſion, I mind him again, that this was their ſolemn departure from St. Paul, and that is not Paul's diſmiſſion of them. 3. For Paul's applying himſelf to them again, though the Text ſaith nothing to the contrary, yet it ſaith, Be it known to you the ſalvation of God is ſent to the Gentiles, and they will hear it: and this a competent prejudice to his applying himſelf to the Jews again, for either that muſt be done to them with the Gentiles promiſcuouſly, or not at all; And that the Jews and Gentiles at Rome did not converſe thus freely and promiſcuouſly, though the Text of the Acts declare not, the ſtory being here at an end, yet we have indications enow elſewhere; For if Rom. 14. the partition were not taken down between the believing Jews and Gentiles in this very City, but that they deſpiſed and judged one the other, and ſo needed the Apoſtle's balſame to cure this ſciſſure, then how much more is it to be preſumed of the unbelieving Jews, who are the proper Auditours to whom S. W. can ſuppoſe him again to apply himſelf?

11. Laſtly, how fitly was his inſtance from Act. 13. 51. here again produced, to prove Paul might apply himſelf again to thoſe from whom he had ſolemnly departed (it ſhould have been from them who had thus departed from him) when it no-way appears, that he applied himſelf again to the ſame Jews either in Antioch of Piſidia, or Iconium, from whom he had departed; To others, after that, he did preach, or elſe he could not to the Jews here, but ſtill that is not to thoſe who departed ſolemnly from him, nor from whom he thus departed: and indeed the ſolemnity of this departure of his, being ſignificative of the deſtruction, that they were ſuddenly to look for, and attended with his turning to the Gentiles, there was ſmall ground of this phanſied returning after ſuch a ceremonious, and pompous farewell.

12. He concludes this Section with reflecting on a conceſſion of mine, in relation to the Jews, that are ſaid to have believed (or been perſwaded) v. 24. Of them I ſaid, that if they continued in that Faith, which now they received, and were not ſcandalized and averted, on mention of his reſolution to depart to the Gentiles, (for many Jews that received the Faith, would no longer aſſociate with Paul, when he did ſo) then, upon any evidence produced for this, I ſhould make no doubt to acknowledge, that they though Jews became part of Paul's Cœtus, inſtancing in Clemens a Roman, yet Deacon to St. Peter. Now 1. here is diſcern'd a very illogical fault, that I anſwer with Ifs, and expect he ſhould produce evidence againſt them.] But I reply, this could not be ſaid without at leaſt a double deceit impoſed either on the Reader or himſelf; for 1. I do not anſwer with Ifs, but ſuppoſing the utmoſt of his Ifs, (i. e. of his unproved ſuppoſitions, that ſome of theſe not onely received the Faith, but continued in it) I give this diſtinct anſwer, that I am noway prejudiced by acknowledging this, and more, even that they were part of Paul's Gentile Cœtus. 2. 'Tis not onely falſe that I do, but irrational that I ſhould expect of him to produce evidence againſt the Ifs; for my words are [upon any evidence produced for this] and that is not againſt them. But then 3. though I uſe thoſe words, upon any evidence I ſhall make no doubt to acknowledge it] yet was I not ſo rigorous, as to expect ſuch evidence, but in the next words ſhew him, how ſafe I am in the acknowledgment of the utmoſt, that is ſuppoſeable, not onely evidenced in this matter.

13. But neither will this ſecure me from his purſuits, For, he would ask me, if this be ſo, how many Jews St. Paul might convert and govern, and again, what the Jewiſh Converts under St. Paul ſhould doe, in caſe they hap to take a toy againſt the Gentiles for eating a piece of Pork] And I anſwer, that in the converſe of the Engliſh Proverb, a Fool may ſometimes anſwer as many queſtions as a Wiſe-man can ask, and that in very few words; To his firſt, that St. Paul might convert and govern as many Jews as would receive the Faith from him, and not be ſcandalized or averted again by his preaching to the Gentiles in the ſame Cœtus. And they that would not doe thus, muſt of neceſſity either remain Unbelievers, or aſſociate with the deeper ſort of the Jewiſh Converts, ſtill addicted to the Judaical obſervances under St. Peter.

14. And by proportion with this, his ſecond queſtion receives its ſatisfaction alſo, that they that diſlike what they have once embraced, be it the Doctrine of Chriſtian Liberty, or of unreſtrain'd communion with Gentiles, muſt either live out of communion, or ſeek it ſomewhere elſe, among thoſe that are as ſcrupulous as themſelves. And ſo much for the quaint interrogatories, and his twentieth Section.

SECT. XX.

A charge of falſification in citing Ignatius, cleared. Of Accordances. S. W's witty chaſe examined. St. John not ſuppoſeable to be under St. Peter's ſucceſſour. Seeing] Gal. 2. 7. for acknowledging, Sending, a giving of Juriſdiction. Excluſiveneſs. Phanſie. What degree of neceſſity there is to reconcile the Fathers different affirmations. Epiphanius's conjecture of Clement's refuſing to be Biſhop. How grounded. Ἀναχωρῶ, ἄπειμι.

1. HIS 21. Section ſets out with a view of a citation from Ignatius, where he is reſolved to ſpring ſome unſincerity, and though by the aid of five Obſervations of S. W. (able to work any metamorphoſis, when they are ſet on it) he have here advanced it but into artifice and deſign, and ſlily abuſing my Reader, yet when he is gathering the Index, he hath his magnifying Glaſs ready at his eye, and
* 358. 358. ſtreight converts this vermin into a Swine, for there we find theſe * two pages (ſpent on theſe his five obſervations) noted for the diſcovery of egregious and moſt wilfull falſifications of Fathers, and other Authours; with what affinity to Truth, will be ſoon judged.

† P. 78. 2. My words in the † Tract of Sch. are theſe, Accordingly in Ignatius, Ep. ad Trall. we reade of Linus and Clemens, that one was St. Paul's, the other St. Peter's Deacon; To this, which thus begins a Paragraph, I adjoin (as I think will not be news to any that hath lookt on the feweſt Books) many words of my own, without any full point between, to the end of the Paragraph, but with no leaſt colour of appearance, that I cite one word more than theſe, which I have now ſet down out of Ignatius. And it may be remembred, that when S.W. in the perſon of my Diſarmer came to view this citation, though in great zeal to truth and honeſty, he required to have this teſtimony ſifted over and over, whether it were an evidence, that St. Peter was onely over the Jews, and St. Paul over the Gentiles, yet he appeared
P. 75. not to ſuſpect any falſification in the Teſtimony, but called the following words, which now he will have part of the Teſtimony, my Expoſition, and ſaid, that all that any way made to my purpoſe, was ſubjoin'd out of mine own head: But I need not ſo fallible a witneſs (nor ſhould uſe it againſt any other but himſelf) as either the negative, or affirmative of S. W. The thing is in it ſelf, by the no-citation-letter, by the ſtyle, by all that can be required to make good ſuch an evidence, moſt manifeſt, that I cited no more from Ignatius, than that Linus was St. Paul's, Clemens St. Peter's Deacon at Rome. And if thoſe words be to be found there (as S. W. acknowledges, and cites them from thence) 'twill ſoon be diſcerned who is the egregious and moſt wilfull falſifier.

3. Muſt I yet anſwer this Obſervatour's Arguments, by which his Reader was to be induced to think that poſſible, which was moſt extremely removed from all Truth? For once I will, acknowledging their weight as great, as any thing elſe that exacts reply in this Section. His firſt is, that there is nothing but a ſimple Comma after the word Deacon, where I ſay the Teſtimony ends, nor any thing like a full point of a Teſtimony, till the words [the Jewiſh Chriſtians there.] I anſwer, there is no Law, that a Teſtimony ſhould end with a full point, or that he, that ſaith he reads ſuch words in an Authour, is precluded and obliged to add no word more in that period, (I think I may add, that never any man in the world ſaid or thought this, till an itch of calumniating and heaping loads of the meaneſt crimes on his Adverſary, ſuggeſted it to S.W.) And ſhould this Legiſlatour now be hearkened to, the whole Paragraph (which is near a Page) muſt be the words of this Teſtimony, for, as was ſaid, there is never a full point till the end of it: what he calls like a full point, I ſhall not examine, nothing being that, which is but like it.

4. Secondly, ſaith he, there is no other diſtinctive note imaginable to let him know which are the teſtimonies, which my own words.] I anſwer, 1. his [no other diſtinctive note] implies that a full point is a diſtinctive note of a teſtimony, which is far removed from truth, for there may be a full point in the midſt of a Teſtimony, and there may be a Teſtimony without a full point at the end of it. May not I cite In the beginning was the word, and paſſing to ſomewhat elſe, leave that concluded (as it is in the Text) with a comma onely? Or, where there is a full point in the Text, may not I doe the ſame, annex other words in the ſame period,

od, without coming under S. W's ſcourge of Scorpions for egregious falſification? 2. What other diſtinctive note can he demand, than that the Letter is changed, after the Teſtimony, for above a line together, and then is no more uſed, ſave in proper names, and words of ſome ſpecial energy toward the matter in hand, (to both which that letter is accommodated through that whole Book) till the end of the Paragraph. The third obſervation is but the ſpreading of this, and ſo is anſwered already in this ſecond.

5. His 4th is, that the word [Deacons] is nothing to our Controverſie, but the words ſubjoyned are mainly important to the point.] I anſwer 1. that I might equitably be allowed to uſe one word (for Deacon, by him mark'd is no more) which was nothing to our Controverſie, when S. W. uſes ſo many thouſands, which are as little; witneſs all his railings, evil ſurmiſings, calumnies, cavils, which make up the far greateſt part of his book, the fleſh to fill up the vacuities of that Sceleton, the live-colours to his Monogramm: But I would not be like him in the tithe of one line, and therefore 2. I ſay the word Deacon is no ſuch περίλογον, or redundant as he would have it taken for. For if the Deacon be, among other notations of this name, an inſeparable relative to a Biſhop, (as the moſt ancient Records in Epiphanius import, and teſtifie, ſaying, ἄνευ διακόνου ἐπίσκοπον ἀδύνατον εἶναι, that a Biſhop muſt not, cannot be without a Deacon) then Ignatius's affirming that Linus was Paul's Deacon at Rome, and Clement Peter's, is an intimation pregnant enough, that theſe two, Paul and Peter were (at the ſame time, for they ſucceeded not one another) Biſhops of Rome, and then that is a ſecond to Epiphanius (before produced for it) and ſo eſtabliſhes a truth, which is acknowledged to have ſome relation to our Controverſie. Nay, 3. it being evident from parallel inſtances of thoſe times, that thoſe Apoſtles and firſt Biſhops left their Deacons to ſucceed them in the Epiſcopal Chair, Timotheus (who is by Ignatius there named to be one of Paul's Deacons) at Epheſus, and the like, their being the Deacons of thoſe two Apoſtle-Biſhops, was fit to introduce that which followed in that Paragraph, of their ſucceeding them in their Biſhops Sees, which being by all men granted, that they did, (though with ſome difference in the manner) an arrogance it might be in S. W's eſteem (but ſay he what he will, his conſcience will tell him it neither was, nor could be a falſification) to undertake to accord the difference of Authours in this point, which without foreſeeing his ſeverity, or craving his leave I adventur'd on, and ſhall not doubt to vindicate the probability of it, againſt all that hath, or can be pretended againſt it, and this never the leſs for the *Diſ- * P. 77.
armer*'s ſaying, No man could ever underſtand the buſineſs aright, though, as again he ſaith, they found evaſions to ſalve the difficulty. And then that alſo was pertinent (though it pretended not to be demonſtrative) to the point in hand; for how could Linus and Clemens be at once Biſhops of Rome, but as Baronius found Euodius and Ignatius to be at Antioch, at the ſame time, one over the Gentile, the other over the Jewiſh Cœtus?

6. His laſt reaſon is, becauſe that of Linus being conſtituted Biſhop of the Gentiles, Clement of the Jewiſh Chriſtians there,] is no-where elſe pretended to be ſhewn, and ſo it could not be imagined, but that thoſe words were part of this teſtimony.] I anſwer, 1. that if this were an argument, then S. W's book would be little other than Teſtimony (which yet hath little of that deſpiſed ware in it) there being ſo little in it ſo much as pretended to be ſhewed by any other way of probation, than that of his own dictating. But then 2. it now appears, that as there is no queſtion among any, but that Linus and Clemens were Biſhops of Rome, ſo there are very pregnant grounds of affixing one to the Gentile, the other to the Jewiſh Cœtus, both from the analogy with Antioch, in Baronius's acknowledgment, and from the conſtant practice of the Church (ſave onely in this one caſe of Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians, whilſt the partition remained) to have but one Biſhop in a City.

7. He now ſees, what little need I had of any the leaſt artifice in ſo plain a buſineſs, how little of refuges or evaſions, eſpecially of that which he names laſt, that I meant it not for a proof, but as a branch of accordance, for 'tis impoſſible again, he ſhould believe himſelf, that I gave that anſwer to the charge of having falſified Ignatius, when the Diſarmer, to which my Anſwer was addreſt, charged onely the inſufficiency of Ignatius's words without my additions, to prove the Concluſion, (and to that onely my anſwer was accommodated, viz. that the concluſion was proved before, by Scripture, and this from Ignatius was onely a branch of accordance with it) and not that which is now the uglier charge, that of falſification.

8. The reſt of this Section is ſpent in Comedy, purſuit of his pleaſant game, as he ſtyles it: But I am old enough not to be ſo playſome, and ſhall reſerve my ſelf to wait on him, where he is more ſerious; It may ſuffice to tell him, that there is as proper a place in a Controverſie for accordances, as for proofs, the difference being this, not that the former are apt to prove nothing (as he would perſwade us) but that ſuch teſtimonies, as, being taken alone by themſelves, are not ſo explicite, as to bear the whole weight, and convince gainſayers, yet being annex'd to plainer proofs premiſed, they may both receive, and add ſtrength to them, receive, by our interpreting what is leſs clear, from analogy with that which is more perſpicuous, and then add that weight, which conſent of more teſtifiers is acknowledged to bring with it.

9. When then 1. the Scripture tells us, that Paul was intruſted with the Goſpel of the Gentiles, Peter of the Circumciſion, Gal. 2. 7. that they gave one another the right hand of fellowſhip, one to goe to the Gentiles, the other to the Circumciſion, c. 2. 9. from whence I thought it concluſible, that the Gentiles were St. Paul's, and ſo no part of St. Peter's Province; 2. When in antiquity ſo many other paſſages accorded perfectly with mine underſtanding of thoſe words, the diſtribution of all the Apoſtles into their ſeveral κλήσεις, particularly Peter's preaching to Jews in Judæa and Samaria, and thoſe of the diſperſion, to whom and none elſe his Epiſtles were addreſt; then James's being made Biſhop of one portion of Jews, not by him onely, but by Peter, and James and John, and ſo the Juriſdiction over thoſe belonging immediately to him, and no more to St. Peter, ultimately, than to James and John; then Paul's Commiſſion to the Apoſtleſhip of the Gentiles, given him immediately by Chriſt, and ſo exerciſed alſo without any relation to, or dependence on Peter, his authority perfect, and his primacy aſſerted among the Gentiles, and (when in Cities conſiſting of Jewiſh and Gentile Converts, the Cœtus were kept apart) Paul preſiding as Biſhop in the Gentile Cœtus, as Peter in the Jewiſh, and each leaving his ſeveral Biſhop Succeſſour in his Cœtus (and this by the learned Romaniſt confeſt at Antioch, and in one part proved by Teſtimonies, in the other part rendred undeniably probable at Rome alſo) theſe, I ſay, and many other the like, which I muſt not here repeat, being branches of accordance dance and agreement with words of the Scripture firſt laid, and authorizing my way of underſtanding them, and application of them to our preſent hypotheſis, and each of them now largely approved to doe ſo, againſt all his little exceptions to them, how can they fail to eſtabliſh that, which alone I infer from them, that the placing an Univerſal Paſtourſhip in one man, the preſent Biſhop of Rome, cannot be founded in any the like Monarchick power veſted in, or exerciſed by the perſon of St. Peter? And then what place there was for S. W's game or chaſe, on this head of difference between proofs and

* P. 306. l. 3. accordances, and how far that was from a flat falſification of Scripture, which he * accuſes as ſuch, becauſe the word onely was not found in it, but ſupplied from other Teſtimonies, let him now judge.

10. So likewiſe in the very firſt ſtep of his chaſe, when having cited from the fifth Par. theſe words of mine, And firſt it is evident from Scripture, St. Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, &c.] and then made his obſervation [Here we ſee the point to be evidenced, and from Scripture] he can yet find no other place of Scripture in that Paragr. but ἴδιον τόπον, his own place, and lot of Apoſtleſhip] What ſtrange blind hunting is this, when the very words which he firſt recited, were fetched from Scripture (and therefore I ſaid expreſly, 'tis evident by Scripture) viz. that Peter was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, for doth not St. Paul affirm this, Gal. 2. 7. that the Goſpel of the Circumciſion was committed to Peter, and what is that, but his being Apoſtle of them? What he hath objected againſt [this being St. Peter's Province excluſively to the Gentiles] hath now been cleared, Sect. 2. and being not here inſiſted on, needs not our farther reflexions; all that I now obſerve is, that he that had the game in his hand, kept it there cloſe, on purpoſe that his fellow Hunters might never be permitted to come in view of it: He names the Scripture-evidence from the firſt words, and then aſſures the Reader there is none in the whole Paragr. and yet this is one of his juſtifiable arts of making his adverſary ridiculous.

11. So in his view of the ſixth Par. where he is reſolved nothing of proof is to be found, but that James at Jeruſalem was conſidered as a Biſhop, this is moſt manifeſtly falſe; for 1. Peter's preaching in the Acts, being wholly ſpent in Judæa and Samaria, and his Epiſtles addreſt to the Jews in diſperſion, and both theſe exactly agreeable to his Apoſtleſhip of the Circumciſion, were a farther Confirmation of it. 2. The intruſting all Judæa to the Brother of the Lord, not by Peter alone, but by James and John, together with Peter (which is there alſo inſiſted on) 1. is ſomewhat more than the bare conſidering James as Biſhop there, and 2. 'tis a proof that this Apoſtle of the Circumciſion was not alone in that power, or poſſeſt of the Supremacy among the Jews in any other manner, than was common to two other Apoſtles (and that is prejudice enough to the Supremacy being veſted in him onely) and 3. as this concludes that ſixth Par. ſo it proceeds not (as he ſaith the reſt of that Paragr. doth) with accordingly, that word being but once uſed in the matter of James, and then belonging onely to his giving the ſentence, after which is ſeverally ſet down the argument which I now mention.

12. No more colour of truth is there in his ſuggeſtion concerning the ſeventh Par. of which his words are [the next (i. e. the ſeventh Par.) proceeds with, accordingly] Let the Reader ask his own eyes, if it be ſo: It begins, So again for the uncircumciſion or Gentile Chriſtians] and is of a new matter, not of St. Peter's, or St. James's (on which the two former were ſpent) but of St. Paul's Province, which, that it was the Gentiles, is there proved from Peter's own acknowledgment, Gal. 2. 7. from his title, Rom. 11. 13. from his no-dependence on St. Peter, which he conteſts, Gal. 1. 12--17. And theſe I hope are all proofs, and the word [accordingly] but once uſed, and that after all theſe in the laſt period of the Par.

13. After ſo groſs a failure, he becomes ſomewhat more carefull, and omitting the diviſion by Paragraphs, he falls to Pages and Lines, and whereſoever he meets with the word [accordingly] he caſts it down, and becauſe that is not the note of a proof, he concludes there is none, (an Univerſal negative from a particular) and by this Rule 'tis reſolved, that the teſtimony from the Conſtitutions of the two Biſhops at Antioch, no-way reconcileable but by the hypotheſes of the two Cœtus, muſt go for no proof alſo, becauſe forſooth it happened to be introduced (not by [accordingly] or [agreeably] (the words in which all his chaſe was concerned) but by [according to this condition of diſparate, not ſubordinate Churches at Antioch.]

14. So again, what I brought, onely to prove that the Church of Rome was founded by Paul as well as Peter, and therefore affirm'd, that I meant it not as proof that St. Paul betook himſelf to the Gentiles, St. Peter to the Jews, but that this being formerly proved, the concluſion inferred from theſe, was agreeable to that; here is matter of Joy and Triumph to the ſporters, on this account, eſpecially, becauſe one, the Seals of the Popes is called an irrefragable evidence] And ſo it is of that which it pretended to prove (viz. that the Church was founded by both thoſe Apoſtles, and not onely by Peter) though not of ſomewhat elſe, which needed not its aid, and was not pretended to be inferr'd from it; The like might be ſaid of ſome of the reſt.

15. Then for the 12*th* and 13*th*, the former being but the deducing the concluſion from the foregoing premiſſes, and the latter the tranſition to the view of St. John's Province, the chaſers muſt ſmile, if they cannot laugh, that theſe are no proofs, i. e. that the concluſion was not the premiſſes, nor the propoſal of matter to be ſpoken of, a Teſtimony.

16. The 14*th* and 15*th*, he acknowledges are employed in ſhewing St. John over the Jews alſo, and Timothy over the Gentiles, but yet theſe muſt fall under his rebuke, that they ſhew not that St. Peter was over the Jews onely, nor Timothy over the Gentiles onely.] Becauſe this is of ſomewhat more weight than ordinary, I muſt more diſtinctly ſatisfie it, that the thing that I brought the mention of John's Province to prove, was not that St. Peter was over the Jews onely, but that he was ſo far from Univerſal Paſtourſhip, that even all the Jews were not under him, and I have ſuggeſted to him ſince ſome reaſons to lay a little more weight on this, than there was laid, becauſe it is evident John out-lived Peter, and then it is not imaginable that he ſhould be ſubject to Clemens St. Peter's Succeſſour at Rome, for then a Biſhop ſhall not onely be ſuperiour in dignity to an Apoſtle (contrary to the order ſet down, 1 Cor. 12. 28. firſt Apoſtles, ſecondarily Prophets, thirdly διδάσκαλοι, Teachers, the title of Paſtours or Biſhops in the Church, Eph. 4. 11.) but he muſt be the Apoſtle's Supreme Ordinary and Governour, which I intreat S. W. to conſider, whether he will affirm or no. However that be, it now appears, how far I was from being obliged to infer from this medium of John's being over the Jews, that Peter was over the Jews onely; No, I conclude, he was not over all the Jews, and that I hope equally refutes his Universal Pastourship.

was

17. As for Timothy, if he were over the Gentiles, and not under Peter, but Paul, who without any contribution of power from Peter, placed him there, it will then follow, Peter had no jurisdiction at all in the Lydian Asia; and then what need I prove that Timothy was over Gentiles onely? which yet will follow regularly enough from the Jews being the Province of John, if that were pertinent to be insisted on.

18. The force of the remaining Paragraphs, to prove what they pretend to (though it is likely they prove not what they pretend not) hath been vindicated in the Answer: and shall hereafter be defended, if he hath ought to object against them; and his mirth, as far as concerns them, is a triumph before the fight, as it hath been all along, before the Victory. And so there is a Conclusion of this Scene.

19. What follows in reflexion on some words of mine, viz. that the Uncircumcision were not St. Peter's, but St. Paul's Province peculiarly, by St. Peter's own confession, Gal. 2. 7.] takes him up to the end of the Section. And the first suggestion is, that this is not found acknowledged in that 7th verse, which saith but this, they saw that the Gospel of the Uncircumcision was committed to me, as the Gospel of the Circumcision was unto Peter. And seven severe Observations he makes against that, most of which being the same which he had formerly objected, have already received their Answer, yet to all that can in the least-wise seem to exact it, I shall afford my reflexions.

20. And 1. to that which is most peculiar to this verse, viz. that there is no news of confession and acknowledgment, unless I contend that [they saw] signifie they confess'd, and so make seeing, and saying to be all one.] I answer, that for seeing to be taken for knowing, (and ἰδόντες here is interpreted by γνόντες v. 9.) and knowing for acknowledging, is no such prodigy to be observed. When David saith, I see that all things come to an end, but thy commandment is exceeding broad, this I take to be his acknowledgment or confession of that Truth; and what more ordinary in vulgar Dialect, than this, I see 'tis as you say, i. e. I acknowledge it to be so. And this sense is evidenced to belong to this place, 1. by the reason rendred v. 8. God's effectual working with Paul in his preaching to the Gentiles, whereby as by a motive of conviction they came to see this, i. e. to acknowledge it. 2. By the effect, v. 9. giving the right hand of fellowship that he should goe to the Heathen, Peter, &c. to the Circumcision, which giving of hands being the note of an agreement, that agreement must imply an acknowledgment of the former, to which it is consequent.

21. But, saith he, there is nothing in the verse expressing jurisdiction] I answer, Christ's intrusting the Gospel of the Uncircumcision to him, is giving him Apostolical Commission, as he saith, I will send thee far hence to the Gentiles, Act. XXII. 21. in the notion that the Father's sending Christ, and Christ's sending the Apostles, Joh. XX and the Holy Ghost sending out Paul, Act. XIII. 4. is giving them a Commission not onely to preach, but to receive disciples, to baptize, to form into a Church, to rule and preside among them; and though bare preaching were not Jurisdiction, yet these other parts of the same Apostolical Commission were, and all these comprehended in the phrase here of being intrusted with the Gospel, and Rom. XI. 13. being the Apostle of the Gentiles.

22. Again, saith he, there is nothing there express'd of any exclusive power of preaching to Jews onely] I answer, all that I produced it to conclude, was, that the Gentile Christians were not St. Peter's Province, but peculiarly St. Paul's, and if this be not express'd in terminis, 1. I did not say it was, 2. 'tis sufficient if it be deducible hence, and so still I suppose it is; for a distribution of Provinces being now supposed, the Province allotted one, must be peculiarly his, and that so his, as not to be the Province of another, who hath not that but another Province assigned him, in the distribution. An Apostle intrusted with a Province, is Bishop of it, and being so, no other Apostle is Bishop of the same (for that were to affix two Bishops to one Province) unless it were supposeable that one of them were subordinate to the other, which as it is refuted by the evidences brought for the ἰσοτιμία of these two, yea of all the Apostles, so it is here competently prejudiced by the parity of intrusting, and opposition of the Provinces so intrusted. Paul is intrusted with one, as Peter and James and John with the other; 1. Peter no otherwise than James and John, and sure they were not all three St. Paul's superiours; and 2. Peter no otherwise with the one, than Paul with the other, and sure they were not mutually superiours, or by turns the one to the other. 3. Their several Cœtus of Jews and Gentiles were not subordinate, but disparate, and then why should their Apostles or Bishops be subordinate? 4. The consequents, v. 9. & 11. make it yet more evident, They part, and sever their Provinces by agreement, v. 9. one to betake himself to one party, the other to the other, contrary to promiscuous preaching, which is S. W's pretense, and no otherwise reconcileable with subordination, than those Cœtus were subordinate, the one to the other. Lastly, when they meet together at Antioch, Paul withstands him to the face, which would not have become an inferiour Saint to his superiour Pastour; so that if this had been my onely proof (as he falsely suggests, for I immediately subjoyned Paul's title of Apostle of the Gentiles, Rom. XI. 13. and his assignation to it from Christ, and his No-commission from, or dependence on St. Peter, Gal. 1. 12--17.) yet he now sees, it had been worth his heeding, though there had been never an accordance to fortifie it; and that it was not thus largely deduced in the Tr. of Sch. (which is his last charge) the designed brevity of that Tract might have given an account for me.

23. Whilst he shuts up this Scene, some pleasure it is to him to observe that I write phansie, (for which he hath fancy with f. and c.) and indeed so I do when I think of it; and if the f. be the peccant letter in his opinion, I justifie it by analogy with the Latin phantasia, whence it is deduced with no greater change of sense, than is ordinary in other words, and if the ph. then not onely by that, but by phœnomena, phasme, phœnix, and a multitude of the like, and it seems his chase had yielded him no solid satisfaction, that he so soon let loose again after this Butterflie.

24. But there is a greater matter behind, for I required him that liked not my fancy of Linus and Clement, (ſitting together at Rome, one over the Gentile, the other over the Jewiſh part,) to direct his Reader to ſome other ſolid way to reconcile the repugnances in ſtory, and S. W. thinks not this neceſſary, not that the repugnant ſides ſhould both be true; and with all minds me that he directed me expreſly to ſome other ways how the Fathers went about to reconcile that Controverſie, which I neither confute, nor acknowledge he did.] My reply is, 1. that in that degree that the Fathers endeavoured to reconcile this difficulty, in the ſame I may be allowed to think it of importance to be reconciled, but that is not to place it in the ſame rank with Articles of the Creed, i. e. to affirm it neceſſary. 2. that to vindicate the Truth of ancient Writers (in matters of fact within their cogniſance) on whoſe authority we depend for conveying of our Faith to us, if it be not neceſſary, 'tis yet very expedient to the Chriſtian Church; and to profeſs that ſome of them have erred from the Truth in relating of things, which they had means to know (which we muſt doe, if we find them ſaying things contrary one to another, unleſs thoſe contrarieties are reconcileable) becomes him beſt, that for his whole Faith depends on his preſent Oral Traditours. To us that do not ſo, the neceſſity that repugnant ſides ſhould be true, ſeems as great, as thoſe Fathers, whom we duely venerate, and vouch their Teſtimonies, as authentick proofs of thoſe matters of fact eſpecially, which were within their, but are out of our reach, ſhould not have the lye given them by us, at this diſtance, who when we conſent with them uniformly, are approveable, but not when we aſſume to affirm in diſſent from them.

25. Laſtly, it is too like himſelf, that he complains I acknowledge not the directions he gave, and the ſome other ways he mention'd of reconciling this controverſie; for if the Reader look on n. 9. he ſhall find I did, and that in the very ſtyle by which he notifies them, evaſions to ſalve the difficulty. I might indeed have added thus much more, that he ſaith, the difficulty was ſo ventilated, and the opinions ſo various among the ancient Fathers, even Ignatius, Tertullian, Jerom, &c. but ſtill this was not to direct to ways of reconciling the controverſie, (ſave to ſuch as he called evaſions) but to ſhew it even then, in that very age (Ignatius being contemporary) and ſo ſoon after as Tertullian lived, to be unreconcileable; which is as if he ſhould ſay that the ſeries of Kings of England or Biſhops of Rome was not to be diſcovered in the ſame Age, nor two hundred nor three hundred years after; The truth is, he tells us among the evaſions, that * Epiphanius recurs to this ſolution, that Clemens was ordained by Peter, and refuſed the office till the Death of Linus and Cletus. And I have formerly anſwered this, 1. that Epiphanius mentions it onely as a conjecture (with an εἰ γέ πως ἐπερέχει, διανοοῦμαι δ', ὡς δείζομεν, If it ſo were, for I conceive, I define not) 2. that he gives us the ground of his conjecture, becauſe in ſome records he finds, that Clemens counſelling ſome, ſaith thus, in one of his Epiſtles, ἀναχωρῶ, ἄπειμι, I retire, I am gone, which we that have that Epiſtle, his firſt to the Corinthians, are enabled to underſtand better, than he could, that had it not, and ſo find, that theſe words are by him delivered in his own perſon, but by way of counſel indeed put into the mouths of thoſe, for whoſe ſakes the diviſions, and tumults at Corinth were made, that they ſhould rather go aſide, than let thoſe ſtirs continue in the Church becauſe of them, which as it was a Counſel peculiar to the then preſent circumſtances of Corinth, ſo it cannot be imagined to have had any place at Rome in Clement's caſe, unleſs, as * Baronius thinks it poſſible, upon the making up the partition between the Jews and Gentiles, Clement (the Biſhop of the Jewiſh part) retired and gave up all to Linus, and then that is to ſtate it, juſt as I ſtate it, of the two Cœtus. And ſo he hath a ſatisfactory account, why being told by him, there were evaſions to be met with, I was bold to demand of him ſomewhat above the rate of evaſions, a ſolid courſe of reconciling this difficulty, which in reverence to the Fathers I think may be had, and ſhall not be diſcouraged by S. W's Contempts from thinking it is found, leaving him to be as rude with others as I give him free leave to be with me, whilſt he deems their repugnances unreconcileable.

* Hær. 27.

* An. 45. n. XIV.

SECT. XXI.

John's Province. Of the immediateneſs of his governing. Prejudices from thence to St. Peter's ſupremacy. John's dignity of place. Baronius's teſtimony of it, and the accubitus. No priority inferr'd from thence for John. Anſwer to S. W's exceptions.

1. THE two and twentieth Section concerns the Province of St. John, the Lydian Aſia (the Jewiſh part of it, the Gentile being under St. Paul) Of which I having ſaid, that it is manifeſt St. Peter had never to doe, either mediately or immediately in the planting or governing it, he * accuſed me, that I ſay it is manifeſt, but bring nothing to prove it.] To this I replied, that I did bring my proofs, though not in that, wherein this was ſaid, yet in the next Sect. And that this was an art of his, formerly uſed, to ſay I affirmed without proofs, and then after ſet down my proofs, and confute them. If this were not in every circumſtance truly replied by me, let any man now judge.

* Sch. Diſa. p. 78.

2. Yet this hath no force with him, for having now minded the Reader, that my Theſis was abſolute, that Peter had nothing to doe either mediately or immediately, and aſſuring him that the teſtimonies enſuing no-way reſiſted Peter's governing them mediately, he thinks he hath abſolutely juſtified himſelf, and to that end he ſets down four of the Teſtimonies (whereas, there were five in that very next Sect.) and finding no more in them, but that St. John appointed Biſhops in Aſia, and perſwading himſelf that one is a flat and wilfull falſification, he makes his Obſervations, and goes off very triumphantly.

3. But to all this I anſwer, 1. that if it were convincingly proved, that theſe four teſtimonies did not come home to the point of Peter's not governing mediately (which yet was not ſo much as attempted in Sch. Diſar. nor any notice taken of thoſe five Teſtimonies, Sect. 14.) yet will it not follow thence, that I brought nothing to prove my own It is manifeſt] For 1. if I did not ſufficiently prove it, yet if I brought four teſtimonies to prove it, it cannot be ſaid with Truth I brought nothing, that being acknowledged to be ſomething, which is accuſed to be inſufficient. 2. Whether thoſe teſtimonies did prove what they pretended was another queſtion after diſcuſs'd, when he examined them ſeverally, which which therefore was not here to be ſaid, without begging the Queſtion; and 3. they might, and did infallibly prove ſome part of my poſition, and ſo were ſomething to prove my poſition, for if they were nothing, they could prove nothing; and 4. if what was not proved by theſe, were reſerved to other iſſues, what leaſt fault could he object to my whole proceſs? And that this was ſo, ſhall now thus appear.

4. Firſt in the entrance on this inſtance of St. John, I touch'd the ſeveral lots of the Apoſtles, the Provinces by joynt conſent aſſigned them, Act. 1. according to which one of the Teſtimonies in Euſebius proceeded, κλῆρον ἕνα τινα κληρώσων, obtaining ſome one part, or lot there, and then if thoſe were diſtributed with plenitude of Authority to each, and without ſubordination to St. Peter, then was mediate as well as immediate juriſdiction in St. John's Province prejudged on that account; and whether this were ſolidly inferr'd or no, muſt depend on the proofs for that, and the ἰσοτιμία of the Apoſtles formerly inſiſted on, and not again to be repeated at every turn.

5. Secondly, to the naming of John, was added the Circumſtance of Chriſt's favour, and dignity of place before all others, even before Peter himſelf in Chriſt's life-time, and then, though that dignity of place (though it had been conſtant) do not inſer ſuperiority of power (which I pretend not for St. John) yet it will be a prejudice to the veſting ſuperiour power in Peter: for then Chriſt muſt give John the precedence, or πρωτοκλισία, before his lawfull Paſtour, afford him the upper place at this time, who had ſo much the lower power, or elſe Peter was not advanced to this ſupremacy of power, till after this, i. e. till after Chriſt's death, and then this ſupremacy was not beſtowed on him, in thou art Peter, and I will give thee the Keys, as is pretended. That he which was ſubjected to another as to his ſupreme, ſhould yet have the higher place, given him by him, who had thus ſubjected him, I cannot believe affirmable by any ſober man; and yet thus it was in Chriſt's laſt Supper, if St. Peter had then the ſupreme Paſtourſhip.

6. If what I have formerly ſaid of this, be not ſufficient to prevent S. W's replies on that point, in the latter part of this Section, I ſhall now once for all refer him to the plain words of his own Baronius, as ſolicitous an aſſertour of St. Peter's power, as any man, * Ratione accubitus Johannis, qui in ea Cœna primum locum poſt Chriſtum obtinuit, &c. In reſpect of John's lying at meat, who at the Supper obtain'd the firſt place after Chriſt, aroſe the occaſion of the contention among the Apoſtles, Luk. XXII. who of them ſhould be the greateſt, when the reſt ſaw that in lying at that Supper John was preferred before all. † Adding a ſpecial obſervation of his own, that the Apoſtles never contended thus, or took it ill that Peter was preferred before them, but could not well bear that John or James ſhould be eſteem'd firſt by Chriſt. And for all this he had laid the foundation ‖ out of Fulvius Urſinus's Obſervations of the Romans accubitus, that they did not onely place thoſe that were dear to them in their boſome, next below them, but that the Rex Sacrorum, who had the ſupreme place of dignity among the Pontifices, uſed to take the uppermoſt place in the Pontifical Suppers, none lying above him; which he there applies to Chriſt, and expreſly adds, that as there were five Apoſtles in each of the other two Tables, ſo there were but three, where Chriſt was, Chriſt and John, and Peter, which indiſputably gives this precedence to John at this time. This makes it leſs needfull here to repeat, what hath been formerly inſiſted on, that if Chriſt had declared St. Peter to be the chief, the contention who ſhould be the chief, had e'er this been ſuperſeded, and converted into this other, who ſhould be next after St. Peter.

* An. Ch. 34 n. 41. † n. 42. ‖ n. 40.

7. Thirdly, it was immediately added in the Tract of Schiſm, that John was one of thoſe that by agreement went to the Circumciſion, was aſſigned the Jews for his Province, as well as Peter; and then, if by that agreement Paul had a full authority and primacy among the Gentiles, and ſo Peter were confined to the Jews, it will by parity of reaſon follow, that the other two, James and John had their full authorities alſo among their Jewiſh Converts, (and ſo James was a Metropolitane at Jeruſalem, John a Primate at Epheſus) and there is not the leaſt colour producible, that what we find related of his converting and governing the Jews in the Lydian Aſia, and is thus expreſs'd by the fifth Teſtimony, (which S. W. here takes no notice of) that αὐτὸς δι' ἑαυτοῦ, he by himſelf with ſeven Biſhops with him, undertook the care of the chief Metropolis of it, ſtood thus by power mediately derived from St. Peter, or that he did not rule there as abſolutely, as Peter himſelf did either at Antioch, or at Rome, it being formerly evidenced, and now farther vindicated, that this John and his Brother James together with St. Peter were equal in the πρωτίμιοις or priority of honour beſtowed on them by Chriſt (and as ſuch, joyntly beſtowed the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem on James the Lord's Brother) and ſo not Peter ſupreme, or Prince of them.

8. Fourthly, having by the Teſtimonies proved that John was the Converter and Governour of that part of the Church, and that Peter had nothing to doe there immediately, I demanded, What can be ſaid by any Romaniſt in any degree probably for St. Peter's Univerſal Paſtourſhip, i.e. for any mediate juriſdiction there? Was there any the leaſt remainder of Record, that he ever exerciſed or pretended any Juriſdiction over them? Which though it were but a Negative Argument, yet being a challenge ſo eaſily refuted, if any ſuch thing appeared, and if it did not, it being onely gratis dictum, by the Romaniſt, it might be of ſome competent force in that Tract of Schiſm, which was not enquiring what was barely poſſible on either ſide, but what was in any degree probable, and if by this inſtance of John, and the other of St. Paul and James, it ſhould be found, that there were nothing to be offer'd in any degree probable, that Peter had, and exerciſed any kind of Juriſdiction in ſo great a part of the Church, ſubject to them, I left it to the Reader to judge, whether we were to be caſt as Schiſmaticks on that one account of Peter's ſuppoſed Univerſal Paſtourſhip.

9. To all which I have now farther added a ſpecial conſideration founded on St. John's ſurviving Peter, and long after his Death, under Nero, and his own return from baniſhment, in Trajan's time, ruling the Church at Epheſus perſonally; At which time I particularly demand whether the then Biſhop of Rome Clement, or his ſucceſſour Evariſtus had the Paſtoral charge over John, the greatly dignified, and now onely ſurviving Apoſtle? I know S. W's Hypotheſis binds him to ſay he had, but perhaps being reduced to theſe terms, modeſty may have ſome force with him, and not permit him to ſubject

ſubject a prime Apoſtle, to one that was of a degree inferiour both to Prophets and Evangeliſts; and yet both thoſe inferiour to Apoſtles in St. Paul's marſhalling them.

10. And after all theſe, why might not the words recited from Proſper, have had ſome force, that Johannes apud Epheſum Eccleſiam ſacravit, when his doing ſo at Epheſus is affirmed in the ſame manner as Peter's and Paul's doing the like at Rome, and nothing diſcernible that Peter ſhould have more to doe at Epheſus, than John at Rome. But I did not mean to infer any more from that (or from the other ſet in the margent before it) than what it is immediately brought to prove, viz. that John had the converting and governing of all the Converted Jews in the Lydian Aſia, of which Epheſus was the prime Metropolis, and that it could not well miſs to prove.

11. Yet to ſee, inſtead of doing any thing, 'tis diſcovered by my quick-ſighted Accuſer to be a flat and wilfull falſification, and in the Index, with the addition of egregious and moſt wilfull. And what can it be imagin'd, ſhould bring this cenſure on it ſo unexpectedly, when the words are certainly to be found in that Father, in that part of the Book of Promiſes and Predictions, called Dimid. Temp. c. 5. Why, ſaith he, he maim'd the Teſtimony, and left out the malignant word Gentium, becauſe it utterly defied his party, &c.] I anſwer, The truth is, that in the ſame Period, where Proſper mentions John, he mentions alſo Peter, Paul, Andrew and the reſt, with the ſeveral places where they preſided, and I having at this time nothing to doe but with St. John, took out of the Teſtimony (formerly cited in another part) all, and no more than concerned him. And having now formerly proved, that Gentium ſignified Nations in the Latitude, as they comprehend Jews and Heathens both, and not particularly Gentiles, it is manifeſt, that I could not with any ſenſe affix this Gentium Eccleſiam, Church of more Nations than one, (and as little could I the Church of the Gentiles, in his notion) to that part of the Teſtimony which concerned onely St. John, whoſe Province is there confin'd to Epheſus the chief Metropolis of the Proconſular Aſia, and was there the Apoſtle of the Jews, the Gentile Chriſtians of the ſame place being viſibly St. Paul's Province. I may juſtly ask, Why was it not as much a wilfull falſification, to ſet down ſacravit, he, inſtead of ſacraverunt, they conſecrated? Which yet by Good luck S. W. marked not, elſe, judging by parity of Reaſon, here had been a double egregious falſification; Mean-while, 'tis manifeſt the words I cited were there, (though there were more words there alſo) and I gave no gloſs or Interpretation, or ſo much as Engliſh of them (which S. W. doth for me) but onely ſet the Latin in the Margent, Johannes apud Epheſum Eccleſiam ſacravit, and thoſe words being there, 'tis impoſſible it ſhould be falſe to ſay they were there; And then, whilſt I am thus ſecure, if ſtill it be interdicted by this Enacter of Laws, and that under penalty of falſification, to cite any words out of an Authour, without tranſcribing the whole Period, when onely a few words of it belong to his purpoſe, or if all men be obliged to ſet down together what is found together, without conſidering whether by ſo doing they ſhall write Senſe or Non-ſenſe, I ſhall have an Argument on S. W's ſide for diſlike of wordiſh Teſtimonies, which I believe he himſelf did not foreſee, not onely the unavoidable length and impertinence, but the frequent Barbariſms alſo, and want of ſenſe, and common Conſtruction in ſuch Citations.

12. What now follows in reflexion on Timothy's being under St. Paul over the Gentiles in Aſia, is in part the accuſing of me, in part the excuſing himſelf. I am accuſed in theſe words, The Teſtimonies for Timothy, &c. are of the ſame ſtrain, or worſe, which by their reference to the immediately foregoing of John, muſt ſignifie that they are flat and wilfull falſifications, or worſe than ſo.] And indeed what worſe thing a Citation can be guilty of, I cannot eaſily imagine, or what ſemblance of any thing amiſs was imputable to theſe. But I have long ſince learnt μὴ ξενίζεσθαι, not to wonder at ſuch charges, if they are become part of his ſtyle, elegant forms of tranſition, and the like, this is a very ſufficient account of them, he having not ſo much as attempted to give us any.

13. For himſelf he pleads thus, he had, ſaith he, accuſed the Doctour of unpardonable blindneſs, and he is ſuddenly ſtruck blind himſelf, and caught that diſeaſe, onely by ſeeing Dr. Hammond's blindneſs.] But 1. I could not be guilty of any blindneſs in interpreting the whole entire Nation intruſted to Timothy, of the Gentiles onely, when 'twas manifeſt the Jewiſh part of that very Nation were under St. John, elſe there muſt be two Metropolitanes of the ſame Cœtus in Epheſus, and over the Lydian Aſia; 2. 'tis viſible to any man that looks on the words in the * Tr. of Sch. or on † Chryſoſtome, whence they were cited (which he that Cavils at them, is obliged to doe) that they are ſpoken of Timothy, and to miſtake him for Paul, is no ſpecial act of Quick-ſightedneſs, or ſeeing another's blindneſs, that had committed no ſuch miſtake. But I thought not this an affected overſight, and ſo inſiſted not on it, but onely offered it to his view, who accuſed me, without the leaſt cauſe, of unpardonable blindneſs. And upon the ſame account I now mind him, that the Fifth Teſtimony concerning John returned from his Baniſhment by Nerva's Decree (thereby ſecured from being miſtakeable for any other) is * now by my Diſpatcher ſet down as a Teſtimony for Timothy: But this alſo he might catch as well as the former, by ſeeing the Doctour's blindneſs. An earneſt deſire of finding faults where they are not to be had, will work more unexpected effects than this.

* P. 82.

† Hom. 5. on 1 Tim. V. 19.

* P. 367. l. 23.

14. His ſecond blindneſs, he ſaith, was by not ſeeing that which was not at all in the Book of Sch. but left out by my ſelf.] I anſwer, it was in Chryſoſtome, whence it was cited, which he, that ſaid I deſtroyed all by that Teſtimony, was in reaſon to have conſulted, and asked its leave before he made ſuch a bloudy concluſion from it: And that I take to be a greater fault than blindneſs, to catch at words, when the Contexture in the Authours renders them ſecure from his Cavils, and yet ſtill to inſiſt after admonition, and never to ſee what is moſt viſible.

15. His Four Obſervations, that next follow concerning the Romaniſt's Tenet, that neither St. Peter nor the Pope were over the whole Church immediately, but onely mediately, I willingly acknowledge, and have already ſhewn, how my Proofs proceeded not againſt the firſt onely, but both of them. As for his Fifth, concerning the limitations of the Provinces of the Apoſtles, not as Apoſtles, but as Biſhops, I ſo far conſent with him alſo, and he knows I do ſo, that the Apoſtolical Office, as committed to them by Chriſt, was to the Twelve, unlimited, (though to Paul ſpecified, that it ſhould be to the Gentiles) and the limitation came from their own aſſignations (yet that alſo by direction of the ſpirit) ſpirit) when they diſperſed themſelves to their ſeveral κλῆροι, and by mutual agreement, Gal. II. and then where they preached and were received, and formed a Church, there they were Biſhops, as over a Province, as long as they ſtay'd, and after their departure, left it to ſome Succeſſour, and ſo theſe are not (as he pretends) quite different things, but one regularly conſequent to, and founded in the other. And then by all this let it be judged, whether I have avoided the whole queſtion, or whether S. W. calumniates not, when he ſaith I have.

16. Of the buſineſs of John's Accubitus I have ſaid enough at the beginning of this Section, ſhewing from their own Baronius, that John had the firſt place at the laſt Supper given him by Chriſt, and particularly before Peter, and that this was look'd on by the reſt of the Apoſtles, as an indication * omnibus prælatum eſſe Johannem, that John was preferred before all. But how juſtly S. W. from this, or all I formerly ſaid, can infer any thing proportionable to Birthright or Inheritance, which before he inferred, or to ſo much as a dry Primacy, which he now † cites from me, let the Reader judge. All that I ſaid was, that he had the favour of Chriſt. and dignity of place in Chriſt's life-time, even before Peter himſelf, the former being cleared by the title of Beloved Diſciple peculiar to him, and by the latter evidently meaning no more than this πρωτοκλισία in this laſt Supper, which Baronius affirms with me. * An. 34. n. XLI. † Sch. Diſp. p. 371. 1.

17. But it ſeems I ſaid in my Anſwer, that Chriſt's favour to him is infallibly inferr'd from the title of Beloved Diſciple; and then forſooth, this is matter of delight to S. W. that the Doctour is more certain in his Inferences, than his Church is of her Faith; ſince he is confident of his infallibility in thoſe, but in this he onely affirms, that it is not ſtrongly probable his Church will err] To this worthy and witty Reply I anſwer, that my * words by him cited are no more uſed of our Church, than of any other particular Church (I inſtance now in his of Rome) and when I ſaid, that a particular Church, that is at the preſent in the right in all matters of Faith, and hath all uſefull aſſiſtances to keep it ſo, is yet fallible, and may teach falſe, i.e. it is naturally poſſible, though not ſtrongly probable, as long as it is diſpoſed to make uſe of theſe aſſiſtances, I ſaid no whit more than the Apoſtles warning to the Primitive Romans will juſtifie, Rom. XI. 20. 21, 22. to which I refer him. And when in continuance of the Jeer the Proteſtant is bid recur for his infallible rule of Faith, to Dr. Hammond's Inferences, I ſhall wiſh S. W. no more harm, than that the Rule of all his Faith, (I mean the Roman Additionals) were but as infallible, as is the Inference now before us, that Chriſt's favour to John is inferr'd from the title of Beloved Diſciple, I ſhould not then diſpute the Truth, or irrefragable certainty of them. * Repl. p. 16.

18. This is all he replies to that of Chriſt's favour to John; but to that of his leaning on Chriſt's Breaſt, he hath many things to object. 1. Says he, We reade not he did ſo more than once.] I anſwer, that though his Negative ab authoritate be not concluding, yet I ſhall not reſiſt the force of it, having never ſaid, or intimated that he did. 2. He cannot imagine, that Chriſt taught his Diſciples that complementalneſs as to ſit conſtantly in their ranks at meat] And I am of his mind, and never made uſe of ſuch an Imagination. 3. He obſerves from Luk. XXII. 26, 27. that Chriſt forbad that carriage by his own example,] And I think ſo too, and conſequently that the moſt Apoſtolical and Chriſtian, and becoming exerciſe of Greatneſs for any Succeſſour of St. Peter, is that which beſt accords to that Text, the humility, and miniſtring, which are there ſpecified, and the indifferency that S. W. infers thence. 4. He ſaith that I allow St. Peter nothing but a dry complementary precedence, to walk, ſtand or ſpeak firſt, and now give John precedency of place at Table, ſo that to make my Doctrine conſonant, it muſt (if he may be believed) be conceived, that St. John had a Primacy in ſitting, St. Peter in ſtanding or walking, and then why not Judas in dipping at the ſame time in the Diſh with our Saviour, at which it is expected the Gentile Reader ſhould laugh, leſt S. W. be diſcouraged and ſpoiled for a Wit. But I pray, who inferred any Primacy in St. John from this πρωτοκλισία? If the Romaniſts infer more than a bare Primacy to St. Peter, even an Univerſal Paſtourſhip, from Topicks, as unconcluding, as his ſpeaking or being named, or called firſt, let them look to it, I plead nothing for St. John, which may any way juſtifie them, nor ever imagin'd any kind of precedence, ſo much as of place conſtantly to belong, or ever to have been pretended the right of that moſt humble, and moſt favoured Diſciple.

19. But the ſharpeſt Impreſſion is yet behind, viz. that I did not punctually recite, and anſwer his Arguments againſt Lazarus being next Abraham, when he is ſaid to be in his Boſome, he having tender'd, as he aſſures us, two ſuch; 1. That by my way of interpreting Abraham's Boſome, Lazarus muſt be above all the Patriarchs and Prophets but Abraham; 2. That none muſt be in Abraham's Boſome but he. I anſwer, that I conceived I had given ſuch a return, as prevented all ſeeming force of them, viz. that what is ſaid of Lazarus in Abraham's Boſome, is a Parable, for then it is no farther to be extended, than to that which was the deſign of the Parable, and according to that I do acknowledge, that ſuch as are repreſented by Lazarus, (not any particular perſon, but) all that are ſo qualified, as, in the Parable, Lazarus was, (under which reſemblance I doubt not but the holieſt of the Patriarchs and Prophets may be comprehended) ſhall be placed in Heaven next the Father of the Faithfull. And this he might have ſeen before, if he had pleaſed, and ſpared the reſemblance of David George, who called himſelf Chriſt, which will better fit thoſe that fanſie the Pope Univerſal Paſtour, and then pretend Chriſt's Commiſſion for it, than me, for but ſaying I believed Chriſt, that Lazarus in the Parable (or they that were meant by him) was capable of the place of precedence in Heaven next Abraham; which may as well be conceived, as that the poor in ſpirit ſhall be in a ſpecial manner preferred in the Kingdom of Heaven, for all ſuch are compriſed under the Embleme of Lazarus, and all they that are ſo (and not onely ſome one) are next Abraham: And that I ſuppoſe was the Father's meaning that firſt ſaid, that all the former faithfull were in Abraham's Boſome, i. e. next Abraham, which may as truly be affirmed of a multitude altogether, as of one perſon, without deſcending to the marſhalling every or any particular in that multitude; and ſo ſtill there is no need that each ſhould be higheſt, as S. W's fancy hath made neceſſary.

SECT. XXII.

Of Christ's Epistle to the VII Churches. His Cavils answered. Peter's no Jurisdiction exercised among them. Their Customes distinct from Romes. Ποιμαίνειν belongs to every Bishop. Christ's Sheep. The Falsification of Falsifications examined through all his Exceptions.

1. HIS last Section of his Part falls upon my demand, What could be said in any degree probable for Peter's Universal Pastourship over the Lydian Asia, whose seven Metropoles are so early famous, being honoured with Christ's Epistle (not to the Revelations, as he recites it, but) to them in the Revelation] And 1. I am rebuked that the latter words of their early fame, and Christ's Letter, are not acknowledged to have been by me designed to prove that St. Peter had nothing to doe with them, when, saith he, these were the onely positive words in the Period, the rest interrogatory, and also he could not guess what they did there else. 2. That I say I meant onely that these seven were considerable parts of the Universal Church, as if, saith he, Christ wrote to them, not that they stood in need, but because they were Big ones. 3. That I say there is no pretence that St. Peter should be said ποιμαίνειν to feed or govern, or so much as to have medled with the administration of them, answering, that he makes account that our Saviour said thrice to Peter, Feed my sheep, as also that the word Sheep excluded none, but included those of Asia also, these being Christ's sheep as well as the rest.] To these I answer.

2. To the first, that had any measure of reason or justice taken place, 'twere sufficient to assure him, this was not designed to prove the main Conclusion, that it was a mere circumstance, and as such, annexed, being wholly extrinsecal to the argumentative part; To which 2. the professions though of an Adversary, yet of him that alone could be supposed to know his own mind, might have added some weight, toward the silencing this suggestion, and keeping it from appearing upon the stage the second time, especially when his reasons for re-inforcing it now, are so far from proving ought; For 1. why might not a proof be proposed in an interrogatory form? Did he never hear of one, which the Oracle affirmed to be at least as wise a man, as S. W. (I am sure much wiser, and more skilfull in the Art of disputing than either he or his Adversary) who seldom used any form of arguing but the interrogatory? 2. If his faculties were applyed to the discerning of Truth with the fortieth part of eagerness, which is used in inventing Cavils, he had wit enough to have imagin'd, that other use, to which the early fame of those Churches might be and was designed, their being such considerable parts of the Church, that if Peter had had the Supreme government of them, as 'tis visible John had the immediate, it must be strange, that one being so famously spoken of by Histories, the other should never be the most casually, or darkly mention'd in them. And the same Argument may be thus farther improved, that those that have most studiously endeavoured to inhance the Popes power by the title of his succeeding St. Peter, have not yet been able to instance in any act of Jurisdiction exercised by him, whether in Scripture or Ecclesiastick Writers, but such as either was common to him with all the rest of the Apostles, or belonged to those parts which are acknowledged his particular province, under his immediate not mediate Jurisdiction.

3. To his second 'tis sufficient to reply, 1. that [big] is not equivalent to [considerable] many other excellencies may render them considerable, whom that one of bigness doth not; and these conspired in these Churches, till heresies creeping in among them, made their wants of the Supreme Pastours care considerable also; and therefore secondly, by saying that these were considerable Churches, I could not in any tolerable Construction be deem'd to conclude, that Christ had no reference to their wants, in writing to them.

4. To the last, that my saying [there is no pretence, &c.] related not to what S. W. or other Romanists did or could (though never so unjustly) pretend, but to what was, according to humane measures, meet they should pretend, or for which they had any Authority from ancient Records producible, to justify their pretences. My words related merely to matter of Fact, demanding, was he Supreme Pastour of them, had he any, did he ever exercise or pretend any Jurisdiction over them, (I ask not whether S. W. pretend it for him 1600 years after his death, but) whether in times, or Authours worth heeding for matters of fact, any footsteps of this remain, any exercise of such his immediate Jurisdiction in Asia be testified? Or changing the style from Interrogatory to positive (in complyance with him that cannot understand arguing in any other form) the force of what I said is this, There is no colour of pretence from stories of credit among men, that St. Peter ever medled mediately, (it being granted by S. W. that he did not immediately) with the administration of these Churches; nay (lest he say all this is Negative not Positive still) the Customes that were observed among these Asian Churches, so distinct from those at Rome, that when the Popes assumed a power any where, they were not permitted, are a competent proof, that that Asian Province received their Laws from St. John, without any respect to St. Peter's, and the Romish Chairs mediate Jurisdiction. The difference about the keeping of Easter, which was so long contested in the Church, one Tradition holding from St. John, the other from St. Peter, and the managing of this in this our Island between Augustine the Monk insisting on Peter's way, and the Britains adhering to theirs derived from St. John, are sufficient witnesses of this. As for the onely pretence that S. W. now offers, from Christ's bidding him feed his sheep, let it be judged, whether every Apostle were not intrusted with as large a Jurisdiction as these words can pretend for him, whether we consider the force of ποιμαίνειν to feed and rule, or the indefiniteness of the Phrase, My Sheep, which are S. W's Topicks; For the first, 'tis well known that the power of feeding and ruling, and so of being ποιμὴν Pastor, belonged not onely to every Apostle, but every Bishop in the Church, who is therefore styled Pastour in Scripture, and in the Ancients. And for the latter, the indefinite Phrase Christ's Sheep, 1. that can by no rules of Logick be made equivalent to universal, or if it could, yet the Apostolical commission (which extends as far as that of the ποιμαίνειν or Pastoral) is to every Creature, and so certainly universal. 2. I shall demand of any that knows the nature of words most Critically, whether when St. Paul commanded the Bishops at Ephesus, Act. XX. ποιμαίνειν τὴν ποίμνιον to feed the Flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them Overseers, he might not have used this very Phrase which Christ used to St. Peter, Feed Christ's Lambs or Sheep ----and yet have been certainly resolved to have meant no more, than he now meant, in those other words, which were terminated in their immediate Province? This therefore being so insufficient it was but needfull that he should promise that the particularity of this to Peter shall be seen hereafter, else it might pose a

Master

Maſter, and Exacter of Demonſtrations, to complete this Enthymeme into a Syllogiſm, Chriſt bad Peter feed his Sheep, Ergo, Peter had the Supreme, mediate Juriſdiction over the Aſian Churches, and muſt be reſolved to have had ſo, though he never find, that he medled with them, ſo much as to commit them to another's charge; and though the conſequence of it be, that not Peter himſelf, which was a prime Apoſtle, but even thoſe that were inferiour to the meaneſt Apoſtles, muſt have a ſupereminent power over St. John; for ſuch were Peter's Succeſſours at Rome that ſate there, when John reſided at Epheſus.

5. But though this be well over, there remains behind a moſt diſmal Crack of Thunder, with which the Exit to his ſecond Act is celebrated, Dr. Hammond's Falſification of Falſifications thrice propounded, firſt in the title, then in the body of the Section, and thirdly in the Index. And what is it that provoked this Civil Gentleman, that hath ſuch a mind to be ſweet and gratious, to this great ſeverity? Why, I had in the * Tra. of Sch. theſe words, Doth not St. Paul give Timothy full inſtructions (and ſuch as no other Apoſtle could countermand or interpoſe in them) leaving no other Appeal or place of application for farther directions, ſave onely to himſelf, when he ſhall come to him, 1 Tim. 3. 14, 15.] If this be the Falſification of Falſifications, i. e. the greateſt and moſt notorious, I am guilty of, it will be little for S. W.'s credit, which hath branded ſo many other paſſages under that title. * P. 83.

6. In theſe words it is evident by all that a matter of this nature is capable of, i.e. by the letter, wherein they were put, that they were not ſet as the very words of Scripture, but as a ſenſe deducible from thence. In which ſhould I have failed, and inferr'd more than the paſſage would bear, this were indeed a piece of ill Logick, reducible to that of an illegal ſyllogiſm, but could no more be the leaſt degree of forgery or falſification (which is the reciting words from a place, that are not there to be found) than they are guilty of, which appeal to any words of Scripture, and miſinterpret them. Certainly they muſt be new Dictionaries, not yet authorized in the world, by which every miſunderſtanding or undue deduction muſt be the loweſt (and that is far from the higheſt) degree of Falſification. But then ſecondly, I am not yet vouchſafed any degree of conviction from S. W. that here was any more deduced from thoſe verſes, than they are ready to yield without any importuning or ſoliciting them.

7. The words of the Verſes are theſe, Theſe things I Write unto thee, hoping to come to thee ſhortly; but if I tarry long, that thou mayſt know how to behave thy ſelf in the Houſe of God. From theſe I inferr'd, 1. that St Paul gave Timothy full Inſtructions, and ſo he doth in this Epiſtle, and in this place ſaith he doth, elſe how could it have Truth, that he wrote it that he might know how to behave himſelf in the Houſe of God, full Inſtructions being nothing elſe, but ſuch as would ſufficiently furniſh him with knowledge for the diſcharge of his Office; 2. That he left place of application for farther derections to himſelf, when he ſhould come to him, and this is concluſible from theſe words, Theſe things have I written, hoping to come to thee ſhortly, which contains a reaſon why he writes no more copiouſly at this time, becauſe he hopes ſhortly to ſupply in perſon whatſoever in reſpect of circumſtance, or caſual emergence, may happen to be wanting in his preſent directions. 3. That he leaves no other appeal or application for directions, ſave onely to himſelf, when he ſhall thus come to him, and this is alſo as evident as a Negative can be, no other is mentioned here, that is certain, no other in all the Epiſtle nor any where elſe, which yet were neceſſary to the rendring his directions full, ſhow Timothy, Primate of Epheſus, were to behave himſelf in the Church, were there any Superiour beſides St. Paul, from whom he might receive Orders: For (beſide that Exceptio firmat Regulam in non exceptis, and therefore his excepting himſelf at his coming, confirms the completeneſs of the direction for all other caſes) the Supreme Paſtourſhip of Peter, had it truth in it, were of all things belonging to his behaviour in the Church, the moſt neceſſary to be told Timothy, that he might addreſs to him, and receive Orders from him, whenſoever occaſion required, as now in the Roman Impalement; nothing is more eminently required of a new Biſhop, nothing more ſolicitouſly taught him, than his Obedience to the Pope. Thus he ſees every part (ſave onely the Parentheſis) moſt readily reduced from thoſe Verſes; and then, what matters it, if the words, which were not cited thence, nor affirmed to be found there, are not found, ſo long as the ſenſe is, which alone was cited thence, as is moſt evident?

8. As for the Parentheſis, though that were therefore put ſo, that it might not appear to be any part of the citation, yet I ſhall ſtill (as then I did) challenge any man to make it appear in the leaſt wiſe probable, that Peter had any power de jure, or de facto exerciſed any, to interpoſe between Paul and Timothy, or countermand any thing that he had ordered? 'Tis not ſufficient for him now to ſay, as here he doth that I know long agoe his anſwer, that St. Peter could, for I asked not what he would ſay by way of Confident Dictate, but what could in any degree probably be ſaid, or how it ſhould be made to appear? Were not theſe words in the beginning of the Par. which had their influence on that that followed [what can be ſaid in any degree probable, &c.] S. W.'s bare affirmation being far from amounting to the feebleſt degree of ſuch probability.

9. Having thus cleared the matter of fact in both parts, 1. that there is no leaſt colour of his Charge of Falſification; 2. that all that I undertook to deduce from the two Verſes, is fairly deducible; I have no need of adding more, having already done more than he required, his great Out-cry of Falſification of Falſifications being ſilenced by the former, and himſelf now † confeſſing that he charged me not for inferring thence, but for putting down thoſe words for pure Scripture] which is without all ground or ſemblance of truth ſuggeſted by him, and in a plain matter of fact, (viſible by the Letter wherein the words are put) ſeldom exemplified among Writers, how be it among Libellers, and in Chancery Bills, and thoſe that are to make their advantages by the Calumniari fortiter, it may by curious Obſervers perhaps be met with. But for the very ſame trick to be plaid over ſo many times, as we have found inſtances of this in S. W. and an Index to be wholly made up of ſuch like Ware, which is a Confeſſion that there is no other conſiderable Ingredients in this defence of his, is as little for the credit of the Cauſe that could ſeem to a friend to want ſuch aids, as of him that was qualified to contribute them. † P. 376. l. 31.

10. It is now very admirable in a mere matter of fact, as this is, with what ſlight colours he hopes to delude the Reader into a perſwaſion, that I did not intend to conclude thence, but that I put down the words for pure Scripture, (when yet by affixing the place, 1 Tim. 3. 14, 15. I muſt neceſſarily diſcover the cheat to any man that could but reade, and could not be imagin'd to deſign to deceive any other) as 1. if I intended to conclude, why, ſaith he, did I not put ſome expreſſion of that my intent?] Which is as much as if he ſhould ſay, that the phraſe [I conclude] or [Ergo] were neceſſary to adorn or complete every Period, where any Concluſion is made, or as if he that ſhould conclude Iſaac was Abraham's Son, and refer the Reader to Mat. 1. 2. where thoſe words were not found, were obliged to produce it thus, the Holy Text ſaith Abraham begat Iſaac, Ergo, or thence I conclude Iſaac was Abraham's Son; I deſire this new Regulatour of Laws of Diſcourſe, will firſt get his Patent ſealed, before he impoſe thus Magiſterially; In the mean to conclude me guilty of Falſification of Falſifications, becauſe I tranſcribed not this his Copy before I received it, is as much above the Language of the Boy, [If you will not give me my Hat, you Lie] as the greateſt is the moſt trivial Contumely, the ſtyle of S. W. above that of Billings-gate.

11. This ſame Reaſon is ſoon after a little diſguiſed, and brought on the Stage again, becauſe, ſaith he, my words are poſitive and abſolute, not expreſt like an Inference or Concluſion.] When 1. they were interrogatory, and that, as was lately ſaid, no unskilfull form of concluding from any premiſſes, be they places of Scripture, or any other.

12. His next reaſon is, becauſe they are Relations of matters of fact] And ſo was Iſaac's being Abraham's Son, even now mention'd. His laſt, becauſe they that conclude from Scripture, put the place firſt, and then deduce from it] And ſo may they too, that put the place laſt, and no Rules have by any Artiſts been impoſed on ſuch indifferent, variable circumſtances, as theſe. And let him beſtow an hour in any Authour he pleaſe, that writes of matters of fact, from others Teſtimonies, and mark if he find not this exemplified. It is true they that write Syllogiſms, ſet down their premiſſes firſt, and then the Concluſion; But I never entred into Bond to S. W. to write nothing but Mood and Figure, and I think he hath given me neither reaſon, nor example, to alter my courſe.

13. But it ſeems I told him, that to ſay I inferred the whole Concluſion from the word [come] was one of S. W's arts, when yet, ſaith he, I confeſs the ſame a little before in theſe expreſs terms, I thought it concluſible from St. Paul's words] But a more moderate ſagacity than S. W. is maſter of, would have ſufficed to diſcern, that there is ſome difference betwixt the Monoſyllable [Come] and [the words of St. Paul] as thoſe ſignifie, in a large plural, no leſs than two Verſes; from the latter I affirm'd my ſenſe concluſible, and have ſhew'd him how it was ſo; and that is very reconcileable with the juſtice of my accuſing S. W's arts in ſuggeſting I did it from the former.

14. Again he blames me for ſaying, I thought my grounds were viſible, when, ſaith he, the jeſt is, that he never laid any ſuch pretended grounds at all in the Book of Sch. and ſo they could not be viſible.] But I think S. W. hath laughed in the wrong place, and that the jeſt really was, that he thought, or was willing to perſwade others, that the mind had not eyes, as well as the body, or that nothing could be viſible, though never ſo obvious to be deduced, but what was in terminis at large exhibited. But how far they come home to the inferring my Concluſion, that hath been ſhew'd already alſo, and that ex abundanti, there being no need thereof to vindicate me from his charge of Falſification.

15. Next I did my duty, ſaith he, either in ſhewing that thoſe words [No other Apoſtle could countermand, No Appeal, &c.] were expreſt in the Teſtimony, or concluded thence] 'Twere ſtrange if no ſuch power of Countermand, or Appeal being extant, I might not ask, whether St. Paul left any, and by ſo asking expreſs my ſelf to ſuppoſe he left none, without ſhewing thoſe words in St. Paul [I leave no Appeal, &c.] As for deducing it thence, it is ſufficient, that it is not found there, if at the ſame time it can no more duly be pretended that ſomewhere elſe it is to be had, than 'tis found there; Againſt which it was, that I made the demand, and find it not yet anſwered by S. W. any otherwiſe than by his putting a bare empty claim for St. Peter, unleſs we reſume his forementioned, Feed my Sheep, which hath, when it was produced, had its due conſideration alſo.

16. But the Doctour, ſaith he, counterfeits himſelf ignorant whom we hold for Head of the Apoſtles, ſaying, let him be nam'd, and his power ſpecified] I anſwer, the Doctour pretended no more ignorance, than he truly lay under, for his * words are by S. W. maim'd, and cut ſhort; they were thus, If any could, i. e. could by any authority given him by Chriſt countermand, &c. Let him be nam'd and the power ſpecified, and proved, by virtue whereof he ſhould thus act; It was then the proving his right to any ſuch power, and not onely the naming or ſpecifying, which I demanded; and of that I am ſtill ignorant, as S. W. appears to be, by leaving out, when he ſet down the former, that part of the words, on which the whole weight lay, and to which the other were but introductive, and replying no word to them.

* Anſ. p. 57.

17. 'Tis true he after proceeds to thoſe words, ſo far as to jeer and poſſeſs himſelf of the Anſwerer's privilege, to prove nothing.] But neither will that clear his dealing in this matter; For 1. had he joined the proving his power with the naming and ſpecifying it, there had then been no place for his charge of my counterfeit ignorance; And 2. though the Anſwerer is not always bound to prove, yet when the Argument is drawn from the No proof producible for a pretended power, the Anſwerer muſt either deny the premiſſes, or yield the Concluſion, and if he deny the premiſſes, he is in all reaſon to ſpecifie what this proof is, and on what grounds pretended, that ſo the Diſputant may invalidate his Plea, by ſhewing how weak that proof is. Thus may injurious Invaders be forced in Chancery to produce their Deeds, and not continue to hold either by ſullen Violence, or by Title, which is therefore concealed, becauſe it is ſo little the Pretender's Intereſt to ſee the Sun.

18. But again the Doctour wrongs S. W. in ſaying he dares not, doth not affirm that St. Peter had power over the reſt of the Apoſtles, I anſwer, that he miſinterprets my ſaying, I ſaid, he dares not, I am ſure doth not affirm this: But what is this? That muſt appear by the former words, which comprehended the power given by Chriſt, the proof as well as pretenſe of that power, by which he ſhould thus act; And this was it, that I ſaid S. W. did not affirm, i. e. did not ſpecifie and prove the giving any ſuch power from Chriſt, which ſure he did not in this place, where he never pretended to doe it, and I ſuppoſed he durſt not affirm it, becauſe though he may be valiant enough, I took him not to be any Worker of miracles; and to pretend ſome words of Chriſt, ſuch as Feed my Sheep, and the like, and to be able to infer no uſefull Concluſion from them, would be no act of ſolid valour or daring, and ſo no prejudice to S. W. to be deemed to want it. And if he be not of this mind, but ſtill makes his profeſſion, that he both affirms and dares maintain it againſt D. H. and forty more learned than himſelf, and is ſo reſerved, as not to indulge to ſo many demands (which if they had been his, had been open defiances and challenges) one word of proof of this power being given Peter by Chriſt, he is the very ſame S. W. that I ever took him him for; and there is an end of his Section of Sections, which is to be known by the name of Falsification of Falsifications, as that with some truth signifies the false accusing another, which is most innocent, of what he is most guilty himself. And this concludes at length his Second Part.

CHAP. VII.

A Reply to his Third Part.

SECT. I.

His Pleas of possession and Oral Tradition. Of Testimony-proofs, Deductions, Distinctions. No proving a Negative by Testimonies. Of Pasce oves. S. W's memory. The conference betwixt Reinolds and Hart. The power promised St. Peter with the Keys. How maintained by S. W. to be his incloſure. Of calumniating their Tenet.

1. WE are now come to the last stage of our δολιχοδρόμιον, and find not much in his first Section which exacts any other Reply than of remitting the Reader to what hath been already said in the * Ans. Schis. Disar. and now in this Rejoynder, in the view of his grounds, which I made so largely and particularly then, that there might be less need afterwards of repeating. He shall there find an answer satisfactory to his Question, wherewith he sets out, and perceive my sense, how far the Papal Authority, as he maintains it, or the possession by him pretended, was removed from being so qualified, that nothing but perfect demonstration might safely be heard against it, and how little could be said for them from his own Topick of Oral Tradition, and withall how no force there was in that, as by him it is managed, to demonstrate any thing to come from the spring-head of Truth. * p. 59.

2. As for his Notion of Testimony-Evidences, that they "must be by words so directly expressing "the thing to be proved, that they need no additions or explications to bring them home to the mat-"ter, but are such as the alledger himself were he to express his thoughts in the present controversie "would make choice of to use.] I have oft prevented his present challenge, and told him I utterly dislike his Notion on this account, because there are multitudes of ways of testifying the same thing, and so of inferring a conclusion regularly, beside that of finding it in express words; and indeed whatsoever words the alledger shall have chosen to put his Conclusion in, he might with tolerable, perhaps with equal fitness have chosen many others; and still there is such a thing in the world, as rational deduction, which is of as full force with all rational men, who judge as well as see or hear, as the expressest words can be imagined to be; Nay, be the words never so express, yet he knows, there is place for distinctions, and those are not fetched from or found in express words, but from other Circumstances, which though not expressed in the τὸ ῥητὸν, may yet be collected from the τὸ λογικὸν or rational importance of the Context, &c. And whether it be thus rightly deduced or no (not whether it be to take place, though it be) is the onely question at any time among those that seek Truth, and not occasions of cavilling. And so he sees, express words are so far from being the onely means of solid probation, that others are oft such, when they are not; and when all is done, the eyes of the mind and not of the body must judge of these things, else wise and learned men would have no advantage of Fools and Idiots.

3. Here indeed he talks very devoutly of hazarding souls, and schismatizing upon no better grounds, as if there might be any good grounds to schismatize upon, or as if it were granted betwixt us that we schismatize, and the onely Question were of the goodness of our grounds, when he knows we give over all farther dispute, when once we shall be proved to have schismatized, being resolved that no cause or Grounds can justifie Schism in those that are truly the Separatours.

4. As for his kinds of Testimonies, some manifesting that the thing must be, others probable, inferring that they may; No man doubts but there is such a distinction and convenient place for both of them; of the former, against him that denies the necessity, of the latter, against him that denies the possibility of a questioned truth: But for producing of, and depending on such onely, as infer no more than possibilities, when there is need of more, whether we are found guilty of that, or whether our deducing from senses as well as from express words, render us guilty of it, these were too much to the matter for S. W. to make the subject of his enquiries; 'Tis more for his turn to amuse the Reader, than to speak to that which alone is pertinent, and this with him is another part of this Character of rigorous Discourse.

5. Next enters a Charge of Prevarication from my promise, That in stead of bringing evidences of my own, I solve their pretended ones, and so sustain the part of the Defendant, when I was the Opponent.] To this I gave before a double Answer:

1. That the one possible way to testifie a Negative, was to take a view of the places the affirmers pretend, and shew they have no such force in them.

2. That an Opponent may be such, i. e. discharge his office by opposing affirmations (as well as negations) of other men; and that he must doe, by invalidating their testimonies, on which they found or defend their affirmations. Now the latter of these, which evidently cleared me from all colour of the charge of prevaricating from my promise or office, was not usefull for him to take notice of; The former he recites, and 1. the [one possible way] are canting words, and 2. if one signifie onely, then there was never so strange a position heard of in the Schools, who have taught concluding in Celarent and Ferio, without answering arguments in Barbara and Darii.] To these I answer.

1. That the One possible, cannot reasonably signifie other than the onely, as unus and unicus are all one; if this be the One possible, then there is no other possible but this; and then, where's the canting, but in S. W's (not fancy, but) resolution to cavill at every thing?

2. For the Logick, and appeal to the Schools, how ordinary is it there to hear, that it is impoſſible to prove a Negative by Teſtimonies? By a Negative meaning as now we do, in matter of fact, that ſuch a thing was not done or ſaid by Chriſt, &c. And the reaſon is evident, becauſe if any man ſhould thus teſtifie negatively, his Teſtimony were inſufficient (and then that which hath no means but inſufficient to work it, is not poſſible to be done) for the utmoſt he can with Truth teſtifie, is, that he neither ſaw nor heard the thing done or ſaid, at this or that time, which notwithſtanding, the thing might at that time be ſaid without his hearing it, or elſe perhaps it was ſaid at ſome other time; And this is moſt clear in the preſent Queſtion of the Univerſal Paſtourſhip held by donation from Chriſt; for how can any man teſtifie Chriſt gave it not, no man being always preſent with Chriſt both on earth and in heaven, in either of which 'tis poſſible he ſhould give it. And indeed for any man to ſay, he gave it, and not to aſſign the time and words wherein he gave it, or ſome competent Teſtimony to eſtabliſh it, is perfect vanity, and as unworthy as impoſſible to be refuted, This then that was by S. W's directions to be hiſt out of the Schools, is, in the matter before us, the onely method, that either Logick or Reaſon will allow us to make uſe of (I ſaid not to prove, but) to teſtifie our Negative, by invalidating their affirmative, and ſhewing that thoſe words wherein their ſtrength lies, conclude nothing in favour of them. As for his good friends, Celarent and Ferio, there may be other turns for them to ſhew their uſefulneſs, and in effect uſe hath already been made of them, when by the ἰσοτιμία of Paul and him, or of the twelve and him, the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of one of them was diſproved, Thus, No one of two or twelve equals is Univerſal Paſtour, Peter is one of two or twelve equals, Ergo: But it was not of proving, but teſtifying of Negatives, i. e. proving them by that one way, à teſtimonio, that I ſpake; and he wanted not abilities to diſtinguiſh theſe, if he had pleaſed to have been ſerious, when he had no temptation to the Contrary.

6. But from hence he thinks fit to make his retreat to his old hold of Tradition Oral, and renouncing all other ways, but that, of interpreting the Texts, on which he grounds his Tenet, he finds the Dr's diſcurſive faculty infinitely weak, the utmoſt my way can aſpire to, being but this, that the Concluſion follows not out of thoſe Teſtimonies, not that the thing is in it ſelf untrue, their Faith being not founded in ſuch texts as explicable by wit, but onely by Univerſal Tradition.] I ſhall be ſo far from oppoſing him in any part of this his retreat, ſave onely in that one, of his Notion of Tradition, that I ſhall devolve this (as ſafely I might the whole) Controverſie to that Iſſue. For if by Tradition truely and properly ſo called, he ſhall ſhew that to be the meaning of his Texts, which he pretends from them, if the Univerſal Church of Chriſt of all ages have recieved from the Apoſtles, that either Feed my ſheep, or thou art Peter, &c. did ſignifie the inſtating the Univerſal Paſtourſhip on Peter, he ſhall never by my conſent be troubled with explications of wit, or any thing that Grammatical or Critical quibbling, as he calls it, can bring againſt him. But when by Tradition he ſhall mean no more, but the Language of the preſent Roman Church, and think by his Explications of wit to infer this to be the very voice of the Apoſtles, and that it is impoſſible for the moſt fallible Romiſh Mothers to teach their Children any thing but what is thus derived from the fountain of all Truth, he may think himſelf ſafe in this Sanctuary, but will be fetched out from the horns of his Altar, by ſhewing that this his laſt pretence and reſerve is the feebleſt of all the reſt. And that hath been ſo lately done, by examining the ſtrength thereof, in the Chapter of Tradition, that though he will repeat upon any, or no occaſion, I muſt not be ſo importunate, nor yet have I any thing elſe to doe toward the deſtroying his pretenſions, his Confeſſions being now very frank, that all the Teſtimonies which he pretends from Scripture for his Tenet, are words left without life, and ſtark dead to his hands, and then ſure they are no better in his own opinion, than thoſe mute ones of mine, which were to be hooted off the ſtage, for being ſuch. This I deſire he will remember, when he comes to fetch proofs from hence, and not now onely when he ſeems to deſpiſe them.

7. The Next part of his procedure is to accuſe me for not inſiſting, in the Tr. of Schiſm, on this text Feed my ſheep. And having in the Reply mentioned to the Catholick Gentleman, three heads of Arguments to prove, that that was no more than an Exhortation to Peter to perform his duty, and in the Anſw. to Sch. Diſa. told him the reaſon of my not handling this, becauſe it had been ſo oft handled already and found to have no force in it, and that his with me was like Dr. Stapleton's dealing with Mr. Calvin, when among the Romaniſts Arguments from Scripture, he having made no mention of Lu. XXII. 31. the Dr. tells him, he had left it out, becauſe he knew ſuch clear words could not be eluded by any Cavilling: to this I added what paſſed between Dr. Reinolds and Mr. Hart, when all the ſtrength, that Dr. Stapleton could infuſe into it, was found, and by the manager yeilded to be inſufficient, were it not that other texts, (ſaid he) affirmed the ſame, particularly that of Lu. XXII. 31. Which was ſoon diſcovered alſo to have no force in it; and all this under the hands of both theſe diſputers, teſtified to be the iſſue of that Diſpute. To all this what hath he to reply? Why, 1. I am the inheritour of Mr. Calvin's faults, and therefore may well be uſed as he was. 2. I am his friend, and therefore am not, in what I ſay of Dr. Stapleton and him, to be believed unleſs I prove it better. 3. For my account of Feed my ſheep, 'tis onely ſome account telling him ſleightly three things, whereas S.W. demands, Is there no particularity in order to St. Peter? An hard caſe, that after Chriſt's ſaying, Simon ------ loveſt thou me more than theſe; &c. Nothing ſhould be ſpoken in order to Peter in particular. 4. He asks, whether I have reckoned all the places in Controvertiſts, where this and other texts have been anſwered, and where are my Tables of accounts, &c. 5. For the Conference with Hart, he will not credit the Relation, and ſaith the words of Hart are ſillily unlikely, and that ſo 'tis alſo, that he ſhould fly from Feed my ſheep, to Lu. XXII. 31. And he asks in what words I think he ſhould place his Argument. To all theſe I muſt, as briefly as I can, make my Reply.

8. To the firſt, that when, and whatſoever he ſhall prove to be any of Mr. Calvin's faults, I will aſſume at the leaſt warning, either to defend Mr. Calvin, that it is no fault, or my ſelf, that I am not guilty of it; but at the preſent I have no need of either: The fault before us, though accuſed by Dr. Stapleton, being vindicated (would one think it?) by S.W. who, in the laſt branch of this Reply, juſt now ſet down, makes it a ridiculous thing, for Mr. Hart, to be thought to make uſe of Lu. XXII. 31. for a proof of Peter's Supremacy, asking where we will pretend he placed the moſt force, in Simon, in Satan, in Sifting, in wheat? And I am ſcoffed at for a great wit, to bring ſuch unlikely trifles for my Excuſe.

And

And yet now, to shew on which side the wit lay, 'tis Calvin's fault (and deserved the same reprehension, that S. W. laid on me, and that is severe enough) to think this very place Lu. 22. 31. so unsignificant, as not to take notice of it. Let that serve for his first Answer.

9. To his second, 'tis yet a little more strange that his eyes now, as before his memory should fail him, for I cited the very place in * Dr. Stap. Where he makes this return to Mr. Calvin; what better proof would he require of words, than citing them in the Language, and from the very Chapter where they are extant? Did he not see this? where then were his eyes? Did he see it? Where was his Truth? * Princip. doctr. lib. 6. ca. 8.

10. To the third, that I should have thought three heads of Arguments, so easie to be dilated on, were a competent tender of probations, without descending to write Discourses on each of these heads; however, that he that saith nothing to them, was not to be gratified with more, when being so sleightly proposed, they might have been the more briefly answered; But instead of that, asking a question nothing to the purpose (for there might be somewhat spoken to Peter in particular, without giving him the supremacy) and crying an hard case, and repeating the same question in other words, is all the return he is pleased to afford, and that in his opinion is enough, it seems, to outweigh many heads of Arguments.

11. To the fourth, that I have no Tables of accounts ready, nor mean to purchase his favour or his mirth at so dear a rate; That it was so often answered, that I could not imagine it would be deemed usefull I should descend to it, will be made good without appeal to an Auditour. The referring him to Dr. Reynolds his Answer to Dr. Stapleton, as his treasures were perfectly rifled by M. Hart, is sufficient for my discharge; for who need transcribe what is there so visible? and if it will not be believed, that conference is truly set down, yet it cannot be questioned, whether those Arguments be there produced, and there answered.

12. To the last, that I shall not attempt any violence on his faith, or perswade him that there was such a Man and Disputant as M. Hart, that we have the true Copy of his dispute, i. e. that all men that had to doe in that Edition, parted not with their wits as well as honesties at the undertaking; for so they must, had they forged a thing so gross and easie to be disproved, and so much to their own disadvantage, if it were disprovable; for I know all this signifies nothing with S. W. whose measures of egregious falsifications are such, that nothing can secure from them; I shall best satisfie the Reader, if I consider the weight of his reasons for this suggestion; and first, the sillines of the words of M. Hart (the very rehearsal of which, saith he, is enough to disgrace the whole relation) will not be so convincing an Argument of their falseness, if it be remembred on what Text it was that his words were spoken, even that of Luk. 22. Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have thee, &c. of which S. W. pronounceth there is nothing found to prove the point of Supremacy, and challenges any Protestant to pretend; from which of the words it should be deduced; and if there were nothing, why is it incredible, that he should be able to fetch nothing out of it? and if so, what could he doe more than he did, adhere to it, for D. Stapleton's sake, from whom he had it, and having some implicite faith and kindness for it, be content to take his leave of it, in this manner? And truly if S. W. could think fit to plead for his more improvable place, Joh. 21. as he did with [An hard case, if thrice saying Simon, Son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? and thereupon, Feed my sheep, nothing should yet be spoken in order to St. Peter in particular.] I know not why Mr. Hart should be despised for taking his leave in his manner of an unimprovable.

13. As for his second pretended improbability that he should fly from Feed my sheep] to Luk. 22. 31. the account is so visible, that nothing but his interest to have it concealed, could miss it. For that of Feed my sheep] he had driven as far as it would goe, and this other of Lu. XXII. was his onely reserve, and that of which even now we heard Dr. Stapleton's boast, Nullo Cavillationis fuco tam manifesta verba eludi posse, that nothing could elude such manifest words; and 'tis now much more strange that S. W. should thus despise, and in another's person reproach the Dr's Authority and Judgment, than that Mr. Hart, who profest to allow his Conduct, should be led by it. Meanwhile we have here an instance of S. W's Justice to others, as well as Civility to his friends, when Dr. Stapleton's words to Mr. Calvin, pretending that Lu. XXII. 31. is an invincible place, must be solemnly defended, and yet the no-appearance of force in that Text be an Argument sufficient to discredit the whole relation of that conference, of which this is one (though a most inconsiderable) part. Thus happy is S. W. in making good his charges whether of injuriousness, or of falsifications.

14. From hence we are led to a review of my Calumniating the Catholicks tenet concerning the power of the Keys, in calling it a peculiarity and inclosure of St. Peter. The thing I said in the Tr. of Sch. is visible in these words, To him that pretends this donative (of the Keys, Mat. XVI. 19.) and consequent power, as a peculiarity and inclosure of St. Peter's, &c.] I say not here that they say the power of the Keys is St. Peter's inclosure, but presume they say that this Donative, or what was given Peter in that place, Mat. XVI. was given to him alone, and so was his peculiarity and inclosure, for else how can they found his Supremacy here? And therefore to the Disarmer's objection of Calumny, I confronted his own words in several places, especially these, that the promise of giving the Keys of Heaven, was given to St. Peter in particular, and again, that it was performed by a performance in particular, (as that differs from the performance to all the Apostles in general) from whence, and his rebuking me that I omitted this performance in particular, I thought I might conclude, that what was promised and performed to Peter in particular, was in his opinion something which was not comprehended in that to all in general, and then that was in his opinion St. Peter's peculiarity or inclosure. Here it is manifest that both in the first draught, and in the defence, I speak not of the power of the Keys simply, but of that whatsoever it is, which was given Peter particularly in that place; and if so, how can I have calumniated them in supposing that they make it St. Peter's inclosure, which unless they do, they cannot imagine how to gain any thing by this place.

15. He now will perswade his Reader, that I expresst no such thing, nay that I carried it so, as if they held that no Apostle had the Keys but St. Peter, and he will give his reasons for this, 1. From the position of my words, which after [I will give the Keys] subjoyn, But to him that hence pretends this Donative, &c. Whence he concludes, this Donative was with me the power of the Keys in general.] I answer, by this

Donative

Donative, I meant that, whatſoever it was, which was there promiſed St. Peter, abſtracting from the queſtion what power it was; I acknowledge with him that ſomewhat was promiſed St. Peter in that place, but afterward ſhew, that what was there promiſed him, was, Matt. 26. 11. promiſed all; This is not to calumniate their tenet, but refute it.

16. His ſecond reaſon is, becauſe one of my Conſiderations to ſuperſede their concluſion, was the Scriptures that expreſs onely that the Keys were given all the Apoſtles in Common, but nothing at all that they were given equally to all.] I anſwer that it is true, that what was given Peter in one place, I ſhew was given all the Apoſtles in another, and from thence think it reaſonable to reſolve, that they pretend amiſs that there is any thing peculiar to St. Peter there, and this is equally true, be it a power, or degree of power; for if that degree be any thing, and yet nothing were given in the one, which is not given in the other, then no ſuch degree was there given; Let it then be ſhewed by any Romaniſt, that what was promiſed Peter, and all the Eleven together, in one place of Matthew, was promiſed Peter, in an higher degree in the other, and he ſhall then have made good his pretences; yet cannot conclude thence, that I calumniated their tenet, who, by ſaying that the Donative there, was not as they pretend, St. Peter's incloſure, affirm this, of whatſoever it is, that they ſhall either ſhew or pretend to be his Donative.

17. His third reaſon is, by asking what means incloſure, and is it not a plain expreſſion, if applied to Peter's having the keys, that none had that power but Peter?] I anſwer, Incloſure doth ſignifie, that none elſe had that Power ſo incloſed, if it were a power; none that degree, if it were but a degree of power. But I confined not the words to one, or other, but to that whatever it was, that was promiſed St. Peter in that place. And is not that that particular power of the Keys in the Tr. of Sch? Is not this Donative and
* Sch. Diſpat. this power, Mat. 16. 19. that particular power? With what conſcience then can he,* ſay, it is not; or
p. 392. lin. 2. accuſe of Calumniating ſo reſolvedly and imperſuaſibly, when himſelf is ſo palpably guilty of it, and none elſe in the leaſt degree of appearance?

18. His laſt attempt is to deliver me from ſprights, as he will ſtyle the contrary ſuggeſtions, which the Cath. Gent. and S. W. the other appearance of him, made of me, concerning my denial and conceſſion, that the Keys were given eſpecially to St. Peter.] When though I uſed other words peculiarly and particularly, yet I uſe not the word eſpecially. This notwithſtanding, he will now prove that both of the Suggeſters ſaid true; the firſt, becauſe I ſay the Keys were given in common and equally to all, the latter, becauſe I ſaid the promiſe was made to Peter peculiarly and particularly, and then the light of nature is invoked to teſtifie againſt me.] But the light of the Sun, which enables me to reade, tells me, that it was of the words I ſpake, and not of what may by equivalence be gathered from them. And ſo by his recital of my words I am acquitted, the word [eſpecially] being not found in any. Otherwiſe, if of the ſenſe he will now have me ſpeak, he knows long ſince, that I ſcruple not to deny any eſpecial, as that ſignifies higher degree of power to belong to St. Peter, though I acknowledge, that particularly (but that is not in an eſpecial, as that is higher degree,) the power of the Keys was promiſed him, as to every of them (when to all together) the ſame was promis'd after. All that I am to learn hence is, that he that will not in another allow Deduction from Teſtimonies (as elſewhere, ſo at the beginning of this Section) without expreſs words, when ſenſe, not words, is in Controverſie; can, when 'tis his own Intereſt, be well content with equivalence and deductions, when the queſtion is onely of the words. And let this ſerve for his firſt Section.

SECT. II.

S. W's proof of St. Peter's ſupremacy from Mat. 16. The promiſe to him in particular acknowledged. Not any particular promiſe, in reſpect to the matter. Particularizing circumſtances do not encreaſe the power. What promiſed St. Peter, repeated to all. Theophylact, Cyprian. The performance of the promiſe of Jo. 21. S. W's arguments to draw ſupremacy from it, fruſtrated. Paſce oves, no commiſſion. Our Paraphraſe of that Text.

1. HIS ſecond Section is reſolved to reſume and repeat what he had ſaid, to conclude St. Peter's ſupremacy from Chriſt's promiſe of the Keys to him particularly, Mat. 16. His proof, the Reader may
* P. 394, 395. reade* at large. The beſt abſtract I can Collect of it is, that it was given him after a particular manner, after a particularizing way, after a manner not competent to the reſt; a particular bleſſing of Peter, ſprung from a particular act of his confeſſion of Chriſt's Divinity, his and his Father's particular names, God's revealing to him in particular, then Chriſt's ſaying to him, then his alluding to his particular name given him by Chriſt, thou art Peter or a Rock, and upon this Rock I will build my Church. Then the promiſe in the ſame tenour Copulatively. And I will give unto thee (ſtill with the ſame ſpecialty) the Keys, &c. and whatſoever thou, &c. From all which he concludes, that the Confeſſion, bleſſing, name, alluſion, being not common to the reſt, the promiſe-expreſſing words were ſpoken to him in a way not common to the reſt, and this being the promiſe of the Keys and their power, this was made to Peter after a manner not common, i. e. particular, and upon particular occaſions ſpringing from, and alluding to his particular perſon, All this for the promiſe.]

2. And what ſhould one now doe, but ſtand ſtill and admire this rare Machine, this exquiſite piece of Demonſtration, which being ſo advantageouſly framed, as to make particular uſe of every ſyllable in the period, moſt irreſiſtibly concludes, that what Chriſt ſpake, Mat. XVI. was at that time ſpoken particularly to St. Peter, and to no other Apoſtle, but to him at that time. This is the utmoſt that his minuteſt diſſections, and repetitions of particular and particulariſing manner, and way, and variety of circumſtances, as yet appear to aſpire or pretend to; and it was all granted him before he began, viz. that in this place the power was promiſed to one particular perſon, and that St. Peter. Nay the Original tract. of Sch. had done him this ſervice, having purpoſely eſtabliſhed this, and ſhew'd the ſole uſe that properly belonged to the obſerving it, the veſting a plenitude of Eccleſiaſtical power in ſingle perſons, and not in Communities. And ſo S. W. (in a fit of kindneſs once) hath taken exquiſite care and pains to make good our Prelatical tenure againſt the Presbyterians, and Conſiſtorians, but hath brought brought forth nothing elſe by all his ſqueezing, I ſhould wrong him to ſay that he doth yet ſo much as pretend, that either any other power, or any higher degree of the ſame power was here given St. Peter, than what at another time was given all the reſt of the Apoſtles, for I cannot wreſt any ſuch poſitive concluſion from his words, thus far recited (the word ſpecialty indeed once uſed, ſounds a little ſuſpiciouſly if compared with his notion of it * for the ſpecial or chief, but I that rejected it then, ſhall not be ſo unkind, as to bind him to it now, and therefore am onely to ſtand at the gaze, to expect, where, and by what arts any more will hereafter be concluded from it? * P. 8. l. 2.

3. Mean while, I ſhall yield him in an ample manner, that though all the Circumſtances which he ſuppoſes to particulariſe, are not ſo particularly reſtrainable to St. Peter, as to be incompetible to the other Apoſtles, (for I muſt in charity believe that ſome other of the twelve did acknowledge the Divinity of Chriſt, and had it revealed to them by the Father, and ſo were bleſſed, and deſigned as ſtones, or if he will have it ſo, rocks, on which Chriſt would build his Church, and ſo the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven were now in the Divine Deſtination, as after in the common promiſe, made over to all them) yet ſome circumſtances are thus particular, viz. his name, and the name of his Father, and the alluſion to the Name Peter, given him by Chriſt, and he hath moſt irrefragably proved, that theſe three are not common to the reſt, for he were hard hearted that would not yield, that John's name was not Simon, that the other Simon was not Barjona, that though Andrew were Barjona, yet he was not Simon, that the Appellative Peter was beſtowed on none but him, and ſo the ſingular number all along is by theſe Characteriſticks confin'd to the particular perſon of Peter. All this I ſay is, in as large a manner as can be deſired, yielded to the force of a few of his Arguments, which he moſt mightily hath eſtabliſhed with a far greater variety. And when we are thus well agreed, is it not pity we ſhould ever differ in this matter? Yet thus we ſhall unavoidably do, whenſoever he ſhall from theſe premiſſes attempt to conclude either the Supremacy in plain terms (for how can any thing of that ſort be deduced hence, when whatever is here promiſed him, is Ch. XVIII. promiſed all of them, and all cannot be Supremes) or, with the ſame deſign, any power or degree of power, which is not common to the reſt. Which I here mention before its time (that when it cometh to paſs, it may be remembred) for as yet nothing of this nature is attempted to be proved, or concluded hence.

4. Nothing then being yet gained to S. W's advantage from his managery of this Text, we muſt obſerve his next Step, and that concerns the performance of this particular promiſe. Here, e'er we proceed, may poſſibly lurk ſome deceit, for the phraſe particular promiſe] appeared not till now, but onely promiſe made to him after a particular manner, after a particulariſing way, and the like, and becauſe he hath * declared that particular is expreſly the ſame with not common or competible to the reſt; and yet I am ſure that the very promiſe he made to Peter, Mat. XVI. is explicitely made to all the reſt, Mat. XVIII. therefore I ſay 'tis poſſible ſome Viper, ſome fallacy may be hid under this deſpicable leaf, which muſt be diſcovered by his anſwer to this Queſtion, doth he by this particular promiſe] mean any particularity of power, or degree thereof, exceeding or differing from that which was, Mat. XVIII. promiſed to all the twelve, or doth he mean no more, than the particularity of the way or manner of promiſing the ſame degree of power, which before he ſpake of? If he ſay, he means any particularity of power, or degree of power, which was not after promiſed to the twelve together, what doth it here? when no ſuch thing was deduced, or ſo much as attempted to be deduced from that Text, Mat. XVI. in his laſt Paragraph, but onely the making it in a particular manner to St. Peter, i. e. to Peter, as a particular perſon, Peter by name, and with the particulariſing circumſtances, and when the very thing power, and degree of power (expreſt by the Keys) that is promiſed Peter here in the ſingular, is promiſed them all in the plural, Ch. XVIII. And then, this was not very well done of S. W. to endeavour to put a Trope upon the Dr. to ſneak in a fallacious phraſe [particular promiſe] which may refer to the matter, and not onely the manner, or to the manner, as that notes ſome ſpecial degree of power, peculiar to him, and not onely to the making the promiſe to him particularly; which if admitted in this his intended ſenſe, was the begging of the whole Queſtion, aſſuming, without tendring the leaſt proof of it. If this were the aim, it is well it was taken in time; for now that it is diſcovered, as the Cheat, it muſt be ſolemnly diſcarded out of the future reaſoning. * P. 394. l. 31.

5. But if he ſhall be fair conditioned, and profeſs to mean no more by this particular promiſe, but the promiſe of the Keys made, Mat. 16. particularly to Peter (as Mat. 18. it was generally to all the Diſciples) then all is well, and this impertinent caution was yet well meant, onely to keep S. W. honeſt; And then in God's Name let him manage his argument, and gain what he can by it on theſe terms.

6. What then is his next ſtep? why, that it is worthy our Saviour to perform his promiſe after the manner and tenour he promiſed, and ſo to give it after a particular manner, and conſequently St. Peter had the Keys after a more particular manner than the other Apoſtles; In proof of which he adds, that reaſon would think himſelf deluded (whether that be ſenſe or no, it matters not, as long as we know his meaning) to have his expectation raiſed, by ſuch a particular manner of promiſing to ſomething extraordinary and more than common, and when he comes to the point, to have his hopes defeated by a common and merely equal performance.] In this proof, the deceit hath diſcovered it ſelf, and appears bare-faced. For now it is evident, that the particularity of the promiſe, though it ſeemed not to relate to the matter at all, or the degree of the matter, but was held up demurely in the former phraſes, after a particular manner, &c. was intended by him to mean ſomething extraordinary and more than common, i. e. in reſpect of the matter, ſome power, or degree of power, above that which was given to all the Apoſtles. Here then though in a diſguiſe, is the very fallacy, that I took care to prevent, addreſt to us. The diſguiſe made uſe of, is a light change of phraſe from [the promiſe given after a particular manner] to [St. Peter's having the power of the Keys after a more particular manner than the other Apoſtles.] For though theſe two phraſes do differ little, yet in the ſenſe wherein he ought to take the former, and appears to take the latter, they are competently diſtant. His having the promiſe performed after a particular manner, in proportion with the uſe of the phraſe [the promiſe made after a particular manner] ought to ſignify no more, than that it was performed as it was made, to Peter particularly, i. e. to him as a ſingle perſon, not to him as a member of a community, as one of many (or if he did not thus thus mean it, all muſt be unravelled again, for there was no more proved from the view of all the circumſtances of the Text, moſt particulariſing, as hath been ſhewed, and there was no more granted him, than he thus proved, i.e. no more than this.) But now, his having the power of the Keys after a more particular manner than the other Apoſtles,] that is evidently deſigned by him to mean, his having ſomething extraordinary, (and that is the matter of the power) ſome power or degree of power, which others have not, which as it is a fallacy too groſs to be put upon the Reader by any that meant him well, ſo it is utterly unconcluſible from the Text of Mat. 16. it being as if he ſhould argue thus, whatſoever was promiſed Peter by name, and with thoſe other Circumſtances, mentioned in that Text, muſt be an higher degree of power, than that which at any other time was promiſed to all the Apoſtles; but the power of the Keys was promiſed Peter by name, &c. Ergo. In which Syllogiſm the major Propoſition is utterly falſe. For how ſhould thoſe extrinſecal circumſtances of naming him, and his Father, &c. make the power promiſed him the greater, than it would, had not he been ſo deictically named? or why might not that which was given Peter by name, and in that particulariſing manner, have afterward been given to John, or to James, with all the like particulariſing Circumſtances, Bleſſed art thou John, Son of Zebedee, fleſh and bloud hath not revealed the Divinity of the word to thee, &c. Or why might not that very thing be given, without the particulariſing Circumſtances, which was given with it? The particulariſing circumſtances are ſtill circumſtances, and concern no more but the manner of introducing the promiſe, being merely extrinſecal to the matter of the promiſe. And though what I ſay of his naming John, be but a ſuppoſition, not pretended to be acted, and ſo is fitly confronted to the drawing his Concluſion from hence, which is not neceſſarily but precariouſly inferred, as long as it may be otherwiſe, and is but begg'd not evidenced hence, yet the latter is the very res geſta; for the thing that was promiſed St. Peter in one place, is promiſed to all the Apoſtles in another: the words wherein the power was promiſed, being no otherwiſe changed than from the ſingular to the plural, to him firſt, whatſoever thou ſhalt bind, and in the full extent of the power ſoon after to them, whatſoever ye ſhall bind, &c. and accordingly performed alſo, Joh. 20. 23. whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted, &c. And that ſo the Fathers underſtood it, was manifeſted from them, εἰ καὶ πρὸς Πέτρον μόνον, &c. though it were ſaid to Peter alone, I will give thee, yet the power hath been conferred on all the Apoſtles. And ſo * Cyprian, and others the like; and ſo both S. W's pretenſions, the words of Scripture interpretable whether by wit, (if that do not ſignifie the wit of the world, downright cheating by changing words or ſenſes) or by Tradition (meaning that which the ancient Fathers, not his preſent Mothers deliver to us) are both of our ſide, and then I hope we are competently ſafe on his own Grounds, ſuch as alone he can juſtifie to argue on.

* Of Sch. p. 89.

7. Thus we ſee the utmoſt force that the proportion betwixt Chriſt's promiſe and performance to him can infer; what Chriſt promiſed him, I doubt not, but it was fully performed, and the performance was as particular as the promiſe, the promiſe made to him as a ſingle Apoſtle, and the performance to him and every other ſingle Apoſtle; But ſtill no neceſſity imaginable, that when the promiſe was performed, he ſhould again be called by name, or the ſame form of addreſs be uſed, as was at the making the promiſe (for then it muſt begin again with Bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-jona, &c. which we find not any where elſe, nor is by S. W. pretended to be the form uſed in conveying the power to him] or indeed any other particularity whether of matter or manner, than that what was promiſed to him particularly, ſhould be particularly performed.

8. When therefore he ſaith, it is worthy our Saviour not onely to perform his promiſe, but to perform it after the manner and tenour he promiſed] if it ſignifie no more, than that the utmoſt degree of power, that was promiſed, was to be performed, then it is eaſily granted (and in that conſiſts the worth or divine fidelity of the promiſer.) And then it is ſtill incumbent on S. W. to prove, that any more or higher degree was promiſed Peter, than any other Apoſtle afterward, that being not yet proved in the leaſt; and if it ſhall in the proceſs be ſuppoſed or imagined to have been proved, then it is fallacious, and the begging of the Queſtion. But if it be expected from Chriſt to perform it in the very manner wherein it was promiſed, as that ſignifies onely the particulariſing circumſtances; then as there is, even according to S. W's pretenſions, no colour of affirming that thus it was (for Simon Son of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe, &c. are other, not the ſame particulariſing circumſtances with Bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-jona, &c.) ſo is there no leaſt Energy concluſible from the ſuppoſed continuing of thoſe, or the like forms, and ſo nothing that can be called worthy of Chriſt to doe: And it is certain, the promiſe made to the twelve together, Mat. 18. was not with this exact correſpondence of Circumſtances, ever performed to them, which yet muſt be as worthy of Chriſt to take care of, as in this other inſtance to Peter particularly.

9. By what hath been thus largely ſaid, appears not onely the vanity of his arguing, from Mat. 16. but alſo of his ſecond more dreadfull impreſſion from Joh. 21. on which he relies with moſt confidence. For the foundation, in reaſon, of his arguing thence, being laid on the foreſaid correſpondence betwixt the promiſe made and performed, we already diſcern the bottome of that, and therefore need not be amazed at, or dread it, let him manage it how he can.

10. And firſt, to ſhew that reaſon gives it, he argues ad hominem, to the Proteſtant that acknowledges the ſelf-ſufficience of Scripture, that the promiſe being made to St. Peter after a particular manner, and regiſtred in Scripture, it is fitting that the performance ſhould be expreſt there likewiſe; But there is no other place of Scripture ſo apt to ſignifie a particular performance, as this of Joh. XXI. 15, 16, 17. Ergo.] This is now ſoon anſwered by the premiſſes, that there is no neceſſity, or law of congruity, that Chriſt ſhould make good to Peter any other performance of his promiſe, than that whatever was promiſed him as a ſingle perſon, ſhould be in like manner performed to him; and this is done moſt exactly and punctually, when to every of the Twelve Apoſtles (of which number St. Peter was certainly one, he gave the ſame commiſſion, which himſelf had received from the Father; for what could be imagined to be meant by the Keys promiſed Peter, whether for power or degree of power, which was not comprehended in that Commiſſion of God to Chriſt? And this we Proteſtants find in another place of Scripture, Joh. XX[illegible] and ſo need not be beholding to his wit to help us maintain as much as we teach of the ſelf-ſufficiency [illegible] Scripture. He ſoon ſees then, how perfect nothing it is, that his imaginary reaſon gives him.

11. His next attempt is by Scripture, to ſhew how that favours him, and if it ſhould indeed chance chance to do ſo, he would have great reaſon to applaud himſelf, that that of which he hath deſerved ſo little, ſhould make him ſuch unexpected returns; for it is but a very little while ſince, (even in the laſt Section) that he expreſt this way of proving from Scripture, by Grammatical and Critical Quibbling, thereby making words left without life, and ſtark dead to our hands, move dexterouſly and ſmartly towards the end one drives at, i. e. in plainer terms, extracting any thing that is for his turn, from any thing that is moſt diſtant from it; Of this kind we were long ſince told, what miracles the wits were able to doe, and we are now likely to perfect our obſervations, by ſeeing it Experimented before our eyes. Let us now draw near to a cloſer view of it.

12. And his firſt Argument is, that the particular promiſe had preceded, apt in its own nature to breed ſome greater Expectation in St. Peter; theſe words are apt to ſatisfie that Expectation, they ſignified therefore a particular performance.] It would be a long work to ſet out the Excellencies of his firſt Argument, three propoſitions, the number of thoſe in a Syllogiſm, and the laſt a formal Concluſion, as in a Syllogiſm alſo, yet no kind of mood or figure that it concludes in; and it will be a worthy exerciſe of S. W's great diſcurſive faculty, to review, and reduce it to any ſuch. But not to ſtand on ſuch niceties with a Civil Gentleman, we will join iſſue with him in his firſt propoſition, which aſſumes that the promiſe, Matt. 16. was in its own nature apt to breed ſome greater expectation in St. Peter. Now what doth he mean by ſome greater Expectation? Sure nothing leſs than a Supremacy over all the world, and particularly over all his fellow diſciples; And what was there in the words of the promiſe preceding, apt in its own nature to breed this Expectation? To this, which wanted his utmoſt aid, he is ſo reſerved, as not to afford one word of proof, either now or before; and ſo 'tis denied, as ſoon as propoſed; and there is an end of that Argument. And is not this a ſtrange infirmity in a great Diſputer, to leave himſelf thus unarmed to the mercy of his adverſary, without any thing to ſecure, or inforce his firſt onſet?

13. Yet leſt it ſhould be too like him, barely to deny what he hath barely affirmed, I offer my reaſon for my denial. If the words, Mat. 16. were of their own nature apt to raiſe in Peter an Expectation of Supremacy, or of ſomewhat more than any other Apoſtle ſhould partake of, it muſt be, either by force of the Subſtance, or Circumſtances of the promiſe. The Subſtantial part was that of a ſteward in the Church, emblematically ſignified by the Keys, explicitly by the power of binding and looſing, and this intimates no ſuch thing as a Supremacy over the whole Church, but a ruling power in ſome family, i. e. part of the Univerſal Church, where his lot ſhould fall; and the very ſame being ſoon after, Matt. 18. promiſed to all the twelve, it is evident it was no ſupremacy, for then there muſt be twelve ſupremes. As for the circumſtances, it is firſt unreaſonable, that they ſhould have more force in them toward the interpreting the meaning of the promiſe than the ſubſtance it ſelf hath; 2. Theſe very circumſtances, all but that of his name and his Father's name, joyned together, are common to others, and ſo not particular to him, as hath been ſhewed by others confeſſing the Divinity of Chriſt, having it revealed from God, being bleſſed and deſigned for ſtones in the fabrick of the Church; And would it not ſeem ſtrange that the Simon Barjona, or Son of Jonas, which had alſo its viſible uſe, Barjona to diſtinguiſh this Simon, from Simon the Zelote, and Simon to diſtinguiſh this Son of Jona, from Andrew, which was his Son alſo, and ſo both being as neceſſary to addreſs the ſpeech diſcernibly to him in either place, as the name of John, or the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, was to diſtinguiſh him from all others, ſhould now commence the grand foundation of Peter's ſupremacy. This were as if he ſhould argue, Our Saviour bid Peter follow him, as he did alſo XI more, and by this, conſtituted them diſciples in common; but had he ſaid, Simon Son of Jonas follow thou me, or any thing equivalent thereto (as I ſuppoſe he did, ſufficient to make himſelf underſtood, and that is all that this other form imported) he had been engaged never to have taken any other into that form of honour or Diſcipleſhip, after him, the words in their own nature had been apt to breed this expectation in St. Peter, and it would be worthy of Chriſt to ſatisfie his expectation, &c. What can be more ridiculous than ſuch arguing? And yet this is the very Quinteſſence of his firſt proof.

14. His ſecond follows in full accordance, thus: The thrice particularizing him by his name and relation, Simon Son of Jonas, denotes the ſpeaking the following words to him particularly. But the following words, Feed my ſheep, were apt and ſufficient to inſtate him in the office, and give him the authority of a Paſtour. It was therefore given him in a particular manner to be a Paſtour in thoſe words; the Major, ſaith he, is evident, the Minor is proved, for ſhould any Maſter of a Family bid one of his ſervants in the ſame words feed my ſheep, that ſervant would think himſelf ſufficiently authorized to perform that duty.] Here again is a doughty Syllogiſm, demonſtrative, or probable, which you pleaſe, of the new mode, which Ariſtotle had no acquaintance with: When he ſhall have reduced it to Vulgar form, my returns may perhaps be more punctual: At the preſent 'tis ſufficient to tell him, that I grant his Major Propoſition, but then for the Minor, if it be argumentative, and by the aid of the Major be able to infer the concluſion (which is Chriſt's giving him in a particular manner to be Paſtour) it muſt be underſtood of more than it expreſſes, of more than being apt or ſufficient to inſtate in the authority of a Paſtour; for 1. every thing doth not actually doe that, which it were ſufficient to doe, eſpecially if it be before-hand already done, as in this caſe I ſuppoſe the office and authority of a Paſtour was inſtated in the former words, Jo. 20. 21, 22, 23. both on Peter, and all the reſt; and then there is no reaſon to think that in this place Feed my lambs or ſheep, was any more than an admonition to perform the office diligently, that had formerly been inſtated on him. And 2. the office of a Paſtour gains nothing to S. W. for all the other Apoſtles were Paſtours alſo; and 'tis of the Supremacy, not bare Paſtourſhip, that we now treat. And ſo much for this other poor creature, S. W's ſecond argument, or (in his own dialect) quibble, whether Grammatical, or Critical, he hath no otherwiſe directed us, by its having no tincture of Logick in it.

15. His third Argument is, that the word, doſt thou love me more than theſe, manifeſtly puts both a particularity and ſuperiority in St. Peter, above all the other Apoſtles in the interrogatory, Ergo, the inference thereupon, Feed my ſheep] in ordinary reaſon ſhould ſignifie after the ſame manner, and ſound, if ſo, (i. e. Peter aſſenting) if thou loveſt me more than theſe, feed my ſheep more than theſe, or have thou commiſſion to feed them more than theſe.] Here the former ſyllogiſtical irregularities are prevented by putting it into an Enthymeme. But we have gained little by this, for 1. the Antecedent is very infirm, the queſtion loveſt thou me more than theſe, is far from inferring neceſſarily, or probably that Peter did love Chriſt more than John, or all the reſt of the Apoſtles, ſave onely in his own former confident profeſſion (to which our Saviour moſt probably refers) when he ſaid, though all men deny thee, yet will not I, and though I ſhould dye with thee, yet will I not deny thee; but 'tis too well known, that he alone, of all the reſt, moſt remarkably failed, and denied Chriſt, for fear of the crucifiers, which fear is moſt contrary to perfect love. The Antecedent then hath no firmneſs of truth in it, no man being able to pronounce from this or any other place, that Peter loved Chriſt better than any other; nor indeed doth he now profeſs any more than belonged to the ſincerity of his love, thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee, purpoſely leaving out the degree or compariſon with, or ſuperiority above others, and ſo not aſſenting (as S. W. feigns) to the ſuperiority of his love. This being thus evident, for the evincing the frailty of his antecedent, his argument is at an end, having already wholly loſt its foundation.

16. Yet is there another horrible flaw in the conſequent, for having ſaid with ſome tolerable probability, that the inference of feed my ſheep, ſhould ſignifie after the ſame manner, if thou loveſt me more than theſe, feed my ſheep more than theſe, (which might well have paſt in the notion of greater diligence, in diſcharge of his office, which indeed of abundant labouring, is properly conſequent to abundant loving) in ſteps a gloſs of S. W's, or [have thou commiſſion to feed them more than theſe.] But I muſt ask, whence comes the word commiſſion? Should I now after the manner of S. W. ſet down the words in his own tranſlation, all the three verſes together, from which he hath now argued, 'tis certain I muſt either be very unlike him, or elſe, having ſo much better reaſons, cry out with him, Falſification of Falſifications: behold a Text produced to prove a commiſſion, and all that can by any torture be extracted from it, is an Exhortation to a diligent diſcharge of that office, to which he was before Commiſſionated: and it may as well be ſaid, that Paul ordained or Commiſſionated the Biſhops of Aſia, Act. 20. 28. by ſaying to them, Take heed—to feed the Church of God—who were clearly Biſhops, before Paul ſpake this to them, and becauſe they were ſo, he therefore ſpake thus to them, as that Chriſt in theſe words commiſſionated Peter, having before commiſſionated all of them moſt ſolemnly, Joh. 20. 21. and ſo Peter was one of that number, and was not now to be ordain'd again ſo ſoon after.

17. His fourth Argument is, that Paſce, being expreſt imperatively, and ſpoken by a Lord to his ſervant, ought in all reaſon to ſignifie a command; ſince then every command of a lawfull Superiour gives a Commiſſion to doe that which he commands, and the words expreſſing this command are in a particular manner ſpoken to St. peter, it follows that St. Peter had by them a particular Commiſſion given him to feed Chriſt's flock] I anſwer, by denying his minor, that part of it that pretends that every command of a lawfull Superiour gives a Commiſſion,] for it is evident Lawfull Superiours may command to exerciſe their Commiſſion after it is given. Is not this viſible in the field every day? The General gives his Commiſſions firſt for the raiſing of an Army, then in any particular Expedition, he gives out commands, an hundred perhaps in a day; and is there any colour of probability for each of theſe commands, that it ſhould be the giving a Commiſſion? If there be, it muſt be founded in the equivocalneſs of the word Commiſſion, ſo that not onely the conveying the power and authority, or office, ſhall be meant by it (which is the ordinary notion) but the giving out any Order, which is ſufficient to authorize him that doth it, which we are wont to expreſs by that other phraſe of giving Orders, not Commiſſions. However, we ſhall not contend with him about the uſe of a word, but if that be his meaning, we grant all that he can demand, that this, whether command or exhortation of Chriſt to feed Chriſt's ſheep, did authorize him to the utmoſt diligence in diſcharge of it, that the ſincerity or degree of his love to his crucified Maſter, and the ſenſe of his own former failings, could ſuggeſt to him; but ſtill this is nothing like a Commiſſion of ſupreme Univerſal Paſtourſhip conveyed to St. Peter in theſe words.

18. The laſt argument is taken from the property of the word Paſce, as it is diſtinguiſhed from preach. This ſaith he, ſhews that there was a kind of Ordinary care commanded to St. Peter, whereas by the pure Apoſtleſhip, he and his fellows had but an extraordinary and voyager Authority.] I anſwer, that whatſoever can be concluded from the moſt critical uſe of the word Paſce, or the oppoſition of it to preaching, I ſhall willingly yield, and yet be ſecure, that S. W. ſhall get nothing by it: For the Apoſtolical power being that, wherein they ſucceeded Chriſt, by tenour of thoſe words, As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, muſt be extended to more than bare preaching, for God ſent Chriſt to doe more than ſo, even to rule his Church, and ſo the Apoſtles, when ſent out to preach, and μαθητευσαι to receive Diſciples, were inveſted with power to rule all, whom they ſhould thus diſciple, and caſt out by cenſures whom they were impowered to admit by Baptiſm; and this is all that is meant by the word Paſce, whether feed or rule, which therefore became the title in the Church, of all thoſe that ruled in it, the Biſhops or Paſtours of the Church, who yet herein ſucceeded the Apoſtles (as the Fathers oft tell us) and not St. Peter onely; by which it appears, that the Apoſtles by their Commiſſion from Chriſt, were all Paſtours, and not onely S. Peter; and therefore we have great reaſon to queſtion his Concluſion for ſupremacy drawn from the notion of paſce, and not to admit any thing to have been conveyed in that, but the exerciſe of that which was before conveyed by Chriſt's Commiſſion to all the Apoſtles.

19. Something he adds to this Argument, the force of which lies as concealed as Sampſon's ſtrength, of which, till by ploughing with his heifer, I ſhall have made ſome farther diſcovery, all that I can pertinently take notice of, is, that he takes it, I perceive for granted, that ſheep and Lambs are all the faithfull. But 1. all that thoſe words ſignifie, is the ſtronger and weaker Chriſtians indefinitely, and every indefinite is not an univerſal; it is ſufficient to the diſcharge of Chriſt's command, if he feed all of either ſort, which ſhall come to be his κλησὶς or Province; and 2. unleſs ſheep and lambs not onely ſignifie all the Faithfull, but all thoſe alſo that have brought them to the faith (and it would be hard that ſheep or lambs ſhould ſignifie Shepherds themſelves) he hath not obtained his deſign, even by this moſt reprovable interpretation.

20. And having thus acquitted himſelf, i.e. uſed five Arguments for the drawing Univerſal Paſtourſhip, from this his prime Text, of which no one of them hath the leaſt appearance of force in it, it was but neceſſary he ſhould ſhut up,

1. With renouncing all appeal to Commentatours.

2. With an acknowledgment that he pretends not to evidence, and

3. A complaint that the words he interprets are dead words; for indeed, as he will hardly find a Commenter in the world of his mind (and then by the way, how is this Text explicated to his purpoſe by Tradition, even that of his own way, of the preſent Romaniſts?) So his proofs have been as far from evidences as could well have been ſuſpected, and the words of the Text, as induſtrious as he hath been to animate them, and perſwade them to ſpeak to his ſenſe, ſtill moſt obſtinate and imperſwaſible, no carcaſe could have been more mute than they.

by

21. And becauſe he challenges his Adverſary after all this, to ſhew that another can ſo connaturally agree to the ſame particularizing Circumſtances, I ſhall very briefly offer him this Paraphraſe of this Text, John xxi. 15,16,17. On a certain day ſoon after Chriſt's Reſurrection, when Dinner was done, Chriſt addreſt himſelf in a moſt particular manner to Simon Peter, or Simon the Son of Jonas, and in relation to his confident aſſuring him (before his crucifixion) that he would not deny him, though all the reſt of the Apoſtles ſhould, and yet ſhamefully failing, and denying him thrice, through a great meaſure of that fear, which perfect love caſts out; he asked him that ſame Queſtion very particularly three times, whether he loved him more than all the reſt of the Diſciples loved him? To which he anſwered him twice with chearfulneſs, that he did indeed love him ſincerely, but upon the third propoſal of the queſtion minding him of his having denied him three times; Peter was grieved, yet anſwered as confidently as ever, by appealing to Chriſt as God, the ſearcher of his, as of all other hearts, and proteſted the ſincerity of his love to him, though without entring any compariſon with others his fellow Apoſtles, having diſcerned his errour in doing ſo formerly, when he fell more ſcandalouſly, as he aſſumed more confidently, than others. To every Anſwer of his (proteſting the ſincerity of his love) Chriſt replies by way of exhortation to him, that being now a little while ſince, with all the reſt of the Apoſtles, inſtated in the office of Paſtours of the Church, to take care of ſtrong and weak, to feed and rule both, he ſhould be carefull to exerciſe it diligently in each part, as opportunity offered it ſelf: That this is a more connatural way of interpreting this place than that which he hath offered, I will add no more to prove, but am content that the Reader judge.

SECT. III.

S. W's gleaning of my ten ſolutions about St. Peter ſeverally conſidered. Plurality infers equality as well as particularity doth Supremacy. All power from Commiſſion. Superiority of Biſhops above Presbyters, though not of Peter above Apoſtles. Paſce oves no words of Commiſſion. S. W's Parallel how feeble and gainleſs.

1. HAving thus largely anſwered every the minuteſt part of S. W's laſt thoughts, his refined elaborate Argument, in behalf of the Univerſal Paſtourſhip, from Joh. 21. and alſo obeyed his challenge, in giving him my diſtant way of interpretation of that Text (the grounds whereof being viſible in the Context, there was no need of annexing them more particularly) and referring it to judgment, whether it be not far more connatural than his, there is now no poſſibility that I ſhould be obliged to make the like punctual return to his third Section, the deſigned method whereof is thus unreaſonable.

2. Having ſet down his reaſons for his interpretation, he ſaith, I endeavour not to ſhew our advantages from Scripture againſt him, or any more connatural explication, but onely to enervate their deductions thence, by ſolutions and poſſibilities of another explication, and hereupon he will he ſaith, glean up theſe ſolutions from the places wherein I have ſcattered them to the number of eleven (as he hath extended them in his falſe muſter, when in truth they are but ten) and by this Art he takes liberty to himſelf to call what words of mine he pleaſes, a ſolution, and no leſs than four of the ten are fetch'd out of the Tr. of Sch. two out of the Reply to the Cath. Gent. (and ſo a larger moiety, ſuch as could not be imagined by any other way but of divination to have been replyed to what he had ſaid in Schiſ. Diſar. and no one of the whole number to have had any relation to his preſent managery of this buſineſs in his Sch. Diſp.) Which being the product of his ſecond and better thoughts, if I have now ſuperſeded all force and even probability of them (as I muſt yet believe I have, till the Reader tells me I am miſtaken, or S.W's reply attempt to give his Arguments more ſtrength than yet they have) and withall ſubjoyned my much more connatural way of explicating this Text, which is the utmoſt of his preſent demand; 'tis evident I cannot be thought concerned in Defence of thoſe Solutions, which though they may have been words of mine, and ſo defended in their due places, from all that he hath had to ſuggeſt againſt them, yet they are certainly no ſolutions of mine to his preſent Arguments, and therefore as they are not owned by me for ſuch, ſo neither are they any pertinent care of mine at this time.

3. Yet I ſhall not wholly deſpiſe this his Section, but as far as can be any way incumbent on me, afford it my reflexions. And firſt, when he is in ſuch an high rant againſt me, for ſaying the words, Joh. 20. 21. As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, &c. and Mat. 28. 19. are delivered in common and equally to all and every of the Eleven Apoſtles, as is evident by the plural ſtyle, throughout the Commiſſion, expreſſing his opinion of it in this pretty variety, Bedlam-like non-ſenſe, affected foolery, paralogiſms, infinitely weak, monſtrous Logick, to be reſented in behalf of man's nature, total defacing of reaſon by paſſion and intereſt, putid non-ſenſe, and all this by Truth and Juſtice rendred lawfull, but by his concernments neceſſary, and yet farther the ridiculouſneſs of this arguing for equality from plurality exemplified by Paul's and Pancras being plural Churches, all individuals of every ſpecies, Conſtables and Kings, Captains and Generals, &c. What was there that could provoke this tranſportation? For 1. If the Reader ſhall conſult* the place, he ſhall find the words confronted to thoſe that make the Donative, Mat. xvi. 19. St. Peter's incloſure, having no other Argument for that pretenſion, but becauſe they were ſpoken to him particularly, and then the Romaniſts being the Opponent, and I ſuſtaining the perſon of the Anſwerer, I ſhall appeal to any Judgment, whether the performing the promiſe to many in common, be not as forcible to infer equality, as the promiſing at one time to one, to infer his Supremacy; nay whether whatſoever be the pretence for the former, it be not wholly ſuperſeded by the latter. And if ſo, this is ſufficient to juſtifie my words in that place, which were expreſly deſigned to this end, as appears by theſe words. [But to him that from hence pretends this Donative —— as a peculiarity —— of St. Peter, theſe conſiderations will be of force to ſuperſede his concluſion——. And then, if there were any infirmity in the proof, yet being ad hominem, apportioned and fitted to his, and certainly of as much efficacy for the equality, as his for the Supremacy, it might have deſerved his Candor, inſtead of provoking his Indignation. Shall it be Logick and reaſon in him, from our Saviour's promiſing a Power to St. Peter particularly at one time, to infer the Supremacy of that power to be veſted in him, and ſhall it be madneſs and non-ſenſe in me, from Chriſt's actual conferring the very ſame power on all together, to enervate and Superſede the force of that inference? On which ſide the paſſion and Intereſt moſt lies, is obvious to diſcern.

* Tr. of Sch. p. 86.

4. But then 2ly. there is yet more in it than ſo; I ſay the community and equality is evident by the plural ſtyle, throughout that whole commiſſion. And the force of my Argument lyes thus; If it be enquired what power or degree of power Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles, or particularly to St. Peter, it can no otherwiſe be ſolidly determined, than by reſort to Chriſt's commiſſions, wherein that power is ſet down, it being viſible that ſuch commiſſions remain on Record in Scripture, and that from them all Eccleſiaſtical power hath by all Chriſtians been deduced; and even the Romaniſts, that impute moſt to tradition, do yet in this point of Univerſal Paſtourſhip, fetch their proofs from theſe Texts of Scripture; and S. W. himſelf, that differs from other Romaniſts, doth herein agree with all others, onely with this difference, as theſe Texts are explicable by Tradition, and not by wit, and with all theſe I ſo far comply, that I offer no explication of any ſuch Text, but what Tradition truly ſtated, doth readily yield me.

5. If then for the reſolving our Queſtion, we reſort to thoſe commiſſions, the conſequence is, that what there we find expreſt, or rationally deducible, and Traditionally derived from thence, that we may reſolve to be the power deſigned by Chriſt, diſcarding likewiſe all that which is not thus deducible. If therefore what is there found, be given in common to all, and though once promiſed to Peter particularly, was ſoon after without any note of inequality or particularity promiſed to all the reſt, if in the performance of the promiſe, the actual donation of the Keys by commiſſion from Chriſt, expreſly ſet down from his mouth by the Evangeliſt, Joh. xx. there was yet no leaſt circumſtance of advantage to Peter, but throughout the whole commiſſion the ſtyle far removed from particularity, or any thing elſe, wherein inequality or ſupremacy could be founded, then is this an evidence as great as the matter is capable of, that the power thus conferred was conferred equally: For how ſhould Peter come to any pretence to Supremacy, but from Chriſt's commiſſion? How can his commiſſion yield it him, if throughout the commiſſion, there is no leaſt mention, or intimation of Supremacy, but whatever is made over to one, is made over to all, and conſequently is not Supremacy, or if it were, it muſt conſtitute them all Supremes, which is impoſſible and ſelf-deſtructive.

6. If in this caſe it be thought a ſufficient objection to ſay that the Supremacy pretended for St. Peter is competible with, and not reſiſted by the donation of the Keys to all the Apoſtles, then 1. I anſwer that this would equally conclude for making Peter an Arch-angel or a Secular Prince, for Chriſt might alſo have done that, and reconciled it with the gift of the Keys to all. 2. that to make a difference betwixt this and that, and to render one more rational to be affirmed, than the other, it is abſolutely neceſſary, that in the commiſſion, by which 'tis held, ſomewhat be ſhewed for the one, which will not hold for the other, and if ſtill nothing be producible throughout the whole commiſſion, that belongs to Peter at all, ſave as he is one of the twelve, and ſo belongs to every one of them, as much as to him, then ſtill this onely imaginable ſuggeſtion, can be of no force for his Supremacy.

7. And now let him conſider, whether his Inſtances of Paul's and Pancras, King and Conſtable will ſtand him in any ſtead. The two firſt are names of Churches, the two latter of Magiſtrates; but is there no note or intimation of inequality betwixt theſe diſcernible, as betwixt Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles there is none? In the former pair the inequality is evident to the eye of any that compares them; in the latter to the Ear; but to which of thoſe ſenſes doth St. Peter appear ſo much Superiour to the reſt of the Apoſtles? The King's powers are known by the Laws of the Community, to be far greater than thoſe of a Conſtable; but what laws of our common Chriſtianity inſtate the Supremacy on St. Peter? There is then as little of Argument as of Gravity in theſe inſtances.

8. Secondly, when I had ſaid Each Apoſtle had the power as diſtinctly promiſed to him, Mat. XVIII. as Peter is pretended to have, Mat. XVI. and againſt his accuſation of [ſhameleſs and expreſs againſt Scripture] oppoſed this Syllogiſm, that which was promiſed to all the Apoſtles, as to twelve ſingle perſons, each ſingly to have and exerciſe it, and not altogether in common, was as diſtinctly promiſed to Each ſingle perſon, as it was to St. Peter; but the power of binding, &c. was Mat. XVIII. ſo promiſed to all; Ergo. What hath he now to Reply? Why, 1. he converts my ſyllogiſm, which is a proof, into a bare interpretation of my words, and ſo avoids the anſwering it. 2. he tells me this agrees not with my other words, for that it is one thing to ſay each could uſe this power diſtinctly, another to ſay this power was promiſed diſtinctly to each. 3. he pretends, that ſuch a meaning cannot ſtand with common ſenſe, unleſs I will own to Calumniate their tenet, for how can it be put in oppoſition to them, without ſuppoſing their tenet to be, that no ſingle Apoſtle could bind or looſe, but all of them together in common onely.

9. To theſe I reply; to the firſt, by requiring him to take my Syllogiſm, as it is a proof of my former affirmation, and if he can, to avoid the force of it, if he cannot, to yield the concluſion, and that is all that I demand.

10. To the ſecond, that this very well agrees with my other words, and that ſuppoſing (as we ought) that Chriſt's performance and promiſe were fully anſwerable the one to the other; it unavoidably follows, that if the power were given diſtinctly to each, (as it muſt, if each had it, and could exerciſe it diſtinctly, for they could not thus have it, unleſs it were thus given them) then it was promiſed diſtinctly to each. The one difference, that of its being by name promiſed to Peter, and not ſo by name to Each of the reſt, being of no force in this matter, and ſeparated from this debate in the * Anſw. to Sch Diſar.

* p. 66.

11. To the third, that my oppoſing of this to the Romaniſt, is founded in his pretence, that ſomewhat is promiſed to Peter, Mat. XVI. which is peculiar to him. This 'tis certain he pretends, and ſo this is no calumniating his Tenet, (whatſoever he again pretends in Reply to the fourth Solution) and Chriſt's giving this very ſame thing to every other ſingle Apoſtle, ſo that each hath, and may exerciſe it by himſelf diſtinctly, and not onely to all in common, is (if made good, as now I hope it is) expreſly oppoſite to that.

12. Thirdly, when to all his deductions from the particulariſing circumſtances, I have anſwered, that they prove no more, than that the power was given particulariſing to him, not that others are excluded from the ſame power, and the ſame degree of power, he replies, this is my own ſaying, without ſhewing that the words give occaſion to ſay it] To this I anſwer, that in an anſwerer (ſuch am I, when I conſider his Arguments for the Supremacy from Mat. 16.) it is sufficient to consider all that he can offer for his pretensions, and shew that they have no other force in them, than to prove that which is already acknowledged, viz. that the power was promised particularly to Peter. Can he now pretend they have any more force in them? (viz. to settle somewhat on Peter, which belongs not to the rest?) Can the naming him, and his Father, and alluding to his new style, Cephas, infer this, or any other Circumstance yet produced by him? If they can, let it be shewed where this his strength lies; If it cannot, what needs he any farther Answer?

Arguments

13. Fourthly, when from the special Energy of the words applied particularly to St. Peter, I concluded the stewardship in Christ's house to belong to single persons, not to Assemblies, 1. This saith he, again is but my own saying. 2ly. Who sees not how much better and more probably it follows hence that St. Peter was Superiour to the Consistory of the Apostles, (they being present when those particularising words were spoken) then it will follow in succeeding times and distinct circumstances, that some one should be chief, and over the Assembly. 3. Saith he, since Dr. H. grants no higher degree of Authority in St. Peter than in the rest of the Apostles, he can conclude no more, but this, that the Presbyters are all equal in authority as the Apostles were. To these I answer. To the first, that what he calls onely my own saying, was expressly proved by the authority of S. Cyprian, who saith that our Saviour in those words to Peter, sets down the honour of a Bishop, and the way of ordering his Church, that from this promise of his, the ordination of Bishops and course of the Church, hath continued by all successions and vicissitudes, so that the Church is constituted upon Bishops, and every act of the Church is governed by them. And the † like from others of the Fathers: By which it appears, that S. W. observes not the rules of men, makes no scruple in a matter of fact, to affirm quite contrary to his and the Reader's eyes, if he shall but consult the place.

* Ep. 27.

† Tr. of Sch. p. 90.

14. To the second, that no man can see what he seems to say is seen by every man, viz. the greater probability of Peter's Supremacy over the Apostles, than of the succeeding Bishops over their Assemblies. For the latter, there is visibly the Ensign and power of the œconomus over the Family, given to a single person, by which the Fathers assure us was meant the power of the Bishops over their several Churches, and then what matters it, though the circumstances of persons be distinct, when in this we are assured the Order of Bishops in the Church was constituted: But for the former, if there were (as there is not) any least appearance of probability to be founded in the particularising words, and the Apostles being present, yet the repeating the same promise to all so soon after, without any mark of particularity, must needs destroy that appearance.

15. To the last, that allowing Peter no higher degree of Authority than the rest of the Apostles, I can yet hence conclude more than the equality of Presbyters, viz. the single power of Bishops, as those are over both the Presbyters and their Churches, those Bishops in the Fathers opinion being the Successours of the Apostles, and their power formed διὰ τῶν Ἀποστόλων, by the Apostles, and given every of them single in the promise of the Keys to Peter, and so Episcopacy the πρωτεῖα τῶν Ἀποστόλων, the Presidency of the Apostles, in St. Basil's phrase; and when all this was already proved from hence, what may not he say, that again, against matter of fact, will affirm, that I can conclude no more than the equality of Presbyters? Is not the Superiority of Bishops over their Churches, somewhat more than the equality of Presbyters? And is not this proved from hence? If so, what truth in S. W.'s suggestions?

16. Fifthly, when he asks, whether Peter had ever a particular commission given him correspondent to the particularising promise, but in Feed my sheep?] The Answer is obvious, that particularising promise was sufficiently performed, by sending him, as Christ was sent by his Father, with power of remitting and retaining sins; and this, as perfectly correspondent to the power of the Keys, was given in a Solemn manner and by way of Commission, Jo. xx. to him, and all other the Apostles, and so there was no use of a more particular commission, the admonition to Feed Christ's flock, being founded in the former donation of it, and so not imaginable it self to be the commission.

17. Sixthly, when he scoffs at my parallel betwixt Christ's praying the same prayer thrice, yet, not turning his prayer into a precept, and his saying Pasce thrice, yet not turning his Exhortation to a commission for supremacy, and pretends the word it self was apt to signifie a commission, and again, that the words are words of commission, and the thrice saying, a precept.] I answer, 1. that a prayer is as much a precept, as an Exhortation is a commission, and therein onely was the parallel set, and I that think his part of it irrational, need not help that part, by which I parallelled it to any probability. But certainly it needed more than his bare word to justifie, that Pasce oves are words of commission, nor, if they were, would it streight follow that the commission were for no less than a Supremacy. He must here remember that he hath two things incumbent on him (not to beg, or assume, but) to prove, 1. that the Imperative pasce is a form of commission. 2. that my sheep, and my lambs, are the whole Church of God, sheep and shepherds too, and he that had those words spoken to him, thereby constituted the Supreme Universal Pastour; when he hath proved these two, I shall then yield to his particularising circumstances without farther proof, that what was thus said, was said particularly to St. Peter.

18. Seventhly, when he saith I have unaware discovered what temper I am of,] he doth but according to his wont, complete his Cavils with his calumnies. I said, Peter was grieved because Christ said the third time, lovest thou me; which he would not have been, if he had looked on it as an introduction of so great a preferment. Hence he infers, that I make account the getting some great preferment is a ground of more gladness than our Saviour's seeming to doubt of his love to him would be occasion of sorrow. But I, that by this of his being grieved, did conclude the design of Christ's thrice repeated speech, to be the reproaching, not advancing of St. Peter, the humbling, not exalting him, cannot be imagined to have made this comparison, or to have thought it possible that one should exceed or even allay the other. S. W. dreams of nothing but St. Peter's preferment, and when our Saviour reminds him of his foul fall, gathers particularising Circumstances, to be ingredient in a Commission to him for the Universal Pastourship; I took the whole speech to be an Exhortation to repair by future diligence, what he formerly fail'd in so foully, and supposing these to be opposite, not reconcilable interpretations, whereof one onely had the truth, I used the mention of his sorrow, as the proof of the latter, which therefore could not (without implicancy) refer, or reflect on a supposition of the former. And so we have an Essay of S. W.'s spirit, if that were news enough to be taken notice of.

19. On the back of this, he is carefull to express himself very tender of St. Peter, lest Christ should seem to upbraid his thrice deniall, nor can he conceive there could be need of it to excite him, asking, had he shewn himself of so negligent a nature, as to give occasion to doubt, &c.] And I shall ask this Disputer again, whether whether he have not heard that Peter had not long since, thrice, and at last with Execrations, denied Christ? If he have, then is this a competent account, both that Christ might upbraid what was past, although it were now a forgiven sin (a Romanist can sometimes allow Temporal punishments for forgiven sins, and such mild reproaches and remembrances as these, though not joyous but grievous in one respect, are yet medicinal, and so mercies in another) and excite to abundant labouring for the future.

20. Once more, e'er he leaves this, he will render his most connatural explication, according to what is most befitting the Divine wisedom, viz. to fit the person for the charge, e'er he imposes the charge it self, and so by the Question thrice asked, to excite in him a greater affection. But this may as well peice with the Exhortation (which is our interpretation of the word) as with the Commission for a Supremacy (which is his) and therefore still let him prove that by some other medium (which is not rendred in the least-wise probable by this) and in this I need not contend with him.

21. Lastly, when he dislikes my parallel of a General promising a Commission this day to one, and to morrow to eleven more, and saith I leave out that in which the force of the parallel was to lie, and then offers another in stead of it, of the King giving one the sirname of Bishop, and upon occasion of a particular service, breaking out, Happy art thou, &c. and I say unto you, Thou art Bishop, which, saith he, would imprint in his mind an expectation that he should be a Bishop in an higher degree, to wit, an Arch-Bishop of Canterbury or York. To these I answer, that in my parallel the Circumstances omitted were either common to others with Peter, or of no force to found for him the Supremacy of power; His Name and Fathers Name do but distinguish him from other Disciples there present, and have not the least Energy in them towards instating of Supremacy; His blessedness, Revelation from God, were common with others, and yet not competent to infer Dominion of any sort to every one that had any or all of them. And so his confession too, for certainly other Apostles confest Christ's Divinity, as well as he, and if he confest it first before all others, yet Christ may reward others that doe it after, as highly as him; according to the Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard, to the methods of which how scandalously opposite are S. W.'s * words in this matter? viz. that he had no reason to think himself ingeniously dealt with, if his acknowledged desert being particular, &c. he had received an equal Commission onely. But I shall rather conform my conceptions to those words of our Saviour, Is thine eye evil because mine is good? I will give unto this last even as unto thee, Mat. 20. 14, 15. So again, the title of Stone or Rock was common to all, as appears by the δώδεκα θεμέλιοι twelve foundations; And in sum, the power of the Keys, of binding and loosing, which alone is the donative (and the words whereby the authority is conveyed) Mat. 18. made over to all, as largely, as it is, Mat. 16. to St. Peter, not made to the eleven, he standing by, as S. W. would feign me to equivocate, but to the whole twelve together in the same plural style, as before in the singular it had been made to him, thereby assuring us, that the very same power was now promised to all, which before was promised to him, as the spokesman, and so proxy, as it were, of the whole company.

* P. 410.

22. Secondly, That in his parallel there are many excesses, this especially, that supposing the Church of England to be promised to be built on him, and the power of binding and loosing whatsoever fault against our Ecclesiastical Laws, expresst particularly to him; None of this is by him mentioned in the promise to all, but onely in a common Exposition making him and the rest Bishops, which laying the advantage most partially on St. Peter's side, in those words which alone concern the matter, whereas the whole form of words signifying power, were as largely made to all, as to him, it must follow, there is no least sincerity in his parallel, the former being taken alone, certainly founding a power, and some shew of an Universal power, which the latter so soon subjoyn'd to it, must needs take off again, because there cannot be more Supremes in one Body. So again, his supposed Sirname of Bishop is somewhat above the proportion of Cephas, which signified in Christ's speech, a stone to build upon, and is no more than one of the many preachers of the Gospel, founders or planters of the Church, who though they were also to govern it being planted, yet the word stone did not signifie that dominion, as we know the word Bishop doth. So the opposing his particular affection and acknowledgment of the King to others weakly doubting of his royalty, when there is no appearance of others doubting, or of Peter's being the onely affectionate Confessour at this time (and yet if there were, nothing were concludible from hence, in order to Christ's reward, as was just now shewed.) And when he appeals to my Conscience, whether this person would not in prudence judge by this carriage, that he should have something particular given him, and that expectation still remain imprinted in his mind: I answer, 1. That unless by particular, he mean some power, or degree of power, above all others, his question is impertinent; but supposing him to mean that, my Conscience tells me no more than this, that an ambitious person may probably be first easily possest, and then passionately transported with expectations on such terms, as S. W. hath provided to raise his Appetite: But I have a better opinion of St. Peter, than to fix on him such airy desires or expectations: And that others that stood by, were of my opinion, appears, because after this, some of them entertained themselves with expectation of the Chiefdom, which they could not reconcile with belief of Christ's veracity, if they had thought it by the words, Mat. 16. to have been promised to St. Peter.

23. Mean while it may be observed, that the utmost that S. W.'s machines have aspired to, is but to raise an expectation in Peter to be somewhat in the Universal Church, which may bear proportion with being Arch-Bishop of Canterbury or York, in this Nation, and if that were frankly granted, 'twould not serve his onely Interest, or be improvable into supreme Universal Pastourship of the whole Church; for the Arch-Bishop of York can in no sense pass for either Universal, or but Supreme Governour of this Nation, nor infer more than a Bishop of Antioch, in the ἀνταπόδοσις, and that he knows is the least we allow St. Peter to have been. And then, if such vast faculties as are those of S. W. when they are set on the Tenterhooks, with liberty to make his own choices of fictions, could not yet atchieve what was thus absolutely necessary to his pretensions, this is a greater prejudice to his cause, and an evidence of the desperateness of it, than all his diligence will repair, or his dexterities for this wit-combat, as he calls it, which the more vehemently he hath pursued, his failure being finally confest, is the more intolerable and irreparable, upon account of the Si Pergama dextra, for certainly if the matter had been capable, so great an Artificer as S. W. would not thus, in this last on set have destituted it. And so much for the gleanings also of this Section.

SECT. IV.

SECT. IV.

Of sitting on XII Thrones. S. Austin's judgment of it. Tostatus, Maldonate, Hilary. The Authour imperfecti operis. Dogmatizing on a mystical sense. How little I am guilty of it.

1. HIS fourth Section concerns my interpretation of the Twelve Apostles sitting on the Twelve Thrones, Mat. 19. to judge, i. e. to rule or preside in the Church, which he will have interpreted of the Day of Judgment. Now for the propriety of the words to my interpretation, that judging should signifie ruling or presiding, that θρόνος should signifie an Episcopal chair, or See, I had in my Answer appealed to any man that had either most critically or most sleightly considered words: Besides I referred him to my Reply, where I had proposed the interpretation of παλιγγενεσία, whether for regeneration or the resurrection of Christ, and if that were yielded in either sense, then Christ's sitting on the Throne of his Glory, would relate to his ascension, and then the Apostles sitting and judging, must needs be presiding in the Church, and not judging onely at the day of judgment. To this adding the notion of judging the twelve Tribes, in proportion to the Jewish Custome of Phylarchæ, Governours of the Tribes, a dignity next unto the Regal, and so fitly noting, that when Christ was instated in his Royalty, these should have the dignity next to him, that of ruling his Church; and lastly, shewing that my sense of the Apostles ruling in the Church, is reconcileable with his of judging the world at the last, and therefore was not imaginable to be refuted by it, should that be thought to have any probability or truth in it.

2. Now to all this S. W. thinks not fit to afford any the lightest reflexion, but hath another more hopefull game, which he is resolved to pursue, and he and his Index together have here sprung egregious and most willfull falsifications of Fathers, renouncing all shame, honesty and conscience; and whence this storm arose, we must now examine.

3. In the Reply I had said of my Interpretation, that St. Augustine long before so understood it; and in my Answer, that I might also add Hilarius Pictaviensis, and the Authour imperfecti operis. Now to the former of these, that of St. Augustine, all he hath to Reply, is, that I cite not any place in that Father; To the second, that of Hilary, he sets down some words of his, which relate to the time of Judgment, and Christ's coming, and saith, I build on them: To the third, he grants, that he did more incline to the mystical sense, but that in all the rest he is expresly against me, to which purpose he hath his six notes annext, which must doe whatsoever is for his Interest to be done.

4. Now to each of these I answer.

To the first, that of St. Augustine, that my bare not citing the place, is a strange argument to infer an egregious and most willfull falsification: 1. S. W. may herein be appealed to, who deals not much in testimonies, yet in his Preface, in defence of contumelies, hath cited two passages out of Tertullian and St. Augustine, but not named the place, where either is to be found; I demand then, hath this rendred him an egregious and most willfull falsifier? If not, by what fatality hath the doing but half so much, brought this charge on me?

2. There are many other accounts reasonably conceivable, why naming a Father for such an interpretation, I should not name the place wherein he speaks of it; I shall mention but these, that my notes or memory, or perhaps some modern Writer, furnished me with his name, but were not so exact as to retain the particular place (Which of these it was in S. W. when he thus cited Tertullian and St. Augustine at once, let him recollect, before he cast his first stone) In which case, were it supposeable that I were deceived, yet, as being deceived, differs from falsifying, so 'tis also as distant from egregious willfull and most willfull, as is that which is most light and most unvoluntary. And this truely was the very case; my Notes gave me St. Augustine's name, but neither those, nor my memory were so exact, as to specifie the place, yet that herein I am not likely to have mistaken, I have these two Arguments to secure me.

1. The Authority of the Learned Romanist, * Tostatus Abulensis, who reckons St. Augustine among the Patrons of this interpretation. * In Mat. 19. quest. 191.

2. The expres words of that Father on another Text (so very near allied to this, that if that may be interpreted of the Governours of the Church, there can be no doubt but this may be also) Rev. 20. 4. And I saw Thrones, and those that sate thereon, and Judgment was given them (thrones and sitting on Thrones, and judging, all the same as here) of which saith that Father, Non hoc putandum est de ultimo Judicio dici, sed sedes præpositorum, & ipsi præpositi intelligendi sunt, per quos Ecclesia gubernatur. This must not be thought to be spoken of the last judgment, but the seats of the Governours, and the Governours themselves must be understood, by whom the Church is now governed; and for the interpreting of the judgment given them, that, saith he, cannot be better taken, than of that which was said, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; whence saith the Apostle, what have I to doe to judge them that are without? De Civ. Dei l. 20. c. 9.

5. For the other two, I appeal to their own Commentatours also, Tostatus, who besides St. Augustine, reckons Hilary and St. Chrysostome (by him meaning the Authour imperfecti operis) for the Patrons of this interpretation; So likewise Maldonate on those words, When the Son of man shall sit, St. Hilary, saith, he, and the Authour of the imperfect work, interpret the Son of man's sitting not on the Tribunal to judge, but at the right hand of his Father, Ubi paulo post resurrectionem in cœlum ascendens sedere cœpit, where a little after the resurrection he began to sit. This I hope will clear me from the falsifications.

6. As for the place in Hilary, to which they refer, 'tis not I suppose, that which S. W. hath taken pains to transcribe (and confidence to affirm that I build on it) Can. 28. but Can. 20. Vos qui secuti me estis in regeneratione, judicabitis 12 Tribus Israel; secuti in regeneratione sunt lavacro Baptismi in fidei sanctificatione, &c. Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, shall judge the twelve Tribes of Israel, They followed him in the Regeneration with the laver of Baptism in sanctification of Faith (not in the resurrection of the last day, on which the other interpretation builds) This is the regeneration which the Apostles followed, which the Law could not afford, which hath joyned them in the Glory of the XII Patriarches upon twelve Thrones, in judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, where as the Twelve Patriarches judging the Twelve Tribes, was the Office of the Phylarchæ here, ſo muſt that of the Apoſtles by Analogy be underſtood.

7. So again, in the Authour of the imperfect work, the words which concern this matter are theſe (S.W. might again have ſpared his pains in tranſcribing others) Quod ergo ait in regeneratione, cum ſederit filius hominis in ſede Majeſtatis ſuæ, & vos ſedebitis ſuper duodecim Thrones, promittit eis tempus Chriſtianitatis futurum poſt aſcenſionem ſuam; quando omnes ſuſcipient verbum Apoſtolarum in ſe, ſicut verbum Chriſti, &c. That therefore he ſaith, in the Regeneration, when the Son of man ſhall ſit on the Throne of his Majeſty; Ye alſo ſhall ſit on Twelve Thrones, he promiſes them the time of Chriſtianity, which ſhould be after his aſcenſion, when all ſhall receive the word of the Apoſtles, as the word of Chriſt, that is the time of the regeneration, when men being regenerate by Baptiſm, are made of Sons of men, Sons of God; and again, Nos putabamus, &c. We did think that he ſaith this of the day of judgment, & vide quod non de tempore futuri judicii dicit, ſed de vocatione Gentium Univerſarum, See, he ſaith it not of the time of the future judgment, but of the calling of all Nations.

8. Let S.W. now judge himſelf, if he pleaſe, on whoſe ſide lies the egregious and moſt wilfull falſification, and conſider whether all or any of his ſix notes will avail him, or prejudice me: I am ſo little concerned in them, that I ſhall not trouble my ſelf, or the Reader to reflect on any of them, having already voided the foundation of them, but onely mind him, that whereas he is ſo angry with me for dogmatizing upon a myſtical ſenſe, and ſets it down confidently in his Index, D. H's manner of dogmatizing the ſeed of all blaſphemy, noted to this p. 420. it cannot well be imagined what he means by that phraſe [dogmatizing on a myſtical ſenſe] which he chargeth ſo heavily. One would think it were, founding a dogma or doctrine upon a place of Scripture, underſtanding that Scripture not in the literal, but onely myſtical ſenſe. If this were it, there could be no leaſt colour of truth in his ſuggeſtion; the interpreting the place of the Day of Judgment, being, if any, the myſtical ſenſe, and this other of ruling in the Church, the more literal. But the following expreſſions whereby he labours to improve it into a blaſphemy [which method (of mine) if it were followed, the Teſtament given in Mount Sina, ſhould be really a woman, Chriſt's doctrine corn, &c.] convince me that he means my blaſphemy to conſiſt in this, that from a myſtical place I deduce dogmatically a real truth, meaning by a myſtical place, a myſtical explication of this Text, rendred by the Authour imperfecti operis in his Comment on it. But having now ſet down truely the words of that Authour, from which I conclude him favourable to my interpretation, my inference is made from thoſe words of his, that are moſt plainly and literally to be underſtood, that Chriſt in that Text promiſed them the time of Chriſtianity, which ſhould be after his aſcenſion, as that is oppoſed to the time of the future judgment, of which he ſaith he had underſtood it, but now hath changed his mind. And if in the making his explication good, he fly ſometimes, as his cuſtome is, to anagogical or myſtical ſenſes of ſome words, what is that to me, who make not uſe of them, but find him (and for that onely cite him) making the ſame concluſion with me, which is alſo the moſt literal, and no other perfectly literal but that, that they ſhall really ſit on Seats, and judge, i. e. really preſide, and exerciſe government in the Church, and that with the ſame independence and equality, one among another, that was obſervable in the Phylarchæ or heads of Tribes among the Jews.

SECT. V.

Of the no inequality in the deſcent of the Spirit. Some force of Negative arguments. Juriſdiction given the Apoſtles by the deſcent of the Spirit. Δύναμις ἐξ ὕψους. Whether the Spirit deſcended on the CXX. Peter's higher degree of the Spirit not concluſible from his ſpeaking firſt.

1. HIS fifth Section is laid out very profuſely upon a paſſage, which becauſe I laid no weight on, but mentioned ex abundanti, he therefore requires the Reader to obſerve particularly, and then exacts his pity, that he is tasked to anſwer ſuch a dreamer.

2. The matter lies thus; As the power promiſed by the Keys to Peter, was ſoon after promiſed all the Apoſtles, and no inequality diſcernible between him, and each of them, and this ſhewed to be the notion, the Fathers of the Church had of this buſineſs; ſo I added in a Parentheſis, that in the final performance of the promiſe in the deſcent of the Spirit, the fire that repreſented the Spirit ſate on every one of them, without any peculiar mark allowed Saint Peter, and they were all filled with the holy Ghoſt, and ſo the promiſe equally performed, as it was made to all.

3. The deſigned force of this paſſage, ſuch as it was (for every incidental paſſage in a book, is not bound to be a Demonſtration) was viſible enough, that as in the promiſe there was no inequality diſcernible, ſo in the ſolemn performance of it, there was as little. The Deſcent of the Spirit was the final performance of Chriſt's promiſe, the ſolemnity of their commiſſion from heaven, inſtating their deſigned powers upon them; and this being done diſtinctly to every one, was a proof à poſteriori, that it was meant diſtinctly to every one; and ſeeing there was no more in this, than in the former, peculiar to St. Peter, this though a Negative Argument, might be worth taking notice of, in conjunction with the former, in prejudice to the ſuppoſed Supremacy of St. Peter.

4. For were it not ſtrange, that in a promiſe of Keys made particularly to St. Peter, a Supremacy of power over all the Apoſtles, ſhould be reſolved to have been promiſed to him, when yet, as the very ſame words, wherein the Keys were promiſed him (whatſoever were meant by them) were ſoon after repeated to all the Apoſtles; ſo both when the promiſed commiſſion was given, with the ceremony of Chriſt's breathing upon them, and alſo when the Holy Ghoſt, according to Chriſt's promiſe, actually deſcended on them, and ſo finally performed that promiſe, there ſhould yet be nothing particular or peculiar to Peter, more than to any other Apoſtle, intimating the leaſt inequality, when yet an abſolute Supremacy is pretended? Is it not S. W's Argument, I know not how oft repeated, that that it was worthy of Christ to perform to Peter particularly, as he had promised particularly? From whence he would infer some particular performance, which was not common to all the rest. And shall it be of no force, to retort this, or prove the contrary, that as every of the Apostles had the same promised them, which was promised St. Peter, so in the several passages, wherein the promise is described to have been performed, there was nothing particular to Peter, no note of the least inequality, much less Supremacy? From whence, if there were, as he pretends, a Correspondence betwixt the promise, and the performance, it must follow, there was nothing particular in the promise, because nothing in the performance.

5. 'Tis true there is not that demonstrative efficacy in such negative arguments, as there may be in affirmative; but when that, to which 'tis confronted, is so far from demonstrative, as is the inferring some higher degree of power, even a Supremacy, from Christ's promising the Keys to Peter after a particularizing manner (when yet what was once promised him particularly, was presently promised, and in like manner performed to all the Twelve) I yet see not what reason S. W. of all men living, should have, so fastidiously to despise the some validity of it.

6. As for that which he first produces, that there is not a word that seems to make against them, but these [without any particular mark allowed St. Peter, and the having the Holy Ghost equally.] It hath no truth in it, nor force, if it had truth. Truth it wants, for there was, before these, the comparing the final performance with the promise, the final performance, which was as it were the sealing of the promise, made distinctly to every one, and that an Argument ab effectu, that the promise was meant distinctly to every one, by force of this undeniable Maxim, that where veracity is concerned, as in all Christ's promises it is, the performance is always parallel to the making of the promise. And this was the Argument of some validity which The answer to Sch. Disar. p. 68. mentioned, if he could have pleased to take notice of it.

7. As for the force, if there were truth, it will be thus judged of; Negative Arguments, though not always, have sometimes efficacy in them, and especially, when that which can no farther be pretended, than it is proved by some revelation, is by Induction of all places which are or can be pretended to set down revelations of this sort, shewed to be destitute of all such proof. He that pretends a power by commission, is efficaciously disproved by view of all copies of his Commission, and shewing that therein no such power is conveyed to him. And that is the case here, when after the survey of the promise, then of the commission, Joh. xx. then again of the promise, Mat. xix. at last the final performance of the promise is considered; and in all these no mark or intimation of the pretended Supremacy appears. Against all which still barely to say, that the Negative cannot be proved by any man living, because none but God can see the heart, or tell now that Peter had no peculiar mark, is just as if he should pretend a power given him by the King, and when his commission, by which that was pretended, being produced and Examined in every period, every of them were found perfectly empty and vain, he should yet break out into a Rant, that this examination was of no force, No man living could prove it was not given him, or that he had no peculiar mark of this power, which whether it would be accepted as law, or Logick in any Court, or Schools, I leave the Reader to judge between us.

8. But, saith he, this cannot make against St. Peter's authority, but by supposing the Dr's false and weak principles, that none can be higher in authority, but he must have more of the Holy Ghost in him.] I answer, that this is not my principle, but this my way of arguing against him, that when authority, is made over by a solemnity, such was the descent of the Holy Ghost in fiery tongues upon the Apostles; if there be any indication of Supremacy, or if any particular mark allowed to any one, it is to be fetcht from some of the circumstances there mentioned, which being but two, the sitting of the tongues on them, and the effect thereof, the filling them with the Holy Ghost, and neither of these any otherwise mentioned than in community, and equality to all, the conclusion is rational and obvious, that no Supremacy or circumstance in favour of it, can thence be collected for St. Peter; and if as little from any former transactions, as they have been understood and interpreted by the ancients, then it cannot reasonably be pretended by the Romanist upon account either of Scripture or Tradition, properly so styled.

9. But all this is but the προπύγμα or slight skirmish procemial to what is most bloudily designed against this poor argument; It must now solemnly be brought out, dissected and anatomized before S. W. our great Mr. of Controversies, and in it no less than five propositions being found, he that even now was to be pityed for being so sadly tasked, is at leasure, and hath patience enough to impugn every one of these singly, and it seems I must follow him, and admire his chivalry through each of these. For once let it be so.

10. The first Proposition, saith he, is, that the promise of the twelve thrones of Episcopal presidency (the word Episcopal is S. W's insertion, my words being onely * these, xii. thrones for each Apostle to sit on, to judge i. e. rule or preside in the Church) was finally performed in the descent of the Holy Ghost] and then he must stand still, and ask the Dr. whether it was ever heard of before, that the coming of the Holy Ghost gave Jurisdiction or Authority to the Apostles. To this I answer, that the Apostles Jurisdiction and authority, being by several steps imparted to them, this of the descent of the holy Ghost upon them, was the Ultimate completion of it. That it was so, is so far from news, that I never before heard it doubted of, nor I suppose can there be reason of doubting, when first our Saviour's words of Mission or commission, Joh. xx. were introduced with the Ceremony of breathing on them, and these words, Receive the holy Ghost, which were visibly meant of, and completed in this descent of the Spirit in fire upon them. 2. The commission then given, Joh. xx. was not actually to be made use of, till this descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, and this is called δύναμις ἐξ ὕψους, Luk. xxiv. 49. power from on high, which though it exclude not zeal, charity, knowledge, &c. and especially points at power of miracles, which is frequently called δύναμις power, yet as little doth it exclude power or authority, being the word that properly signifies faculty, or power of doing any thing, and when it is given from above, what is that, but a legitimate commissionated power? 3. By the style of ordinations ever since the Apostles times continued in the Church, where 'tis unquestionably manifest, that the Jurisdiction and Authority is designed to be given in those Verba Solennia, Receive the holy Ghost, &c.

* Of Sch. p. 88.

11. But he hath two Objections againſt this: 1. That the holy Ghoſt fell upon the 120, as appears by Act. 1. and on multitudes of men and women in other places. 2. That the twelve thrones the Dr. expreſſes to be Epiſcopal chairs, and then the Holy Ghoſt conſecrated the twelve Apoſtles actually Biſhops, which agrees not with his words in other places.] To theſe I anſwer; to the firſt, that it no otherwiſe appears by Act. 1. that the holy Ghoſt fell on the 120. than that there is mention of that number at the time when Peter ſtood up, and ſpake about the choice of a ſucceſſour to Judas, Act. 1. 15. And that is competently diſtant from the deſcent of the Spirit, on the day of Pentecoſt, Act. 2. Had I thus cited Scripture, I know what ſtyle it had met with in S. W's Index. But then ſecondly, in caſe it did any way appear, that that whole number was ſtill preſent, Act. 2. and that the holy Ghoſt did deſcend upon them all, yet 'tis no difficulty to conceive, that the deſcent might be to ſeveral effects, to ſeveral ſorts of perſons, and ſo enſtate the power Apoſtolical on thoſe onely, to whom it was promiſed, and on whom conferred by Chriſt in his life time, i. e. on thoſe, to whom he ſaid, Receive the holy Ghoſt, and gave the commiſſion and power of binding and looſing. And then it matters not to what other purpoſes the holy Ghoſt deſcended on men and women in this or other places. I ſhall hope S. W. knows there are other purpoſes, (and that the holy Ghoſt hath been given in confirmation, as well as Ordination, in both by the laying on of the Apoſtles hands) and that whatſoever he thinks of power and authority, he will not queſtion the gift of tongues being an effect of this deſcent, as alſo that other of miracles, nor yet aſſume, that theſe were given to all the cxx. particularly to the female part of that number.

12. To the ſecond, that the difference is ſo ſmall betwixt Apoſtles and Biſhops, the firſt ſignifying commiſſioners of Chriſt, the ſecond Governours of the Church, and the ſame perſons expreſt promiſcuouſly by both titles, (as when Judas his Apoſtolacy is called his Ἐπισκοπὴ Biſhoprick, Act. 1. 20.) that by Epiſcopal chairs I might be well allowed to mean no more than the Apoſtolical power being ſetled on them; and then there is no place for S. W's Cavil, which is founded in a Critical difference betwixt thoſe two, which I uſed in a promiſcuous indifference.

13. My ſecond Propoſition, ſaith he, is that the fire which repreſented the ſpirit, was divided and ſate on each of them. This he grants, and my inference from thence, that the promiſe ſealed diſtinctly to every one, was meant (in the making) to every one. But then this, ſaith he, is not againſt any tenet of theirs, but onely againſt that which I by calumny forged to be their tenet, viz. that the power of the Keys was St. Peter's incloſure. To this I anſwer, that it is no Calumniating their tenet, to ſuppoſe them to hold that ſome power or degree of power was promiſed to St. Peter, Mat. XVI. and I ſhew the very ſame promiſe given to all of them, Mat. XVIII. and actually conferred on all, Jo. XX. And the Spirit's deſcent, Act. 2. being the final ſealing of what was before promiſed and given, the ſitting of this on every one of them, I mention as a proof à poſteriori, that the power, whatſoever it was (not defining that in this place, and ſo ſecure from all poſſibility of appearing to Calumniate his tenet,) was meant to every one as particularly as to S. Peter.

14. My third propoſition, as it ſtands in his muſter-roll, is that there was no peculiar mark of fire allowed to St. Peter. This he had called a * dumb Negative, and added that the Dr. was not here to ſee, and there is no hiſtory that Expreſſes the contrary.] To which I replyed, that it ſeems, a Negative in S. W's mouth is perfectly vocal, though dumb in another man's. And this he now ſaith is an impertinent and prevaricating objection, and that I ſuppoſe he goes about to prove St. Peter to have had a peculiar mark of fire; becauſe 'tis no where heard of.] What credit can be given to ſuch ſuggeſters, when 'tis viſible to any the dimmeſt ſight, that what I ſay, is by way of retortion to thoſe words of his, [the Dr. was not there to ſee, and there is no hiſtory that Expreſſes the contrary,] by minding him that this is a Negative Argument of his, which therefore could have no force; if Negatives may not be allowed to have any; and what can be Negative, if this be not [the Dr. was not there, there is no Hiſtory.] This alſo it was, that I called a doughty proof, and ſaid he brought it to Evidence I knew not what, and not that other, to which he applies it without any colour of truth, and ſo finds new abſurdities in my words, to which they were no-way liable, but by his confounding things, that were moſt diſparate.

* Sch. Diſar. p. 97.

14. As for his other Argument, which afterward I come to, whereby he ſaith, perhaps the Dr. may receive ſome ſatisfaction, that Peter had in a more particular manner the holy Ghoſt from his firſt burſting out into that Sermon, that converted three thouſand, by virtue of our Saviour's words, out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, &c. He now ſaith he meant it onely for my ſake, not for his own or tenets intereſt, and I having received no ſatisfaction from it, told him that there was one honeſt word the [perhaps.] And upon this a ſhrewd charge is whiſpered, as if, ſaith he, our Saviour's words and thoſe others of Scripture, were all diſhoneſt words. This it ſeems I muſt anſwer alſo, or elſe be a blaſphemer, though I ſaid in expreſs words, that I granted his 2. poſtulata, that we might judge by exteriour actions, and that our Saviour ſaid perfect truth. But the Reader will ſoon diſcern my meaning, though S. W. will not; his perhaps I ſaid was the one honeſt word, i. e. the one word which could help his aſſumption to have any poſſible truth in it, which without it, had none, nothing being more improbable, than that this way of proof ſhould give any man the leaſt ſatisfaction, St. Peter firſt burſt out into that Sermon, Ergo. He had in a more particular manner the holy Ghoſt. This I thought the bare repeating would competently convince to be unſatisfactory, and then this is taken unkindly too, and ſo there is no pleaſing my auſtere Mr. that muſt have reverence paid to all his nothings.

15. But I had been long at peace from the charge of falſifications, and now he can no longer abſtain; I had ſaid, The Dr. may not be ſatisfied thence, that St. Peter had received the holy Ghoſt in a more particular manner, or was deſigned head of the Apoſtles, the latter of which, ſaith he, is added of my own falſifying invention. But 1. Why might not I out of my own invention without any colour of falſifying, add thoſe words, when I know the one thing, which 'tis his intereſt to have proved, is St. Peter's headſhip over the Apoſtles, and not any receiving the holy Ghoſt in a peculiar manner, without it. And yet 2. it is evident to every man's eye, that ſhall look on his Schiſm. Diſar. that this Argument of his, (that might, he ſaith, perhaps yield ſome ſatisfaction) was confronted to this of mine, in his own reciting, St. Peter had no peculiar mark of fire, Ergo. He was not head of the Apoſtles. To which how could he deem his proof of his receiving the holy Ghoſt in a particular manner, a ſatisfactory oppoſition, unleſs the headſhip were deducible from it? After all this, he will once more propoſe the import of his late Argument, even that which I thought ſufficiently refuted by repeating, and of which I expreſt my hope, and intimated my requeſt that (as Mr. Calvin had done to Dr. Stapl.) my ſilence might not have ſuch efficacy in it, as to render this alſo a ſtrongeſt place for the Romaniſts pretenſions. But this cannot it ſeems perſuade him to think meanly of it; and then he muſt be obeyed ſtill, or elſe I am non-pluſt, and as he concludes his paragraph, hang down my head, and ſay juſt nothing. Be it ſo; what then is the import of this worthy argument? Why, 'tis this, ſaith he, that ſince out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, 'tis probable that St. Peter had the Holy Ghoſt in his heart more abundantly or in an higher degree, ſince he firſt expreſt his interiour motions by ſpeaking, and ſpeaking ſo vigorouſly and powerfully. And then, if it be probable that St. Peter had the holy Ghoſt in an higher degree, it follows unavoidably ad hominem, that it is probable likewiſe he had an higher rule and preſidency in the Church performed to him.] I anſwer then at length, though before I was willing to have ſpared ſo impertinent an expence of pains, that if a thouſand probabilities proved any thing, as they do nothing, by the rules of S. W's great Maſter, yet it is not ſo much as probable that that Text [out of the fulneſs of the heart the tongue ſpeaketh,] ſhould infer an higher degree of the holy Ghoſt in St. Peter's heart, from his firſt expreſſing its interiour motions by ſpeaking, or ſpeaking ſo vigorouſly, and powerfully. For firſt, all that that Text inferred when Chriſt ſpake it, Matth. XII. 34. is but this, how can ye being evil, ſpeak good things? i. e. of ſuch wicked men, as that generation of Vipers was, it was not to be expected, that they ſhould ſpeak more reverently of Chriſt, than they did when they called him Beelzebub. And then from this ſenſe of thoſe words, what engines can ever extract this concluſion probably, Ergo; He that expreſt the Spirit's interiour motions by ſpeaking, he that ſpake firſt, that ſpake ſo vigorouſly, had the holy Ghoſt in his heart, more abundantly than all others? 1. Sure expreſſing its inward motions by ſpeaking, doth not infer it by force of that Text; for he that ſaith, ill men are not to be expected to ſpeak good things, doth not conclude, that he that ſpeaks good things, hath an higher degree of the Spirit, than all other; for others may and did ſpeak good things too. 2. Speaking firſt, doth not infer it, for that Text refers not at all to the Order in ſpeaking, and 'tis certain, that he who is moſt full of the ſpirit, unleſs he be alſo Ecſtatick, may ſo far contain his Spirit, as to ſpeak ſecond, or third, and not firſt: again, he that hath more of the ſpirit of zeal or fervour, which cauſes him to break forth firſt in ſpeaking, may yet have a lower degree in many other graces of the Spirit. Laſtly, ſpeaking ſo powerfully, doth not, for as that Text hath no aſpect on powerfull ſpeaking, ſo 'tis evident others might at other times ſpeak as powerfully, as now St. Peter did; and yet again, if they did not, might as much excell him in other Graces of the Spirit, as he them in ſpeaking powerfully. This I hope may now ſatisfy S. W's importunity, and allay his fondneſs to his Creature. If not, let him farther conſider that his Argument being propoſed ad hominem, was in reaſon to underſtand by the receiving the holy Ghoſt, the ſame that I underſtood by it, and that was not the efficacy in ſpeaking, &c. (although I acknowledge that to be a gift of the Spirit) but the power and authority in the Church, promiſed in the promiſe of the Keys, conferred in the ſending them as the Father ſent Chriſt, with the Ceremony of breathing on them, and bidding them (and thereby promiſing them they ſhould) receive the holy Ghoſt, and ſo finally ſealed to them by the deſcent of the holy Ghoſt upon them. For him then to paſs from this fulneſs of the Spirit, as it ſignified fulneſs of power and authority, to the degree of ſpeaking vigorouſly or powerfully, what is it but tranſire à Genere ad Genus, to paſs from one to another ſort of fulneſs, and that is ſo far from being an ingredient in probable diſcourſe, that it is a groſs and branded fallacy, not fit to be made uſe of by any pretender to but probable arguing.

propoſe

16. E'er I go hence, many things are again charged upon me; one not mentioned before, is, that I calumniate him to bring this for a clear evidence, and put the words clear evidence in other letters, as if they had been his.] And were it not moſt ſtrange, if in a matter of fact, and a charge of calumny, this ſhould prove to have no truth in it? Yet thus it is; For though if I had called it [clear evidence] and done ſo ironically, I might write it in other letters, without pretending it his, it being frequent in every line to change the letter, for words of emphaſis, and not onely of citation, as is manifeſt through the whole Book; Yet let the * place be conſulted, and thoſe words [clear evidence] will not be found in the whole Paragraph, nor in any other, ſpeaking of this matter, nor any thing nearer it, than this [a proof to evidence on St. Peter's behalf] and then what truth is there in his ſuggeſtions, even when he is accuſing other men of Calumnies, and hath that particular obligation to avoid what he ſo ſeverely reprehends?

* Anſ. to Schiſ. Diſar. p. 68. parag. 20.

17. The fourth Propoſition, that they were all filled with the holy Ghoſt, he had formerly called my fourth Argument, and I had told him that I mentioned it onely as a conſequent of the holy Ghoſt's deſcending and ſitting on every one of them, and yet he will again recite it, though it be to ſay no more, than that he had no ground to imagine but this was a diſtinct Argument, both equally impugning their tenet. I anſwer, I have again ſhewed him wherein the Argument conſiſted, and what it pretended to prove, and his not imagining ſignifies nothing, and therefore is to be anſwered with nothing.

18. The fifth and laſt Propoſition, that this promiſe was equally performed, as it was made, to all, was the reſult of all that went before in that Parentheſis, viz. that as the promiſe was of twelve Thrones indifferently, not of one mounted above the reſt of the Eleven, ſo the holy Ghoſt, that by deſcending on them ſealed that power, ſate upon every one without any mark of inequality, or precedence, much leſs of ſupremacy in any, and ſo the final inſtating gave teſtimony to the promiſe and donation of the power. And then with what truth can he again inſiſt, that this was pretended as deduced out of the fourth, ſaying that they were all full of it, when, as I ſaid, it was diſcernibly the reſult of the whole, and never pretended otherwiſe? This ſhews the vanity of his former, and now reſumed charge of my arguing from fulneſs to equality, on which head he hath very wittily coupled the fulneſs of glory, and the fulneſs of an Egg; I argued not ſo, but from the correſpondence betwixt the promiſe and the final performance, and therefore willingly yielded what I was not concerned to doubt, that they that were full of the holy Ghoſt, as that ſignifies divine endowments, might have it unequally.

19. But he muſt here needs ask, what I mean by the holy Ghoſt's abiding in the ſouls of the Faithfull, or by what other way than by divine endowments onely, hoping, he ſaith, I do not mean that the holy Ghoſt is hypoſtatically ſtatically united to, or incarnate in them. And ſo he makes no farther ſtay, to conclude the inequality of divine endowments is all that is imaginable in this matter. To this I anſwer,

1. That he might have made any other the moſt impertinent Queſtion as ſeaſonably in this place (and we knew before, he was good at asking of Queſtions) it being certain, I ſpake not at all of the holy Ghoſt's abiding in the ſouls of the faithfull.

* Anſ. p.69.l.20. 2. That I expreſly * ſet down the other way oppoſed to divine endowments or graces, viz. power or commiſſion to authority and dignity in the Church, which every one without any diſcrimination or note of precedence had ſealed to them by the holy Ghoſt's deſcent. This being thus manifeſt, he hath yet the face to tell the Reader, that after the yielding inequality of divine endowments, when I ſhould tell him the other part of my diſtinction, I end ſhufflingly: Our Queſtion being onely of power and commiſſion to authority, &c. Could any thing be more contrary to, and deſtructive of ſhuffling, than thus diſtinctly to ſet down what it was, wherein alone our Queſtion was concerned, viz. power in the Church, and not divine endowments or graces, and that yielding inequality in the latter (and that Peter might therein ſurpaſs ſome, and be ſurpaſſed by others) this had no manner of influence on the former, and therefore could not be pertinently inſiſted on any farther?

20. But even here he hath five charges more ſprung up of a ſudden, when no man dreamed of them.

Firſt, That I ſay the Queſtion is of power and dignity, whereas, ſaith he, it is of equality or inequality of this dignity.] And ſo ſay I too; and when I oppoſed power to divine endowments, and ſaid, the inequality of the endowments ſhould be granted, what could that oppoſition ſignify, but that the inequality of power was the onely thing denied by me? and to that my words had been expreſs in the Tr. of Sch. [this promiſe equally performed as it was made to all] and being ſuppoſed throughout to be the Queſtion, needed not at every turn to be ſyllabically expreſt.

Secondly, ſaith he, I never tell him in what manner of the holy Ghoſt's inexiſtence, beſide that of divine endowments, this Authority was founded. I anſwer, that I was no-way concerned in this Queſtion of the holy Ghoſt's inexiſtence; yet can tell him plainly, that Chriſt having given the Apoſtles their commiſſion, with the ceremony of breathing on them, and bidding them receive the holy Ghoſt, and farther appointed them to wait at Jeruſalem till they were indued with power from above, this deſcent of the holy Ghoſt both ſealed their commiſſion finally to them, and qualified them with miraculous gifts for the diſcharge of it, and alſo took off the reſtraint that formerly lay upon them, and ſo let them looſe to the actual exerciſe of it.

Thirdly, ſaith he, I inſtance onely againſt them, that every Apoſtle had power, and ſo calumniate their tenet again, and leave out the word equally. But that is but the repeating of the firſt charge, and there was anſwered, and the calumniating his Tenet oft urged, and proved to be his Calumny.

Fourthly, That this coming of the holy Ghoſt gave commiſſion and authority, is, ſaith he, onely my words, and proved by my own fancy] I anſwer, 1. that my words were not, that the coming of the holy Ghoſt gave commiſſion, but that the promiſe was finally performed in it; Chriſt's words, Joh. 20. were the words of miſſion and commiſſion; the deſcent of the holy Ghoſt was the time pitched on for the moſt ſolemn final inſtating them in that power; and this hath oft been ſhewed to be no fancy.

Laſtly, He ſaith, I conclude that there is no remaining difficulty, when S.W. can diſcern nothing but miſerable evaſions, never touching the difficulty, but avoiding it with as many pitifull ſhifts as a crafty inſincerity could ſuggeſt to an errour-hardened ſoul. I anſwer, that I knew before, that S.W. could rail bitterly, and then moſt variouſly, and rhetorically, when he moſt wanted ſuch aids; and I willingly afford him the triumph of ſurpaſſing all in this kind of eloquence, but more in the cauſeleſs profuſion of it. And ſo much for a very long and a very empty Section.

SECT. VI.

An Anſwer to all the Cavils of his ſixth Section. The power promiſed Peter, promiſed and given all the Apoſtles. Epiſcopal power from Chriſt's donation to all, not from St. Peter. S. W's rare arguing. The argument enforced from Tu es Petrus. Πέτρος for a ſtone. The myſticalneſs of the Apocalypſe, yet ſomewhat plain in it. Anſwer to S. W's Objections. The parallel betwixt the name Enoch and Peter.

1. HIS ſixth Section (like one that is to raiſe an eſtate by complaining of injuries) is again reſolved to faſten on me the guilt of having calumniated their Tenet, and pretending that the Romaniſt builds not the Church on Biſhops in the plural, but holds that none hath the power of the Keys but St. Peter onely. When this was in Sch. Diſar. objected to the Teſtimonies by me produced (the cheapeſt way of anſwering them) I not onely told him, it was apparent my words injected not the leaſt ſuſpicion of it, but withall added the proofs of my ſaying ſo, taken from the matter of the Teſtimonies, that though the words, *Mat.*16. were ſpoken particularly to Peter, yet the entire power there ſpoken of, was given to all the Apoſtles, all Epiſcopal power flowing from that donation; that in Peter's receiving the Keys, all Biſhops received them; And this an evidence, that either he received more than was comprehended in the Keys (which by the promiſe of no more but the Keys, he cannot be ſuppoſed to have received) or elſe received no more than other Biſhops received from the reſt of the Apoſtles. What now can be more evident than this, that I do not ſuppoſe or charge them to hold, that none hath the Keys but Peter, but prove againſt them, that no ſupremacy can be inferr'd for St. Peter from thoſe words, which give him nothing but what is common to him with other men?

2. And what hath he to reply to a matter thus evident? why, forſooth, he recites the introduction to my Anſwer ['tis apparent thoſe words injected not the leaſt ſuſpicion of that,] but never conſiders my proof of it; then ſaith, it was not ſuſpicion but plain and open evidence, appealing to my words, page and line, in the Tr. of Sch. where having cited, that the Church is built on Biſhops, I add [in the plural] and of Epiſcopacy being the preſidency of the Apoſtles, I add, [the very ſame that Chriſt beſtowed on all, and not onely on one of them.] But who ſo blind as he that hath eyes, and is obſtinately bent not to make uſe of them? Elſe nothing were more viſible in both theſe, than that all I contend hence, is onely this, that there is no more deducible from the promiſe to St. Peter, than what is promiſed others (elſewhere) in common with him, and this evidenced ſeaſonably (and by thoſe Fathers Teſtimonies effectually) againſt him, who deduceth a ſupremacy to one, from Chriſt's promiſe of the Keys to him, which yet are in like manner promiſed to the reſt of his brethren.

not

3. To this purpoſe he might (had it not been for the ſame infirmity, not of blindneſs, but winking) have taken notice of thoſe words of St. Ambroſe, Claves illas Regni Cœlorum in Beato Petro cuncti ſuſcepimus ſacerdotes, that all ſuch Prieſts as he, i. e. Biſhops, have received in Saint Peter the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. If they did ſo, if all that there Peter received, were the Keys (as is evident it was) and all the Biſhops received the Keys in Peter, then where is the Univerſal Paſtourſhip, that Peter is imagined to have received there? what image of that or any thing like that, is to be drawn thence?

4. But, ſaith he, there is not a word in the Teſtimonies expreſſing that this power was equally intruſted to every ſingle Apoſtle as to St. Peter.] And what if the word [equally] was not expreſt? Is it not ſufficient, if it be expreſt, and manifeſted, that the ſame power (whatſoever that amounts to) which was promiſed St. Peter at one time, was at another promiſed and actually conferred on all the reſt? (For if ſo, then no Supremacy was given to Peter in thoſe words, Mat. XVI. it being viſible and granted by all, that Supremacy was not given to all the reſt, which yet it muſt be, if the ſame power being given St. Peter, and the reſt, the power that was given Peter, was Supremacy.) And this he knows was expreſt in the Teſtimonies, that of Theophylact, firſt produced, Εἰ δὲ καὶ πᾶσι Πέτρου μόνον, though the words, I will give thee, &c. were ſaid to Peter alone, yet the power was conferred on all the Apoſtles. What power? That, whatſoever it was, which was promiſed Peter alone, Mat. XVI. Which therefore without queſtion was not the Supremacy. So that of St. Cyprian, that God's diſpoſing the honour of a Biſhop, ſaith unto Peter, I ſay unto thee, thou art Peter, &c. What can be more manifeſt, than that the words to Peter diſpoſe the honour of a Biſhop in the Church, i. e. of one that rules alone, but yet in equality with many others? How then can that be of one Univerſal Supreme Governour of all Biſhops and Apoſtles too? What will all S. W's Acts prevail againſt this?

5. A remarkable attempt he hath in this place; when I had ſaid [from that Donation it is, that all Epiſcopal power that is in the Church, flows] this, ſaith he, favours him, and proves their Tenet, as much as the being the foundation of honour and magiſtracy, argues that Perſon from whom theſe flow, to be higheſt in dignity and ſupreme in command] To ſee the fortune, and confidence, or Magick of a good invention, at a dead lift; All that is moſt againſt him, aſſoon as it appears within his Circle, preſently wheels about, and ſerves on his ſide. But it will not long doe ſo. For 1. I no-where ſaid, that all Epiſcopal power flows from that perſon St. Peter, but from that donation, i. e. from Chriſt's promiſing and giving the Keys to all the Apoſtles, as well as to Peter. And therefore 2. When he repeats theſe for my words, that from the donation to Peter all Epiſcopal Power which is in the Church flows, and cites for it my words, Anſw. p. 70. l. 2, 3. Let the Reader examine it, and he will find it groſsly, and palpably otherwiſe. My words are, from that donation, and what that was, muſt be reſolved from the words immediately precedent, which are theſe, though the words were ſpoken particularly to St. Peter, yet the intire power was promiſed and given to all the Apoſtles; and then add, from that donation it is, i. e. (as clear as the day) from that donation of power to all the Apoſtles. And yet this he can ſlily transform into the donation to St. Peter, and ſtill rail zealouſly at falſifiers, and make examples of them in his Index, as if he verily believed it (as indeed it is) an unpardonable fault in a writer. Quis tulerit Gracchos.——

6. The next feat is ſuperexcellent. He had ſaid that my Teſtimonies rather make for the Romaniſts, giving his proof, for the Church being founded on Apoſtles, and Biſhops, prejudices not St. Peter to be the chiefeſt, and if ſo, then the Church is built moſt chiefly on St. Peter.] Here I obſerved the manner of his arguing, that if it prejudices not St. Peter to be the chiefeſt, then the Church is built moſt chiefly on him, as if not prejudicing or ſaying nothing againſt it, were a clear evidence for it, and then the firſt verſe of Matthew was for it, a clear evidence alſo. Here I am now charged of wilfull inſincerity, (ſome ſuch guilt of mine is conſtantly the reſult of S. W's want of Mediums, and that makes his Book and Index ſo full fraught of my crimes.) For, ſaith he, his diſcourſe ſtood thus, If ſo, i. e. if St. Peter be the chiefeſt, whereas I interpret, if ſo, i. e. if it prejudice not. But 1. Were not theſe the very words of his diſcourſe, or arguing? [The Church being founded in Apoſtles and Biſhops, prejudices not St. Peter to be the chiefeſt; and if ſo, then the Church is built moſt chiefly on St. Peter.] Doth not now [If ſo] refer to the propoſition immediately precedent? All Laws of diſcourſe will exact it to do ſo. And if it do ſo, then I demand, is [St. Peter to be the chiefeſt] that propoſition, or is it a propoſition at all, or capable of being the antecedent, to which [If ſo] can refer? What can be more unreaſonable? But then 2. if [If ſo] were poſſibly interpretable as S. W. now would have it, yet will this little aſſiſt, or contribute to the commendation of his arguing. For then his Argument muſt lie thus; the Church being founded on Apoſtles, &c. prejudices not St. Peter to be the chiefeſt, and if St. Peter be the chiefeſt, then, &c. Here 'tis viſible that having in the former part aſſumed no more than that his chiefdom is not prejudiced, in the latter he takes it for granted, without any tender of the leaſt word of proof that he is chiefeſt, and thence concludes that the Church is built moſt chiefly upon him. And ſo this malady of ſtrange arguing, after the application of his own πάτον φάρμακον, ſticks as cloſe, and as heavy upon him as before: for now the not prejudicing him to be the chiefeſt, immediately infers his chiefdom, or elſe 'tis aſſumed gratis, and ſo the main queſtion begged, without any medium to infer it.

7. Once more, to get out of theſe toils, he gives a plunge; I made account, ſaith he, (as I lately ſhewed) that theſe Teſtimonies rather made St. Peter the chiefeſt.] But 'tis certain he hath never ſhewed this, nor attempted more than to anſwer ſome of them, and to pretend that they did not prove the contrary; and that is no more than the not-prejudicing here, which is of all things moſt incompetent to prove his affirmative, that Peter is the chiefeſt, for which he produces it here. And therefore he could no otherwiſe make account of this, than he may make account the Indies are his, for that he may equally pretend, when he hath no other way to ſolve a difficulty.

8. But

8. But if after all this, he ſhould be able to lick himſelf whole, who would not look on his skill with reverence? If that be not compaſſable, yet he will have the comfort of railing at me, that I have calumniated him (good man) moſt groſsly and manifeſtly, by making him bring this for a clear evidence, and printing the words clear evidence ſo that the honeſt Reader would eaſily take them to be his words.] But to this I anſwer 1. that the other letter (as he hath oft been told, and may ſee it teſtified in every page, almoſt in every line of the Book) is no ſignification that the words are cited, or his; other uſes there are of the Italick letter, beſide that of noting a citation. 2. I had before exactly ſet down his words in the very ſtyle he now pretends, and therefore could not eaſily ſeduce any to a belief that [clear evidence] were his words. 3. It is but a copy of his countenance, that ſuch care is taken of the honeſt Reader, that he be not deceived; 'Tis not long ſince he dropt a proof of this. 4. It is not, as he pretends, that I make him bring this for a clear evidence; All that I there ſay of him, is to take notice of his manner of arguing, that from theſe Teſtimonies not prejudicing, he preſently aſſumes that it is true, as if ſaying nothing to hurt it, were a clear evidence on its ſide. Where by the abſurdity of a like caſe, that of aſſuming to evidence clearly from the barely not prejudicing, I ſhew the infirmity of his inference, that concludes it is, becauſe it is not prejudiced. This indeed is to ſay, that he doth like thoſe, but not that he uſes theſe words, which I muſt be ſuppoſed to acknowledge he uſes not, for if he did, this would not have been, as if, &c. not a ſimilitude, but the thing it ſelf.

9. After this, he takes occaſion to reſume the argument of the Romaniſt, from Tu es Petrus, accuſing me that I did not at all put their argument, which, ſaith he, ſtands thus, that the name Peter ſignifying a Rock, and this not onely given particularly to St. Peter, but alſo after a particularizing manner, in all probability St. Peter was in a particular manner a Rock, to build God's Church, exemplifying this by XII Oratours, of whom one was called particularly Oratour, and was as well known by that name as his own.] But how little efficacy there is in the giving Peter this Name particularly, or after the particularizing manner, hath now more largely been ſhewed, than to need any farther account in this place. The utmoſt that it can infer, is, that he, as a particular or ſingle perſon, was to be inſtated in that power noted by the Keys, and that he was by Chriſt deſtin'd before, at the impoſition of his Name, to be a foundation-ſtone in the fabrick of his Church, and this, if he pleaſe, in a particular and ſingular manner. But then as the impoſition of that name Peter, gave him no Supremacy over all the reſt of the Apoſtles, and the whole Church (which is moſt evident,

1. By his example of an antonomaſtically called Oratour, who hath by that Name no Title to Supremacy over all other Oratours, or other men:

2. Becauſe all the other were called foundations elſewhere, yet neither made thereby, nor ſuppoſed ſupreme; and

3. Becauſe he was by Chriſt ſirnamed Peter long before the promiſing him the Keys, Mat. 16. and then if by or at the impoſition of the name, he were inſtated in the power, with what propriety could it after be promiſed him, as S. W. ſuppoſes it was, and not actually conferred, till Joh. 21?) So the addreſſing the promiſe to him in the particularizing manner, proves it as little, unleſs the power it ſelf thus given him, can appear to be a ſingular, as that ſignifies a Supreme power; which alſo it doth not, as appears, becauſe the ſame power, whatever it is, was afterward promiſed, and at length performed to all the reſt of the Apoſtles; and if we may believe the Fathers, promiſed to all Biſhops in the Church in being promiſed him. Whether this ſound not to their diſadvantage, as much as his ſimile of Oratour, or his particularizing Circumſtances, ſound to his advantage, let the Reader judge.

10. Mean-while it may here be noted, that the utmoſt he now pretends, is, that he was in an higher degree, or in a particular manner a Rock, than the reſt.] Which as it is not proved by the particularizing manner, &c. but is diſproved by others being elſewhere joined with him in the thing ſignified by this Appellation, and in the power thus particularly given him, ſo if it were rendred probable, it might yet come ſhort of the Univerſal Paſtourſhip, the onely thing that his intereſts can be ſatiſfied with.

11. Three of them we have oft heard were προστιμηθέντες dignified before the reſt, δοκοῦντες εἶναι στῦλοι, ſeeming to be Pillars (as high a Title as that of Foundation-ſtones) yet this gave no Supremacy to all thoſe three; Why then ſhould the being a foundation in a particular manner, or higher degree, carry it for St. Peter over all? eſpecially when the Title of ἀκρογωνιαῖος, Chief corner-ſtone, which alone notes Supremacy among theſe Foundation-ſtones, is ſo far from belonging to Peter, that it cannot without blaſphemy be applied to him.

12. One thing more I ſhall note from his parallel betwixt the name Peter, and the name Oratour; That when as he ſaith, the knowing Governour upon occaſion of ſome excellent Oration, gives one the Antonomaſtical Title of Oratour] 'tis evident that this perſon was that eminent Oratour before that Title was beſtowed on him, and not rendred ſuch by that Title, but onely approved to be ſuch by the judgment of that knowing Governour; and ſo, if the parallel hold, the Title of Rock or Peter muſt infer that he was, whatſoever is noted by that word, before the Title was given him; and then the Supremacy, if that were noted by it, could not be promiſed him, Matth. 16. on which his Argument proceeds.

13. After this, he will recite after his manner my proceſs in the Tr. of Sch. whereby I evacuate and retort the Romaniſts pretenſions from the word πέτρος; Of which when 1. I ſay, that it ſignifies vulgarly a ſtone, and cite Homer for it, he tells me, I relinquiſh the ſignification which Scripture and our own Tranſlation gives it, and that I ſhew it out of an odd place in Homer, though I know that Poets are the worſt Authours to fetch propriety of words from. To this I anſwer, and 1. To the laſt, That ſuch a Claſſick and ancient Poet as Homer, hath always been thought as fit an Authour for the propriety of words as any. 2. That for Scripture, it is ſo far from giving us another ſignification of the word, that both the Syriack word which this tranſlates, and the Context, here referring us to building the Church, as an houſe upon a foundation, doth oblige us to underſtand this of a Foundation-ſtone.

14. The force of the Context is viſible, and cannot be queſtioned; As for the word, the Hebrew כֵּיף, and Chaldee and Syriack כֵּיפָא and כֵּיפָא and כֵּיפָא which is the Cepha or Cephas which the Goſpel mentions and renders πέτρος, Lexicographers interpret it indifferently Petra, ſaxum, lapis; I ſhall mention but one example, Iſa. 8. 14. where the ſtone of offence, the ſtone at which one ſtumbles, is by the Chaldee rendred כיף by the Syriack ܟܹܐܦܵܐ Cepha, exactly to the ſenſe that old Homer gave us. And thus pretious ſtones (the λίθοι τίμιοι I mentioned) are in the Chaldee טבתא כפין good ſtones, in this uſe of the word. 3. That our Tranſlatours rendring it a Rock to build upon, do not conſiderably differ from my rendring it a ſtone; a Rock being acknowledgedly a ſtone, though every ſtone be not a Rock, viz. a chalk or any other ſoft ſtone, which uſes not to have place in a foundation, and I ſuppoſe not to be meant here.

Chaldee

15. Secondly, when I ſay that the Apoſtles, Rev. 21. 14. are Twelve foundations, each of which having the name of an Apoſtle on it, in reſpect of the power and dignity that belonged to every one, is ſeverally compared to a pretious ſtone, and the meaſure of the wall of the City, the Church thus built, was twelve times twelve cubits, aſſigning thereby an equal proportion whether of power or province to all and every of the Apoſtles; All this he thus abbreviates, or transforms, that by Mat. 16. applied to a building, it muſt needs ſignifie a foundation ſtone thence, by the Apocalyps a pretious ſtone, this done, that I deduce from the meaſuring the wall in Apoc. and dogmatize upon it, though I know it the moſt obſcure and myſtical part of Scripture.] To this I reply.

1. That the Book of Revelation is indeed a Prophecy, and ſo obſcure and myſtical, and ſo is the Book of Pſalms, Iſaiah, and many more, eſpecially Ezechiel, and Daniel, and I have no reaſon to think that every one of theſe named, is leſs obſcure than this; and yet out of each of theſe, not onely Chriſt and his Apoſtles, but alſo the Fathers of the Church, have made no difficulty to cite Teſtimonies for the Confirmation of Articles of Faith, which is ſomewhat more than I have here attempted, bringing it onely for matters of leſſer moment, and in full accordance with other plain places.

And 2. That the paſſages I have produced, are far from obſcure, nor more ſo, than Chriſt's words to Peter, which both S. W. and I pretend to underſtand. For why ſhould it be more obſcure for twelve Apoſtles to be called Twelve Foundations and ſtones, and thoſe τίμιοι pretious, than for Peter to be ſtyled ſuch a ſtone, as the Church being built on, the Gates of Hades ſhould not prevail againſt it? It were eaſie to make the compariſon, and put into the former ſcale the menſuration of the wall, and yet to ſhew that this part of the Text, Mat. 16. is as (if not more) obſcure, as that of Rev. 21. But there is here nothing ſuggeſted againſt it, and therefore this task is unneceſſary. Onely I ſhall ask, why he ſhould, in reciting my proceſs, overskip the twelve θεμέλιοι foundations, expreſt by me from v. 14. and onely fetch from that place the pretious ſtones, and meaſuring the wall? 'Tis certain he ſaw them, for in the next Paragr. he mentions them. If then it were, leſt that which was ſo perſpicuous and pertinent to the matter, ſhould prejudice his Objection of obſcure and myſtical, it ſeems he had need of ſuch arts, elſe why ſhould he make uſe of them?

16. He will now reflect on ſuch toys, he ſaith, which I replyed to him in my Anſwer. The firſt was, that my anſwer to the Text of Tu es Petrus, though deformed by the Diſarmer, could not miſs to have this efficacy in it, that there being no more meant by it, than that Peter was a foundation ſtone, and all the Apoſtles being ſuch as well as he, this cannot conſtitute him in any ſuperiority over them. To this, what hath he to reply?

Why 1. that this miſſes to be an anſwer to Tu es Petrus, and is turned to be an Argument from the foundation ſtones, in the Apocalyps; and then he will ask, Why I did not ſhew the particularizing Circumſtances had no force, but ramble as far as the Apoc. ferrying over the Queſtion by the mediation of Homer.] and then what fit parallel for my proceſs, but that of Cooper coming from King Pippin? To his wit I return nothing but my due admiration; to his objection no more but this, that a denyal and a reaſon of it, hath been wont to be accounted a competent way of anſwering (and much more ſatisfactory, than the bare denyal, without any other reaſon, than his ſtanding upon the Privilege of an anſwer, to prove nothing, which S. W. ſo oft challengeth to himſelf) and ſuch is this, which denies and evacuates all force in the Tu es Petrus, or ſirname, ſtone, as that is applied to a foundation, by ſhewing all the reſt are ſtones and foundation-ſtones alſo; As for the particularizing circumſtances, of which this is the chief, they have oft been ſhewed to have no ſuch Energy in them, as either to make Πέτρος ſignifie more than a foundation-ſtone, or to raiſe the Keys, that were promiſed Peter in one place, and all in another, and accordingly conferred on all, into a quite other thing than what is meant by them, when they are gived to the reſt, viz. a ſupremacy over them.

17. Next he asks, how I know no more is meant than a foundation-ſtone, unleſs I firſt anſwer the particularizing Circumſtances, which entitle him a Rock after a particular manner;] But I have already ſhewed this, 1. that Cephas and Πέτρος ſignifie a ſtone, and in this place, of a building a foundation-ſtone, (and that is not a Rock after a particular manner) and this being common to him with the reſt, the Circumſtances have not the faculty to transform it into another thing, a Supremacy over them all. As for the [as well] ſignifying [equally] I have lately ſpoken in this Section, and need not ſo ſoon repeat it. This being thus unſucceſsfully performed, he next aſſaults my reaſon againſt St. Peter's ſuperiority, upon theſe grounds, viz. that Chriſt onely is the chief corner-ſtone, and no other place in the foundation gives any ὑπεροχὴν of power to one foundation-ſtone above another, which I ſaid was manifeſt from the known poſition of foundation-ſtones, one by, not on the top of another. To this paſſage he hath many exceptions; let us view them ſeverally; Firſt, he will ask me, How I know that this place in the Apocalyps was deſigned to ſignifie the order of dignity among the things there ſpecified; and till I manifeſt this, I can, he ſaith, deduce nothing from it againſt them. I anſwer, it is the eaſieſt thing in the world to ask an impertinent Queſtion, and impoſe an unreaſonable Task upon his Attendant. Elſe it could hardly be imagined with what pretence I, that maintain the equality of the Apoſtles, and bring this Text in favour of my pretenſions, ſhould be obliged to ſhew that it was deſigned to ſignifie order of dignity, which is ſome kind of inequality. And yet on this his following Objections are founded. The ſecond this, that 'tis impoſſible to pretend that it was deſigned to prove any ſuch Order of dignity, which he learnedly proves alſo; And it ſhall be willingly yielded without his aids, and let him conſider with his friends, who is moſt likely to gain by it, he whoſe intereſt it is, that they be equal, or he who contends for the Supremacy of one over all the other.

18. But he hath here one ſubtilty, that muſt be taken notice of; If, ſaith he, the bringing no poſitive ſign of an higher poſition prejudices St. Peter's Superiority, it prejudices Chriſt's alſo as much, expreſſing no peculiar eminency to the head corner-ſtone more than to the reſt.] The Reader may here refreſh himſelf if he be weary.

For 1. What can be more pleaſant than to obſerve S. W. comparing the Superiority of St. Peter with the higher poſition of a ſtone in a foundation, whereas it ſhould be in all reaſon the deeper, and that is the lower poſition, the loweſt being onely capable of that dignity of being foundation-ſtones, and the higher utterly unqualified for any, much more for an higher degree of that dignity. What wit-engine will help to recover S. W. out of this pit?

But then 2. how can the ſuppoſed equality of the Twelve foundation-ſtones, prejudice Chriſt? when 'tis viſible that Chriſt is one of the twelve, and conſequently, not mentioned in the place, but the Twelve Apoſtles onely, which had now the Supreme power after his aſcenſion, and not any ſingle perſon among them, and this Ariſtocratical Supremacy deſcribed by Twelve foundations, as Chriſt's Monarchick Supremacy, whilſt he was here, and now as he is in heaven, is expreſt in another ſtyle, that of the chief Corner-ſtone, or head of the Corner, Pſa. 118. Mat. 21. Mar. 12. Luk. 20. Act. 4. 1 Pet. 2. when therefore from this Title of our Saviour, he will fanſie three other Corner-ſtones beſides him, and make a third Objection of that on a ſuppoſed inference of three Chiefs in power beſides him, he now ſees the vanity of his conceit, there being but one place of dignity taken notice of by Scripture among Foundation-ſtones, and that is the ἀκρογωνιαῖος, the head of the Corner, in which the whole building συναρμολογεῖται, ſaith St. Paul, Eph. 2. 20. is fitly coupled, and ſo agreeably framed and compacted together, the Apoſtles and Prophets being there lookt on all together, as the foundation, v. 19. and none of them dignified by poſition in the Corner, any more than Peter by his particularizing Circumſtances. And let this ſerve for a view of S. W's skill in Architecture, which being joyned with his wit and eloquence (of one kind) and Ruſhworthian Divinity, may give us a complete image of him.

19. His fourth Objection; which is founded on the rendring of Petra a Rock, hath by our view of the notion of כיפא, and that which the context, (relating to building) gives it, in this place, being already ſuperſeded. Onely when my Architecture is objected againſt, and I am ſaid to forget that to be in an higher degree a foundation-ſtone, is to be in an higher degree of firmneſs, but in a lower degree of poſition, this cannot but be a little ſtrange to me. For 1. 'Tis certain I never ſeemed to think (what alone S. W. did) that the higher poſition was the dignifying of a foundation-ſtone; well knowing, that none but the loweſt in poſition is capable of that title, and thence concluding, that all foundations are equal, becauſe all loweſt. I ſaid indeed, that they lye one by, not on the top of the other; But is that to ſay, or ſuppoſe, that that which lies on the top, or uppermoſt, is moſt dignifyed? No, but that all being loweſt, there is none more dignifyed than other, yeilding that what is laid upon them is leſs (but I hope that doth not ſignifie in any dialect, more) dignified. 2. What he ſuggeſts, that to be in an higher degree of foundation-ſtone, is to be in an higher degree of firmneſs] hath no truth in it; the one thing that dignifies any foundation-ſtone above the reſt, being that of the chief, or head of the corner, becauſe that couples the whole building, the firmneſs being equally competible to all the ſtones in the foundation, and ſo not ſuppoſeable to be peculiar to any one of them, as that of the coupling, and being head of the corner is; And now forſooth S. W. profeſſes himſelf weary of quibbling, and I think indeed never any man had more reaſon for it.

20. He had formerly recited an argument of mine thus, no diſtinction was put among the foundation ſtones, therefore there was none; and then charged it of being a Negative argument; I anſwered him, that my argument was this, Simon is by Chriſt called Πέτρος a foundation-ſtone in the building of the Church, and the ſame title in other words is given every of the Apoſtles, when they are called twelve foundations, from whence my concluſion, (not my proof) is negative, Ergo: the words Tu es Petrus, affirm no more of him, than is affirmed and given every of the other Apoſtles. What hath he now to reply to this? Why he tells me, I neither made any ſuch concluſion, nor any at all againſt Tu es Petrus, as they object it. 2. my proof is now onely this, that Πέτρος and Σκάλος are the ſame, as if there could not be foundation-ſtones leſs firm than a Rock.] To this I anſwer, 1. that he ſets out with an untruth; for in the Tr. of Sch. p. 90. 'Tis viſible that I evacuate the argument from Tu es Petrus for Supremacy, by obſerving the ſignification of Πέτρος, and the Apoſtles being ſtyled twelve foundations, &c. And what is this, but concluding from thence, that the words Tu es Petrus affirm no more of him, than is affirmed of others? Is not their argument from hence for his ſupremacy founded in more being given him here, than is elſewhere given others? If it be but an higher degree of the power of the Keys, that is more. How then can he have confidence to ſay, I made not any ſuch concluſion? If that were not my concluſion in terminis, yet ſure it was ſome ſuch concluſion, which yet he fairly denys. 2. With what truth can he add, that I make not any concluſion at all againſt the Text, as they object it? Do not the Romaniſts from thoſe words prove the Supremacy? How then can my concluding againſt that inference, miſs of concluding againſt it, as they object it? What if in the Tr. of Sch. I took no notice of the weight now laid on the particularizing circumſtances, as not being able to divine, or foreſee all the little arts that S. W. would catch at, and call in to his aid? Firſt, all other Romaniſts have not done ſo, and S. W. ſhould be the mark of ſome one, and is not we in the plural. But however, 2. I have now ſhewn how little his particularizing circumſtances avail him, and that a particularity of addreſs does not infer a Supremacy of power. And ſo ſtill he hath gained little by the ſubtilty. Laſtly, I have often minded him, that Πέτρος ſignifies no more than a foundation-ſtone in this place; and then there is no notion of Rock ſuperadded to that of foundation, nor conſequently any Superiority of degree noted by it,

21. Next when to his objecting ignorance to me, that from plurality I infer equality, I anſwered, that that was not my reaſoning, but that the reſt of the Apoſtles being called foundation-ſtones, as well as he, Tu es Petrus was no proof of inequality (or Supremacy) he replies, Thus the Dr. turns the ſame ſtone ſtill.] Which is to ſay, that when he repeats an objection many times and in divers ſhapes, I give it conſtantly the ſame anſwer. But he will ask, whether I ſuppoſe this equality, or infer it? I anſwer I do neither at this time, (though elſewhere I infer it by ſeveral ways of proofs, teſtimonies for their ἰσοτιμία, &c.) but onely evacuate and retort his argument from Tu es Petrus; for if his being called called a foundation-ſtone, be a proof of Supremacy, the title of twelve foundations will prove twelve Supremes, which being ridiculous on one ſide, the analogy muſt conclude it ſo on the other. From hence indeed follows, that if they be concluded Supreme, as well as he, then as far as this proof goes, they are all equal. But I did not, becauſe I needed not make uſe of that inference.

22. There is yet more of this batch; He had objected that I had quite deſtroyed mine own cauſe, ſince granting foundation-ſtone and Πέτρος to be the ſame, and onely Peter having that name, it follows on my grounds, that he onely and more particularly ſhould be a foundation-ſtone,] To this I anſwered, 1. That it would be a ſtrange Syllogiſm, if put in form; 2. That θεμέλιος and Πέτρος being the ſame, they that are every of them θεμέλιοι, muſt be by this argument as much foundation-ſtones, and as particularly as he that was called Πέτρος. 3. That man and Enoſh being the ſame, and onely the Son of Seth called Enoſh, it would follow, on theſe grounds, that he onely, and he more particularly ſhould be a man. To this he now replies, 1. That I recur to my own confident ſayings, that it is certain Πέτρος and θεμέλιος are the ſame, which he, ſaith he, hath certainly ſhewn to be otherwiſe. But 1. how can this be a confident ſaying of mine, when I have proved it as oft as I have ſaid it? for having proved Πέτρος to be a ſtone, and in this place a foundation-ſtone ſo evidently, that even S. W. * grants it, what can be far- * P. 440. l. 31.
ther required to prove it all one with θεμέλιος, in the notion wherein twelve θεμέλιοι are twelve foundation-ſtones? 2. He hath never ſhewed this to be certainly otherwiſe; nor can he, without contradicting this grant of his, that a foundation-ſtone and Πέτρος are the ſame, be imagined to attempt it.

23. Secondly to my parallel of Enoſh, &c. he replyes. 1. That I conſider not, that if Enoſh be the onely man, it unmans D. H. as much as S. W. 2. That when the ordinary appellative ſignifying the ſpecifical notion is appropriated to ſome one, that ought to be eſteemed as participating in an higher manner of that notion; but then Enoſh, ſaith he, ſignifies not the ſpecies of man, but man as ſubject to miſeries, as Mortalis in Latine; where as Adam ſignifying man, according to his nature, denotes, that he in a particular manner was a man, &c. and ſo, ſaith he, Filius hominis, applied to our Saviour and Orator to Cicero, argues they had a particular right to theſe titles, i.e. were in an higher degree the thing ſignifyed.] To theſe I anſwer, 1. That I did, and could not well eſcape conſidering that the ſuppoſition that Enoſh were the onely man, muſt needs unman me as well as him, it being certain that I am not Enoſh the Son of Seth, any more than S. W. is. But 1. I that drive him, by this inſtance, to an abſurdity, am not to be preſt with the inconveniences of it. 2. What avails this, to enervate the force of the parallel, which is not founded in Enoſh being the onely man, but in one particular man, the Son of Seth being called Enoſh, as one man the brother of Andrew was called Πέτρος? 3. To his Criticiſm I reply. 1. That granting it, that Enoſh is all one with Mortalis, my argument or parallel remains ſtill of the ſame force; For by S. W's reaſoning from the name Πέτρος, it muſt follow, that then the Son of Seth onely, and more particularly, ſhould be a mortal, or afflicted, or miſerable man; and then at the leaſt neither Job nor any other was afflicted, neither S. W. nor any other are mortal in ſo high a degree, as the Son of Seth. 2. I cannot yet conſent that Enoſh doth not properly ſignify the whole ſpecies of man, when yielding it to denote Critically, a miſerable or afflicted or mortal man, it is manifeſt, that every man that is born of a woman is not onely mortal, but of few days, not onely afflicted, but full of trouble, Job XIV. 1. 3. For Adam, that properly and originally ſignifies earth, it cannot quite ſo properly be applied to any man, as to him that was created immediately out of the earth, as no other but he was; yet granting this alſo, that Adam ſignifies man according to his ſpecifical nature, my parallel will hold of him, it no-way appearing that he onely, or in good reaſon more particularly ſhould be a man, all other men being men alſo, and equally with him, who alone was called Adam. 4. For Son of man, applied to our Saviour, 'tis moſt unfortunately inſtanced in; for 'tis certain Chriſt hath no more right to the title of Son of man, than any mere man hath; that he is very man, is all that the Church in this matter pretends for him, not that he is in a more Eminent manner a man, than any other man is. As for his Supremacy over all men, that is not derived from that title, or from his humane nature, but from his Divine, which denominated him Filius Dei, the eternal, omnipotent Son of God. And 5. If Cicero by being called Oratour, be yielded to have been eſteemed the moſt Excellent Oratour, yet neither will that infer that he onely was an Oratour, or that he had Supremacy of power over all Oratours, which alone will ſerve S. W's pretenſions.

24. What he ſubjoyns of the name Enoſh, that it might be in a manner accidentally impoſed by his Parents, 1. He hath himſelf ſuperſeded, by adding [unleſs we ſuppoſe his Parents to have been prophetical] which why may we not reaſonably ſuppoſe of Seth? However he now ſees, I can change it for other inſtances, of names, which were impoſed by God himſelf, ſuch was Adam and the Son of man, and yet he may remember that his inſtance of Oratour, was not of the number of thoſe that were by prophecy, or from heaven impoſed on Cicero, and therefore he that had made uſe of that, ſhould have abſtained from this exception.

25. Laſtly he had objected to me, that I will have all the Apoſtles called Peter. And I ſhewed the vanity of that, and aſſured him I was content with the Scripture ſtyle, that called them all θεμέλιοι. This will not content him, but he will reinforce this weighty obſervation, that if, as I ſay, Each was ſuch, Chriſt that governed himſelf by perfect reaſon (no leſs then) ought to give to all the reſt the name Peter: and on this head, he obſerves a ſpecial advantage on his ſide, that θεμέλιος doth not ſignify a foundation-ſtone, but onely a foundation, abſtracted from ſand, ſtraw, wool-packs, wood, rock, &c.] But I anſwer, 1. That as I doubt not of the wiſedom and reaſon of all Chriſt's actions, and impoſitions of names, ſo I muſt leave him his liberty in this and all the like particulars, and not preſcribe to him what he ought to doe; 2. That all the ſapiential motives imaginable are fully ſatisfied according to my ſuppoſition, by his calling them (as he doth in S. John's viſion, received from him, Rev. XXI) twelve foundation ſtones. 3. That though θεμέλιος, ſignify no more than a foundation, Grammatically, yet when the mention is of ſo many θεμέλιοι, as XII, and when the ſame XII θεμέλιοι are expreſly ſaid to be foundations of a wall, v. 19. the θεμέλιοι muſt needs be foundation-ſtones, the wall otherwiſe having but one, and that is not XII foundations. And ſo the πρῶτος θεμέλιος, firſt foundation, v. 20, being a Jaſper i.e. a pretious ſtone, and ſo forward to the reſt of the XII, 'tis evident they muſt be foundation-ſtones. And if, ſaith he, this obſervation of his much ſtrengthened his argument, then when it hath thus treacherouſly failed him, what will become of that poor argument, that received thus much ſtrength, took ſuch comfort in this (ſo much wanted, but ſoon blaſted) advantage? Thus we are at length at an end of his Sixth Section.

SECT. VII.

The obſcurities of the Apocalypſe farther conſidered. Commenters on it. The menſuration of the wall perſpicuous. Dogmatizing. S. W's objections from the luſtre of the Jaſper, &c.

1. HIS Seventh ſets out with great indignation at me, for undertaking, as he ſaith, to dogmatize, i.e. build our Faith, and deſtroy theirs, from my interpretation of a myſtical part of Scripture. On which head he falls into the higheſt expreſſions he could reach, to ſet out the obſcurity of that Book of the Revelation, making it ſo beyond all controverſie obſcure in the higheſt degree, that it ſeems to need another Revelation as great as that which firſt inſpired it, to know the meaning of it; and then laying on me as full a weight of contumely, as ſo great an Artiſt could furniſh, no leſs than the moſt openly pernicious folly that can be imagined, for doing this, and as he ſaith, calling it an evidence, of Sch. p. 9. l. 22.] To this fermentation of his bitter zeal, diſcovering it ſelf in the diſarmer, I had I thought in
* P. 73. * my Anſwer applied my lenitive, of force ſufficient to have prevented any farther working of it. To that I might ſafely refer any diſpaſſionate Reader. But to S. W. it ſeems more medicaments are needfull, the pulſe beats ſo high at this time. And therefore I ſhall more particularly apply my ſelf to his cure. 1. By demanding whether all his expreſſions of Cimmerian and midnight-obſcurity do belong to every part of the Book of Revelation, ſo that there is not in it one period that any mortal man can hope to underſtand the meaning of, without a viſion equal to that which John received in Patmos? or whether his words muſt be mollified with this Interpretation, that to underſtand the entire Book and every part of it, is thus impoſſible without immediate Revelation?

2. Should he pitch upon the former of theſe, common ſenſe would be his judge, and award me damages againſt his Contumelies, there being many parts of that Book as intelligible, as the firſt verſes of St. John's Goſpel. It were too long to enumerate them. And 'tis known to all, that many men that were in their right wits, both ancient and modern, the Romaniſt Alcazar, as well as others of our perſuaſions, have undertaken to interpret the whole Book, i.e. to know the meaning of it, and but one that I ever heard of, who thought fit to pretend to immediate Revelation for it, who alſo ſeems to interpret his meaning in thoſe pretenſions, that he thought dreaming of dreams to be ſeeing of viſions, or deſpair'd to put off ſo wild irrational fancies, as he had fetcht hence, without deriving them from the indiſputable fountain of truth. But ſetting him aſide, I demand, was Andreas Caſarenſis, or Aretas, or Alcazar, or Grotius guilty of the utmoſt folly in attempting to interpret this Book, even all of it? If he ſay they were, I leave him to combate it with their Ghoſts, or with the memory they have left in the world. If he ſay they were not, then hath he condemned himſelf for theſe his extravagant expreſſions, kept up to this higheſt meaning of them.

3. But if he will be content to be interpreted to a more moderate ſenſe, that he onely ſpake of the entire Book, &c. then ſtill we have his leave to think, that ſome paſſages are intelligible; and then, for ought he hath yet attempted to manifeſt, this, which alone I am concerned in at this time, may be of the number; and then, what heed is due to S. W's procemial general harangues of midnight and Cimmerian obſcurities? Nay, that as much as I pretend here to make uſe of, is thus plain, I appeal to the common ſenſe of all Chriſtians. For doth not the great City, the holy Jeruſalem deſcending out of Heaven from God, v. 10. as manifeſtly ſignify the Church, the New Jeruſalem, v. 2. as ἡ ἄνω Ἱερουσαλὴμ, the ſupernal Jeruſalem ſignifies the ſame, Gal. 4. 26? Then is it not conſequent that the 14th verſe is as intelligible, where 'tis ſaid, the wall of the City had XII foundations? Nay, have we not the very guidance S. W. requires, a Revelation as great as that which inſpired thoſe words, to determine the ſenſe of them to the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt? Unleſs there be difficulty with S. W. of interpreting the Lamb to be Chriſt, 'tis moſt certain we are thus provided; for it follows, and in them the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb. Who can now queſtion but theſe twelve Apoſtles were theſe foundations? And then all that remains, is, but the exacting of S. W. 1. So much plain underſtanding, that the wall, and the foundation, on which it was built, are commenſurate. 2. So much Arithmetick as to be able to divide CXLIV into twelve parts, twelve times twelve, and apply that to the Foundations or Apoſtles; and then he knows as much of the Wall as I ſhall deſire of him; for as to the determining the ſenſe of this, whether to power or province, he had his liberty to chuſe which he liked beſt; I know he will not take my judgment, elſe I ſhould recommend to him the notion of power as the more probable, and then what inſuperable difficulty was there in all this, or what violence to any the ſloweſt underſtanding, to diſcern that this menſuration aſſigns an equal proportion to all, and every the Apoſtles?

4. If this will not allay his high diſpleaſure, I then next beſeech him to conſider, what it is to dogmatize from an obſcure Text; Is it not to teach for Doctrine or matter of Faith, that which I have nothing for, but my own Interpretation of an obſcure Text? Thus he appears to underſtand the phraſe; If then, 1. I teach no Article of Faith, at this time, (for though I conceive the Apoſtles power was equal by Chriſt's Donation, yet I believe it not my ſelf, nor impoſe it on others, as an Article of Faith,) and 2. If I have the agreement of other plain places of Scripture for all that now I teach, Chriſt's giving the ſame power to all the Apoſtles, that he promiſed to one particularly; and 3. If S. W. be the man that both makes the Supremacy of Peter a matter of Faith, and infers it from no Scripture, that doth more clearly infer it, than the meaſuring of the Wall infers the equality of all (for though Tu es Petrus be a plainer ſenſe than Rev. XXI. 17. yet it doth not more convincingly infer Peter's Supremacy,) then am I freed, and S. W. fallen under this guilt of dogmatizing.

5. Laſtly, when he ſaith I call my proof an evidence, and cites page and line for it, if the Reader look, he ſhall find it otherwiſe, and that I onely ſay, that 'tis evident that that menſuration aſſigns an equal proportion, &c. and conclude not that this is an evidence, but in a meeker ſtyle, prejudice to the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of any one of them.

6. He next recites at large the objections he had uſed in Sch. Diſar. about the inequality of richneſs in ſome of the ſtones, and the firſt, the Jaſper, repreſenting St. Peter, and then tells us, that in anſwer to th ſe firſt exceptions the Doctour ſays nothing at all, and twice objects to me the breach of my word that I would, would, and had attended him κ.τ.λ.] And yet 'tis visible in my * answer, that I did speak to as much of this, as the question was concerned in, and told him that the quality and lustre of the first of the twelve stones, in that vision, was most proper to signify the lustre of zeal and other gifts, and that if he could find means to assure, 1. That Peter was signified by the Jasper, 2. That the lustre of that exceeded the lustre of all the rest, I should grant his conclusion, viz. of the greater zeal, &c. in Peter, but deemed that still no proof of his Supremacy; dominion being not founded in those graces (but in constitutions and commissions of Christ's) nor always accompanied with them. * P. 74. l. 11.

7. Now to my answer, that the equality and lustre of the first stone is most proper to signify the lustre of zeal, and other gifts, he replies, that I afford no reason to oppose his contrary exceptions.] To this I answer, 1. That in S. W's methods and rules for controversie, I might be allowed to have learnt, that 'tis sufficient for an Answerer (such then I was, when I answered his argument) to deny, or distinguish, and give no reason for either of them; and therefore am not to be accused by him, who by imposing these rules, is obliged to stand to them. 2. I may be allowed sometimes to think reasons superfluous, when, 1. Common sense receives what is said, to which I appeal, whether radiancy or lustre of a pretious stone, be not more proper to signify, in a man, gifts, Endowments, such as zeal, &c. than power and authority. 2. When the objections against it are not backt with reasons of any weight. Thus also it is here, for his onely argument to prove St. Peter from hence to be Christ's Vicar, was, because the same stone, the Jasper, was it, whose lustre shined in our Saviour, Apoc. IV. 3. and also the Church, Ch. XXI. 11. But to this the answer was obvious, 1. That in both these, Christ in his humanity, and the Church of Christ, the lustre might signify that of Divine Graces without relating to that of Authority, and then that gained him nothing. 2. A circumstance in the former, prejudiced his pretensions, viz. that Christ as he was like a Jasper, so he was like a Sardine stone also, Apoc. IV. 3. Which λίθῳ σαρδίνῳ unless it differ from σαρδίῳ, will be found the Emblem of some other of the twelve, Revel. XXI. 20. Who consequently, if there were force in that, must but be Christ's Vicegerent also, as well as St. Peter, though 'twere, to his hearts desire, granted, that he is represented by the Jasper. So likewise Ch. XXI. 11. the Church that is represented by a Jasper, is at the same time resembled to Crystal also.

8. That what I now say, is arguing from mystical places, and dogmatizing, perhaps he may now again affirm. But 1. I do not take answering to be arguing; and 2. I onely obey his commands, to attend his motions, and I profess to infer nothing from hence, but pay respect to his discourses, be they but such as these. 3. That S. W. who applied himself to these succours, and so called them in, of his own accord, without my so much as naming them, hath not been able in the least-wise to serve himself of them; and that, if it be of no other use, may be of this, that my reasons are as efficacious against his exceptions as they need to be, till his exceptions are more weighty.

9. And this was it that made me propose to him those two Conditions, His proving 1. That the Jasper denoted Peter; and 2. that it exceeded all the rest in lustre; on which I was content to grant, that Peter had the richer lustre of some graces, rather than contend with him on such uncertainties, that had also so weak an influence on our present Question.

10. This one would have thought, might have composed, and ended such a debate betwixt us; But he resolves otherwise, he will, he saith, make his advantages of it. And 1. from the Conclusion, the lustre of Graces, he doubts not to infer the advantage of Authority, by my position that made the coming of the holy Ghost actually give authority to the Apostles, when, saith he, the holy Ghost can be no otherwise in their hearts than by his gift. Then for the Conditions, the first he will infer from my granting Peter the priority of Order, the latter from the lustre of the Jasper shining in Christ, and the Church, and so used to represent persons of higher dignity and authority: To these I answer, 1. That I may without any detriment of mine, safely yield him to have evinced the first condition; I have indeed acknowledged Peter the priority of Order, and therefore as I did not, so neither do I resist, or offer any exception against it; Onely not knowing that I was so good an Authour, as that S. W. could assure himself of any Truth upon my asserting somewhat that might infer it, he may pardon me, if I mentioned to him the finding means of assuring himself of it.

11. As for his second condition, I have already intimated to him my reasons, why his proofs convince me not of it, viz. because as Christ is represented by the Jasper, so he is also by the Sardine stone in the same place, Rev. IV. 3. and so the Church by Crystal also, Ch. XXI. 11. and then by his argument, the Sardine stone and the Crystal must represent Supreme Authority also, and the pretence for any one, must destroy or supersede it for the other, and unless each of these can exceed one another in lustre, the conclusion S. W. wants, cannot be drawn thence. 3. Then for the proof of the higher Authority following the higher Graces, it is of no force; the Authority being finally instated on the Apostles, not by the inexistence of the holy Ghost in their hearts, but by his visible descending on them, and marking them out (by the fiery tongues sitting on each of them) to that Office Apostolical, and this again by virtue of Christ's Commission given in these words, Receive the holy Ghost, as hath formerly been shewed.

12. After all this, he thinks fit again to return to the mensuration of the Wall, and espies through a crevise some gleam of advantage to him, which he cannot conclude before he lay hold on, that forsooth, I my self know not whether this Argument make for me or against me, for I infer, that it assigns an equal proportion, whether of power or province to all and every of the Apostles, so that I doubt to which it relates, and then, saith he, what doth the equality of their particular Province prejudice him? and so I having left it between two, he will take his liberty to assent to neither, and think that it relates to the different disposition of souls, and that the heavenly Jerusalem shall be made up of such, some resembling the spirit, &c. of St. Peter, others of St. John, of St. Paul, &c.] To this also I answer,

1. That from my leaving the mensuration indifferent to power and province, he may not infer my not knowing whether it be for me or against me: 'Tis visible it cannot be against me, whichsoever it be of these two; for how can equality of all, whether in power or province, infer Supremacy of power, and Universality of Province in one, (which is the least that the Universal Pastourship is content with.)

2. As, if the power be the thing meant, it is clearly on my side; so if the Province were pitcht on, that must include power; and that is the reason why I left it indifferent (as to my interests it was) whether were meant of them. For certainly Province and Power are Relatives, the power extends as far as the Province, and the Province as far as the power; If we ſpeak of Particular Provinces, thoſe relate to particular preſidencies, if of the whole World, as one Univerſal Province, that is anſwerable to Univerſal Paſtourſhip. So that unleſs the ſame perſon be doubly provided with a particular and Univerſal Province, S. W. gains nothing; and if ſo, then ſure the Wall is not equally meaſured among twelve in reſpect of Province; for how can a part and the whole be counted equal?

3. That the menſuration of the wall of the City, and diviſion into twelve equal parts, and the name of an Apoſtle ſet upon each of them, ſhould be the reſembling the Spirit, i.e. the particular manner of knowledge and affection of St. Peter, John, Paul, &c. that the heavenly Jeruſalem ſhall be made up of ſuch, may paſs for a compound rarity of S. W's extracting; when

1. Saint Paul, whom he names for one, was certainly none of the twelve.

2. That which he calls the heavenly Jeruſalem, and ſeems by the [ſhall be] to interpret of the yet future ſtate in Heaven, is in that place the holy Jeruſalem, deſcending out of Heaven from God, and ſo unqueſtionably the Church here below.

3. The menſuration and equal parts of the wall, is a very different thing from the building of the wall of Jaſper, &c. i.e. the ſeveral illuſtrious radiances in it, the latter of which having propriety to expreſs the ſeveral ſpirits, manner of knowledge or affection in the Apoſtles, can with no tolerable Analogy, by any but S. W's meaſures, be applied to the former.

13. What remains to the end of this Section, is a recapitulating the heads of matter, and ſo making an Inventory of his Victories; and if he have now loſt again all the ground, that he had moſt triumphantly ſtalked over, he may ſit down, and on the ſame fingers and toes recount his defeats, if he pleaſe: If not, I am ſo much better pleaſed in concluding, than protracting theſe debates, that I ſhall not imitate him, or laviſh one minute to doe it for him; When he awakes, he will ſee what ſolid ſatisfaction it will yield, to have onely dreamt of Conqueſts.

SECT. VIII.

Anſwer to his concluding Section. How far S. W. hath proceeded. His chief reaſon of proceeding no farther, fallacious. His tenderneſs. His Vindication from falſifications. The Baſilica. Ὄνομα, πρᾶ. The Canon of Chalcedon, and Balſamon's Scholion. His Charge of falſification retorted on me, How cauſeleſly. Locum Apoſtolicæ ſedis. Difference between τίμην ἔχειν, and πρεσβεῖον, &c. The Concluſion.

1. HIS whole Reply being at length paſt through, there remains yet his concluding Section. And the firſt part of it is the rendring of nine (and omitting of two more) reaſons, why he proceeded no farther in his task. To his reaſons of this choice, I ſhall reply nothing, having ſo little to object to the choice it ſelf, that if I had been to make it for him, either as his friend or enemy, he ſhould have ſpared much of the pains he hath already taken.

2. How far indeed he hath proceeded, ſince he thinks fit to reflect upon it, it is not amiſs to advertiſe the Reader. When the Catholick Gentleman, and afterward the Diſarmer had undertaken, one briefly, the other more largely to refute the Tr. of Sch. I applied to the firſt a Reply, to the ſecond an Anſwer, omitting not to vindicate (that I know of) one paſſage in the Tract which either of them had excepted againſt. (He now pretends that I neglected almoſt all his Ninth Section, and all his Tenth of the ſecond part of Sch. Diſar. But the account of this is viſible; Anſw. to Sch. Diſar. p. 221, &c. To which I refer the Reader.) My Reply conſiſted of 22 Sheets, My Anſwer of 38. His Schiſm Diſpatcht he intitles a Rejoinder to the Replies of D. H. &c. and profeſſes to undertake both Reply and Anſwer, ſpends near 500 pages upon them, takes to task what he thinks fit in either of them, and omits what he pleaſes, as he paſſes, and yet advances no farther than to a fourth part of my Anſwer (the firſt 74 Pages) and to 73 of the Reply. For this the onely reaſon he renders, wherein I am concerned, I deſire the Reader will judge of, and of his ſincerity by it; It is taken from mine own words thus;

3. After I had in the Book of Sch. finiſht the Diſcourſe againſt St. Peter's Supremacy (the part to which alone he hath replied) I add, 'tis very unneceſſary to proceed to the other parts, &c. From whence he concludes, that I have completed his juſt excuſe, and confeſs it needleſs he ſhould proceed, having vindicated their Tenet in that which I call the onely neceſſary; The Antecedent he deduces from many ſpeeches of mine; and I confeſs them all; but can by no means allow his inference from them, any more than that I am he, or that all that is affirmable of me, is equally competible to him alſo. Should I ſay that I were a Member of the Church of England, and ſay it an hundred times over, could he infer it thence to be my Confeſſion, that he is a Member of the Church of England alſo? If he could not, no more can he infer, that needleſs to him, becauſe it was ſo to me, from my Confeſſion.

4. The Romaniſts pretenſion for the Papacy is founded in two things, either of which failing, they are neceſſarily nonſuited and defeated. 1. The Supremacy of St. Peter over all the Apoſtles by donation of Chriſt. 2. The Biſhop of Rome his ſucceeding St. Peter in this privilege. 'Tis not one, but both of theſe, on which his intereſts depend, and the former without the latter, avail him nothing; for ſuppoſing St. Peter's perſon inveſted in the Univerſal Paſtourſhip, and the Biſhop of Jeruſalem or Antioch, or Alexandria to ſucceed him in it; What hath Rome acquired by the firſt ſuppoſition? From hence it inevitably follows, that he is obliged to make good both againſt us, and that it ſerves our turn to have refuted the former, for having done ſo, there is no place of pretence for the latter.

5. If this were yet ſo obſcure, that he could want an inſtance to illuminate him, I might give him a thouſand Parallels, in every of which it would be moſt evident; The Catholick againſt the Arian is bound to make good, both that Chriſt is God, and that he is equal with his Father, and if he ſhould fail in the firſt of theſe, the Arians buſineſs were done, without proceeding to the ſecond; but unleſs he perfect his proofs to the ſecond alſo, he hath not completed his undertaking againſt the Arian.

6. The truth is, S. W's inference is ſo groſly falſe, that it could ſcarce have been more ſo, had he inferred one branch of a contradiction from another, concluded himſelf Emperour of the world, becauſe he was he was not so. For wh[illegible]ld it be needless for me to proceed, after my refuting the first, to the second point or branch of his pretension, but because there were two parts of it, one depending upon the other, both which he was obliged to make good, and unless he did so, if he failed in either, his cause was lost? And if so, how hath he performed all that is incumbent on him, when he hath not pretended to proceed any farther, than the first part of it? Can any thing be more manifest? Yet to deceive the Reader, he * tells him, that I call this of St. Peter's Supremacy their onely Ground. But he that shall consult my words, Tr. of Sch. p. 92. l. 18. shall find them mis-represented; They are these; As this of St. Peter's personal power and eminence is the Principal, so it is in effect the onely Ground of the Romanists' pretensions, this other of derivative power in the Successour, being like water that flows from a spring, apt to ascend no higher than the fountain stood;] Where what is but the principal, and in effect the onely ground, is not yet the onely (for then how could I name [the other] in the next words) but that on which the other so wholly depended, that if the former were not evinced, there could be no place of attempt for the second; which being evidently my sense, is wholly lost by his mutilating my words; another Essay of his fidelity. * P. 457. l. 28.

7. This being a proof of his, on which his cause so mainly depends, and having now upon examination been convinced to be so strangely peccant, the Reader is to consider not onely how fallacious a concluder S. W. is, giving this instance at his last gasp, in his concluding Section, but how far he were from having prevailed any thing, had he solidly gone thorough, and successfully evinced all that he hath already attempted against so small a part of my Reply and Answer, when yet it hath (I must be allowed to believe, till I am shewed the contrary,) by this time been manifested, that in every attempt he hath made, he hath miscarried constantly.

8. Having given his Reasons for his proceeding no farther in his Rejoinder,

1. This he calls his not vouchsafing me a longer Reply: And

2. He saith, In doing it, he spares the Doctour's credit: And is not this a most superlatively obliging person? What he hath written must go for a vouchsafement, and what he hath not written, is to spare me. The heaping on me innumerable calumnies and contumelies, nearer the number of lines, than Pages of his Book, is a condescention and donative, and vouchsafement to me; I confess it in a sense he thought not of, as the πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, every evil word injuriously spoken is an ingredient in a Christians μαχαιρισμὸς, and as such, matter of exceeding gladness; but this, God's, not S. W.'s vouchsafement. And so for his sparing my credit, who can consider the premisses, and withall consider, that after this, in the few Pages now remaining, all the mire in the street is gathered up by this well-natur'd Scavinger to be cast upon me, especially p. 463. and 465. and (that his Clemency may not determine with his Book) that after the writing of the concluding Section, the Index was collected (and that made up of little else but such acts of superabundant mercy, sparings and vouchsafements) who, I say can make all these reflexions, and yet doubt of the truth of S. W.'s affirmations?

9. Well, but though he spares me his adversary, he must not neglect his friend, and therefore his next care is to vindicate himself from my senseless aspersions (which if indeed they were senseless, might as well be allowed to need no answer, as three of four parts of my Book) adding that he can in nothing more discredit and disgrace me, than in rehearsing and clearing what I object in this kind. This then he is resolved to doe (and yet within three lines, this was the man that spared the Dr's Credit.) And I shall accompany him to this also.

10. And 1. the Reader is obliged to discern him an ingenuous Adversary, and so that it was the power of truth, not sleight of tricks, which thus baffled the Doctour, because the worst I can say against him is unconsiderable. This he proves, because the greatest vices of a writer are falsifications, and I object to him faults of this sort onely in two places, as far as he observes.] And to this I answer, that the proof of his ingenuity, is of the same force that his arguings all along have been, and that it had been much more efficacious, according to another custome of his, to have supposed it unquestioned, or humbly begged it, than thus unsufficiently to infer it. 1. The utmost he pretends to, is but to conclude an Universal from one particular, an entire ingenuity from one sort of innocence onely. And that 2. Such as he had least temptation to offend against falsifying of Testimonies being hardly competible to him that produceth so very few, as S. W.'s place of answerer, and profest aversion to wordish Testimonies concludes him to have done; so that it must be numbred amongst his special excellencies, that he can work without tools, if in these circumstances he can make shift to falsify. 3. To suppose me baffled, before he hath seen my Returns, and to tell the Candid Reader that he will judge on his side, that 'tis truth, not tricks hath baffled me, is another fallacy of the same mode, a double begging the Question, and supposing without proof, and before trial, 1. That I am baffled, 2. That none but truth was guilty of it. Till he can speak more concludingly for himself, I shall not need to collect any other Inventory of his sleights, than that one of his Unconcluding probations, with which he constantly satisfies himself, and these are so manifest also, that I shall not trouble my self to engross them.

11. In the survey of his falsifications, he begins with observing the onely touch-stone and reason of falsifying, that of gaining or endeavouring to gain advantage by the mistake. And herein I willingly concur with him, deeming it unreasonable to charge that as falsification, which hath no appearance of being voluntary, and allowing no certain κριτήριον of voluntariness, but the endeavour to gain by the deceit. By this test as I am content to be judged my self, so I shall now deal with S. W. in this matter.

12. The first he cites is from * these words of mine. [He is come to that meanness of changing my words, that he may get some advantage of carping at them, which otherwise he must miss of; I said that in the Βασιλικὰ the whole third book is made up of Justinian's, i.e. of the Emperour's Constitutions de Episcopis Clericis & Sacris.— And he will reade this that Justinian's third book is made up of Constitutions de Episcopis Clericis & Laicis— and then answer, that all the Laws found there, must not be necessarily Justinian's.] Here I mentioned two changes, 1. Justinian's third book, for the third Book in the Βασιλικὰ, 2. Laicis for Sacris. By the latter I pretend not, that he could probably gain any advantage, and therefore though, in conjunction with the other, I thought fit to mention it, (as that which the Printer could not be guilty of, because he had englished it Laymen, instead of Sacred offices) yet the former being such as yielded him advantage, and wherein his whole answer was founded, as far as it had any semblance of force, how can he ever be excused by his own measures? * Answ. to Sch. Disar. p. 201.

13. I

13. I had mentioned the Laws of Emperours, made in Eccleſiaſtical matters, and cited the Βασιλικὰ for ſuch; he anſwers, that all the Laws found there (the relative [there] referring to Juſtinian's third Book, in his way of ſetting it) muſt not neceſſarily be Juſtinian's, ſince the keepers of Laws uſe not onely to put in their Law-books thoſe Conſtitutions themſelves made, but alſo thoſe they are to ſee obſerved, among which are the Laws and Canons of the Church made before by Councils, and other Eccleſiaſtical powers.] And how could he ever have given this anſwer or received advantage by it, had he not changed my words, and turned the third Book of the Βασιλικὰ into Juſtinian's third Book? His anſwer proceeds of Emperours, being keepers as well as makers of Laws, and ſo obliged to ſee the Laws made by others, obſerved. And were it not for his ſubtile change, he could not have ſuggeſted this, or had any appearance of an anſwer by ſuggeſting it. To my citation from the third of the Baſilica, this could not poſſibly be accommodated; for 1. The Baſilica is not Juſtinian's Law-book, but a Synopſis of XL books Univerſi Juris Romani, ſet out with Scholia LXXX years ſince by Joh. Leunclavius; and ſo his foundation of anſwer is ſunk. 2. Though the Laws in the third Book of the Baſilica, be Juſtinian's Laws, yet they are not Juſtinian's third Book, any more than the firſt or ſecond, or all the LX Books are Juſtinian's LX Books; is there any Book to be heard of in the world, which can own that title he beſtows on this, Juſtinian's third Book? 3. The Laws that are in the third Book of the Baſilica abbreviated from Juſtinian, are from his Novells: In them there are many Conſtitutions of Eccleſiaſtical affairs made perſonally by Juſtinian, as appears by prefixing of his name, and the perſons to whom they were written; and of ſuch my Argument proceeded. And ſo this is point-blank contrary to all the force of his anſwer, for what is perſonally made by him, is not inſerted by him, as a keeper of the Laws, as one obliged to ſee others. Laws obſerved, but as a Legiſlatour, i. e. Emperour, acting by his own power intruſted to him by God. And would it not amaze any man, that were not familiarly acquainted with S. W's Dialect, to ſee him deſpiſe this * anſwer of mine, and ſay I leave untoucht what he objects, and that all this might be done whether the Conſtitutions had been originally his own or no.] Is not the one thing that he objects, this, that keepers of Laws uſe not onely to put into their Law-books thoſe Conſtitutions themſelves made, but Laws made by others? And is not the force of his anſwer comprehended in this, that though the Laws were found in Juſtinian, they muſt not neceſſarily be Juſtinian's? And might all this be, whether they had been originally his or no? Might they be originally his (as I proved unavoidably that many of them were) and yet poſſibly be none of his? If this be the choſen inſtance, how weak the Dr. is, in the following part of his Book, and ſo an ingredient in S. W's Apology for not following him, he could not well have ſaid more on his Enemy's ſide, and therefore may excuſe this alſo by the no advantage he hath reaped (I cannot ſay, attempted to reape) by it.

* See Sch. Diſp. p. 460. l. 23.

14. For the darkening what is thus clear, his principal art is, to begin with, and ſet down by it ſelf the miſtaking of Laicis for Sacris, and to call that his great falſification (when I gave it no part of that title) and to tender his proofs, that he neither made nor ſought any advantage by this, and then at leaſure to deſcend to the other, and onely to recite it and ask where is the difference? Anſwering himſelf, onely here, that Juſtinian writ theſe Laws, but another collected them; and then I am to be pitied with, alas poor man! and the Reader aſſured, that I do not pretend that this Chimera of falſification hath any influence at all on his cauſe or anſwer. And ſo he gallops off like another Timotheus with his πᾶν ἐνδικοῦσι, all good fortune and victory in his net, no piece of ill luck but one in all this, that his time is loſt in confuting ſo weak an Adverſary] But ſetting aſide his Contumelies, the reſt is quickly anſwered; 1. That the difference and change is ſo groſs, that none that knew any thing of ſuch affairs could be guilty of it excuſably; and that if he knew them not, he ſhould not ſo demurely have ſpoken to them. 2. That the difference was ſuch as had a real influence on his anſwer, and his anſwer no leaſt appearance of force without it, as I have now more largely ſhewed. 3. That I did, what he ſaith I did not, pretend, and more than pretend, that his change (I called it not by his other title) had an influence upon his anſwer. This I did † when I told him that he changed my words, that he might get ſome advantage of carping at them, which otherwiſe he muſt miſs of; What I meant by carping, I preſently expreſt by his changing my words, and then anſwering that all the Laws found there muſt not neceſſarily be Juſtinian's. This I took, and ſhewed to be a Carping or Cavilling Anſwer, founded onely in this change of his; and * afterward again I told him, that the Anſwer applied to Juſtinian's third Book, could not poſſibly be accommodated to the matter in hand, and gave him my proofs of it. Which is ſomewhat more than bare pretending that his change had ſome influence on his Anſwer. And ſo now his preſent Anſwer yields no leaſt excuſe for the change.

† Anſw. p. 201. lin. 18.

* P. 202. l. 2.

15. The third and fourth falſification, which he ſaith I have charged him with, are together in the ſame matter of the Twelfth Canon of Chalcedon, and I have laid down the matter ſo largely in the anſwer to Schiſ. Diſarmed, for the diſcovering of a ſpecial ſubtilty of his, as likely to impoſe on the incautious Reader, as any in that Book, that I choſe to refer the Reader to review it there, rather than to tranſcribe ſo long a Diſcourſe. But the former of theſe having brought ſo ſharp a fit of S. W's rage upon me, that he tells me plainly I have committed a piece of moſt open knavery, and in his Index ſtyled it my falſifying my Adverſary's manner of expreſſion, wilfully to accuſe him of a falſification, I muſt it ſeems change my offenſive arms into defenſive, and clear my ſelf of this higheſt accuſation.

Cap. V. ſect. 5. p. 164. &c.

16. The matter lies thus; I had cited theſe words from that Canon, Πόλεις διὰ γραμμάτων βασιλικῶν τὸ τῆς Μητροπόλεως ὀνόματι τιμηθεῖσαι, and rendred them, Cities honoured by Letters Patents from the Kings or Emperours with the name and dignity of Metropolis. To this rendring he † replies in theſe words, The Council ſaith onely that thoſe Cities were honoured with τὸ ὄνομα, the name alone, which the Dr. fluent in his Expreſſions Engliſhes the name and dignity, the latter whereof they wanted, that which ſhould dignify them in a degree of a Metropolitan, being abſolutely interdicted them in this very Canon, Μόνης ἀπολαυέτωσαν τῆς τιμῆς, Let them enjoy onely the honour. To this I * anſwered, by taking notice of his meaning in the mention of my fluency of Expreſſion, then by giving my reaſons, why I rendred ὀνόματι by name and dignity (in the ſame manner as I did γράμματα βασιλικὰ, Letters Patents from the Kings or Emperours, the reddition equally paraphraſtical in both, ſuch as I knew I could juſtify to be the ſenſe, though the literal exactneſs did not neceſſarily, extend to it) 1. Becauſe in the ſame Canon, τιμὴ is uſed of the ſame thing, and that is promiſcuouſly rendred honour and dignity; 2. Becauſe it is in the very words τιμηθεῖσα τῷ ὀνόματι, honoured by the name, and the Lawyers tell us that honour is an adminiſtration cum gradu dignitatis, with a degree of dignity (and the like cited from others) which could not be, if name did not carry dignity along with

† Sch. Diſar. p. 145.

* Anſw. p. 166.

with it; 3. Because ὄνομα signifies ordinarily dignity and power, not onely name, and if it did so, then I could not doe amiss to render it by so obvious a Paraphrase as [honoured by the name and dignity] when both the word honour and the word name, which were there expresly used, had connotation of dignity in them. This hitherto was but the defence of my self, I hope a full defence; and then how can he be excused, who styles this rendring both in his Dispatcher and Index, a falsification?

17. But I went yet farther, and reflecting on those words, the Council saith onely that they were honoured with the name alone, (the dignity saith he, being absolutely interdicted them in the present Canon) I said there is no sincerity in this; for 1. The word alone is put in by S. W. 2. 'Tis in the second part of the Canon, not the first, that that interdict is found in these words, Let them enjoy onely the honour, and so 'tis so far from being hence inferred, that they had from the Pragmatick nothing but the name, that 'tis on the contrary clear by the Canon, that before they were thus punisht, they did injoy more than the honour alone, and so more than onely the name. Now to these words his objection is, that this particle alone after [name] I call a falsification, insincerity, and alledge it put in by him, whereas, saith he, 'tis palpable he used it as his own word not the Councils, and so put it in the common Letter, whereas the Dr. changes it from the Roman into the Italick or Translation letter, &c.

18. This is his charge; let the Reader now judge between us. And 1. Where do I call the particle [alone] a falsification? His saying, that the Council saith onely that they were honoured with the name alone I say hath no sincerity in it; and I now ask, how it can have, if the Council do not say at all (for then it doth not say onely) that it was honoured with the name alone? If he had declared his meaning, that the Council mentions no more than ὄνομα name, I should have cleared the ambiguity of that passage, but never have accused him of insincerity. But if that had been it, it had been sufficiently expresst by [the Council onely saith of that they were honoured by the name] without the addition [alone] Of that word therefore I now demand, 1. Is it not put in, or added there by S. W.? 'Tis visible it is; and then I that said it was put in, (not put in to the Council, or as the word of the Council) by S. W. said no more than was exactly truth. 2. Was it put in to signify, or not to signify? If to signify, then let it be printed in what letter it will, Roman or Italick, it must have this influence on the proposition concluded by it, as to make it signify, that the Council saith, and onely saith they were honoured with name alone, as that is opposed to name and dignity, and I have proved from the Council's words, and from the notion both of τιμᾶσθαι and ὄνομα used by the Council, that the Council saith not that either in words, or (which is more) in sense; and then I must still conclude (who can resist it?) that there was no sincerity in his saying, the Council onely said that, which it neither said nor intimated, but, as hath appeared, presumed and supposed the Contrary.

19. All then that he can possible say in his own defence is, that [alone] was meant to signify nothing, i. e. that he talked non-sense, or he knew not what; But neither will that confession secure him; for that which immediately follows, shews this word had its signification, if not Emphasis, for 1. saith he positively, the latter thereof (i. e. the dignity) they wanted, that being absolutely interdicted them, by the present Canon. This is far more than affirming that the Canon saith onely they were honoured with the name; 'tis affirming, that any honour of dignity or more than bare name, was interdicted them by the Canon; and that gives the fullest signification to the word [alone] (over and above the [onely] in the beginning) that the word most Emphatically used is capable of; and in this affirmation of his, as applyed to the first part of the Canon, I do profess to require, and miss his sincerity, it being already shewed, what is in it self most manifest, that their mulct or punishment consisting in this, that they should injoy the τιμὴ μόνη the honour or dignity alone, is an argument, that, before they were thus punished, they had the τιμὴ; honour or dignity, and so not name alone.

20. As for my changing the print of [alone] from the Roman to the Italick, the account is evident; I cited his whole period, and as his words, not mine, I put all together in the Letter, that belongs to a Citation of anothers words, as every where I do, and particularly my adversaries, when I recite them as well as the testimonies of Fathers or Councils. I have no more to account for in this matter, and now let not the candidst, but severest Aristarchus judge on which side the want of sincerity or the guilt of unjust accusing and all the virulent attendants thereof, is to be charged regularly.

21. Proceed we then to his fourth and last falsification, which he will yield to be such another as the former, but having leave to tell his own story partially, he hopes it will not be accounted such. Whether it be or no, others must judge for him. The case lies thus; The Disarmer having first resolved of those Cities honoured by the Royal Letters, &c. That the Council onely saith they were honoured with the name alone, and proved that that which should dignify them was absolutely interdicted them by this very Canon, in these words, let them enjoy onely the honour, proceeds thus, What this honour was, your friend Balsamon tells you, saying, some desired to know what the honour meant, and received answer, that except that this Bishoprick was called a Metropolis, in all other things it was subject to the former Metropolis. To these words of his, particularly to this part of them, his saying that Balsamon tells me what that honour meant, viz. onely to be called a Metropolis] * I did affix this censure. This is another falsification. And whether it were or no, it shall be now tryed. * Answ. p. 167.

22. But 1. He needed not have purged himself, as he † doth, from having put down his Author's words mangledly and corruptly, he knows and confesses this was not laid to his charge, and then 'tis easie to avert a species of crime of which no man accuses him. But I suppose there be more ways than one of falsifying, and the slyer way, that which is least discernible at first sight, though it be not the grossest, as that signifies the most palpable, is yet the most deceitfull, and so dangerous act of falsification. † Sch. Dispat. p. 466.

23. What S. W's was in this place, my Answer had more than intimated; 'tis made up of two branches, the first I was content not to lay weight on, but to gratifie S. W. that, according to his manner, most insists on that which I least insisted on; It shall now a while be examined, whether it be so perfectly innocent as he pretends.

24. He saith of the honour of which before he had spoken, that our friend Balsamon tells us what it was, and then onely sets down, what he saith some received by way of answer to that Question. Is this a due treating of Balsamon, to say, he tells us, that which he doth not tell us? This is the case; Balsamon tells us what some desired to know, and what they heard: This S. W. calls telling us what this honour was; and makes his proofs againſt me, as from the Teſtimony of one of our party, that thus it was. Is every hear-ſay a Truth? Did the Diſciples when they told Chriſt, Some ſay thou art Elias, &c. tell us, that Chriſt was Elias? If not, then how can this be cleared from being a falſification? But ſaith S. W. he put down minutely in Greek and Engliſh thoſe very words as told us by Balſamon.] I anſwer, he is not accuſed for ſetting down words of Balſamon, which were not his, but for ſaying he told us what neither in the words cited from him, nor in any other he hath told us, viz. what the honour mentioned in the beginning of the Canon was. This S. W. ſaid our Friend Balſamon tells us, and 'tis now evident he tells us ſome mens hear-ſay, which is not always the Truth I hope (and that, as ſhall by and by appear, of another matter) and ſo by S. W's favour, he tells us not what that honour was, which he ſaith he tells us. But again ſaith S. W. never pretended that Balſamon told us this as his own opinion.] I anſwer, that I ſaid not he ſo pretended, but reſerved my ſelf within thoſe bounds, wherein I could not miſcarry, kept cloſe to his very words, that he ſaith Balſamon tells us what this honour was. Yet again to comply with S. W. and yield ſome conſideration to this anſwer of his, I demand, Can Balſamon be imagined to tell us what it was, by telling us other mens and not his own opinion? That were to intimate, that other men were in the right, but himſelf in the wrong, and yet that he adhered to his own wrong opinion. This cannot be believed of Balſamon; therefore if I had concluded it S. W's aſſertion, that Balſamon told this as his own opinion (I ſay not onely his own) the Reader ſees who furniſht me with my premiſſes, even he that ſaith, that Balſamon told me what that honour was, not what ſome others heard or ſaid it to be. But again, ſaith S. W. he never conceived it (i. e. this anſwer or hear-ſay) came from perſons of greater authority, i. e. from ſome Council, or ſome of the Council, at leaſt from perſons who perfectly underſtood its meaning.] But if S. W. ſhould now ſay, what here he confeſſes he always conceived, this would but cure one falſification with another; for when all that his Authour ſaith, is, that ſome asked or deſired to know, and received anſwer, with what juſtice could he ſay, or on what motives always conceive, that this was the anſwer of the Council, &c? But I ſhall yield S. W. leave to conceive what he pleaſe (and therefore do not charge this with that fouler crime) whilſt I require the ſame leave to conceive alſo the contrary, or not at all, where I have no better grounds on either ſide to interpoſe my own conceit. Thus much for my firſt branch, which indeed though I mentioned in the way to the other, yet I expreſt my inclination ſo far to paſs it by, as to lay no ſtreſs on it, and had not now reſumed it, had not S. W's diſcourſe more than invited me to it.

25. But the more conſiderable branch is yet behind, that what is ſpoken by Balſamon (and that barely from the opinion of others) of the puniſhment mentioned in the latter part of the Canon, which this Council inflicted on irregular ambitions, he ſets to interpret the former part, and to tell us what that honour was, which was given theſe Cities by the King's Letters. The firſt part of the Canon, of which onely our debate is, ſpake of the honour conferred on ſome Cities by the Kings, and what that honour meant, he ſaith Balſamon tells us, citing words of Balſamon which belong to another matter, and not at all to that for which he brings them. This manifeſtly appears in my * Anſwer, where I ſhew that two diſtant things are ſpoken of in that canon;

* P. 164. &c.

1. The practice of erecting Metropoles, by Regal Conſtitutions.

2. A cenſure of the Council on ſome perſons, who had in an undue manner, even to the cutting one Province into two, acquired this dignity by that means, that they ſhould enjoy the honour alone. Now of this latter, Balſamon tells us what interpretation ſome gave, that the meaning was onely καλεῖσθαι Μητρόπολιν, to be called a Metropolis, and then comes S. W. and to relieve and gain to himſelf advantage, confounds theſe two which are ſo widely diſtinguiſht, interprets one by the other, cites Balſamon's words that are ſpoken of the latter, and ſaith they tell us what this honour, i. e. the honour ſpoken of in the firſt part, was, and ſo quite interverts the meaning, both of the Canon and Scholiaſt, Concludes againſt me, that the Cities thus advanced by the King, wanted the dignity, and were advanced to name onely, when on the contrary the truth is viſible, that if they had been onely honoured with the name by the King, their cenſure which left them that, muſt ſignify nothing. And ſo this is the falſification I charged on him, a down-right falſifying the ſenſe of the Authours before him, making it to conclude no leſs than the contrary to what is really concluded; and the willfulneſs of this, proved by his * own medium, his gaining (more then) the leaſt poſſible advantage by the miſtake, even his whole Concluſion, that the Kings Patents gave them onely a Name without dignity, which at that time he ſtood in need of, both to defend his cauſe, and to prove the fluency (as he was pleaſed to ſtyle it) of my expreſſions.

* Schiſ. Diſ. p. 459. l. 17.

26. This was briefly told him before in my Anſwer, but he will not ſee it, but inſiſts in theſe words, [Let the Council ſay what it pleaſe, or let his conſequence hold well or ill, that is another Queſtion; but, ſaith he, did he omit any word of Balſamon which ſeemed to oppoſe his Tenet? Did he add or change any Tittle? Did he add, or change, or detract the leaſt particle? &c.] I anſwer, he applied that to one thing which belongs to another, and that is a concernant change, he omitted to tell us it was the puniſhment or mulct, that both the Canon and Balſamon ſpoke of, and brought it for the interpreting the honour conferred by the King's Letters Patents, and that was a competent omiſſion, and all this is ſo ſeaſonably in favour to his own tenet, that it could not have ſubſiſted or tolerably ſupported it ſelf without it: And ſo his weight is bound cloſe upon his ſhoulders, and 'tis not all his impatience, or contumely will make it ſit eaſier. And now let him ſit down, and caſt what he hath gained by theſe impertinent reflexions; And thus will it always be, till the guilty review their faults, to forſake and not to defend them, think of making ſatisfaction rather than Apologies.

27. I ſhall not here (nor hereafter) be ſo near imitating S. W. as to gather an Index or Catalogue of his changes of my expreſs words, as well as ſenſe, I am not fond of ſuch repetitions: If I were, it would ſoon appear (what the Reader cannot miſs in their proper places) that S. W. had no cauſe to be ſo nice and modeſt in things of this nature, as to trouble himſelf and his Reader, with ſuch Vindications.

28. But now having thus cleared himſelf, he returns again to his new-faſhioned modes of ſparing me, by affirming he could (were it not for his rich mercy and reſolute good nature) preſent the Reader with a long black ſcroll with egregious and wilfull falſifications from the reſt of my long book, nay he could ſhew a new brood of enormous ones in the Book of Schiſ. which eſcaped his obſervation, when he firſt anſwered it. To all this I ſend him not my defiance, for I doubt not but the ſame arts that have extracted ſo many out of ſo few pages, may if dexterously managed, improve upon his hands, and work unimaginable miracles in this way. That in any other sense but this of proportion with his former performances, he doth not believe himself, I have this Argument to perswade me, because he here talks of sparing me so mercifully. That phrase, or any like it, hath not used in his dialect, to signifie less than the attempts of the utmost malice (this concluding Section hath given us Essays of it) and accordingly here, after the mention of his long Scroll, and new brood, his mercy is exemplified in saying, he could let the Reader see, and again, he could shew him, by which figure he sets down most artificially, the one passage in the book, which he thought, with any pretence could be named by him, and that will not fill a long scroll, or denominate a new brood in the vulgar usage of those phrases. What that one passage is, and how he came to his observation of it, I shall now briefly declare for him.

pages,

29. In the * Tr. of Sch. speaking of the Bishop of Justiniana prima, and bringing many things out of Justinian's Novels or Imperial Constitutions, about the foundation and impowring of that Primate; among the rest I recite this, that he shall have in all that Diocese, Locum Apostolicæ sedis, the place or dignity of an Apostolical seat. How this phrase [an Apostolical] came there, whether by the Errour of the Printer, or mine own haste and inadvertence, it is so long since, and the variation so small, that truely at this distance I cannot tell, but am sure I soon took notice of the mistake, and many years since corrected it with my hand from [an] to [the Apostolical seat] That this is true, and was no effect of this Dispatchers present advertisement, I shall not perswade him, by so contemptible an Authority as that of mine own affirmations, but by referring to my Reply and my Answer both, the last of which was published some years before this Dispatch appeared. In the * Reply resuming that matter, I set down the word more at large out of the Νεαραὶ or Novels in Greek, Ἐν ταῖς αὐταῖς ἀποκειμέναις αὐτῷ ἐπαρχίαις τὸν τόπον ἐπέχειν αὐτὸν τῆς Ἀποστολικῆς Ῥώμης θρόνου, In the Provinces subject to him, he should hold the place of the Apostolical seat of Rome, i.e. to doe all within those Provinces that the Bishop of Rome was wont to doe, before this Primacy was erected, and this by direct consent of Virgilius then Pope, as there it follows, κατὰ τὰ ὁρισθέντα ὑπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου πάπα Βιγιλίου, according to what was defined by the holy Father Virgilius, and then proceeding to expound those words, and prevent all cavil that might arise on occasion of them.

* P. 103.

* P. 96.

30. After this, being not satisfied that I had yet done enough to prevent the mistake of them that sought occasions, I resumed it again in the Answer: And when I had accommodated solutions to the Disarmers exceptions, I then added above what they exacted, a large * Paragraph, beginning thus; In this matter it is possible S. W. may have a little mistaken my meaning, and therefore to cure it in him, or prevent that possibility on others, I assure him I mean by Locum Apostolicæ sedis, the same that he would have me (who yet then not onely did not, but could not except against the former rendring, because he now numbers it among those that then escaped his Observation) the place of the Apostolick, as that signifies the Roman seat; And though the particle [an] in stead of [the] seem to prejudice that sense, yet I never made use of it, but contrarywise in the Reply added the Greek words, which take away all ambiguity, &c. But still this far enough from favouring S. W's pretension, of his being no more but the Pope's substitute, in the shewing of which I there enlarge, to which, and what follows in the Reply, I refer the Reader.

P. 117.

* 12.

31. Thus far I have long since gone to prevent S. W's displeasure in this point, having not so much as a μία νουθεσία first admonition from him or any other, but my self, to engage me to it. Now this Errour, though in effect but of an for the being thus discovered to S. W. he in great mercy and longanimity, and out of the inexhaustible Treasure of his compassion and sparing (no Confessour could have been more meek to his humblest penitent) first multiplies it into a new brood (it hath at least a Wrens Nest in the belly of it) then to bring it in more pompously, talks of another long black Scroll, then by saying what he could doe if he would, charges this upon me with all the advantage of railing Rhetorick that could well be expected from one that was to go out in a Tempest, and leaving me in this pickle, he then becomes intercessour in my behalf, requests the Reader not to be too rigorous in his Censures of me, &c.]

32. What return may he now expect to this his candour? Truely not to imitate him in the least, not so much as to tell him what I might doe by all Laws of God and man, but simply to appeal to his own Conscience, whether I have not both in the Reply and Answer acknowledged the utmost that he himself demands to be the meaning of Apostolicæ sedis, (and then by his own rules of neither seeking nor reaping advantages by the change, if there be any the least, I am absolved from having falsified) having founded my Answer onely in the difference betwixt τὸν ἔχειν, ἐπέχειν, and τὸν τηρεῖν, φυλάττειν, διάπτειν, the latter three onely denoting Vicegerency, Substitution, but not the two former, and this evidenced by Julianus Antecessor, saying, That the Arch-Bishop of Justiniana shall have eadem Jura, the same rights over the Bishops under him, which the Pope of Rome hath over the Bishops under him: and by Justinian's Novell it self, that he shall have summum sacerdotium, summum fastigium, summam dignitatem, the highest Priesthood, Eminency, Dignity, (which is incompetible with a Vice-gerency) and that whatever difference arise in those Provinces, that Arch-Bishop shall finally determine it, without appeal unto, or acknowledging any other but him, and accordingly it was esteemed αὐτοκέφαλον, an head unto it self, independent from all other: What could more secure mine or refute S. W's pretensions?

33. So likewise for the second branch of his charge, my leaving out, saith he, what follows immediately to my prejudice, κατὰ τὰ ὁρισθέντα, &c. according to what was decreed by the holy Pope Vigilius.] He knows, that although in the Tr. of Sch. I had no occasion or necessity of taking it in, yet in the * Reply, the Catholick Gentleman not demanding it, and before the Disarmer appeared, I did spontaneously add it, and shewed that it did not prejudice me: And then again by his own rules (to which I shall therefore add no other Arguments) it is impossible this should be any falsification.

* P. 96.

34. I am now at an end of his Rejoynder, there remains nothing but his Use of Exhortation to the Doctour, that he would confess all the faults which he hath charged on him, (i. e. own all the monstrous births of Africk, to be of his begetting) and sit still, and write no more in defence of himself and his cause; and to this, as a prudent manager, he joyns threats and promises, holds his Index over me, as the Lictor his scourge, and protests a prompt zeal and natural alacrity to honour and serve me: And who would not be wrought on efficaciously by such methods? The ill luck of it is, my Returns to him are finiſht, before I had laid to heart his Exhortation. And all that I can now promiſe him is, that when, as he is by his undertaking obliged, he ſhall have prepared and perfected his Returns to the remaining Chapters of the Reply and Anſwer, and then confirmed his Argument in the firſt Queſtion, againſt all the fruſtrations that this hath now diſcovered to him, if his performance ſhall appear to be manlike and Chriſtian, and in ſtead of the τελα κόπτα κόψω, Calumnies, Contumelies, Cavils, he ſhall once betake himſelf to that which he ſo often talks of, ſatisfying of underſtandings, and not inſnaring the Credulous, or baffling the timorous by noiſes, he ſhall not diſcern himſelf deſpiſed, but receive returns of truth and ſoberneſs, what defiance ſoever he hath hitherto offered them.

Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord.

AIEN

ΑΙΕΝ ΑΛΗΘΕΥΕΙΝ,

OR, A

BRIEF ACCOUNT

OF

One SUGGESTION

OF THE

ROMANIST

Againſt the Diſpatcher Diſpatched.

By HENRY HAMMOND, D. D.

Ἕτοιμοι ἀεὶ πρὸς ἀπολογίαν μετὰ πραΰτητος.

LONDON, 1660.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF One SUGGESTION OF THE ROMANIST.

§. 1. IT is the Stateman's Maxime concerning a falſe Suggeſtion, that if it be believed but four and twenty hours, the value of it is ineſtimable; which though it muſt be allowed to receive a grand abatement, when it is applied to inferiour and leſs conſiderable tranſactions, yet the intereſts of Religion, in the maintenance of truth, are not ſo deſpiſeable, as that he that hath appeared or embarked in them, can ſafely neglect the advantages which evil arts may yield, or furniſh an Adverſary againſt him.

§. 2. Such in reaſon, and in experience, beyond all others is the charge of falſifying, which if it be but ſuggeſted, and believed of any, and much more if a pregnant and viſible proof of it be tendred, there needs no other blaſt, or ſmut, or vermine to lay waſte the whole field, and deprive him of all harveſt of his ſeed and labours.

§. 3. How this is my concernment at this time, the Reader will not ſuddenly divine, till I have entertain'd him with a ſhort relation of that, which I had rather my ſelf proclaim on the houſe-top, than leave others to whiſper it in corners.

§. 4. I was lately advertiſed by a judicious and reverend Friend, that it was particularly urged againſt me, by a Romaniſt, that I had miſtaken, or perverted M. White's words, which I refer to, in the Diſpatcher Diſpatcht, Chap. III. Sect. 4. p.279. where I ſuppoſe him to anſwer (in his Apology for Trad. p. 56.) that the beatifical viſion of the Saints before the day of Judgment was not yet held a matter of Faith, but onely a Theological concluſion; when (ſaid he) the Apologiſt in that very place had expreſly ſaid, that this point is a matter of Faith, grounded on Tradition, and not a Theological concluſion. See p. 253.

§. 5. That I ſhould be guilty if but of ſuch an oſcitancy or miſtake, much more of ſuch a vile perverſion as this, I may be allowed to have been as unwilling my ſelf to believe, as I am obliged to take care that others ſhould not cauſeleſly apprehend it of me. Therefore without delay I turned firſt to mine own words (which as I then could not doubt, ſo now I acknowledge to be faithfully related) then to Maſter White's words, in the page of his Apology, whence I had cited them, and thoſe I found exactly, and to a letter concordant to my tranſcript of them in Diſp. Diſp.

§. 6. For thus I ſtill reade (if I will not at noon-day ſuſpect mine own eyes) in that Apologiſt, p. 56. l. 12. [For, nothing is more clear, than that the validity of Baptiſm by Hereticks was a Tradition, and decided by it: ſo the Beatifical Viſion of the Saints before the day of Judgment, the Spirituality of Angels, are not yet held matters of Faith, but onely Theological concluſions; as likewiſe the Soul's being concreated to the perfecting of the Body.] What can be more manifeſt, than that in this period the Beatifical Viſion of Saints before the day of Judgment is by that Apologiſt ſet down, as one of the two things (to which after a third is ſubjoyn'd) of which it is affirmed in the plural, that they are not yet held matters of Faith, but onely Theological concluſions? which was all to a ſyllable, that I cited from him in that place, with this onely change, that ſpeaking onely of one of theſe, the Beatifical Viſion, &c. I ſet it (as it was neceſſary) in the ſingular [is not yet held a matter of Faith, but onely a Theological concluſion.]

§. 7. That I might be ſure not to have miſtaken my Authour, I carefully conſulted the Errata; but there was none noted, relating to that page: and indeed the whole compoſure of the period was ſuch, that there muſt be a concurrence of very many changes in the compaſs of very few lines (more I believe than the moſt negligent Compoſitour and Correctour have at any time conſpired to be guilty of) to wreſt this Teſtimony from me, or change it into what this Romaniſt had affirmed it to be.

§. 8. Having diſpatcht this account to my Friend, from whom I received the former advertiſement, I had no cauſe of doubt, but that this affair had received its full period, the Romaniſt being obliged to yield to ſuch full uncontrollable evidence, and every man's eyes, to whom the contrary Suggeſtion could be offered, being as well qualified as mine, to ſecure him from being miſled by it. And on theſe grounds of ſafety of ſafety I had no leaſt thought of troubling the Reader with any account, or complaint, which I now ſee is become ſome part of my intereſt, and my duty.

§. 9. For I was ſoon aſſured by my Friend, that the words which I had punctually tranſcribed from my copy of the Apology, were not to be found in that, which he had before him, but quite transformed into the contrary ſenſe, even that for which the Romaniſt had vouch'd them; for thus he found them [For, nothing is more clear, than that the validity of Baptiſm by Hereticks was a Tradition, and decided by it: ſo the Beatifical Viſion of the Saints before the day of Judgment. The Spirituality of Angels is not yet held a matter of Faith, but onely a Theological concluſion.]

§. 10. By this repreſentation I was ſoon forced to confeſs, that the whole ſcene was changed, the firſt part of the words remaining the ſame, but the ſecond (of the Beatifical Viſion of the Saints) which were my onely concernment, wholly transformed, that which before was joined with the Spirituality of Angels, as not yet held matters of Faith, but onely Theological concluſions, being now annext to the validity of Baptiſm by Hereticks, and ſo affirmed to be a Tradition (and that is with him a matter of Faith) and decided by it. And then I had reaſon to acknowledge the candour of that Romaniſt, who proceeding on theſe appearances, had laid no heavier a cenſure on me, than that of either miſtaking, or perverting Mr. White's words.

§. 11. In this new poſture of affairs, firſt it was preſently diſcernible, that the very many changes, which I had foreſeen, had been really made, to bring this about. And as all this was obvious, and credible to be done by a new Edition of the Book, ſo it remained uncertain to me whether mine, or that other ſo contrary to it, were the true and authentick Edition: this therefore was my next care to examine.

§. 12. And herein again I met with an intricacy; for if the Title-pages, and a concurrence of all obvious indications, might be believed, there was all this while but one edition, both copies carrying in their front, A Paris, chez Jean Billain Rue S. Jacques à l'enſign S. Auguſtin 1654. the ſame volume, print, number of pages, beginning and end of every page, &c. This ſoon ſuggeſted that which was the onely clue to extricate me then (and the Reader now) out of this labyrinth. For ſending to the Stationers for another Copy of the Apology, as from one I received a Copy perfectly agreeing with mine, ſo by the help of another I was furniſht with one exactly accordant to what my Monitour from the Romaniſt had repreſented to me, yet not diſcernibly differing from my own in any other, ſave in this one paſſage; and looking more narrowly, firſt the Paper and Ink wherein that leaf was printed (diſcernibly differing from all the reſt of the Book) was apt to inject ſome ſuſpicion: but I ſoon ſaw that I had no need of this, or other obſcurer intimation, it being groſly viſible, that in this place a leaf had been cut out, and a new one paſted in. And what Gordian knot might not have been untied by the like inſtrument?

§. 13. When this change was thought fit to be made, I did, and ſtill want augury to divine; onely this is apparent, that it was a work which ſecond thoughts ſuggeſted, after the Book was publiſhed, elſe my Copy which came regularly to me from the Worceſter Stationer, (in the year, if my memory fail me not, 1655.) and another now ſent me from another Stationer (which aſſures me there be many more) muſt have had their parts in the change.

§. 14. Having given the Reader a brief and ſingle view of this matter, I abſtain from any farther obſervation, or reflexion on it, than what a will amount to. But that is alſo unneceſſary, my whole deſign being completed in this, that it is now manifeſt to the moſt impersuaſible of their diſciples, that dare reade what is written againſt their Maſters, (which I perceive few are permitted to do) that I neither miſtook, nor perverted the Apologiſt's ſenſe or words, thoſe, I mean, which I read in his Book, from which alone I could be imagined to receive cognizance of them, not being able to forecaſt, that what I had thus really tranſcribed from him, would be ſo ſoon ſnatcht from me again, or that what was to me ſo viſible, ſhould vaniſh, and become inviſible to other men.

Quo teneam vultus mutantem——?

§. 15. This indeed is an unexpected proof of what S. W. had told me, concerning the Wits (enormous) power to transform Teſtimonies; which yet ſhall not diſcourage me from dealing in that ware, (being firmly reſolved never to make uſe of my duller faculties, to work ſuch Metamorphoſes) nor yet from diverting ſometimes into ſuch pleaſant fields, adorned with ſo great varieties, as that Apologiſt frequently affords the world, hoping, that I ſhall not again meet with ſuch miſadventures as theſe, or any greater interruptions in reading him, than what a competent attention, and a table of Errata ſhall enable me to overcome.

§. 16. This account I conceived would more pardonably, becauſe more moderately, divert the Reader at this time, than if I ſhould ſtay till it were ſolemnly and articulately call'd for, and moreover deliver S. W. from ſome temptation, himſelf to think, or to perſuade others, that he had ſprang ſome real game to invite his chaſes, ſome guilt to ſupport his contumelies, and perhaps prevail with ſome of their moſt credulous followers, to think it equitable to ſubject the Suggeſtions they meet with, to ſome other ways of examination and trial, than the bare authority or confidence of the Suggeſters.

THE END.

A VINDICATION OF THE DISSERTATIONS CONCERNING EPISCOPACY,

From the ANSWERS, or EXCEPTIONS offered againſt them by the London Miniſters, in their Jus Divinum Miniſterii Evangelici.

By H. HAMMOND, D.D.

TO THE READER.

IN Eraſmus's diſtribution of his own writings into Tomes, the Eighth we find thus inſcribed by him, Octavum occupent Apologiæ. Me miſerum. Et hæ juſtum volumen efficient. It was his great infelicity, that the Apologies and Anſwers to exceptions and calumnies, which he was conſtrained to write, made up an intire large Volume in Folio: Now though I have that pleaſure in the temper of that perſon, which gives me ſecurity, by the Romaniſt Proverb, never to be deemed one of their good Catholicks, and ſo may probably partake of ſome part of his fate, yet it were great inſolence in me, who have not troubled the World with a tenth proportion to that wherewith he hath favoured it, to expect the Tithe of that conſideration, which is required to make one capable of that degree of infelicity, which lay a full load on him; Nevertheleſs theſe few laſt months have given me a taſte and δεῖξις what I am to expect. For beſides the reproaches of one learned Gentleman (to which, being barely ſuch, I have no one word to retribute, but that of the εὐλογεῖν which Chriſt directs me to) I have farther met with ſome variety; many exceptions, though little of contumely from theſe Aſſemblers: More, and in a very diſtant Character from a large Preface of Animadverſions on the Diſſertations lately ſent me from Oxford; others alſo there are which I have not yet had leiſure to weigh, but ſoon purpoſe and hope to do it; and if either I diſcern my ſelf, or find it the opinion of others, that what is already ſaid in the Tracts, which they oppoſe, be not ſufficient to prevent, or remove the ſcruples propoſed by them, I ſhall willingly dedicate ſome time of vacancy to that imployment. At the preſent, the Exceptions of the London Miniſters have challenged the precedence, and here are offered to conſideration. And becauſe the Preface from Oxford falls on the ſame ſort of matter, Epiſcopacy and Ignatius's Epiſtles, as they are defended in the Diſſertations, I purpoſe, God willing, that an Anſwer to that ſhall now follow, as ſoon as the Printer can diſpatch it. And that is all that I had to ſay to the Reader by way of Preface.

The INTRODUCTION.

Of the occaſion of this Work, The ſtate of the Controverſie, The Heads of the Prelatiſts Plea, from Scripture and Antiquity, with ſome Obſervations aſſiſtant to them. The conſiderable concernments of the Queſtion.

Numb. 1. [1651.] BEING advertiſed from many hands, that the Book called Jus Divinum Miniſterii Evangelici, which is lately publiſhed by ſome, who intitle themſelves the Provincial Aſſembly of London, hath undertaken to conſider and confute many paſſages of the Diſſertations, three years ſince publiſhed in Latine, in defence of Epiſcopacy, againſt Dr Blondell and others, I have thought my ſelf obliged to examine, whether there be any thing objected by them in relation to thoſe Diſſertations, which may reaſonably move me to retract what was there either with diffidence propoſed, or more confidently aſſerted by me.

2. And having diligently ſurveyed the whole Book, that I might omit no paſſage, wherein my intereſts might be in the leaſt concerned, and being truly able to affirm from that view, that it hath yielded me no one ſyllable of uſeful Exhortation, no motive to retract any period, or alter any expreſſion in thoſe Diſſertations (but as far, as I do perſwade my ſelf that this Provincial Synod contains in it Men of judgment and abilities to maintain the truth and convince gain-ſayers, ſo far I am forced to aſſume, that what I have written is teſtified to be Truth, and by that priviledge competently ſecured againſt all oppoſers) I might herein reaſonably acquieſce, without farther importuning the Reader or my ſelf with impertinent vindications, only truſting and adventuring the whole matter to the judgment of each intelligent Reader, who is obliged by all Rules of Juſtice to compare either by his Memory, or by his Eye, thoſe paſſages in this Book, and the Chapters in the Diſſertations to which they are confronted.

3. But I am again told that many, who have read and are moved by the Arguments and Anſwers of this Book, and the Authority of a Provincial Synod, are yet diſabled to be ſo juſt as to examine them by comparing them with the Latine Diſſertations, and that we are fallen upon thoſe times, wherein whatſoever is not anſwered, is cried up as unanſwerable; (an humour, of which, if I might be permitted to receive the fruits, I ſhould have no temptation to complain, there being ſo much a greater part of thoſe Diſſertations, which was never attempted to be anſwered) I continue ſtill under ſome ſeeming obligation to give an exact account of the whole matter as it lies in conteſt between this Provincial Synod and thoſe Diſſertations, and I ſhall haſten to do it, when I have firſt by way of neceſſary Introduction premiſed theſe two things.

4. Firſt, The ſtate of the Controverſie, as it generally lies between us, which is this; whether the Apoſtles of Chriſt, when they planted Churches in each City, left them in the hands of many to be governed by the Common Council of thoſe many, erecting an equality or parity of ſeveral Rulers in every City, to whom all others were ſubjected, and they to none: or whether they placed the ſuperior power and Authority in ſome one, and ſubjected all others to him. Other conſequent differences there are ariſing from hence, (and thoſe of ſuch weight and concernment to thoſe with whom I now diſpute, in caſe the Truth be not on their ſides, as will make this return to their Objections, no leſs than a duty of Charity, as to Brethren, if by the Grace of God they ſhall judge it reaſonable to make that uſe of it) but this is the one Baſis of all, whether the Apoſtles planted parity or imparity in the Church, many equal Governours in one City, or but one in each; The former is the Preſbyterians intereſt to defend, the latter the Prelatiſts; And ſo the Controverſie ſtands between them to be debated and evinced by ſuch evidences as a matter of Fact is capable of, (the Right being by both ſides acknowledged to follow that Fact) i. e. by the Teſtimonies of thoſe who are fit to be credited in this matter.

5. Secondly, The brief heads of the Plea, by which I have undertaken to maintain the Prelatiſts aſſertion: 1. By Scripture: 2. By the Records of the firſt times, the Writings of thoſe who were neareſt the Apoſtles, and either affirm what was done by the Apoſtles, or how it ſtood practiſed in the Churches, all the World over, which were planted by them. As for the third way of arguing from the univerſal conſent and practice of all Churches for about fourteen hundred years together, i. e. from about the year 140. till the Reformation, this I do not inſiſt on, as I might with all evidence, becauſe it is known and confeſt by the Adverſaries; and all that is by them pretended, is, that parity and equality being preſcribed and practiſed by the Apoſtles, ſoon after their death, and quite contrary to their plat-form, Prelacy was introduced into all Churches; It being their deſire and demand now (a little different from what Mr Calvin at firſt propoſed to the Churches of Helvetia) that all may be reformed and reduced to the ſtate wherein the Apoſtles left it.

6. In the managing the proofs propoſed by me, I have uſed this method, which ſeemed to me moſt convincing: 1. To inſiſt on ſome few Teſtimonies under each head, which are ſufficient to conclude the matter on the Prelatiſts ſide; and then to propoſe ſome obſervations, which may accord all other places both of Scripture and antient Writers, with thoſe Teſtimonies and that concluſion.

7. The ſpecial proofs of Scripture are taken, Firſt, from the power derived (as from God the Father, to Chriſt, ſo) from Chriſt to the Apoſtles; not as to a Common Council of ſocial Rulers, but as ſo many ſeveral planters and Governours of the Church, each having all power committed to him, and depending on no conjunction of any one or more Apoſtles for the exerciſe of it; And this is largely and clearly deduced, Diſſert. 3. c. 1, 2, 3, 4. And this power being by them derived to Biſhops in each City, in the ſame manner as they uſed it themſelves (which is alſo farther evidenced and vindicated, c. 5, &c.) this was deemed a firſt competent proof of this matter, and as a confirmation of it, it was obſervable, that the firſt Biſhops made by them, were in the very Scripture called Apoſtles, James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, &c. Diſſ. 4. c. 3.

A ſecond

A second principal proof of Scripture is taken from the ſeveral mentions of the ſo many Churches of Aſia, and the ſo many Angels aſſigned to them, one to each, as a ſingular Governour or Biſhop in the Revelation. And in diſcourſe of theſe, we have found great evidence of the fact, to authorize us to improve the concluſion a little higher, than was neceſſary to the defence of the main cauſe, viz. to affirm of theſe Angels, that each of them was an Archbiſhop or Metropolitan, and having done ſo, to diſcern upon undeniable grounds that there were many other ſuch, mentioned in the Scripture (though not under that title) as James the Brother of the Lord, Metropolitan of all Judea, Titus of all Crete, with an hundred Cities in it, &c. 8.

And the ways of according all other Scriptures with theſe, have been briefly theſe: 1. By obſerving this difference betwixt Cities and Metropoles, as the true cauſe and occaſion of the mentions of many Biſhops in (not of) one City, meaning thereby the Biſhops of all the Cities under that Metropolis, as Phil. 1. 1. Act. 20. 17. Secondly, By examining the Nature of all the words, which I conceived to be uſed in Scripture for Biſhops, as (beſide Apoſtle and Angel forementioned) Ἐπίσκοπος, Biſhop, Ἡγούμενος, Ruler, Διδάσκαλος, Doctor, Ποιμὴν, Paſtor, Πρόεδρος, Preſident, Πρεσβύτερος, Elder (and in the Fathers, Ἀρχιερεὺς, Chief Prieſt, and Sacerdos, Prieſt) each denoting Dignity and Authority, and all cleared to be in their own nature applicable, and by the circumſtances of the Context to be actually applied to the ſingular Governours in each City; moſt of them conſtantly ſo, and that one of Πρεσβύτερος, if not conſtantly ſo, yet very rarely otherwiſe. And this is done Diſſert. 4. c. 7. and ſo to the end of that Diſſ. Thirdly, By obſerving the paucity of believers in many Cities in the firſt Plantations, which made it unneceſſary that there ſhould by the Apoſtles be ordained any more than a Biſhop and Deacon (one or more) in each City, and that this was accordingly done by them at the firſt, is approved by the moſt undeniable antient Records. Such as thoſe Βαθυλάτα ἱστορίαι the profoundeſt Hiſtories, out of which * Epiphanius makes this Obſervation; Ὅπου γέγονε χρεία, καὶ ἦσαν ἄξιοι ἐπισκοπῆς, καλεσθῆναι ἐπίσκοποι, πλήθους δὲ μὴ ὄντος οὐχ εὑρέθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρεσβύτεροι καλασθῶσι, καὶ ἀρκέσθησαν ἐπὶ τοῦ καθ' τόπον μόνῳ ἐπισκόπῳ, ἄνευ δὲ διακόνου ἐπίσκοπον ἀδύνατον εἶναι, Where there wanted Biſhops, and there were found perſons worthy of the Office, Biſhops were conſtituted; but where there was no multitude, there none were found among them to be conſtituted Presbyters, and they ſatisfied themſelves with a Biſhop alone in a place; only the Biſhop could not poſſibly be without a Deacon, and accordingly the Apoſtle took care that the Biſhop ſhould have his Deacons to miniſter to him. That which is thus cited by Epiphanius out of thoſe Antient Records, is found clearly affirmed by † Clemens Romanus, an Apoſtolical perſon, and witneſs of the Apoſtles practice; that they being ſent out by Chriſt, as he by his Father, went out Preaching the Goſpel, and proclaiming it through Regions and Cities, καθίσανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν εἰς Ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν, they conſtituted their firſt-fruits into Biſhops and Deacons, of thoſe which ſhould afterward believe. To both which when we ſhall again add what Epiphanius preſaceth in that place, Νέου ὄντος τοῦ κηρύγματος πρὸς τὰ ὑποπίπτοντα γράφειν Ἀπόστολον, that when the preaching was new, the Apoſtle St. Paul wrote agreeably to the preſent ſtate of affairs, We have then ſo clear an account of the reaſon of the Apoſtles immediate ſubjoyning of Deacons to Biſhops, Phil. 1. 1. and 1 Tim. 3. (viz. becauſe thoſe were the only two Orders then conſtituted in every Church) that theſe two places (which are made uſe of by the adverſaries againſt us) are moſt punctual evidences of the truth of ours, and of the unſeaſonableneſs of their pretenſions. 9.

* L. 1. l. 1. t. 1.

† Ep. ad Cor.

As for the teſtimonies out of the firſt Antiquity; The ground-work I have choſen to lay in Ignatius his Epiſtles, becauſe the Teſtimonies thence are ſo many and ſo evident, and the Writer ſo near the Apoſtles time (that holy man being Martyr'd in the tenth of Trajan, to whoſe Reign S^t John lived) and moſt of his Epiſtles written to the very Churches of Aſia planted by S^t John, and the Biſhops of many of them named by him, and of one Biſhop, the Preſbyters under him, that if that one Authors Teſtimonies be attended to, there is an abſolute deciſion of the whole matter on the Prelatiſts ſide; To which purpoſe I have alſo vindicated theſe Epiſtles from all that hath been objected to them in theſe late years, and aſſerted their Authority by as antient and authentick evidences, as can be vouched for any antient piece, next the Holy Scriptures themſelves, and contented my ſelf with the moſt pure and uncorrupted Copies and Editions of them. 10.

In accord with theſe Teſtimonies I have alſo produced many others out of Clemens Romanus, Hegeſippus, Polycarp, Papias, Polycrates, Juſtin, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, and as many of the firſt times as have ſaid any thing to this matter, and found a full conſent in all, and in moſt, irrefragable ſuffrages, which conclude this whole Controverſie on the Prelatiſts ſide. To which I have alſo added ſome few obſervations of unqueſtionable truth; as Firſt, That of the continuance of the uſe of Πρεσβύτερος, Elder, to ſignifie Biſhop (in our Modern ſenſe) among ſome of theſe moſt antient Church writers (whereas the word Ἐπίσκοπος is never uſed by any, but for a ſingular Governour.) Secondly, That of the diſtinct Congregations of Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians in the ſame City (the grounds of which are evident in Scripture) and conſequently of the ſeveral Governours or Biſhops over them (which was uſeful for the removing ſome ſeeming difficulties in the Catalogues of the firſt Biſhops of Rome, Antioch, &c.) and ſome other the like, not for the ſerving the Neceſſities of our Cauſe, but as ſupernumerary, and ex abundanti. And upon theſe and ſuch like heads of probation we have built our plea, deſcending alſo to a particular ſurvey of Saint Hierom's teſtimonies, which are by the adverſaries principally made uſe of againſt us. 11.

And if what is thus copiouſly deduced in the Diſſertations, together with Anſwers, and refutations of the principal Objections of D^r Blondel, and Walo Meſſalinus, do really ſtand in force, and appear not to be refuted now in whole, or in part, by theſe men, who have often attempted to refute them, I ſhall then leave them ſeriouſly, and Chriſtianly to conſider but this one thing, and to return their anſwer not to me, but to themſelves, what ſecurity of grounds they can build upon in their preſent practices, particularly in their aſſuming to themſelves that power or authority which doth not belong to them; For 1. if the Præfecture in each Church were (as by Chriſt to the Apoſtles, ſo) by the Apoſtles given to the ſingular Governour or Biſhop (by them καθεσὼς ἐπὶ πᾶσι, conſtituted over all) and from that time to this, regularly continued in a ſucceſſion of Biſhops in every Church; and ſecondly, if thoſe which are now called Preſbyters, were by thoſe, who firſt inſtituted them, placed in a ſecond 12.

rank as of dignity, so of power, and never had all that power committed to them, which to the Bishop was committed, particularly not that of Ordaining the meanest Deacon, much less Presbyters with power of Ordaining other Presbyters; and, thirdly, if they, on whose authority they most depend (* S. Hierome the Presbyter, &c.) do expressly assure them, that the Presbyters in their times had not power of Ordination, but acknowledge the Bishop superior to the Presbyter in that (and it is not imaginable how that power should be conveyed to any Presbyter now, which was not vested in any at that time, nor pretended to be so in above a thousand years after them.) And, lastly, if no man may take that which is not given him from Heaven (or give that which he hath not) which the Scripture yields to, as a rule by which both John Baptist, John 3. 27. and Christ himself, Luk. 12. 14. was to be judged, and the Apostle, Heb. 5. 4. hath applied that general rule to this particularity, of Priesthood in the Church, viz. that no man may λαμβάνειν τιμὴν assume an honour to himself, but who is ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ καλούμενος, called by God, (θεοπρόβλητος, advanced by God, saith Theophylact) either immediately or mediately, either by the Apostles, or by those which received it successively from them (all others being truly affirmed by the † Antients ὑπερπηδᾶν τὴν τιμὴν, to leap into the honour, καὶ νόμον διαφθείρειν, and to corrupt the rule or law by which they should be guided) then, I say, upon what solid grounds can they satisfie Conscience, who without all pretence of necessity (which by some is here made use of as an excuse) the regular way being open and plain before them, have run before they were sent, assumed that power to themselves, which belongs not to them, nor was ever by any, which had it, bestowed upon them?

I do not foresee any more here necessary to be premised to our future debates, and shall therefore hasten to them, as to an unpleasant progress, that I would willingly be at the end of, and commit all to the grace and unerring judgment of him, whom we all profess to serve and obey in this, as in all other things.

*Exceptâ Ordinatione, Hier. Ep. 85. ad Evagr. Χειροτονίαν αὐτῶν ἀναβιβάκασι ἐπίσκοποι. Chrysost. Hom. 11 1 Tim.

In Ep. ad Heb. p. 913.

† Theophylact ibid.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Angels of the Churches of Asia.

SECT. I.

The grounds of affirming them to be Bishops.

Numb. 1. FOR the vindicating of the Dissertations from all the Exceptions which are offered against them in the Book, which I have now before me; It is no whit necessary that I give the Reader any the most cursory view of the whole Book; I shall therefore fall in, though abruptly, on the sixth Chapter of the second part of it. For although in some of the former Chapters of that part, some indeavours are used to assert Presbytery against Episcopacy by Arguments so frequently produced by that party, that they were every one foreseen; and in the Dissertations largely evidenced to have no validity in them; yet it falls out somewhat to mine own and the Readers ease, that I am not personally called into the lists, till the beginning of the sixth Chapter; which by the signal of some Latine words in the Margine out of Dissert. 4. Chap. 4. Sect. 4. have markt me out as the person against whom that Chapter was intirely designed, and I shall readily answer the call, and not refuse the pains to examine every Section of that Chapter.

2. The subject of this Chapter is the pretended (as they please to stile it) Episcopacy of the seven Asian Angels; And thus they begin their assault; The second Scripture ground brought to prove the Divine right of Prelacy, is from the Angels of the seven Churches of Asia; These Angels, say they (the asserters of Prelacy) were seven single persons, and (as one hath lately written) not only Bishops, but Metropolitans and Archbishops. This is said with so much confidence that all men are condemned as blind or wilful that endeavour to oppose it: And it is reckoned as one of the great prodigies of this unhappy Age, that Men should still continue blind, and not see light enough in this Scripture to build the great Fabrick of Episcopacy by Divine Right upon.

In tanta luce adhuc cæcutire aliquos, inter pessimi & inauspicatissimi sæculi prodigia numerandum est.

3. This is, it seems, the first crime chargeable on me as Author of the Dissertations, that I am confident of my Assertion, and condemn all others as blind or wilful that indeavour to oppose it. And although this be no competent way of disproving what is asserted, for it is no universal maxim or Datum among the Objecters, that confident asserting should be lookt on as a character of falsity, yet I, that would much more be ashamed to have been presumptuous than mistaken, and deem it not a sin to have erred modestly, am concerned to avert the envy of this their Proœme, and to give this essay, how far any the most moderate speeches may be disguised and deformed by a disadvantageous interpretation.

4. These words [in tantâ luce —] lie thus in the Dissertations; [Ad tertium accedo — I proceed to the third thing, that which concerns the Angels in the Apocalypse, that by them are noted so many Prefects of the chief Cities or Churches in Asia, whom you may call not only Bishops, but Primates, Exarchs, or Metropolitans. Each of these things must be briefly taken notice of. First, that each of these were single and properly called Bishops. So Andreas Cæsariensis pronounceth of them, Ἕπτα ἐκκλησίαις ἰσάριθμοι ἔφοροι Ἄγγελοι λέγονται, The seven Ephori (Inspectors or Bishops, so called from the Greek ἐπίσκοποι Inspectors, directly equivalent to ἔφοροι) parallel to the number of the seven Churches, are in that place of the Apocalypse called Angels. This title of Angel is sufficiently known from Malach. 2. 7. to belong to the chief Priest of the Jews, for he is called the Angel of the Lord of Hosts, as the person from whom the Law was to be derived to the people. Furthermore these Angels in that vision of Johns are likened to so many Stars, which, seeing Christ is said to bear or carry in his right hand, Apoc. 1. 16. 20. & 21. an argument of competent validity may be drawn from thence, that this dignity and power of them in the Church is, if not immediately instituted, yet approved and confirmed by Christ; especially when in these so many parts of this Epistle, Christ himself hath written to every of them under this title of honour and dignity. In the presence of so much light that some Men should still continue blind, is to be numbred among the prodigies of this worst and most unhappy age. For as to that which from the one word [you] in the plural, c. 4. 24. I find objected by some against so many single mentions of the Angels (one in every Church) that will immediately vanish, &c.

is,

These words thus intirely set down, have a face very distant from that so much confidence and censoriousness, that I am here charged with, by the Provincial Synod. For, First, For the conclusion deduced from the mention of these Angels, 'tis not the Divine Right of Prelacy (which phrase might yet have been reconciled with rules of Sobriety and Modesty, as well as the Jus Divinum of Presbytery) but Christs approbation and confirmation of this dignity and power of Bishops, which conclusion hath evident grounds in those Texts which mention Christ's holding them in his Hand, and his addressing an Epistle to them, supposing only, what is undertaken to be evidenced by other mediums, that these Angels were single persons in each Church. 5.

Secondly, That which is by me so confidently affirmed, is not, as this learned Assembly is pleased to suggest, that these Angels were Metropolitans or Archbishops. That they were such, is afterwards as a distinct matter in the next Chapter proposed in a much more moderate style, statim credibile fiet, it will straightways become credible, and with no more shew of confidence than the premises which are there at large set down, will Authorize. 6.

These be two competent essays to begin with, by which we may proportion our expectations; But there is yet a third which hath somewhat more of injustice in it, to mention my so much confidence in asserting, but never to take notice of the grounds produced, whereon this confidence (as far as it extends) is built, the want of which, is so constantly the one thing, which renders confidence unseasonable or blameable, that it is not in the power of any man to have apprehended grounds as proper to induce a conclusion, and to suspend the belief and confidence of the truth of that conclusion, which is so inferred. The injustice, I say, is their not taking notice of the mediums, whereon the confidence is founded, very competent to infer a conclusion in that stile, wherein it was there inferred, if they had been pleased to advertise their Readers of it. 7.

The inference lies thus; The Angel of each Church of Asia was a single person, therefore not a Colledge or Consistory of Presbyters, and the singularity of the person is there supposed to be evidenced sufficiently by that which is so many times repeated in the Text, the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, and the like, by the testimony of Andreas Cæsariensis, the principal Annotator or Interpreter of the Revelation, transcribed by Aretas in expres words, ἴσα ἐκκλησίαις ἰσάριθμοι ἔφοροι, the number of the Bishops equal to the number of the Churches; and by the answer rendred to that one Objection which is brought by the Presbyterians against the singularity of the person of each Angel. 8.

Secondly, This singular person was a Bishop in that notion of the word which signifies a precedence of power and dignity over all others in that Church. This again was made evident, both by the forementioned singularity of his power and person in each Church, and farther by the propriety of the title bestowed on him, an Angel, such as among the Jews the chief Priest was styled, Malac. 2. to which matter I shall now superadd one Testimony which Photius hath out of Diodorus Siculus concerning the Jews; Ἀρχιερέα τοῦτον προσαγορεύουσι, καὶ νομίζουσιν αὐτοῖς ἄγγελον γενέσθαι παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ προσταγμάτων, Him they call the High Priest, and deem him to be to them an Angel or Messenger of the commands of God (a Commissioner of Heaven, impowered from thence for the execution of his Office among them.) 9.

This by the way, gives us the reason of the denomination, because as Angels do not only carry up our Prayers to God, but also bring down Gods Commands to us, so did the High Priest under the Law. This dialect is also said to be derived from the Hebrews to the Ægyptians, who call their Chief Priest Angel also. And then how fitly the parallel runs betwixt the High Priest among the Jews, and the Bishop in the Christian Church, taken in the Prelatists notion of him, was a theme which seemed not to need any length of harangue to confirm or illustrate it. And yet after a Section spent to clear that one difficulty of the [ὑμῖν, you, in the plural, c. 2. 24.] there are two Sections added more for the farther fortifying of this evidence, 1. From the Council of Chalcedon, Act. 2. which * from Timothy till the time of their Session, numbers 27. Bishops in one of these Sees, that of Ephesus, all ordained there (and Timothy we know being ordained by the laying on of S^t Paul's hands, 2 Tim. 1.6. will devolve it to that Original, Apostolical institution) and 2. from Polycrates, † who was born soon after S^t John's days, and is a witness of a competent antiquity, and affirms himself to be the * eighth Bishop of that See; From both which testimonies of the Catalogue, and number of Bishops, ascending to S^t Timothy, as the first of that rank (who certainly was constituted there before the Epistle of Christ to the Angel of that Church) the conclusion is obvious and irrefragable, that either Timothy, or some successor of his, was personally the Angel to which the Epistle was addrest; and I profes not to wish for a greater evidence to justifie a Prelatist in his desire to live in obedience to that order so signally confirmed by Christ. 10.

* Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου Τιμοθέου μέχρι νῦν κζ. ἐπίσκοποι ἐγένοντο πάντες ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐχειροτονήθησαν.

† De Martyr. Timoth.

* Ep. ad Victor. ap. Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 5. c. 25.

